JOSEPH MULLEN, who was, during life, thoroughly identified with the industrial interests of Stafford, was a native of Ireland, born there in 1839, and he did not become a resident of the United States until 1850. His educational opportunities were very limited, and he early entered into work in the factory at Millbury, Mass., where he was given the lowest place in the mill. Attentive to his duties, and eager to excel, he quickly gained the attention and approbation of his superiors and in a very few years had risen to the position of overseer. The same close attention to duty made him valuable here, and he continued in this position until 1861, when he entered into partnership with a Mr. Davis, in the operation of a woolen mill, at Palmer, Mass. Mr. Mullen next associated with him, J. M. Wood and P. J. Cullen, and they engaged in the operation of the mill which was later managed by J. M. Wood, at South Coventry, Conn. After a few years spent at South Coventry, Mr. Mullen became superintendent of the Slater Woolen Co., at Webster, Mass., and this position he efficiently filled until in 1876, at which time he again entered into business on his own account. Selecting East Brookfield, Mass., as the scene of his operations, he established there a one-set mill, and this he successfully conducted for some six years. To further increase his business, at this period, he purchased the Forest mill, at Stafford Springs, and operated it, in connection with the mill at East Brookfield, until 1884. Then, removing to Stafford, he gave his whole attention to the mill at this place, increasing its efficiency and building up the business to its present large proportions. This mill was erected by H. Orcutt and was originally used as a box factory, but was later changed into a woolen mill, and became the property of Joseph Mullen. Under his careful management, this establishment by its products, attained no little popularity, and this reputation it has since retained. The Forest mill contains three sets of cards and thirty-two looms, sixty hands are employed, and the product is known over the world as Union cassimeres. In the death of Joseph Mullen on July 11, 1891, Stafford lost one of her foremost and enterprising manufacturers. Mr. Mullen was widely known, and his loss was a personal one to many, for his charities were great and wide-spread. Thoroughly proficient in his business, he was devoted to it. In every sense, he was a self-made man, and it was his energy, his hopefulness and his perseverance which carried him safely over difficulties to which a weaker man would have succumbed.

FRANK T. PRESTON, town clerk and public official as well as one of the leading business citizens of Danielson, Windham Co., Conn., is a descendant of one of the prominent colonial families.

The records of the American branch of the Preston family take the biographer as far back as 1614, that being the year in which Roger Preston was born. He was of Ipswich, Mass., and in 1659 or 1660 removed to Salem, where he died in 1666. His widow, Martha, soon after removed to Andover, Mass., taking with her her two sons, Samuel and Jacob Preston, leaving another son, Thomas Preston, in Salem.

Samuel Preston, son of Roger of Ipswich and Salem, was born in Ipswich about 1653, and in 1671 married Susannah Gutterson. Samuel died in 1738, aged eighty-five years, and his wife died in 1710. Their children (perhaps only sons given), as appears in an ancient history of the town of Andover, Mass., were: Samuel, William, Jacob, John and Joseph. Several of these settled in Windham county, Conn., and through them came a branch of the Windham county Prestons. The Willington, Tolland county, Prestons came through Benjamin, a son of Jacob.

John Preston was among the patentees of the town of Killingly, Oct. 10, 1709, and he and his wife Mary were received into full communion in the old Killingly Church, on Putnam Heights, March 9, 1716, and several of their children were baptized between 1711 and 1725, namely: Susannah, Benjamin, William and David. To these parents were born John and Thomas prior to their removal from Andover, Mass.

A John Preston and Mary, his wife, were probably living in the old town of Ashford (which then included the present town of Eastford) in 1750, as the town records show their four children born as follows: Tirus, Oct. 6, 1752; Harvey, Nov. 13, 1750; Junius, Oct. 4 or 21, 1754; and Amos, Oct. 9, 1756. While it is hardly likely that the John and Mary Preston of Killingly and Ashford are the same couple, it is very probable that the John of Ashford was a grandson of Samuel, of Andover, Mass., and not unlikely the son of John, of Killingly.

Tirus Preston, son of John, of Ashford, and great-grandfather of Frank T. Preston, of Danielson, was born Oct. 6, 1752, at Eastford, Conn., and lost his life by drowning, May 30, 1798, at Weathersfield, Vt. In 1772 he married Esther Eaton, a native of Ashford, Conn., and their children were the following: Anson, born June 30, 1773; Hannah, Aug. 5, 1775; Persa, in October, 1777; John, Sept. 7, 1779; Clark, Nov. 22, 1781; Mary or Polly, Aug. 17, 1783; Ednah, April 11, 1785; Matilda, Nov. 19, 1786; Herman, Oct. 2, 1788; Zebina, June 30, 1790; Clarissa, April 10, 1792; Zerah, Feb. 1, 1794; Zelpha, Oct. 28, 1796; and Luther, March 25, 1798.

Great-grandfather Tirus Preston enlisted for service in the war for Independence, May 8, 1775, and was discharged at Quebec, Dec. 17, of the same year. He served under Ethan Allen, in the 5th Company, 2d Regiment, with Gen. Spencer in command.

Clark Preston, son of Tirus, and grandfather of Frank T. Preston, was born Nov. 22, 1781, in Mansfield, Conn., and died April 27, 1863, at Weathersfield, Vt. In the latter place, Dec. 6, 1804, he married Martha (or Patty) Reed, born Jan. 31, 1783, in Westford, Mass., who died March 31, 1868, at Weathersfield, Vt. Clark Preston owned a large farm near Ascutney Mt., almost on the New Hampshire line, and he also engaged extensively in lumbering. His children were as follows: George Sumner, born Sept. 1, 1805, at Claremont, N. H., deceased Dec. 22, 1854, at Newark, Ohio; William Reed, June 3, 1807, at Claremont, N. H., deceased May 8, 1878, at Bethel, Vt.; Henry Eaton, April 11, 1809, who died Aug. 10, 1882, at Tewksbury, Mass.; Enos Lovejoy, Nov. 11, 1811, at Weathersfield, Vt., who died Nov. 30, 1892, in Brooklyn, Conn.; Mary Ann, Dec. 7, 1815, in Weathersfield, Vt., who married Samuel Allison, of Claremont, and died in December, 1901, in Lawrence, Mass.; and Albert, May 22, 1822, in Weathersfield, Vt., who resides at Ascutneyville, Vermont.

Enos Lovejoy Preston, son of Clark Preston and father of Frank T. Preston, acquired his education in the public schools of his native locality. When he reached manhood he went to Windsor, Vt., where he learned the watchmaker's trade, and later to New York City, where he entered an establishment on Maiden Lane and continued the watch-making business. Later, in company with John P. Comins, he engaged in the business of watch case making in New York, but in 1847 he made his permanent home in Brooklyn, Conn., and there opened up a business for the manufacture of watch cases. For more than twenty-five years he prospered, requiring at times as many as twenty assistants, but improvements in machinery soon enabled the large city plants so to absorb the business that it ceased to be profitable, and about 1872 Mr. Preston discontinued manufacturing. In politics he was an active Republican and was a prominent man both in town and county, and at one time served as county commissioner. In educational enterprises he was always deeply interested and for many years served as a member of the board of education. While a resident of New York City he became attached to the Christian Church, but after making his home in Brooklyn he attended the Baptist Church, his wife being a member of that religious body.

On March 17, 1834, Enos L. Preston married Wealthy Tarbox, born April 9, 1813, in Brooklyn, Conn., where she died March 17, 1867. Their children were: Sarah Maria, born Nov. 24, 1834, deceased Jan. 20, 1836; James Hyde, born Sept. 5, 1837, deceased Sept. 25, 1839; George Henry, born July 6, 1839, who married Mrs. Kate Johnson and resides at Mansfield, Mass., a carpenter by trade; James Albert, born Feb. 25, 1843, deceased Dec. 22, 1845; Hattie Augusta, born Dec. 19, 1844, who died Aug. 2, 1868; Francis T., born April 11, 1847, who died March 31, 1849; Augustus Jacot, born Nov. 17, 1851, a resident of Watertown, N. Y., superintendent for the New York Air Brake Company, married to Ellen J. Lampher, of Montville, Conn.; Frank T., a leading business citizen of Danielson, Conn.; and Elizabeth A., born March 27, 1857, deceased Sept. 15, 1863. Enos L. Preston was again married, in 1868, to Jane Ross, daughter of Levi Ross, of Brooklyn, Conn.; no children were born of this marriage.

Frank T. Preston was born Dec. 27, 1853, at Brooklyn, Conn., where he attended the district schools until he reached his seventeenth year. The succeeding two and one-half years he spent in New York City, perfecting himself in the trade of watch case engraving, and followed the same in Boston, Mass., for two years. When he returned to Brooklyn, Conn., he became associated with his father in the watch case manufacture for a period of three years. The business was then taken by Mr. Preston and his brother Augustus J. and operated for three years under the firm style of Preston Bros., and for the two last years of the existence of the business he carried it on alone. Discontinuing the manufacturing business in 1879, he came to Danielson and began work as a watch repairer, in the store of Amasa Dowe. This continued but a short time, for on Nov. 13, 1881, Mr. Preston associated himself with C. E. Carpenter and purchased the business of Mr. Dowe. This firm of Preston & Carpenter continued a successful jewelry business until April 24, 1901, when Mr. Preston purchased his partner's interest and since that time has with skill and ability operated it alone. Many residents remember when the store was located in the north part of the "Sprague House." Two years later removal was made into the Shumway building where it was one of the features of the street, but in March, 1900, more commodious and convenient quarters were secured in the handsome Phoenix block. Mr. Preston thoroughly understands his business and the demands of the trade and the public and has a jewelry establishment which in appointment and value would do credit to a much larger city.

On Oct. 14, 1885, Mr. Preston was united in marriage with Florence Myrtella Chase, born Aug. 9, 1864, in Killingly, Conn., and to them have been born three children, namely: Florence Chase, Dec. 13, 1886; Raymond Abner, Dec. 20, 1892; and Rachel Fuller, March 16, 1894. The Chase family is a prominent one in New England history. Abner Chase, the grandfather of Mrs. Preston, was long a resident of Killingly. He married Esther Cleveland, daughter of Jacob Cleveland. William A. Chase, father of Mrs. Preston, was born in 1831, in Killingly, served in the Civil war and was town clerk of Killingly one year. In politics he was a Democrat. His religious connection was with the Danielson Baptist Church. In 1851 he married Amanda M., daughter of Obed Fuller, and their three daughters are: Mrs. C. F. Chapman, Mrs. E. H. Storrs, and Mrs. Frank T. Preston. William A. Chase died at Danielson, Conn., Oct. 22, 1891.

Mr. Preston has always been prominently identified with the Republican party and Oct. 5, 1885, he was elected town treasurer and on the 22d of the same month was appointed town clerk, being regularly elected at the ensuing election, town clerk, town treasurer and treasurer of the town deposit funds, honorable offices which he still holds, officiating also as recorder of births, marriages and deaths. Both Mr. and Mrs. Preston are members of the Baptist Church, in which Mr. Preston takes an active interest, having been one of its deacons for more than fifteen years and serving seven years as superintendent of the Sunday-school. He has long been a popular and zealous member of the Masonic fraternity, his membership being in Moriah Lodge, No. 15, Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M., Montgomery Council, No. 2, R. & S. M., Columbian Commandery of Norwich; and he has served many years as treasurer of the first three bodies. He also belongs to, and takes a deep interest in, Quinebaug Lodge, I. O. O. F., of which he is a trustee, and is also a valued comrade of A. D. Lockwood Council, No. 33, O. U. A. M.

Mr. Preston has been prominently connected with almost all of the progressive and public-spirited movements in Danielson. For four years he served as the first judge of the town court of Killingly, for years was president of the Library Association and is now chairman of the board of directors of the Free Public Library of Danielson. Mr. Preston is one of the city's most useful and representative citizens.

NELSON MORSE. The family name Morse is one which is ineffaceably traced on the history of Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., and which figures on the pages whose records perpetuate the annals of this section of our national domain, from early colonial days down to the present time. The history of a State, as well as that of a nation, is chiefly the chronicles of the lives and deeds of those who have conferred honor and dignity on society, whether in the broad sphere of public labors or in the more circumscribed, but not less worthy and valuable realm of individual activity through which the general good is promoted. The name borne by our subject is one which has stood as an exponent of the most sterling personal character and the deepest appreciation of the rights and privileges of citizenship in our great republic. There have been strong men and true, as one generation has followed another,—men loyal to our national institutions and to the duties of citizenship, and thus there is signal consistency in giving place in this compilation to personal and genealogical records concerning the Morse family. As to the ancestral line sufficient detail is entered on another page of this work to render unnecessary a recapitulation in this immediate connection, and to properly indexed articles pertaining to other members of the family we refer the reader who would learn of the part the representatives of the name have taken in the history of this section of New England. In this place, therefore, we shall accord more specific attention to the honored citizen of Woodstock whose name initiates this paragraph.

The old Morse homestead, in East Woodstock, is one of the attractive places of the locality and one which has long been in the possession of the family. Near this ancestral homestead Nelson Morse was born May 3, 1818. His early educational training was received in the district school of East Woodstock, and at the age of seven years he became an inmate of the home of his uncle, Oliver Morse, with whom he remained until he had attained the age of seventeen years, attended the school in the Paine District as occasion permitted, and assisted his uncle in the work of the farm, so that he early became numbered among the noble army of the world's workers and gained that deep appreciation of the dignity and value of honest toil which has so signally conserved his success in later years, for Mr. Morse is essentially a man who has been the architect of his own fortunes, a typical American citizen, thoroughly in harmony with the spirit of the republic, making the most of his opportunities and steadily working his way upward to definite success and to all that is desirable and ennobling in life.

At the age of seventeen years Mr. Morse entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of wagon-making, under the instruction of Deacon Elisha Walker, of North Woodstock. With this honored gentleman and good friend Mr. Morse continued to be employed for an interval of four years, within which time he had become an expert artisan in his line, and at the expiration of the period noted, in 1839, he bought out the business of Mr. Walker and started out on his own responsibility, conducting his inceptive operations in a modest and conservative way. In 1840 Mr. Morse entered into partnership with L. M. Dean, under the firm name of Dean & Morse, and this association continued for two years, at the expiration of which the partnership was dissolved by mutual consent and an amicable division of the business made. Shortly afterward Mr. Morse began to devote his attention more particularly to the manufacturing of carriage and wagon springs, and he was very successfully engaged in this line of enterprise until 1866, when his establishment was destroyed by fire and he decided not to resume operations. He then became once more identified with that great basic industry to which he had been reared, and his field of endeavor has ever since been that of agriculture, in which his well directed and discriminating efforts have been attended with a due measure of success, so that he holds precedence as one of the prosperous farmers of Woodstock, where he has passed the long years of his active and useful life, ever commanding the confidence and good will of all with whom he has come in contact, and being known as a man of unswerving integrity of purpose and one animated by the most tolerant and kindly spirit. His present homestead embraces fifty-six acres, for with his advancing years he realized that he could not properly handle the large farm which he originally owned and he therefore disposed of a considerable portion of it. Mr. Morse has ever shown a deep reverence for spiritual verities and has given a liberal support to the cause of religion, being a regular attendant of the Congregational Church at North Woodstock, of which his wife is a devoted member. In politics Mr. Morse has given an unfaltering allegiance to the Republican party from the time of its organization, and in 1861 he was elected to represent Woodstock in the lower house of the State Legislature, in which he served with ability to the eminent satisfaction of his constituency, having been assigned to membership on the committee on School Funds. He took an active part in local affairs of public nature in the earlier years of his life and was called upon to serve in other positions of trust and responsibility, having been for three years incumbent of the office of selectman, and having for an equal period served as assessor and as a member of the board of relief. He also served as justice of the peace until the age limit exempted him from further service. He also served as county commissioner for two years, when he resigned.

Nelson Morse was first married April 4, 1841, to Parmelia Lyon, daughter of Abiel Lyon, of Woodstock. She died June 11, 1845. They had one child, Parmelia Abigail, born Sept. 14, 1844, who died Dec. 22, 1866, unmarried. July 3, 1851, Mr. Morse was united in marriage the second time to Miss Jane Carey, daughter of Sanford Carey, of Scotland, Conn., and she died Dec. 12 of the following year; there were no children by this union. Jan. 4, 1854, Mr. Morse was united in marriage the third time to Miss Lucia Ann Bass, who was born in Windham, Conn., April 19, 1826, the daughter of Nathan Bass, a representative of pioneer New England stock. Nearly a half century has passed since Mr. and Mrs. Morse thus united their life destinies, and their mutual love and sympathy have made the years prolific in contentment and in grateful recognition of the blessings which have been conferred. Of the children born to this union we offer the following brief record, as affording a consistent termination of this tribute to one of the venerable and honored citizens of Woodstock. Sarah Jane, born Jan. 27, 1856, died March 5, 1863; Sidney Nelson, born Nov. 29, 1857, is an instructor in Greek at Williston Seminary, at East Hampton, Mass., being a man of high scholastic attainments and one who has gained an enviable reputation in educational circles; he is not married; Anna Clift, born Aug. 17, 1862, died Nov. 4, 1892, having never married; Henry Waldo, born Sept. 6, 1868, never married, and his death occurred in California, July 12, 1894.

CYRUS W. AND CHARLES H. POTTER. In tracing the early history of the family to which belong two of the most reliable, substantial and representative citizens of Woodstock, Windham county, it is necessary to go far back in the annals of New England history. Previous to 1650 there had come to New England from Great Britain a number of Potters, and among these came George, Nathaniel and Robert to Portsmouth, R. I. Various facts indicate a relationship among these, but no authentic records of such relationship have been discovered. In 1834 eight of the name of Potter had graduated at Yale, three at Harvard and nine at other New England colleges.

Of the three Potters above named as of Portsmouth, George was admitted an inhabitant of the island of Aquidneck, R. I., in 1639, as were also Nathaniel and Robert, the last named having come from Coventry, England, in 1634, and in that same year was made a freeman of the Massachusetts Plantation. He is first mentioned as being a farmer of Lynn, Mass., and he probably removed to Roxbury soon after being made a freeman of the colony. Later he was one of the purchasers of Warwick, Rhode Island.

George W. Potter, the grandfather of Cyrus and Charles Potter, was born in Woodstock, Conn., and Oct. 6, 1806, married Alice Child, born in Woodstock, Oct. 21, 1783, a daughter of Deacon Charles and Eliza (May) Child. She was in the fifth generation from Benjamin Child, who probably came with Ephraim Child, a native of England, and his probable uncle, in 1630. From Benjamin and Mary Child, the lineage of Alice is through Benjamin and his wife, Grace (Morris), Ephraim and his wife Priscilla (Harris), Elisha and wife Alice (Manning), and Charles Child and his wife Alice (May). The issue of George and Alice (Child) Potter was (1) Stephen L., born in 1808, in Woodstock, who married Sarah C. Morse. Stephen L. Potter was a farmer all his life, and was one of the substantial men of West Woodstock, served as judge of probate for several years, and was soldiers' agent of the town during the Civil war. On three different occasions he represented the town in the State Legislature, serving once as chairman of the Railroad committee. For nine years he served as selectman and was recognized as one of the most intelligent and influential, as well as honest and upright men of his community. In early life he was a Whig, and later became identified with the Republican party. Almost all of the local offices were his to accept, and he filled many of them. In the Congregational Church he was valued as one who lived up to the faith he professed. His wife was a great-granddaughter of Deacon Jedediah Morse, who was one of Woodstock's early settlers and prominent men. Stephen L. Potter died Oct. 18, 1869, his widow surviving until Oct. 7, 1876, when she was sixty-four years old. The children of Stephen and Sarah Potter were: George M., who married Emily Richardson and is now engaged in farming in the State of Washington; William R., unmarried, who died in 1863, in the United States service, in Odd Fellows' Hall, Washington, D. C., a member of Co. F, 11th Reg. C. V. I.; Mary Elizabeth, who died at the age of one and one-half years; Albert Edward, who married Abigail Sumner, of Abington, Conn., is a teacher and farmer, and lives in Abington, town of Pomfret, Conn.; Charles Harris, who married Maria Morton, of Martha's Vineyard, was a member of Co. D, 18th Reg. C. V. I. in the Civil war, and is now engaged in vegetable farming in Grand Bay, Ala.; Stephen Dwight, who died unmarried, at the age of thirty years; Caleb Charles, who married Isadore C. Brown, of Fall River, Mass., where he is now engaged as clerk in the water-works office; Sarah Alice, who died unmarried, at the age of nineteen years; Henry Jedediah, who married Alice Caroline Chandler, of East Woodstock, and is now engaged in farming, having formerly been a teacher; and Newton Richard, who married Jennie Carey Morse, of Woodstock, and was a teacher.

The second child of George W. and Alice (Child) Potter was (2) Benjamin W., who was born in 1810, and died Sept. 11, 1866, in his fifty-seventh year. (3) Charles Child, born in Woodstock, in 1812, in 1838 married Maria Walker, who died in 1843, leaving one daughter, Maria E. Charles C. Potter was a farmer and merchant for many years in East Woodstock. His estimable daughter, Maria Elizabeth, taught school for a number of years, but later devoted her life to the care of her parents. (4) George W., Jr., born in 1814, died, unmarried, of consumption, in 1836. (5) Rhodes W., born in 1816, also died, unmarried, of the same dread disease, in 1836.

Benjamin Wilkinson Potter was born in 1810, in West Woodstock, Conn., and died as noted above. In 1836 he married Nancy Chandler Chamberlin, who died Dec. 30, 1884, aged seventy-two years. She was a daughter of Elisha Chamberlin, of Woodstock. In his younger days Benjamin Wilkinson Potter learned the blacksmith trade, but on account of a delicate constitution gave up this exacting line of activity and engaged moderately in farming. His poor health also interfered with his taking any leading part in public affairs, although he was particularly well qualified to do so. In politics he supported the Democratic party. His religious connection was with the Baptist Church. His life was not a long one, but it was well spent, and when he passed out of it he left many attached friends to mourn his loss. The children born to Benjamin and Nancy Potter were the following: Mary Alice, born Dec. 5, 1838, who never married; Elisha Benjamin, born in 1840, in Woodstock, deceased in 1881, in New York, who married Sarah Storrs, of Mansfield, Conn., was a farmer, largely interested in the grain business, and was connected with the firm of Lane & Chamberlin, in New York; Cyrus W., of whom we speak later; Francis Caleb, born May 22, 1843, in Woodstock, who married Oct. 5, 1880, Mary Close, of Greenwich, Conn., daughter of Zacheriah Close, was a well-known Congregational minister, a graduate of Yale in 1871, was ordained in 1879, and since then preached in Connecticut; James Harris, born Dec. 1, 1844, in Woodstock, who resides in West Upton, Mass., where he is boss farmer for the Norton Manufacturing Company, and who married Elizabeth Snell, of Sturbridge, Mass.; Milton Edward, born in Woodstock, in 1846, who resides in Springfield, Mass., engaged in a general trucking and teaming business, and who married Harriet Tonner, of Webster, Mass.; and Charles Henry.

CYRUS W. POTTER was born in Woodstock and received his education in the common schools, at the age of seventeen years beginning his agricultural career. In Webster, Mass., he was engaged for one year in farming and teaming for the firm of Slater & Co., (Samuel Slater & Son), but in 1865 he returned to the home farm, at the time of his father's death and took charge of affairs and purchased the farm, successfully operating it ever since. This well cultivated estate comprises 147 acres, and he operates it as a general and also as a small dairy farm, keeping ten cows and furnishing some of the critical families of Southbridge with a most superior article of butter. Mr. Potter has been a life-long Democrat, and he has most efficiently filled many of the local offices, notably several terms as district school committeeman and for sixteen years has been highway surveyor, the excellent roads in his locality testifying to the completeness of his work in this direction. He has served on the board of relief for three terms, has been assessor for two years and his excellent judgment and clear discrimination in all matters have made him very valuable as a justice of the peace. His wife is a leading member of the Congregational Church at North Woodstock, of which he is an attendant, and they are known for their many kind and excellent traits of character. Mr. Potter belongs to what is known as the "Theft Society" of Woodstock, and has held the office of pursuer.

On Nov. 21, 1872, Cyrus W. Potter was united in marriage with Emma Augusta Dean, born March 16, 1850, daughter of Charles Rollin and Olive Stewart (Leonard) Dean, of Woodstock, and these children were born to this union: Mary Florence, born Dec. 15, 1873, in Woodstock, a popular teacher in the village of North Woodstock; Sarah Alice, born Aug. 10, 1875, a successful teacher in East Woodstock; Josie Nancy, born Nov. 26, 1887, deceased Aug. 14, 1889; and Winifred Olive Stewart, born May 31, 1890. Mr. Potter is widely known through the county as a progressive and successful farmer and is esteemed as an honorable and high-minded citizen.

CHARLES HENRY POTTER, who like his brother Cyrus W., is held in high esteem in Woodstock, is a native of North Woodstock, born Dec. 4, 1852, and grew up and attended the schools of this locality. Subsequently he enjoyed the advantages offered by Nichols' Academy at Dudley, Mass., after returning from a course of three terms at a private school at North Woodstock, taught by Miss Sarah Carpenter; from Nichols' Academy he went to Woodstock Academy for two terms and then enjoyed two terms at the Dwight Street school in New Haven, leaving the same at the age of nineteen years. Mr. Potter then became a teacher and followed this profession for four terms in the Perin and the Center Districts, Woodstock, and then accepted a position as shipping clerk at Upton, Mass., in the straw hat manufactory of William Knowlton Sons, where he remained for one year. From there the ambitious young man went to New York as bookkeeper for Hollister & Chamberlin, wholesale grain dealers, on Broad street, and remained with that firm for almost a year. An offer was then made to him to become manager of the stores, as well as one of the instructors, in the New York House of Refuge, and for nine years he filled this responsible position. In 1880 he purchased an interest in a large base ball supply manufacturing business, the firm style adopted being Tighe & Potter, and this partnership lasted for one and one-half years. In the fall of 1882 he returned to Woodstock and purchased the Elisha Childs place in North Woodstock, consisting of seventy acres, to which he has added until it amounts to 150 acres, and there Mr. Potter has become a successful farmer. His land is excellent for both farming purposes and for dairying and he makes a special feature of the latter branch of agricultural work. His dairy is supplied by some twenty-five cows, and his products are disposed of in Webster and Southbridge, to regular customers.

Mr. Potter is a zealous member of the Woodstock Grange, No. 150, in which he is past master, and he is serving his second term as master of the Quinebaug Pomona, the county organization. His interest has continued from the first and he is in great request as a speaker for the order, not only at the social meetings, but in public when important matters relating to agricultural affairs are to be brought before the public. He is a member of the Congregational Church of North Woodstock, has served on the Society's committee and for two years has been the Sunday-school superintendent. In politics Mr. Potter is a Republican, and has filled many local offices, serving as constable, as tree warden of the town and as a member of the school board, having at all times the best interests of the community at heart.

On Dec. 1, 1881, Mr. Potter was married to Miss Alice Louise Stone, a daughter of Seth B. Stone, who was born in Natal, South Africa, where her father was a missionary of the American Board of Missions. The birth of Mrs. Potter took place March 19, 1856. Her father, Rev. Seth Bradley Stone, was a native of Madison, Conn., and her mother, Catherine Matilda Arthur, of New York City. In 1871 Mrs. Potter was brought to New York and entered upon her education in private schools in that city, finishing at Elmira College and then returning to New York City to engage in teaching. It was thus that she met Mr. Potter and in this way Woodstock, Conn., numbers her among its most intelligent and cultured ladies. She has also taken an active interest with her husband in the Grange movement, and was made the first secretary of Woodstock Grange, No. 150, of Woodstock. She is now serving her second term as Lady Assistant of the Connecticut State Grange. Mr. Potter was a charter member of the American Order of Fraternal Helpers of Woodstock, and takes much interest in this organization.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Potter are: Charles Allison, born Sept. 19, 1882, thoroughly educated in the academies at Dudley and at Woodstock; Helen Eveline, born June 28, 1884, who graduated from Nichols Academy, at Dudley, in June, 1902; and Arthur Chamberlin, born Dec. 12, 1886, in Woodstock, who was a member of the class of 1903 at Nichols Academy. Mr. and Mrs. Potter are cultured and refined people, who have been most helpfully prominent in the social and religious life of the community, where they are held in the highest esteem.

PRESCOTT BARTLETT (deceased). Although descended from an ancient and honored line, the late Prescott Bartlett, of Putnam, Windham Co., Conn., needed no reflection from past glory to establish him in the esteem of his fellow-citizens, or to endear him to a large circle of personal friends.

All who bear the name of Bartlett are of Norman ancestry, the first family record being of one Adam Bartlett, who as one of the retinue of Brian, a Knight, came to England with William the Conqueror and fought so bravely at Hastings that he was given a grant of land in Sussex. On this vast estate was erected the ancestral Bartlett mansion in 1309, the old gray stones having resisted storm and tempest ever since, still remaining, with much land, in the possession of the Bartlett family to this day. In the old Norman Church near by are marble slabs, with inset figures of brass, showing a regular succession of Bartletts, from John, who died in 1428, to Col. George Bartlett, who died in November, 1872, aged eighty-four years. Sir Walter B. Bartlett, the present representative of the English branch of the family, was created a Baronet in 1875.

In the fifteenth century a castle appears as the crest of the coat of arms, which was granted by Edward, the Black Prince, to John Bartlett for taking the Castle of Fontenoy, in France. Since then has been added a swan and double castle. The original coat of arms of the Bartlett family, was: three open left-hand falconers' gloves with golden tassels at the wrist. The coat of arms now in use is very elaborate, representing combinations of the coats of arms of the families with which the Bartletts have inter-married.

The earliest record of the Bartlett family which has been found in America was in the town of Weymouth, Conn., this reading: "John Bartlett, son of John Bartlett and Sarah his wife, born Feb. 11, 1666." It is reasonable to suppose that the first John Bartlett came hither from his home in Surrey, England, with some of the early settlers.

The only record of the family of John Bartlett (2) is mention of his son Ezra, who was born April 4, 1703, and married Jane Lewis, Sept. 9, 1728. Ezra had a son Richard who was born Feb. 28, 1738, and had a wife named Kezia. The Killingly records tell of numerous land transactions in which Richard Bartlett took part. July 19, 1784, he bought 180 acres of land in Killingly; April 3, 1785, he bought eighty acres on the Rhode Island line, on the road leading from his home at Chestnut Hill to Providence; Dec. 19, 1785, he bought of Richard Tucker a tract of land in Killingly; June 1, 1794, he bought of A. Brown, of Killingly, a saw and gristmill, and June 20, 1797, he bought of Peltate Mason another tract of land, and had other real estate transactions. On the land once his now stand three mammoth cotton mills with their villages of from 700 to 800 inhabitants. The mansion he erected still stands and has been the home of the Bartletts for five generations.

Reuben Bartlett, son of Richard and grandfather of the late Prescott Bartlett, was born Nov. 11, 1782, in Killingly, Conn., and died Aug. 19, 1849, in Killingly. He, like his father, was a large landowner and conducted a saw and gristmill. He married Polly Burgess, who was born March 22, 1784, and died Aug. 28, 1859. Their children were: Minerva, born Oct. 9, 1805; Richard, Jan. 29, 1807; Lawry, Feb. 28, 1808; Lillis, Feb. 17, 1810; Waldo, Nov. 15, 1811; Almira, Aug. 16, 1814; Marinda, Sept. 11, 1816; Caroline, Oct. 20, 1818; Charles, Dec. 25, 1821; Erastus, Nov. 9, 1823; and Harriet, March 4, 1826.

Waldo Bartlett, son of Reuben, was born Nov. 15, 1811, in Killingly, Conn., and died April 30, 1873, on his farm in Killingly, where he had spent the greater part of his life. He was a man of high repute and excellent judgment, a member of the Baptist Church, and for many years he held the position of selectman of his town. Sept. 13, 1832, Waldo Bartlett married Mary Ann Covell, born

May 8, 1813, who died May 6, 1889, in Killingly. She was a daughter of Arba and Mary Ann Covell, both of Killingly, the former born in 1787, and deceased Jan. 7, 1857. The children of Waldo Bartlett and his wife were: Leonard, born July 13, 1833; Almon, Aug. 28, 1835; Elizabeth, Nov. 9, 1838; Prescott, Dec. 5, 1841; Kezia, April 21, 1844; Almira, June 23, 1847; Reuben S., Dec. 11, 1849; Henry, March 14, 1853; Charles F., Sept. 27, 1856. Henry Bartlett died Dec. 1, 1901. The marriages of this family were as follows: Leonard married Thirza Barber; Almon married Mary Reynolds; Elizabeth married G. Henry Law; Kezia married George Harris; Almira married J. N. Tucker; Reuben S., married E. M. Fairmon; Henry married Peoria Gardner; and Charles married Lillie Davis; and Prescott, married (first) Maria S. Bostoe, and (second) Josephine Matilda Kenyon.

Prescott Bartlett was born Dec. 5, 1841, in East Killingly Conn., son of Waldo and Mary A. (Covell) Bartlett. His education was acquired in the public schools of his native town, where he later became a clerk in a general store, remaining in that capacity several years. At the age of twenty-three he purchased the Whitestone Company's store, which he successfully conducted until the spring of 1879, when he disposed of it.

In 1880 he represented Killingly in the Legislature and in the spring of the same year, removed to Putnam, opening a clothing store in the Arcade block, having purchased the business from Hiram Brown. Mr. Bartlett continued in this business in the Hoyle and Hathaway blocks until the spring of 1884, when he sold the business to J. W. Church. In 1882 he purchased the slipper business of his brother, Almon Bartlett, and operated the same until 1889, at which date he sold out to Marshall Kenyon and retired from activity.

Mr. Bartlett was a staunch Republican and was a man of influence in his party. He probably served for a longer period as town assessor than any other person in the county, having acted in that capacity for several years in Killingly and thirteen years in Putnam, and was an authority on the values of real estate. During 1882 and 1883 he was the popular and useful representative of Putnam in the Legislature and at all times was regarded as one who had the best interests of his section at heart. When the Thompson Savings Bank was removed to Putnam he became a trustee and was also a director of the Putnam Power and Light Company.

Mr. Bartlett was first married to Miss Maria S. Bostoe, daughter of George Bostoe, of East Killingly. She died without issue, Aug. 7, 1887, in Putnam, Conn. Oct. 20, 1888, Mr. Bartlett married Miss Josephine Matilda Kenyon, daughter of Joseph and Lorinda (West) Kenyon, natives of Woodstock, Conn., where Mr. Kenyon was long a manufacturer of woolen goods.

On June 1, 1895, Mr. Bartlett was appointed deputy-sheriff of Putnam, which position he efficiently filled until within about two years of his death, resigning it when failing health warned him that he must seek a quiet life. In the Masonic fraternity he was an old and valued member, having been a Mason for thirty-three years. He was also a member of A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R., of Putnam. In religious feeling he affiliated with the Universalists and was mainly instrumental in having the present church edifice of that sect erected in Putnam.

In manner Mr. Bartlett was quiet, intellectual and home-loving, a man with hosts of friends and no enemies. For some years prior to his death he had been afflicted with heart trouble for which it had been his habit to winter in the mild climate of Savannah, Ga., and it was just after an early return from the South, that his death occurred, Jan. 28, 1901. He left his mark on his town as an example of integrity and uprightness in business and as the promoter of educational and moral reforms whenever he felt they would benefit his town.

CHARLES FOX. In any compilation touching upon the life histories of those who have lived within the borders of Tolland county, and have made their lives count for good, there is signal propriety in recording a memoir of the late Charles Fox, who was for many years a prominent manufacturer and business man of Stafford Springs, where his death occurred Dec. 26, 1891. Upon his record in the business world and as a man among men there rests no shadow of wrong or suspicion of evil. He achieved a definite success by worthy means, and he was never unmindful of the obligations which material success imposes, nor of the higher values of life. Throughout his entire business career Mr. Fox was looked upon as a model of integrity and honor, never making an engagement or promise whose provisions he did not fulfill and standing in exemplification of what may be accomplished by determination and resolute force in a man of intrinsic ability, dominated by the highest principles. He was respected by the community at large and was honored by his associates in business circles.

The family of which Mr. Fox was a worthy representative is one which has long been identified with the annals of New England, where the original ancestor or ancestors took up their abode in the early Colonial epoch, as is evident from public and private records still extant. The branch of the family to which he belonged traces its genealogy in direct line to the emigrant Thomas Fox, who came to this country from England about 1635, and who is supposed to have been a grandson or great-grandson of John Foxe, author of the "Book of Martyrs." The line of descent from Thomas Fox, who was an influential citizen of Cambridge, Mass., is clear and unbroken, established by historical documents and family records down to the present time. For more than a century the name has been identified with the history of Connecticut, where it has ever stood as an exponent of the loftiest integrity and of signal usefulness in connection with the practical affairs of life.

From a history of Montville, Conn., published in 1896, we extract the following pertinent statements regarding the Fox family. "It has not been certainly determined who the first American ancestor of the Fox families was. It is probable that more than one of the name came over to this country from England previously to the year 1640. It is often said by the descendants of English ancestors that 'Three brothers came over from England and settled in this country,' and it is quite probable that the Fox families, like many others in this country, are the descendants from more than one emigrant ancestor who settled here. The name of a John Fox appears on the list of passengers for Virginia in 1639, aged thirty-three years; also a Jonathan and Richard in 1635, the former thirty-five years of age and the latter fifteen years of age. It is not ascertained where either of the above ancestors first settled. The first of the name found located was Thomas Fox [previously referred to in this context] who appears in Concord, Mass., a member of the church there in 1640, and a freeman in 1644. He first married Rebecca French, who died March 11, 1647, and second Hannah Brooks, Oct. 13, 1647, and he died in 1658. This Thomas is supposed to have been the father of Samuel Fox, who appeared at New London, Conn., about 1675, and was the ancestor of the Fox families who have lived in Montville."

Rev. Jabez Fox, born in 1646, was probably a son of the emigrant Thomas Fox, of Concord. He settled at Woburn, Mass., where he was the first minister, in 1679, and died there in 1702. The maiden name of his wife was Judith Rayner. At Windham, Conn., the will of one Joseph Fox, bearing date of Oct. 7, 1772, was probated Dec. 31, following, and in the same mention is made of his wife, Hannah, and the following named children: Jabez, Roswell, David, Harriet, Ruth and Elizabeth.

William Bradley Fox, father of Charles Fox, whose name introduces this memoir, was born in Scotland, Conn., in 1795, and died in Worcester, Mass., in 1860. In the year 1819 was solemnized his marriage to Miss Eliza Ingalls, and of their ten children we incorporate the following brief record: Lemuel Ingalls, born in 1821, died in 1848; William Bradley, Jr., born in 1822, married Anna Nelson, and his death occurred in 1861; Jane, born in 1825, is the widow of Dr. Rufus Woodward, who was one of the honored citizens and able physicians of Worcester, Mass., where his death occurred in 1885; Charles was born June 7, 1827; Anne Rebecca, born in 1829, died unmarried, in 1870; Eliza Cunningham, born in 1833, is the widow of C. W. Hamilton; Thomas Williams, born in 1835, married Mary Teel, and his death occurred in 1875; Maria Peabody, born in 1841, died unmarried in 1886. Of these children, none of the brothers had children. Mrs. Eliza C. Hamilton has one daughter, Fanny Maria, who was born in 1865, and who resides with her widowed mother in Worcester, Mass., her father having died Oct. 3, 1901. Mrs. Jane Woodward has four children: Dr. Lemuel Fox Woodward, born in 1857, remains with his mother at the old home in Worcester, where he is successfully engaged in the practice of his profession; Rufus Stanley, born in 1859, was married to Stella Brooks, in 1894, and they have three children, Rufus S., Jr., Hildegard Hulse and Katharine Fox; Ralph, born in 1862, was married in 1894 to Helen Effinger, and they have two children, Ralph, Jr., and Thomas Fox; and Jane, born in 1865, remains with her widowed mother in the old home in Worcester.

William Bradley Fox, father of Charles, was reared in Tolland, where he received a common-school education. While a mere boy he was thrown to a large extent upon his own resources and thus early began the stern battle of life upon his own responsibility. In Tolland he secured employment in a mercantile establishment conducted by a man named Gilbert, who eventually failed in business, whereupon Mr. Fox went to Worcester, Mass., where he achieved a distinctive success and prestige in connection with the manufacture of woolens, the enterprise being conducted under the firm name of Fox & Rice, while he was honored as one of the influential citizens and sterling men of the city, where he won his own way to a worthy success and a position in the unlimited confidence and esteem of all who knew him. He passed the remainder of his life in Worcester, where his death occurred.

Charles Fox, whose name initiates this review, was reared in his native city of Worcester, Mass., where he was afforded good educational advantages in the public schools. In assuming the practical responsibilities of life he early manifested a distinctive predilection for the line of industry along which his honored father had gained so marked a success, and in the factory of the latter he became familiar with the various details of manufacturing woolen goods, in which field of enterprise he was destined to achieve a high reputation and distinctive material prosperity, developing into a far-sighted, energetic and progressive business man, and so ordering his life as to command unequivocal confidence and esteem on the part of all with whom he came in contact, in either business or social relations. In 1851 he became the prime factor in the organization of the firm of Charles Fox & Co., which established an excellent plant for the manufacture of cassimeres and fancy worsteds, the factory being located at Fox Village, which was named in his honor, and which lies contiguous to the town of Stafford Springs, Tolland Co., Conn. For many years the firm there conducted an extensive enterprise in that line, the same becoming one of the most important industries of Tolland county, and one of the leading concerns of the sort in that section of New England. The large and substantial mill structures erected by the firm at Fox Village are still standing, but the business has been suspended since his death, the mills now standing idle, while the excellent waterpower controlled now affords only picturesque value to the locality, instead of proving also of practical usefulness. The plant was equipped with seven sets of looms, and in the mills employment was afforded to about two hundred hands, while the water privilege controlled was recognized as one of the best on Middle river, a large breast wheel, 20x20 feet in dimensions, being utilized. The decadence of this industry cannot but be viewed with regret, for through the same the general prosperity was largely furthered and the industrial prestige of Tolland county greatly augmented. After several years had elapsed Mr. Fox became the sole owner and operator, the firm name being changed accordingly, and he thereafter continued the business until his death, and while in later years normal business exigencies caused the enterprise to be less profitable than in the earlier period of its operations, Mr. Fox seemed to feel that there rested upon him the duty of giving employment to those who depended upon him for their sustenance, and he protected the interests of his employes even at personal sacrifice and financial loss. How clearly this one circumstance indicates the generous nature and noble character of the man! It is well known that on many occasions he kept his mills in operation when he fully realized that this entailed a definite financial loss to him, and he ever showed a personal and kindly interest in the welfare of every man in his employ, never discharging one of his operatives except for grave cause, and in case of the illness of an employe he invariably continued to pay his wages until he was able to resume work or until he was called from the scene of life's activities. Many a man grew up with the business, starting in as a boy, and those who became enfeebled and incapable for further work were retained on the payroll at full rate. These facts are significant evidence of Mr. Fox's high sense of his stewardship, and there are many yet living who have cause to remember his generosity and timely aid, and who hold his name in grateful and affectionate memory.

Mr. Fox was entirely without ostentation, and of a very reticent nature, but those who knew him best were most appreciative of his sterling character, which was true to itself and to duty in every relation. He was a shrewd and systematic business man, was a constant reader, and had broad and comprehensive knowledge. He was a distinct individual, and was strong in his convictions, so that flattery was ever impotent to cajole him into compromise or enmity awe him into silence. His heart was sensitive to every human feeling, and his tolerance and sympathy were marked attributes of his nature. He spared no pains to be helpful to those "in any way afflicted in mind, body or estate," and the most cherished memories are those touching his personality rather than his business operations. In Stafford one may hear many statements and appreciative estimates showing the kindness and self-abnegating spirit of this truly noble citizen, and it will not prove malapropos to here leave record concerning one of the many cases where his aid and influence were extended in an unselfish and kindly way. Although such was his absorption and personal abstraction that he often passed his most intimate friends on the street without recognition, it is related that on one occasion he chanced to meet one of Stafford's business men, with whom he entered into conversation. In the course of the same he advised this man to expand the scope of his business. The latter responded by saying that he was quite well satisfied with his present operations, and that to follow the advice of Mr. Fox would require the investment of capital which he could not secure. Mr. Fox then said: "If you need more capital, call on me." Several months later this business man was in imperative need of funds in connection with his affairs, and, mindful of the words of Mr. Fox, he called at the latter's office and asked assistance in the emergency. Mr. Fox asked the amount of money needed, and upon receiving response, turned to his bookkeeper and inquired as to the amount of funds directly available. On learning that he did not have on hand the required amount he sat for a few moments in silence, and then inquired as to the time when the business man wanted the money. "I would like to have it to-morrow by ten o'clock," was the reply. "Call here at eight o'clock in the morning and I will have it for you," was Mr. Fox's immediate statement. That night, while the object of his timely aid was enjoying his rest, Mr. Fox was being driven through the cold to Tolland, seven miles distant, and upon his arrival he awakened the cashier of the Tolland bank and requested him to go to the bank and supply him with the required money. The next morning, at the appointed hour, the business man called at Mr. Fox's office and received the money, through the use of which he was able to tide over a serious period in his affairs, and when he was finally able to repay the amount thus borrowed Mr. Fox refused to accept any interest on the same. This is but one out of very many examples of his kindness and generosity.

In politics Mr. Fox was originally a staunch advocate of the principles and policies of the Whig party, but for an interval of several years he maintained an independent and strictly non-partisan attitude, while in his later years he espoused the cause of the Democratic party, to which he ever afterward gave an unqualified allegiance, though he never sought public office, being essentially a business man, and having no desire for the honors and emoluments to be gained through personal ambition in a political way. In October, 1873, he was elected president of the Stafford Cemetery Association, in which capacity he served for several years. He was at all times vitally interested in the welfare and material progress of his home town and county, and was an active and liberal supporter of such projects and enterprises as were advanced for the public.

good. He was deeply interested in educational matters, in which line his influence was distinctly and beneficently exercised. He established in Stafford a select school, the same being successfully conducted for several years, and he personally paid all expenses incidental to its maintenance. Though appreciative of spiritual verities, and leading a life which was a model of integrity and honor, Mr. Fox was not actively identified with any religious organization, though he was a liberal supporter of church work, being tolerant in his judgment and having a respect for all agencies for morality, without sectarian bias, though in his early years he held membership in the Congregational Church.

On Christmas Day, 1856, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Fox and Miss Jennette Hyde, who was born in Tolland, daughter of Alvan and Sarah (Pinney) Hyde, and sister of the late Hon. Alvan P. Hyde. No children were born of this union. Mrs. Fox is a woman of culture and gracious presence, and she was ever in hearty sympathy with her honored husband in all of his acts of kindness, while her own generosity has found many exemplifications in an unostentatious way, knowledge of her kindly acts being gained only when imparted by the recipients of her favor. She is prominent in the social life of Stafford, where her friends are in number as her acquaintances, while her attractive home, so hallowed by the associations of the past, is a center of gracious hospitality.

HYDE (of Stafford). The original Hyde family in the town of Stafford, many of whose descendants have been conspicuous in the various activities of life, both in the town and State, were the posterity of one of Connecticut's first settlers.

(I) William Hyde, the progenitor of the Stafford family, was first at Hartford in 1636. His name is on the monument in the old cemetery there dedicated to the original settlers. He probably came over from England in 1633, with Rev. Thomas Hooker, the first minister of Hartford, and removed with him to Hartford in 1636. William Hyde was one of the original thirty-five proprietors of Norwich, Conn., which place was settled in 1660. He died in 1681. Ephraim Hyde, the Stafford settler, was in the fifth generation from William, of Hartford and Norwich, the line of his descent being through Samuel, Thomas and Capt. Jacob Hyde.

(II) Samuel Hyde, son of William, the emigrant, born about 1637, at Hartford, married, in 1659, Jane Lee, of East Saybrook (now Lyme). They settled in Norwich in 1660. He was a farmer, and had lands assigned to him at Norwich West Farms, where he died in 1677.

(III) Thomas Hyde, son of Samuel, born in 1672, married, in 1697, Mary Backus. He settled at Norwich West Farms (now Franklin), and was occupied in farming. He died in 1755.

(IV) Capt. Jacob Hyde, son of Thomas, born in 1703, at Norwich West Farms (now Franklin), Conn., married, in 1727, Hannah Kingsbury. He was a farmer, and settled at Norwich West Farms, and died in 1782.

(V) Ephraim Hyde, son of Capt. Jacob, and the Stafford settler, was born in 1734, at Norwich West Farms (now Franklin), Conn. He married Mary Giddings, and they settled in Stafford, where they lived and died. Their children were: (1) Nathaniel, born March 7, 1757, at Stafford, married (first) Sarah Strong and (second) Widow Cynthia Palmer. (2) Hannah, born Nov. 15, 1758, at Stafford, died there unmarried. (3) Lydia, born Jan. 6, 1761, at Stafford, married Joseph Alden. (4) Ephraim, born Jan. 23, 1763, at Stafford, married Margaret Walbridge. (5) Martha, born Feb. 15, 1765, at Stafford, married Oliver Wales. (6) Jacob, born Nov. 13, 1767, at Stafford, married Lydia Hall. (7) Jasper, born in December, 1769, at Stafford, married Delight Strong. (8) Eunice, born Aug. 2, 1772, at Stafford, married Eli Converse. (9) Eli, born May 4, 1777, at Stafford, married Mehitabel Lyon.

Of the sons of Ephraim Hyde, the Stafford settler, Nathaniel and Jasper, who died respectively in 1825 and 1848, were prominent ironmasters and manufacturers. Nathaniel Hyde built the Lafayette iron furnace, at Stafford Hollow, in 1796, and from then until 1820 carried on an extensive business. These brothers, like some of their sons, were extensively engaged in the iron business in that section during the first half of the century, and were large owners of property. They were men of influence, and did great good in their time. The late Hon. Alvan Pinney Hyde, of Hartford, was a grandson of Nathaniel Hyde; another, the late Hon. Ephraim H. Hyde, of Stafford, ex-lieutenant governor of the State, and a distinguished agriculturist and breeder of high-grade stock, was the son of Jasper Hyde.

HON. EPHRAIM H. HYDE, formerly of Stafford, ex-Lieutenant Governor of Connecticut, and a distinguished agriculturist and well-known breeder of fine cattle, who gave upward of fifty years of enlightened effort, sparing neither time nor money, in raising to the highest level the farming industry of the State, thereby increasing the value of its dairy farms and stock, made for himself a high place in the annals of farming in Connecticut, and his name a household word to the leading agriculturists of the country.

Mr. Hyde was born June 1, 1812, in the town of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., son of Jasper Hyde. As a boy he passed the time not unlike the boy of that period in a rural community—attended the district school, worked on a farm, and as time passed, found employment in other lines. His educational advantages were meager, and other than the neighborhood school consisted of a six-weeks' course in Monson (Mass.) Academy. At seventeen he began clerking in a country store, and at twenty-one he became its proprietor. He branched out in various lines, and rapidly developed signal business ability, and, being a young man of energy and industry, and a good manager, he prospered. From his first business experience on through an unusually long and active business life he was identified with many of the leading enterprises of his locality, and especially with the agricultural life of the town, State and country. He was for years connected with the iron business of the locality in which he lived, which was then a prominent industry. Back in the latter 'twenties he was one of the promoters of a cotton mill established at Stafford Springs, an industry then in its infancy, which, however, later became a great and flourishing one there and elsewhere in the town. While interested in many business enterprises the bent of his mind was in another direction, that of agricultural work and stock breeding, to which his life and means unreservedly and without stint were given, with marked success in his own achievements and great good and profit to the farming community, not only of Stafford, but of the State and country at large. Along in the 'forties Mr. Hyde commenced the breeding of stock from imported and native cattle, breeding Devons, and later experimenting with Ayrshires, Durhams and Jerseys. The Devons he considered the best adapted to this section, and so he applied himself in the scientific selection and breeding of that class, and with excellent results. One writer has said that Mr. Hyde will be known as the pathfinder for Devons in this country, and that the improvement of cattle in Connecticut is owing in a large measure to his care and wisdom. Mr. Hyde always had the interests of general agriculture at heart, and was during the active years of his life a most zealous co-operator in protecting and advancing them. He fully comprehended the needs of the farmers and the necessity of arousing them to a realization of the benefits to be derived by the adoption of more intelligent and scientific methods of farming. He was largely instrumental in the organization of the Tolland County Agricultural Society, in 1852, of which he was president from its organization until 1860, and again from 1864 to 1868. Hyde Park, at Rockville, was so named in his honor and for the valuable services he rendered the society. Mr. Hyde was president of the State Agricultural Society from 1858 to 1881, and vice-president of the New England Agricultural Society from its organization on up through his active period of life, also vice-president of the State Board of Agriculture from its organization, in 1866. For nearly forty years he was chairman of the Commissioners on diseases of domestic animals. He was president of the American Breeders Association from 1865 until the office was discontinued. He was also president of the Connecticut Valley Agricultural Society, and was one of the incorporators of the Connecticut Stock Breeders' Association; was vice-president of the Dairymen's

Association, and was chairman of the committee to publish the first volume of the "American Herd Book." He was president of the Tolland County East Agricultural Society from its organization, in 1870, to 1876. Mr. Hyde was largely instrumental in establishing the Storrs Agricultural College, at Mansfield, Conn., and ever afterward gave it his hearty support. He was chosen one of the school's trustees in 1889, to erect the beautiful and commodious college buildings. He took part in establishing, in 1879, the Connecticut Experimental Station, was chosen vice-president of its board of control, and for years held such relations with it. He was a delegate from the New England Agricultural Association to the United States Agricultural Convention which met in Washington. At one time he was a formidable candidate for the office of United States Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. Hyde was persistent and tireless in his labors to secure reform in the management of prisons and houses of correction, and was a director of the Prisoners' Friend Association. He was for years a director of the Industrial School for Girls at Middletown, and was active in matters pertaining to the State board of education, serving as inspector in 1867, 1868 and 1869. A Democrat of the Old School, enthusiastic and zealous, he entered into politics when a young man with the vim so characteristic of him, and forged his way to the second place in the gift of the State. He served Tolland county as county commissioner in 1842-43; was a member of the Legislature from the town of Stafford in 1851 and 1852; was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention held at Baltimore in 1860; and in the Presidential campaign that followed he took a conspicuous part, identifying himself with the States Rights faction of the party, and was made an elector on the Breckenridge ticket. In 1876 and again in 1887 Mr. Hyde was made a State senator, and he was lieutenant-governor of Connecticut in 1867 and 1868. He held various other offices of trust and responsibility, and during his long public life filled a large space in the State and Nation. He presided at the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the primitive organization of the Congregational Church and Society in Franklin, Conn., held in 1868. He presided at the Tolland Centennial celebration in 1876, and delivered the opening address. A man of the strictest integrity and honor, affable and agreeable in manner, Mr. Hyde always had and held the esteem, confidence and good will of the people of his town and State, where he enjoyed a large circle of acquaintances and friends. He was strictly a temperate man, which in no doubt accounts, in a large measure, for his longevity and his activity beyond four score years. His personality was striking; he was tall and dignified, with a strong and forceful face, and had the bearing of a courteous gentleman.

On Sept. 27, 1836, Mr. Hyde was married to Hannah Converse Young, and to them were born six children, three of whom died in infancy and one in childhood. Ellen E. Hyde, on Jan. 16, 1871, was married to Hon. Ernest Cady, president of Pratt & Cady Co., of Hartford, and former lieutenant-governor of the State. Ephraim H. Hyde, Jr., now of the law firm of Hungerford, Hyde, Joslyn & Gilman, of Hartford, was married June 2, 1881, to Clara Pearce Tuttle. The mother of these children died Feb. 26, 1862, and the father on Oct. 19, 1869, was married to Mary S. Williams.

JOSEPH BENNETT. The various manufacturing industries in the vicinity of Brooklyn, Windham Co., Conn., have drawn a large number of French-Canadians in that direction, and each year finds more of these excellent citizens making permanent homes for themselves in the busy towns of this great State.

One of the best representatives of this intelligent class is Joseph Bennett, who is well known through the town of Brooklyn, and in his home village of Wauregan. The parents of Mr. Bennett were Joseph and Kate Bennett, the former of whom was a resident in early life of Montreal, Canada, from which city he removed across the border and located in the United States, at Stalman, Vt., and after a few years residence there, came to Wauregan, Conn. Entering the factory there in 1861, he remained for many years, late in life becoming a farmer of means and dying on his own estate, at the age of eighty-seven years. At the time of his coming, but one French family had located there. The mother died in Montreal. A family of eight children came to them, six of these still surviving: Peter, who resides at West Wauregan; Joseph; Lewis, who lives at West Wauregan; Louisa, who married and moved to Montpelier, Vt.; Eliza, who is a widow, living in Putnam, Conn.; and Elizabeth, who is the wife of Abraham Barrett.

Joseph Bennett, of Wauregan, was born July 10, 1845, in Montreal, Canada, and resided in that northern city until the age of eleven years. At Stalman, Vt., where his father lived until he was about sixteen years old, he assisted in the farm work and he practically had no school opportunities. His parents were poor and as he was one of the older members of the family, his best efforts were needed to assist in the support of the younger ones. Those who have known Mr. Bennett through the years of his prosperity and have seen his liberality and kindness, will understand how willingly the lad put his young shoulder to the wheel, in his early career. At the age of sixteen years he entered the card room in the Wauregan mills, later was promoted to the weaving department, and for many years previous to his retirement, was loom fixer for the Wauregan mill. During the twenty years of his connection with the mills, he lived a frugal, careful life, and his means accumulated so that when he desired a more active life and out-door exercise, he was able to gratify himself and opened a livery and trucking business in Wauregan and followed this with success for about twenty years.

Again, when Mr. Bennett sought rest, he had accumulated by the same careful habits, a competency that made it possible to close out his business and devote his attention to the congenial business of looking after his small farm of fifteen acres, and taking care of other property interests, for the poor, uneducated lad, who entered the mill in a low position, is now one of the largest tax-payers in the town of Brooklyn. Rents come to him from six houses which he erected in West Wauregan, and the management of his property gives him all he cares to concern himself about.

Although a Democrat and an influential one, Mr. Bennett has never accepted office. He was married in Wauregan, to Salina Hogan, who passed away in July, 1901, at the age of fifty years, leaving no children. Mr. Bennett is a leading member of the Sacred Heart Catholic Church, of Wauregan, and a most liberal supporter of it, and he is highly esteemed in this community.

HENRY C. ISHAM, a successful and well known contractor and builder of Columbia, Conn., descends from one of the old and highly respected Tolland county families.

Grandfather Gerdon Isham was born in Tolland, where he died Feb. 17, 1857. His wife was Abigail Strong, of Columbia, and he was a brother of Dr. Oliver Isham, a noted physician of his day in Tolland. The grandfather was a hatter by trade, and was quite successful. His family was as follows: Shubael Strong; Mary Ann, deceased, who married a Mr. Baker and lived in Tolland; David B., of Boston, Mass.; Jane, who lives at Columbia Centre, widow of Henry Arnold.

S. S. Isham, the father of Henry C., was born in Tolland in 1826, and at the age of ten years came to Columbia to live with his grandfather Strong. There he married Mary Clarke, a daughter of Chester and Polly Clarke. The father inherited a farm on Chestnut Hill and there engaged in farming. During the war of the Rebellion, he served gallantly in the army for nine months. In politics, he was a Republican and held the office of assessor for one year; he was a member of and worker in the Congregational Church. To the parents were born: David S., of Mohegan, Conn.; Henry C., our subject; Hattie, wife of Alonzo Little, of Columbia; Casper, a school teacher, principal of the Shirwin school of Boston, Mass.; Jennie, the wife of Chas. R. Buell, of Columbia, Connecticut.

Henry C. Isham was born on the home farm on Chestnut Hill, Feb. 18, 1856, and attended the Chestnut Hill school. Later he was given the advantage of one term at the Natchaug school of Willimantic. In 1873 he began working out by the month on farms, in Suffield, Hebron, Wapping, Mansfield, etc., continuing thus for five or six years, earning from twenty to twenty-five dollars in summer and in winter cutting timber at twenty dollars per month. Then he learned the carpenter trade, and has since been engaged in that line, branching out until he is now one of the leading contractors and builders of his locality. The comfortable home of the Isham family is just opposite the home farm on land purchased by Mr. Isham, and it bears evidence to his skill as a builder and his thrift as the head of a household.

Politically, Mr. Isham is a Republican and has always taken an active interest in the affairs of the town, serving as first selectman for three years and second selectman one year, as a member of the board of relief several times, and as grand juror. Both he and his excellent wife are active members of the Congregational Church, and socially, Mr. Isham is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having united with Sunnyside Lodge of Norwich, while employed there.

On March 1, 1885, Mr. Isham was married to Sarah E. Buell and the following family has been born to them: Addie, Feb. 6, 1886; Ruth, May 22, 1892; Dorothy, in October, 1894, who died in infancy. Mr. Isham, the subject of this sketch, is a successful business man, a patriotic citizen, a kind father and husband and a good neighbor and enjoys the respect and esteem of a large percentage of the people of Columbia, as well as the outlying districts, on account of his many excellent qualities.

BUELL. Tolcott Buell was a native of Colchester, Westchester Society, where he passed his entire life, engaged in farming, dying at the age of eighty; he was the father of the following family: Richard, who moved to New Orleans; Theodore, who lived in Westchester, Conn.; Charles, who lived in Westchester, Conn.; Henry, who lived in Westchester, Conn., but died in Windham; Tolcott, grandfather of Mrs. Isham; George, who lived and died in Colchester; Mary, married to Otis Kellogg, of New York; Betsy, married to a Mr. Sylvester of New York; Nancy, married to a Mr. Carey of Eastbury; Harriet, married to Newton Hutchins; Patty, married to Ralph Carrier, of Westchester; Sally, who married and moved to Massachusetts.

The grandfather Tolcott Buell married Betsy Watrous, a daughter of Theodore Watrous, and he was born in Colchester and died at the age of eighty, in Westchester. His wife died in Cazenovia, N. Y., aged seventy-five, and they were married in Westchester. The grandfather was a farmer and always lived in Westchester, and in addition to being a successful farmer, was a blacksmith by trade. To him and his wife were born: Henry Watrous; George, deceased, who lived in Cazenovia, N. Y.; Albert, of Cazenovia, N. Y.; Abbie, who married in Ohio, where she is now living; Mary, who married and lived in Cazenovia, N. Y., and her twin sister, Martha, deceased, unmarried; Harriet, deceased, unmarried.

Henry Watrous Buell was born in Pittsfield,

Mass., June 7, 1823, but grew to manhood in Colchester, Conn., where he attended the district schools and lived with his grandfather Watrous. His first business venture for himself was at farm work in Colchester, but in 1866 he came to Columbia and purchased a farm, where he has since resided, engaged in agricultural pursuits. In politics he was originally a Democrat, but has been a Republican since 1860, and has been honored with various town offices, among which are those of member of the board of relief, assessor, etc. In religious matters, he is a staunch member of the Congregational Church, and is active in the work of that denomination.

To this worthy man and his wife were born the following family: William Henry, July 31, 1852, who married Candice M. Carpenter of North Coventry, and has a son, Ralph H., born April 15, 1883; Mary, widow of Charles Smith, of Columbia; Sarah Elizabeth, married to Henry C. Isham; our subject; Charles R., born Nov. 27, 1858, who married May 15, 1884, Jennie Isham, a sister of Henry C. Isham, is a farmer of Columbia, and has two children, Rachel, born Aug. 14, 1892, and Luther I., born June 13, 1898.

The mother of this family was Nancy Cobb Buell, a daughter of Henry Cobb of Rhode Island, who was born June 23, 1820, and died Dec. 21, 1888, having been married in Windham, Conn. Her demise was deeply mourned by a large circle of friends as well as her immediate family.

CHARLES E. KENNEDY, for a number of years a merchant of Providence, R. I., and later proprietor of the Boston Store, at Moosup, Windham county, is a son of Joshua S. and Joanna (West) Kennedy, was born in Plainfield, and belongs to an old Rhode Island family.

Alexander Kennedy, the great-grandfather of Charles E., was born in Voluntown, Conn., and spent the greater part of his life in Foster, R. I., where he engaged in farming, and where he died. His wife, Mary Edmunds, died in June, 1820, at the age of eighty-four years. They had twelve children: William, born in 1771, married and went to the West. His descendants are at Waupun, Wis. Hannah, born in 1773, married a Montgomery. Catherine, born in 1774, married Russell Wood. Rachel, born in 1775, died unmarried. Barbara, born in 1777, married a Montgomery. Alexander, was born in 1779. Polly, born in 1780, married Thomas Blanchard. Joseph, born in 1783, married and reared a family in Belchertown, Mass., where he was engaged in farming. Joshua, the grandfather of Charles E. Kennedy, was born Jan. 1, 1784. Betsy, born in 1786, died July 14, 1855; she married Christopher Place, of Foster, R. I., who died Jan. 31, 1855, at the age of seventy-four. They had seven sons, all of whom are believed to be dead; (1) Ira; (2) Nathan, who had a son, George, who lives in Canterbury, Conn.; (3) George, who married and lived and died in Lockport, N. Y.; (4) Archibald, who married and died in South Providence, R. I.; (5) Emory, who went West, married and died; (6) Clark, who married Eliza Waterman, and lived and died in Pawtucket; (7) Christopher, born in 1820, deceased in 1897, who had two wives, Mary Hyde, who died in 1842; and Nancy Blanchard, by whom he had a daughter, Fannie F. Samuel, eleventh child of Alexander Kennedy, born in 1788, married Sallie Hill, and has descendants living in Danielson. George, born Oct. 1, 1789, died July 25, 1868, at the home of his son, George W. He married Celinda Parker, who died at the old homestead in Foster, R. I., Dec. 8, 1866, at the age of seventy-nine years, two months and five days. To George and Celinda Kennedy were born: (1) Alexander, who has descendants at South Scituate, R. I.; (2) Thomas P., who died in infancy; (3) William E., born Dec. 1, 1819, who lives in Moosup Valley, R. I., and has a family; (4) Edgar M., who has a daughter, Mrs. Ella Palmer, now living in Danielson; (5) Rev. George W., born Jan. 24, 1824, deceased April 5, 1901, whose first wife, Marcy Battey, died Jan. 10, 1860, leaving a son, Alvero A., born Nov. 30, 1853. (Rev. George W. Kennedy married for his second wife, Mrs. Eliza Bennett, by whom he had two children: Waldo M., born in 1865; and Fannie L., born in 1867; the wife died in September, 1869. The third Mrs. Kennedy was Mrs. Harriet Wood, who died in 1881; and the fourth, Mrs. Mary Andrews; (6) Theodore P. Kennedy, the sixth child of George Kennedy, is still living, and is a resident of Brooklyn, Conn.; (7) Lorenzo M.; (8) Eveline, died Sept. 27, 1830, when not a year old.

Alvero A. Kennedy, who has greatly assisted in furnishing the foregoing data, was married Jan. 17, 1883, to Nabbie E. Tyler, and their children are: Eugene F., who was born Oct. 18, 1883; Florence M., Oct. 17, 1884; Arthur G., May 1, 1886; Jessie H., Aug. 22, 1889; Bertha T., May 26, 1893; Fred J., Feb. 3, 1896.

Joshua Kennedy, the grandfather of Charles E., was born in Foster, R. I., Jan. 1, 1784, where he was first married, March 4, 1810, to Clarissa Hall, who was born in Plainfield, Aug. 13, 1787, and died in her native town, March 4, 1836. She was the only child of Joshua and Sybil (Hunn) Hall, both of whom were natives of Plainfield. Mr. Kennedy came to Plainfield in 1811, and located on what has since been called the Kennedy homestead, a pleasant place of about seventy-five acres, near Moosup Pond, in the northeastern part of the town. There he was a successful farmer, and there he died, July 18, 1857. At that time the farm consisted of about 150 acres. He was a Democrat, and held several local offices. To him and his wife were born five children: (1) John F., born Feb. 28, 1811, a farmer, married Susan Gallup in 1840, and died April 27, 1902; they had two sons and two daughters. (2) Mary, born Aug. 29, 1812, died March 3, 1869; she married Dean West, of Plainfield, in 1837, by whom she had three sons and three daughters. (3) Albert, born Feb. 15, 1815, died Sept. 13, 1842; he was married in 1836 to Joanna West, and was a blacksmith; they had three children, one of whom, Emily, the widow of William Crandall, is still living, and has her home in Plainfield with Charles E. Kennedy. (4) Clarissa, born May 16, 1821, died Nov. 17, 1896; she married William C. Marple in March, 1844, and became the mother of three sons and two daughters. (5) Joshua Shephard, the father of Charles E., was born Dec. 6, 1823, and was first married Sept. 12, 1844, to Joanna West; and to his second wife, Abbie E. Gibson, in 1861. Grandfather Joshua Kennedy was married second to Ann G. Weaver, who was born in Rhode Island, Jan. 2, 1837. She died Aug. 31, 1871. To this union was born one child, Lauretta, who was born April 10, 1841, and died March 7, 1858.

Joshua Shephard Kennedy, the father of Charles E., was born in Plainfield in the house that was his home for seventy-two years. His education was secured in the Pond Hill district school, and he chose the independent life of a farmer on the old homestead, in which he was engaged until the spring of 1895. That year, having already erected in connection with his son, a handsome residence in Moosup, he moved into it, wisely deciding to secure a little rest in life at a time when it had been well earned and seemed very fitting.

Mr. Kennedy was married the first time, Sept. 12, 1844, to Joanna West, the widow of Albert Kennedy. She was born in Scituate, R. I., Feb. 17, 1814, and died in Plainfield, Conn., Sept. 19, 1855, a daughter of John West and Joanna Dexter, both residents of Scituate, R. I. To this union were born: (1) Eliza J., born Aug. 17, 1847, who died May 31, 1863; (2) Charles Edwin, whose name appears at the beginning of this sketch, born Sept. 14, 1849; (3) Franklin P., born Oct. 5, 1852, deceased in Providence, R. I., June 28, 1885, who was married in Albany, N. Y., April 16, 1879, to Hatty L. Van Avery; (4) Eva L., born Oct. 2, 1854, deceased June 1, 1855. Mr. Kennedy was married for the second time to Abbie E., a daughter of Ira and Betsy Gibson, of Moosup. At the time of this marriage she was the widow of John Q. Adams. A daughter was born to this union, Jennie A., born May 26, 1863, who married March 2, 1885, John W. Dawley, of Plainfield, by whom she had a son, William K.

Mr. Kennedy is a Democrat, and for several years was a member of the board of selectmen, and has filled several minor positions. He and his wife are both members of the Baptist Church of Moosup.

Charles Edwin Kennedy was born on the old Kennedy homestead in Plainfield, and there he was reared and for a time carried on lumbering. Later he moved to Providence, where he opened a grocery store, in which he also had a meat market, and continued in that place for nearly twenty years, with marked success; he returned to Moosup, and for three years was proprietor of the Boston Dry Goods Store, selling out in 1901 to Horns Brothers, who have since carried on the business. Mr. Kennedy is a Democrat in national affairs, though in local matters he takes a strictly independent position. He was married, Dec. 16, 1887, in Providence, R. I., to Mary S. Crandall, a native of East Greenwich, R. I., and a daughter of Rowland and Lydia (Wightman) Crandall. Rowland Crandall was one of twenty-five children. To Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy were born: Alice Crandall, Nov. 25, 1891; Rowland C., and Madeline Augusta, twins, born July 16, 1896. Rowland C. died at the age of eleven months.

HENRY A. BOSWORTH, one of the leading farmers and respected citizens of the town of Eastford, Conn., was born Nov. 5, 1851, in Eastford, Windham county, in the house which is now utilized as the Congregational Church parsonage. His family is one of the old and honorable ones of New England.

Through family tradition it is learned that the Bosworths of ancient Ashford came into the town from Rehoboth, Mass., and this is borne out by the records which show that Joseph Bosworth purchased land in Ashford, Conn., in 1718. This Joseph is probably the Joseph Bosworth who was married in Rehoboth, Mass., Aug. 23, 1715, to Lidia Kent, and he was a son of Joseph and Esther (Smith) Bosworth, of Rehoboth, who were married Feb. 10, 1680, among their children being a Joseph, born Sept. 27, 1683. The elder Joseph's family is the first of the name of record in Rehoboth, and likely came from Hull, Mass., where a Joseph was made a freeman in 1680, and who, Savage says, was, perhaps, the youngest brother of Benjamin Bosworth, who was a resident of Hingham, Mass., in 1635, and who, perhaps, came to American shores in the "Elizabeth Dorcas," in 1634.

Benjamin Bosworth, son of Joseph, was in young manhood when the family located in Ashford. By his wife Jemima he had the following children: Hopeskill, Jemima, Mary, Bridget, Ebenezer and Allen.

Ebenezer Bosworth, son of Benjamin, was born Aug. 23, 1736, and was a soldier in the Revolution. May 7, 1759, he married Elizabeth Fletcher, and their children were: Mary, Benjamin, Rachel, Jemima, Allen, Ebenezer, Seth, Fletcher and John.

Deacon Allen Bosworth, the grandfather of Henry A. Bosworth, was born March 27, 1768, in the southern part of what is now the town of Eastford. After his marriage he removed to Westford, where he resided until his death. For many years he was a deacon in the church in Westford. His wife was Sally Hall, who survived him a number of years and died at the home of a daughter in Eastford. Their children were as follows: Clarissa, who married (first) Joseph Dorsett, and lived for a number of years in Eastford, later married Augustus Perrin, removed to Fredonia, N. Y., and there died; and Samuel Davis.

Samuel Davis Bosworth, father of Henry A. Bosworth, was born in the southern part of what is now the town of Eastford, and grew up a farmer boy. When the family located at Westford, after the death of his father, he assisted his mother in the management of the farm and placed it in such a condition that when it was later offered for sale, it was readily disposed of and Samuel and his mother and sister settled in the village of Eastford. There he engaged in stock dealing and real estate transactions. It was not until he had reached middle life that he married, after which he set up housekeeping in the residence now used as the Congregational Church parsonage, which was the comfortable family home until 1862, at which time he built the house now occupied by Henry A. Bosworth.

Mr. Bosworth then returned to the farm and resumed stock dealing also, and was long generally conceded to be one of the best and most successful farmers of his locality. Few agriculturists in the southern part of the town had so thoroughly studied stock or become so excellent a judge of it, hence he was more than usually successful in his buying and selling. Mr. Bosworth continued to live on the farm until about the time of his son's marriage, when he removed to the village and passed his declining years in Eastford. His activity was great, and his judgment in business matters was relied upon, while his integrity was unquestioned. In politics he was an active member of the Republican party and after efficiently filling many of the local offices with the greatest efficiency, he was sent as representative to the Legislature in 1865. For a considerable period he was a member of the board of selectmen. In the Congregational Church he was not only a consistent member, but was active in the management of its business affairs and ever a liberal supporter. Mr. Bosworth found great pleasure, comfort and profit in the study of the Bible and endeavored to regulate his life by its teachings. Until his death he was a valued teacher in the Sunday-school. This highly respected and exemplary citizen passed out of life, leaving his part of the world better for his existence, March 2, 1892, aged seventy-nine years, three months and twenty-seven days, his remains being followed to their last resting-place in the West cemetery, Eastford village, by a large concourse of friends and fellow-citizens.

Samuel Davis Bosworth married Mrs. Elizabeth (Badger) Burt, widow of Jeremiah Burt. By her first marriage she had three children, all of whom died young. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bosworth were: Henry A., of this biography; Clara M., who married Edwin F. Bass, and resides in Springfield, Mass., their one daughter, Lillian, becoming the wife of Harry Bennett, residing in Hartford, and having one child, Harold B.; Mary L., who married Ira H. Derby and resides at South

Weymouth, Mass. Mrs. Bosworth preceded her husband to the grave, dying March 4, 1886, at the age of sixty-nine years. Like her husband she was a beloved and esteemed member of the community.

Henry A. Bosworth was reared to agricultural pursuits and has always taken a deep interest in them. His education was obtained in the district schools and Woodstock Academy, after which he assisted his father, working with him until his marriage, at which time he took charge of the farming operations which he has continued ever since. During the years when such business in his locality was profitable, he bought and sold much stock and cattle but since 1900 he has given more attention to dairying. Mr. Bosworth is a model farmer, understanding intelligently the intricate workings of nature and knowing how to apply them for his benefit. His possessions include the home farm of 150 acres and another farm, of fifty acres, in Woodstock, both of these presenting a very attractive appearance and returning large yields. His methods are in the line of modern progress and he is universally regarded as a most excellent farmer.

On April 14, 1874, Mr. Bosworth was united in marriage with Miss Margaret G. Buell, a native of East Boston, Mass., daughter of Alpheus and Caroline (Pressey) Buell, and the interesting and unusually intelligent family born to Mr. and Mrs. Bosworth is as follows: Carrie L., who is a graduate of Woodstock Academy; Edith E., who married George S. Bowen, their one child being,—Oliver D.; George H., who resides in Southbridge, Mass.; Benjamin Allen; Mary Lillian; Jennie F.; Edgar B.; Edwin F.; Harrison A.; Burton D.; Wendell R.; and Marguerite.

In politics Mr. Bosworth is a Republican and has consented to hold a few of the minor political offices, but has declined higher rewards from his party, though in reliability and fitness, few citizens of the town are better qualified. Mr. Bosworth has long been a member of the Congregational Church, of which his father was one of the most prominent supporters, and is a generous contributor to its charitable and benevolent work. In his community Mr. Bosworth is regarded with the highest esteem as a public-spirited and useful citizen, while in private life he is a considerate husband and father and kind and helpful neighbor.

FREDERICK W. SEWARD. A family which has touched the life of Windham county in its various public utilities is now represented worthily by Frederick W. Seward. A deceased member of the family, Major Samuel H. Seward, is also treated in detail on account of his very conspicuous services to the county while in life. Frederick W. Seward has been a leading figure in the business and political life of Putnam for many years, and none stands higher in the public estimation.

Mr. Seward was born June 27, 1851, in the town of Guilford, Conn. He is the son of Samuel Lee Seward, who was born March 3, 1800, in the same town, and who died there. His marriage occurred Dec. 11, 1822, when he was joined to Sarah Bartlett, born Jan. 2, 1803, in Guilford, who died there May 12, 1831. She was the daughter of Timothy and Clarissa (Chapman) Bartlett. She became the mother of Clarissa Chapman Seward, Feb. 25, 1825. The latter married Horace Parmelee, of Guilford, where she is now living a widow. Their marriage occurred Oct. 20, 1842, and they lived together over sixty years. Sarah Jane, the second child, born May 13, 1829, married Aug. 12, 1857, William P. Munger, of Bergen, N. Y., and is now a widow in that town. After the mother of these children died, Mr. Seward married Hulda M. Sanford, Dec. 23, 1831. She was born March 5, 1810, in Old Saybrook, and died Jan. 2, 1886, in Guilford. She was the daughter of Samuel Sanford, and bore to her husband the following children: Elizabeth S., born May 31, 1833, in Guilford, who married May 1, 1856, Samuel R. Leete, of Guilford, where they are now living, he being a retired carpenter and cabinet maker; Samuel Henry, whose biography appears below; Sarah Ellen, Oct. 3, 1837, who married Jan. 25, 1883, George B. Quigley, a newspaper man of Newburg, Ind., where they now live; Josephine Augusta, July 19, 1840, who married Nov. 12, 1862, John E. Benton, of Guilford, where they now reside; Mary Sophia, Aug. 31, 1842, deceased March 15, 1844, in Guilford; Edward Clarkson, Jan. 7, 1846, now living in New York City, a patent attorney of the firm of Brown & Seward, one of the oldest in the city (in April of 1870 Edward C. Seward married Ellen Bacon, of Derby, Conn., who died May 8, 1872. He married his second wife, Sarah Strong, of New York City, June 13, 1877. Upon her death he married his present wife, Miss Minnie Saxton, of Washington, D. C.); Arthur Louis Seward, born Aug. 19, 1848, married Aug. 16, 1883, Sarah Louise Smith, of Grinnell, Iowa (they are now living in Long Beach, Cal. He studied for the ministry, but, as his eyes failed, he engaged in the raising of fruit in that State); Frederick W. is the tenth child; Catherine Lucretia, born Aug. 16, 1856, is a teacher, living in Fair Haven, Washington.

The father of this family was a sea-faring man, commanding coasting vessels running from Guilford to New York, where he took farmers' produce and returned with merchants' supplies. In his later life he left the sea and took up agricultural pursuits. He was a man of very robust health, and was accidentally killed by falling from the loft of his barn. He was a very active and helpful member in the Third Congregational Church of Guilford, which he helped to build. In the days of the slavery curse he was an enthusiastic Abolitionist, and of course later joined the Republican party. In disposition he was jovial and genial, and was very devoted to his family.

Grandfather Timothy Seward was also a native of Guilford, Conn., where his birth occurred April 16, 1756, and his death, April 3, 1849, in the same place. In the great struggle for independence he took a gallant soldiers' part. His wife was Rebecca Lee, who was born March 17, 1766, in Guilford, where she died Dec. 3, 1859. This lady is remembered by F. W. Seward, in whose boyhood she told him stories about the Tories coming to her house, where they thought goods were stored. The early Swards were people of great longevity, the average age of Timothy Seward's family being ninety-three years. Timothy Seward was a man of exceedingly patriotic and enthusiastic temperament. In his later years he was a Revolutionary pensioner.

The birth of Frederick W. Seward occurred as stated in the town of Guilford. He passed the period of his early youth and adolescence in that town, receiving an ordinary common school education. His father having died when he was nine years of age, leaving his mother with a large family to support, it became necessary for Frederick to taste of the actualities of life much earlier than most young people. At that early age he began working on farms in the summer time, and at sixteen entered the store of H. E. Norton & Co. in Guilford, as a clerk. There he remained for two years, and then became a clerk in a shoe store in Saybrook, his employer being Galen Dowd. After four years in his service, Mr. Seward went West and located in Morris, Ill., where he took up the study of law in the office of Edward Sanford, a cousin. For two years he studied faithfully, but found that it was not a congenial occupation, and therefore abandoned it for a business life. His next employment was in a shoe store in Madison, Wis., the proprietor being Dayton Locke, in whose service he remained for a period of four years. At the end of that time he returned to his home town, where he purchased an interest in the general store of Beverly Monroe, with which he was connected until April, 1899, which marked the date of his location in Putnam, where he has since been successfully engaged in the shoe business.

Mr. Seward has been an active and helpful member of society in Putnam, entering into its public and social life, and always being foremost in any movement that looks to the advancement of the city's interests. Fraternally he is affiliated with Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, F. & A. M., and Putnam Council, No. 340, of the Royal Arcanum, of which latter body he has been collector for several years. Mr. Seward is a member of the Second Congregational Church, in which he takes a prominent part, being a member of the Church committee, and was clerk of the Church for several years; Mrs. Seward also was a prominent worker, being president of the Social Circle for a number of years. In political affairs Mr. Seward supports the Republican party, and has been a member of the board of selectmen, and in October of 1899 was elected on that ticket as town clerk and treasurer of Putnam, an office which he has administered with satisfaction to his constituents, and which he still holds.

On March 19, 1879, Mr. Seward celebrated marriage with Miss Lizzie Massey in the town of Morris, Ill.; she died in Guilford, Conn., Sept. 9, 1882. She was the mother of Myra, born March 11, 1880, in Guilford, who died in Morris, Ill. Nov. 12, 1899.

Mr. Seward's second marriage occurred Nov. 25, 1885, to the lady who now graces his home. Her maiden name was Catherine Ward Leete, a daughter of Edwin A. and Mary Ann (Leete) Leete, of Guilford, the father being an undertaker of that city. Mrs. Seward is the mother of Ethel, who died at the age of two weeks; Clayton Leete, born Oct. 15, 1888, in Guilford; Lee Sanford, Oct. 5, 1889, in Guilford, and Katherine, who was born March 30, 1897, in Putnam.

MAJOR SAMUEL H. SEWARD. On May 8, 1901, Putnam was called upon to mourn the death of one of her most distinguished citizens in the person of this gentleman, who died in Willimantic, while in attendance upon his court duties, he having been for a number of years clerk of the superior court, and clerk of Windham county. Mr. Seward was born in Guilford, Conn., April 16, 1835. As a lad he attended the public schools of his native town, and early became connected with the business world. He was connected in a business way in New Haven and Waterbury until the breaking out of the Civil war. An inherent patriotism and a taste for military affairs that was inborn (as his grandfather, Timothy Seward, had been a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and his father in the war of 1812) prompted him to enlist for the honor of Old Glory. Aug. 15, 1862, he became a private and was subsequently promoted through all the grades up to First Lieutenant of his Company. His regiment was the 14th Connecticut, and such active service did he see as to result in his being wounded four times. His last wound was received in the Battle of the Wilderness, July 9, 1864; it being so severe as to necessitate amputation of his left arm. He was shot through the body at Fredericksburg, and in the awful battle at Gettysburg received wounds so severe as to be counted among the dead, a wound in the arm and another in the body being his memorials of that crucial battle of the war. Upon his again reporting for duty, he was appointed paymaster with the rank of Major. As a partial recognition of faithful military service, he was appointed postmaster at Guilford, a position which he held for three years, from 1865 to 1868. In that year he entered the law office of Hon. Ralph D. Smith, of Guilford, and in the following year was admitted to the New Haven County Bar. He settled for practice in Stafford, and after four years came to Putnam. There he became one of the leading lawyers of Windham county, and followed his chosen profession until the year 1885, when he was appointed clerk of the superior court. While living in Putnam Mr. Seward was honored with the confidence of his fellow citizens to a marked degree, having frequently held positions of trust and responsibility. He was a staunch Republican and a very active worker in the ranks of his party. He served for a number of years as registrar of voters, was on the board of justices, member of the school board and high school committee, and was also a notary public for the county of Windham. In 1880 he was elected to the General Assembly of the State, and in that body served on a number of important committees. His judgment in educational matters was accorded recognition by his selection as a member of the building committee appointed by Governor Bigelow to erect the New Britain Normal School. He was for many years prominent in the affairs of the Second Congregational Church, having been a member of the Church committee for more than ten years, and also a member of the Society committee for many years. He served the Sunday-school in the capacity of superintendent for four years, doing efficient and lasting work. The military career of Major Seward did not end with the war. He was aide-de-camp on the staff of Commander Beath, of the national G. A. R. organization, and a member of the staffs of Commanders Crary and Broatch, of the State organization, serving under the latter as judge advocate. He also served as commander of the local post.

Major Seward was also interested in the business affairs of his adopted city. He was largely instrumental in organizing the Electric Light and Power Company, being for a number of years secretary and treasurer. The marriage of Major Seward to his first wife occurred in Essex, Conn., the lady being Martha Smith, who died in May of 1865. The lady who now survives him was Miss Sarah Watson, of Beloit, Wis., the marriage occurring May 1, 1867. A son of the first marriage, Walter L. Seward, for some time a business man of New Haven, is now deceased. As a county official, faithfulness and fidelity characterized the performance of the duties of Major Seward, and his death was mourned by a great concourse of friends who assembled to do honor to his memory.

LYMAN A. BAKER, born March 26, 1857, in Brooklyn, Windham Co., Conn., belongs to a family long known in the vicinity of Hampton. His grandfather, Joel Baker, and his father, David Baker, spent their entire lives in the neighboring towns of Pomfret and Brooklyn. For the first sixty-five years of his long, hard-working life, Joel Baker made his home in Pomfret, where he was born. He then rented a farm in the northwest corner of the town of Brooklyn, where he resided until his death at the unusual age of eighty-two years. He followed for the most part the trade of a cooper and farming. He was married three times and was the father of twenty children. His last wife, Betsey Coulton, of Ashford, Conn., like her husband, lived to be very old, dying in her eighty-first year, at the home of her son David. By her he had two children, Sophronia and David. Sophronia married James Nye, and after his death, Asa Kimball. She is now a widow, and resides in Hampton. Joel Baker attended the Congregational Church. He was a Democrat in political sentiment.

David Baker was the youngest of Joel Baker's large family of children. Born April 28, 1821, in Pomfret, he attended the common schools of that town. At the tender age of ten, however, he was sent to work on the neighboring farms, and he took hold of his rough work bravely, and learned from his different employers much about general farming, stone masonry, and some of the ruder methods of stone cutting. And it was in this school of hard labor and adversity that he gained most of his training for his life work. He worked wherever he found a chance, and, prudently saving his earnings, was enabled before he was thirty years old to purchase a small tract of eighty acres in the western part of the town of Brooklyn. There, the year of his marriage, which occurred Feb. 22, 1849, he erected the house in which he lived the rest of his life. Heart trouble undoubtedly shortened his life, and he died, April 25, 1879, at the age of fifty-eight. He was buried in the Witter cemetery at Brooklyn.

The strong characteristics of Mr. Baker were honesty, industry, and patriotism. He was a hard-working man and a thoroughly competent workman—whatever he did was well done. He was a good Christian and a man highly respected in his community. David Baker married Harriet E. Harris, who was born in Canterbury, Conn., Sept. 27, 1830, daughter of Joel and Louisa (Harris) Harris, farming people; her father was born in Rhode Island, and died in Hampton, Conn. Mrs. Baker had three brothers and two sisters, one of whom, Louisa, wife of Charles Wheeler, of Brooklyn, Conn., is still living. Mrs. Baker also survives.

David and Harriet E. Baker had nearly as many children as his father Joel, their family numbering fifteen. Mary Lavina was married to Eugene Phillips, after his death to Christopher Fitts, and later to William Hughes. She has one child, George E., and is now living in Pomfret. Hareiley and Hariliah were twins; the first lived but two months, the second eight months. George Ripley, now a resident of Eastford, Conn., married Addie Baker. Nelson Darius, married Addie Robbins; he is now a farmer in Canterbury, Conn. Lyman Allen is mentioned later. Charles Sidney, now a resident of Eastford, married Anna Newton and they have one child, Jesse. Lester Newton is a farmer and lives with his brother Lyman. Mason Melvin resides at Palmer, Mass. Hattie Ellen, who resides in Palmer Mass., has been married three times. Her first husband was Elisha Griggs, her second Lewis Stratton, and she is now the wife of William C. Ransford. Fannie Louisa married Stephen H. Brockway, a veteran of the Civil war, and they live on a farm at Woodstock Valley, Conn.; they have had three children: Stephen H.; Elsie, who died young; and David F. Amy lived only three years. Henry Myron has never married and is engaged in farming. Anice Augusta married Havilah Robbins, of Brooklyn, and has two children, William H., and Reuben L. Sarah Jane, who has never married, lives at Brooklyn.

Lyman A. Baker, in spite of a youth subjected to the strictest economy, has by hard work and careful management risen to the position of a well-to-do farmer and dairyman in Hampton. He acquired his education in the schools of Brooklyn and Phoenixville, in the intervals of hard work when he could be spared from the farm. He started out at the age of fifteen as a farm hand and for the first three years worked for Darwin Clark, at Phoenixville, in the town of Eastford, and was then employed another three years by Isaac Stetson, also a farmer of Eastford. It was while working for Mr. Clark that he attended school at Phoenixville. By the time he was twenty-one he had decided to make the most of this experience, and he hired out as manager of a farm instead of what he had been, a day-laborer. The farm of which he took charge was owned by Mrs. Hezekiah Hammond, and was located in Brooklyn. He wisely saved his earnings until he had enough to make a payment on a farm of his own, and then, as the "Connel Place," a 150 acre tract in Hampton, owned by Mrs. Flint, was for sale, he bought it, and in a very short time freed the property from all encumbrance. He has since sold thirty acres of woodland, and added seventy acres, the place now embracing the splendid area of 190 acres. Mr. Baker's land is all under cultivation and is well-stocked. There he carries on dairying and general farming with remarkable success. He has never married, but, as has already been said, shares his home with his brother, Lester. In religion Mr. Baker is, like his father and grandfather, a Congregationalist, and is a member of that church in Hampton. Politically he differs from them—they were Democrats, he is a Republican. He is not, however, an office seeker. His magnificent farm, which he has earned entirely by his own efforts, is a substantial proof of his chief characteristics, excellent management and a capacity for hard work.

CHARLES N. McLEAN, the manager and treasurer of the American mills at Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., is one of the foremost citizens of that place, and most favorably known in mill circles throughout New England. From a young man he has been connected with the wool business, and when he was seventeen began as a wool sorter for E. N. Kellogg & Co., of Hartford, and in this work has risen steadily until he has attained his present creditable position.

Mr. McLean was born May 24, 1850, in the town of Manchester, Conn., and is the son of Charles and Octa (Strong) McLean. His education was obtained in the schools of his native town, and in the Rockville high school. When he was seventeen his school days were ended, with his entrance into the Kellogg plant as noted above. For two years he continued with that house as a wool sorter, when he went to Rainbow, Conn., to work for his brother, Willard T., who was a manufacturer at that point. With H. C. Judd & Co., he worked as a wool grader, and later was their Boston salesman. In 1872 he began in the wool business in Worcester, Mass., soon after going to Boston, where he was in this line until 1881. At that time he became agent for the American mills at Rockville, succeeding Joseph M. Wade in that capacity. In 1885 Mr. McLean became treasurer and manager of the American mills, a position he still holds, and in which he has made more than a local reputation.

Mr. McLean was married Oct. 7, 1874, to Miss Adelaide Case, of Rainbow, Conn., the daughter of Richard D. Case, now deceased, who was very prominent in his life time. Mrs. McLean was born July 22, 1847, and is the mother of the following children, all but one are living: Emma J.; Frederick R., deceased Oct. 2, 1901, a designer in the American mills at Rockville, a position for which he prepared by graduating from the Philadelphia Textile School in the class of 1899; Clara Belle; Charles R.; Minnie Octa.

Mr. McLean is a strong Republican, and cast his first vote for Gov. Jewell. He has not, however, taken an active interest in political affairs, finding his own business too exacting for anything outside. Mr. McLean is a Mason and an Odd Fellow, having his membership in the Joseph Webb Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Boston, and in the Paul Revere Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Somerville, Mass. Mrs. McLean belongs to the Union Congregational Church, and the two are highly respected in every walk of society.

Allan McLean was the ancestor of this family in America. He was born Aug. 1, 1715, at Kilbridge, Island of Coll, shire of Argyll, North Britain, and he left Glasgow in July, 1740, arriving in Boston about the middle of the following September, going the same year to Hartford, where he married Susannah Beauchamp, Oct. 28, 1741. Her father, Isaac Beauchamp, was a noted merchant of Hartford. She died in a little more than a year after her marriage, and was buried in her father's tomb in Hartford.

Allan McLean was again married, this time to Mary Loomis, of Bolton, Conn., the wedding occurring Dec. 6, 1744. She was a daughter of Jabez Loomis, and was born in 1724. Allan Mc-Lean had been a school teacher in Bolton, where he married his second wife, and was evidently an educated man. Mr. McLean was a poor young man, and Jabez Loomis objected to his daughter marrying a "foreigner." When Mr. McLean, who had secured a valuable piece of timber near Hartford, tried to buy a yoke of oxen of a Mr. Thrall, for the purpose of taking his timber to Hartford, and wanted to buy on credit, Mr. Thrall was willing to sell to him, if Mr. Loomis, who was wealthy, would "go bail on the note." Mr. Loomis refused to do this, and Mr. Thrall feeling such conduct unworthy, told Mr. McLean to take the cattle anyway. So the timber was hauled away, the cattle were paid for and the young married couple established in the world.

Allan McLean at one time lived in East Hartford, where he had a store. He was a commissary in the French and Indian war. For a number of years he lived in what was then North Bolton, and died April 9, 1786, his widow surviving until Aug. 6, 1790, both being buried in the old cemetery at Vernon. They were the parents of the following children: Mary, born in 1745; Alexander, in 1747; Jabez, born Aug. 12, 1749; Susanna, Sept. 29, 1751.

Alexander McLean was born in what is now the town of Vernon, July 18, 1747, and was married to Johanna Smith, of North Bolton, in 1768. They lived in South Bolton seven years after their marriage, then removing to North Bolton, where their children were born: (1) Hannah, born Dec. 7, 1769, who married Dr. Elijah Fitch Reed, of East Windsor, by whom she had three sons and four daughters, dying Feb. 2, 1841; (2) Alexander, born June 12, 1772, who had two wives, Betsy Thrall and Betsy Sheldon; (3) Mary, born Nov. 5, 1774; (4) Col. Francis, born Sept. 26, 1777, who was twice married, first to Roxie McKinney, and then to Sarah B. Childs, and one of whose daughters, Mrs. Dickinson, is still living, her son, A. P., being the sheriff of Tolland county; (5) Allan, born July 20, 1781, who married (first) Sarah Pratt, and (second) Miss Morgan, and who was a clergyman for years, his son being the father of Gov. George N. McLean, of Connecticut. (6) Mary (2), born Jan. 15, 1785, who died unmarried at the age of twenty years; (7) Rosanna, born Aug. 14, 1789, who died single at the age of twenty years. Alexander McLean united with the church at Bolton in 1765, and was an industrious farmer. He died suddenly June 30, 1806, and was buried in the old cemetery at Vernon. Many loads of wood were hauled by him to Hartford, and all the old forms of domestic religion were rigorously observed by him. About 1793, in company with his son Francis, Alexander McLean bought the old home in Vernon, the house in which he lived remaining on the original site until it was removed to permit improvements for the Tolland County Children's Home.

Alexander McLean, who was born in 1772, in North Bolton, taught school when a young man, and married Betsy Thrall. They lived for a time in what is now Vernon, and then removed to Manchester, and from there to what is now Talcottville, where he conducted a cotton mill. Later in life he bought land and was an extensive farmer in Manchester. His home was on the top of what was known as "McLean's Hill," and he gave to each of his sons, John, Charles and William, a farm. In the Center Congregational Church of Manchester he served as a deacon, and was a man of deep religious feeling. To him and his wife, Betsy, were born eight children. (1) Alexander, born Oct. 24, 1794, married and settled on a part of his father's farm, where he died from typhoid fever, his wife also passing away from the same disease about the same time. They left five children, who were taken into the home of their paternal grandparents. Two of these children lived to adult age, Alexander and Edwin. Alexander was a sailor and then located in Haddam, where he died; his brother Edwin became a merchant at Great Barrington, Mass., where he had two wives, his second wife, Julia Ladd, being the mother of his three children; George Edwin, who is president of the University of Iowa; Minnie, who is Mrs. Nelson Lewis, of Brooklyn; and William, who is a grain dealer in Minneapolis. (2) John, who was born Sept. 6, 1796, and died March 14, 1877, married Sarah Bunce, a daughter of Charles Bunce, of Manchester, who was born Jan. 10, 1796, and died in December, 1834. For his second wife, John McLean married Rhoda Woodford in 1836. She was born in 1806. To the first marriage were born: Rosannah, born Sept. 30, 1825, who married George Talcott, of Rockville, and died June 9, 1876; Sarah Ann, born April 18, 1827, who married Albert F. Hills, and lives at Hillstown, Conn., her daughter, Charlotte, being dead, and her son Jasper, is a farmer of Manchester; John Dwight, born Feb. 4, 1829, who never married, and died in Hartford, April 25, 1900; Charlotte, born Oct. 5, 1831, who died when a little over twenty years of age, unmarried; Maro, born Aug. 5, 1834, who died at Manchester, Nov. 30, 1854. To the second marriage was born one child, Almena, born Sept. 15, 1841, who married Edwin Gilman, had one son, Almeron, and died in Manchester. (3) Betsy McLean, born July 5, 1798, married Rev. Nelson McLean, of Vermont, and died soon after in Maine. (4) Clarissa, born June 19, 1800, married Simeon Spencer, and died at Manchester in 1898. (5) Allan, born Dec. 24, 1802, married a Miss Woodbridge, by whom he had one son, Christopher, who has always lived in South Carolina; Allan McLean left home and went West, presumably dying in the Mexican war. (6) Mary, born Oct. 6, 1806, married George D. Morgan, and had three children who lived to adult age. She lived in Manchester to the age of eighty-nine years, and died in Plainfield, her remains being interred in Tolland. (7) Archibald died in infancy. (8) Charles, born May 30, 1811, married Octa Strong, of Bolton, and was the father of Charles N. McLean, whose name introduces this article. Mrs. Betsy (Thrall) McLean, mother of the foregoing children, died Aug. 9, 1814, in Manchester.

The second wife of Alexander McLean was Betsy Sheldon. She was the widow of Mr. Kellogg, and by her marriage with Mr. McLean became the mother of one son, William, who was born Sept. 22, 1817. He married Mary Palmer, of Vernon, and had a family of six children, but they separated, and he went to the West, where he settled at Lancaster, Ill., married, and had a family of children by his second wife. Alexander McLean died Nov. 11, 1843.

Charles McLean, the eighth child of Alexander and Betsy McLean, was born near Talcottville, where his father was engaged in cotton manufacturing, and supported a private school, the pupils of which were largely McLean children. May 8, 1839, Charles McLean married Octa Strong, at one time a teacher in this private school. She was the daughter of Ebenezer and Mary (Day) Strong, and was born Oct. 14, 1814. Charles McLean and his wife settled on a farm that belonged to his father, and lived there until 1866, when they removed to a home near Vernon depot, where Mr. McLean died, Dec. 20, 1881; his widow died May 28, 1887, in Rockville and both were buried at Vernon. Mr. McLean was connected with Elisha Hilliard for many years in the manufacture of satinets at Hilliardville. Just before the war he sold out his interest in this business, an act he afterward had cause to regret, as the war created a big demand for goods of that class and large fortunes were quickly made. Mr. McLean was an ambitious farmer, and his strength was not sufficient to sustain his eager spirit, as he had been delicate from a child. All his life Mr. McLean was a staunch Republican, and he and his family belonged to the Congregational Church. From flax of his own raising he made oil with which to paint the church, which he freely donated.

Charles and Octa McLean had seven children. (1) Willard Tyler, born March 4, 1841, remained at home until he was twenty-one; he enlisted the first year of the war, but was thrown out on account of some physical defect, and so engaged in mercantile life. For about a year he was with Case & McLean, paper stock dealers in Hartford, and then went into business for himself, soon removing to Rainbow, Conn., where he entered the firm of Brainard, McLean & Co., as manager, and while engaged in that business contracted the disease that resulted in his death, in October, 1870, at Vernon. Relief was sought by him in extensive travel over the United States, but in vain. He was never married, and his early death cut short a life of brilliant promise. (2) Jerusha Day, born April 19, 1845, married George Parkhurst, Oct. 30, 1872, and is living in Simsbury, a widow; their daughter, Abigail Day, was born May 12, 1874. (3) Octa Ella, born July 28, 1847, married George Talcott, of Rockville, July 24, 1877; a sketch of Mr. Talcott appears in another place. (4) Charles Noble, born May 24, 1850, married Adelaide Case of Rainbow, Oct. 7, 1874, is now the agent of the American mills at Rockville, and has five children: Emma J., born July 26, 1875; Frederick R., born Feb. 4, 1879, who died Oct. 2, 1901; Clara Belle, born Aug. 20, 1881; Charles Ralph, born Nov. 8, 1883; and Minnie Octa, born Aug. 10, 1889. (5) Emma Rose, born July 15, 1853, died in November, 1871; she was attending the Rockville high school at the time, and her death came after two weeks of illness. (6) Clara Frances, born Aug. 20, 1856, is unmarried, and is making her home with her sister, Mrs. Talcott, in Rockville. She and Mrs. Talcott own the old McLean homestead at Vernon Depot, which Miss McLean manages. (7) George Lincoln, born Aug. 9, 1861, was married June 16, 1887, to Mary E. Bailey, of Rockville, by whom he has two children: Ruth Bailey, born June 1, 1888; and Margaret Strong, born Nov. 24, 1894. George Lincoln McLean holds the position of factory inspector for Connecticut.

JOHN J. SCHWARZ, the senior member of the firm of Schwarz Bros., of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., represents one of the very oldest German families in the city, and is a member of one of the most prosperous of the business houses. From a very modest beginning he has built up a large and thriving trade, much to the benefit of himself and to the credit of the city.

John J. Schwarz was born June 18, 1853, on Spring street in Rockville, where he now resides, a son of John J. and Anna Marie (Wolf) Schwarz, the latter of whom is a native of the city of Mainz, Germany, born June 9, 1822, and is a cousin of the senior member of the firm of Wolf, Sayer & Heller, extensive dealers in butchers' supplies, of New York City. The father of our subject was born in Wittenberg, Germany, Feb. 14, 1808, and came to the United States after he had become a man, having had many experiences before this time. When but a youth, he had left his native town and worked as a journeyman shoemaker, in this way reaching London, where he learned the trade of baker, and opened up a bakery, and also successfully handled flour, accumulating quite a small fortune, making the loss of £2,200, which was stolen from him, a severe blow, as it had been earned by such hard labor.

Naturally discouraged, his thoughts turned to the old German home, but he recalled how poor were the chances of advancement for a young man without means in that country, and finally decided to go to Australia, shipping on a vessel bound for that great country. Misfortune, or perhaps it was good fortune in disguise, attended him, as the ship was wrecked, and he was the sole survivor of several hundred passengers, his rescue being miraculous. For three days, with his arm through the ring of a hatch torn from the vessel, he floated in the water, enduring great suffering and loss of the sight of his right eye; he was finally cast ashore on the coast of New Zealand and picked up by natives, who belonged to a cannibal tribe, and no doubt he would have served to deck a feast, had not a trading vessel stopped there a few days later, and he was exchanged for articles they desired more. In this way he returned to England and again set out to seek a fortune, landing finally in the United States, again among strangers. Shortly after, he found employment at the butcher trade, but early in the forties, with a Mr. Kohl, he came to Rockville, and was among the very first of the German citizens. The following clipping from the Tolland County Journal of April 18, 1870, seems most appropriately headed.

MORE LIVES THAN A CAT.

"Mr. J. J. Schwarz, who was injured by being thrown from his wagon a few weeks ago, is recovering. It has been his fortune to meet with accidents; in his early life he was a sailor and suffered shipwreck three times, the third time on the coast of New Zealand, when he was the only one out of 600 to be saved. * * * He came to this country forty-one years ago; the same year he fell in an ice cellar in New York City and broke his breast bone. In 1842 his left arm was broken by the kick of a horse; the next year he had a leg broken by the fall of a stone upon it in the Springville mill, where he was employed; and about twenty years ago he had a fall in the same mill by which two ribs were broken."

At that time the town was beginning to awake to some of its later possibilities, mills were going, and in the old Springville mill Mr. Schwarz learned the trade of dyer, leaving there in 1856 to locate in Chicago, but the climate did not agree with him and he returned to Rockville, where his death occurred May 3, 1889; thus passed away a man who had seen more of adventure than is often crowded into one man's life. His wife survived him until June 12, 1891, when she too passed away, and they both are buried in Grove Hill cemetery. In the fall of 1889 Mrs. Schwartz visited her native land, in order to establish her claim to some property, but never received any of it, some technicality of the law preventing. Although in sympathy with the Democratic party, Mr. Schwarz was not a politician, being a quiet, unassuming man, who attended to his own business and was a highly respected member of society. The family born to this worthy man and his wife numbered five, three of whom still survive: John J.; William; Amelia Louisa, now Mrs. Edwin R. Booth, of East Hartford; George, who died at the age of twenty-two, and Mary, deceased in childhood.

John J. Schwarz, Jr., attended the West street school until he was ten years of age, and then as his father was in poor health, he went to work, being the eldest of the family, and cheerfully accepted the duty of assisting in the support of the others. The first opening was in the Hockanum mill, where he began in the picker room, going thence to the weave shop, and he continued in the employ of this company until 1870, when he went to the White Manufacturing Company, in which mill he was employed intermittently for over ten years; when he left that work he took up carpenter work. While never apprenticed to the trade, his natural mechanical skill enabled him to acquire great deftness in it and he continued in that line until he opened up his present business. In 1894, in association with his brother, he went into the coal business, in which they had for a few years previously been engaged to the extent of handling a car or two, in the fall of the year. The capital of the firm was small and many obstacles were thrown in their way, but they kept bravely on and in 1895, when the other dealers adopted a strictly cash basis, they found their trade vastly increased, and their business took rapid strides, as they then obtained a class of patrons, who, while not paying strictly cash, were prompt in settlement at stated times, and who appreciated the accommodation accorded them by Schwarz Bros. As the business grew, the partners enlarged, bought scales of their own, sought more commodious quarters, and in 1897 had a spur track built into their yard on Spring street, which greatly facilitated business, and their fair and honorable dealing has done the rest. Formerly they handled fertilizers also, but recently have given their entire attention to the coal business, their line covering both hard and soft coal of all kinds.

Mr. Schwarz was married April 29, 1890, in Rockville, to Miss Annie M. Weaver, a native of Hackensack, N. J., born there Oct. 31, 1864, a daughter of John Weaver, who was a native of Germany, and two daughters have been born of this union: Rosa May, born in 1892; and Annie Marie in 1897. In political views, Mr. Schwarz is independent, and selects as his choice the man he judges best represents the best interests of the country. A self-made man, he is highly regarded in the business circles of Rockville, and with his brother, forms a firm that possesses the full confidence of the public.

WILLIAM SCHWARZ, the junior member of the firm, was born Sept. 12, 1856, in Chicago, Ill., during the residence of his parents in that city, then returning to Rockville when he was still small, and he received his education in the schools of that city, and, like his elder brother, early accepted work in the mills. The initial work was in the Springville mill, where he remained for a number of years and then went to the White Manufacturing Company, as a loom fixer, and also worked a short time in Tariffville, but later returned to Rockville and, with his brother, entered into the coal business.

William Schwarz married Miss Nellie Osborne, a native of England, a daughter of George Osborne, who was but a child when her parents brought her to Broad Brook, Conn., and later came to Rockville; the children born of this union are: Edith, William, Louissa, and Ida. Mr. Schwarz is in sympathy with the Democratic party, but is by no means a politician, and is a member of the Vernon Grange. Both he and his brother are upright citizens who richly deserve the success which has attended their efforts, and are among the representative business men of Rockville.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN TAYLOR (deceased), in his life time one of the most highly respected and valuable citizens of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, was born at Willington, Conn., Aug. 7, 1818, coming from a family long identified with the best interests of this part of the State.

Elisha Taylor, the great-grandfather of Benjamin F., was born in Cape Cod, Mass., in 1725, and died in 1815, when over ninety years old. His wife, Dorcas, died in 1802, at the age of seventy-six. Their children were: Dorcas, who died at the age of seventy years; Samuel; and Thomas.

Deacon Thomas Taylor, son of Elisha, was born in Willington in 1752, and died in his native town April 15, 1815. His wife, Experience, died May 19, 1809, at the age of fifty-nine years. Their children were: Experience, born in 1782, died in 1834; and Asa.

Deacon Asa Taylor, the father of Benjamin F., was born in Willington, Conn., June 21, 1786, and was long a deacon of the Baptist Church, his death having occurred Sept. 28, 1851. Anna Fenton, who became his wife in May, 1810, was born June 1, 1786, and died Oct. 7, 1869. Their children were: Solomon, born in 1811, married Marietta Rider, of Willington, and died Aug. 23, 1894; Sanford, born Aug. 25, 1812, lives in Clinton, Mass.; Eliza, born Oct. 11, 1815, married Joel Smith, of Leominster, Mass., and is still living; and Franklin, to whom a school teacher gave the name of Benjamin, is our subject.

Benjamin Franklin Taylor had his education in his native town in both the public and the select schools, and then took up the study of music in Hartford under Prof. Wade, a noted musician of the time. In 1844 Mr. Taylor came to Stafford where he taught music and also had a music store. He was a gifted man in many respects, and was noted as an artist, his work still adorning many of the homes in this section of the State. A few years before his death he sold his music store, which was quite the resort of the music and art lovers of the community. Mr. Taylor taught the violin, piano and voice culture, and was in every respect a thorough musician and a finished instructor. In his younger days he taught singing school, and for many years was organist in the Congregational Church at Stafford Springs, where he was also Superintendent of the Sabbath School. Mr. Taylor was a member of the Baptist Church at Stafford Hollow, where he was organist and Sunday school superintendent until his engagement with the Congregational Church. In his politics he was a Republican, but never sought office.

Mr. Taylor was married June 5, 1843, to Miss Matilda Ellis, who was born in Dana, Mass., April 28, 1823, a daughter of Sheperd Ellis, of Stafford, and to this marriage were born: Julia Ellis, born March 26, 1845, died in infancy; Clementine Ardelle married the late Clark Sidman, a noted musician of Homer, N. Y., and is the mother of Edward Arthur, an attorney of New York city, and she now resides in Oil City, Pa.; Frances Eudora, born Aug. 25, 1848, married George H. Barber, of New London, and is the mother of Mabel Ellis, now Mrs. James Walcott, of New London; Edward Everett, born April 24, 1851, died June 20, 1873. Mr. Taylor contracted a second marriage, May 11, 1853, when Miss Maria Antoinette Eaton became his wife. She was born in Somers, Conn., Sept. 13, 1833, a daughter of Eli and Almira (Bourn) Eaton, of Somers, the former of whom was a soldier in the war of 1812, going as substitute for his older and married brother, Horace, and he saw service at New London, Conn. Mrs. Almira (Bourn) Eaton, was a daughter of Moses Bourn, a Revolutionary soldier who moved from Rhode Island to Somers, Conn. Mr. Taylor was a director of the old Stafford National Bank, and also of the Cemetery Association. Much interested in educational matters, he served on the school committee several years, and rendered the city valuable service in this connection. He died April 21, 1900, and was buried at Stafford Springs. His life was indeed that of a Christian gentleman, honest and upright in his relations with his fellowman, and tender and affectionate in his home.

LEANDER H. SNOW, a farmer and dairyman near Phoenixville, Windham county, and a representative of a family long identified with Eastford, was born during the residence of his parents in Hampton, June 6, 1843, a son of Hollis A. and Samantha L. (Lyon) Snow.

(1) Richard Snow, on record in Woburn, Mass. in 1645 as the first tax payer of the town, died in 1711, leaving a reputation for thrift and general good citizenship. John and James Snow, of Woburn, presumably his sons, were born before his coming to Woburn, and after his arrival the following children were added to the family: Daniel, born Feb. 4, 1644, deceased July 18, 1646; Samuel, born May 28, 1647; and Zachariah, born March

B. F. Taylor

29, 1649, who was wounded in the Narragansett swamp fight, Dec. 19, 1675, and died April 14, 1711.

(II) Samuel Snow was born May 28, 1647, and died Nov. 28, 1717. His wife, Sarah, died June 15, 1686, and his second wife, whom he married Aug. 9, 1686, was formerly Sarah Parker, of Cambridge; she died Jan. 28, 1694.

(III) Lieutenant Samuel Snow was born Feb. 8, 1669, and by his wife, Abigail; had the following children: Samuel, Aug. 24, 1692; Abigail, Nov. 18, 1694; Sarah, Sept. 14, 1697; Ruth, May 8, 1700; Rebecca, Feb. 11, 1702; Elizabeth, Dec. 29, 1705; Benjamin, Aug. 29, 1708; and Joseph, May 18, 1713.

(IV) Samuel Snow, son of Lieutenant Snow, married June 10, 1718, Sarah Lock, of Lexington, and the following children were born to them: Samuel, Dec. 7, 1719; Oliver, Aug. 28, 1721; and Sarah, Jan. 24, 1723. In 1724 Samuel Snow and his father purchased a tract of land in Ashford, Conn., and settled immediately thereon, where the father died Dec. 19, 1743, and his widow, Abigail, Jan. 12, 1747. Father and son combined their interests to their mutual advantage, but the elder man is mentioned in particular as having taken a prominent part in all town meetings, and as having held the offices of selectman and town treasurer for many years. His son followed closely in his footsteps, and held many positions of trust and responsibility.

(V) Robert Snow, the great-great-grandfather of Leander H., farmed and died in what is now Eastford, and it is supposed served in the Revolutionary war with one or more of his sons. Through his marriage with Miss Fenton he became the father of the following children: Robert, a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and later a resident of Vermont; Aurunah; Lovell; and Shubael.

(VI) Shubael Snow, great-grandfather of Leander H., died at an advanced age on the farm inherited from his father in Eastford, and through his marriage with Lucy Griggs, whom he survived for a year or so, became the father of three children: Ruby, who married James Kent, and died in Warrensville; Jared W.; and Belinda, who married Benjamin Andrews, and died in Eastford.

(VII) Jared W. Snow, son of Shubael, was born in Eastford, and when a young man worked for the farmers in the neighborhood of his home. After his marriage he settled on a farm of his own in Eastford, but with his wife he spent his last years with his son, Hollis A., where he died in 1883, at the age of eighty-six. He was a successful man and in his younger days an industrious one, and in politics was originally a Free Soiler, later a Whig, and afterward a Republican. He was a member of the Congregational Church at Eastford, of which he and his wife were active workers. He married Betsey Peck, born in Pomfret, Dec. 15, 1796, a daughter of Elisha and Sarah (Badger) Peck, and a descendant of John Peck, of Mendon, Mass., son of Simon Peck, of Hingham, Mass. Four children were born to Jared Snow and his wife, Hollis A., the father of Leander H., Eliza, who married Sylvanus Weeks, and who died in Eastford in early life; Minerva, the second wife of Sylvanus Weeks, who died in Pomfret, Conn., and Fidelia, who married Henry Robinson, and died at her home on a part of the paternal farm.

(VIII) Hollis A. Snow, the father of Leander H., was born in Eastford, Oct. 21, 1818, and attended the district schools as opportunity permitted. He was an apt scholar, and realized the advantages of education, yet his studies were never allowed to interfere with the discharge of his duty on the home farm. For a year before his marriage he worked out by the month, but thereafter located on the farm of Thomas Grow, at Grow Hill, Hampton, and worked on shares for a couple of years. He then built a new house on the home farm, and also re-built some barns destroyed by fire the following year, after which he rented the farm of his father-in-law at Eastford, subsequently purchasing the same from the other heirs. This, in addition to eighty acres of the home farm, made him the possessor of property amounting to 100 acres, upon which he lived for many years. About this time he taught school for several terms, and was very successful in the management of his property. He in time moved to the farm of his son, Newton H., and later bought the Alfred Potter place, upon which his death occurred Sept. 13, 1893. He was a Democrat in early life but later a Republican, and held numerous town offices, including that of selectman, tax collector, and member of the school board. In religious belief he was a Congregationalist, as is also the widow who survives him. A man of good judgment and shrewd business sagacity, he readily grasped the opportunities by which he was surrounded, and to the end of his life maintained an interest in education, and general local and foreign affairs. March 28, 1842, he married Samantha L. Lyon, born in Eastford, Oct. 20, 1823, a daughter of Captain Edmund and Lucinda (Eastman) Lyon. Mrs. Hollis A. Snow, who still lives at Phoenixville with her daughter Mrs. James Healy at the home farm, and is in possession of fine faculties, including a remarkable memory, is the mother of nine children, viz: Leander H., born June 6, 1843; Almeda S., born Oct. 7, 1845, deceased April 20, 1847; Newton H., born June 27, 1847, who married Emma Weeks, and lives in Manchester, his children being as follows, Clara, Florence, F. Walter, Beulah, and Bessie; George E., born April 13, 1850, who married Laura Jones, is a mason in Willimantic, and has three children, Robert O., who enlisted in the Spanish war while a student at Dartmouth College, Nettie and Ruth; Mary Jane, born April 9, 1852 deceased March 21, 1858; Eliza A., born May 12, 1857, who married James Healy of Providence, R. I., had one child, Ethel, deceased, and lives in Phoenixville; Edwin L., born Feb. 25, 1860, who married Jane Griggs, lives at South Manchester, and has one child, Harry; Sarah E., born March 8, 1862, who is the wife of Henry Clark of Southampton, L. I., and has six children, Elsie, Ethel, Mary, Winnie, Stanley, and Edna; Russel A., born June 11, 1867, who was in the dry-goods business, and died Aug. 8, 1890.

(IX) The youth of Leander H. Snow was not unlike that of other farm reared boys, and up to his seventeenth year he attended the district school, although after ten years of age his instruction was confined to the winter terms. As a young man he was denied the blessing of good health, but nevertheless forged his way to the front, and uninterruptedly performed the various tasks that came his way. When of age he worked for a year and a half in the Willimantic Linen Company's spool shop, and then returned to the home farm to recuperate after the too close confinement. After assisting his father for a time he rented the Kies farm in the southern part of the town, and at the end of two years rented the Olney Davis farm at West Woodstock. Three years later he bought a farm of 120 acres upon which he lived for twelve years and during that time married twice, after his second marriage removing to Manchester, having rented his Woodstock farm. At Manchester he was employed as teamster by the Cheney Brothers & Co., for more than thirteen years, at the end of which time in March of 1894, he traded off his Woodstock farm for his present property of 148 acres. He is engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and in connection therewith maintains a dairy of twelve cows.

The first marriage of Mr. Snow was contracted in Woodstock, Dec. 7, 1872, with Harriet F. Perrin, of Woodstock, daughter of Amos Perrin; she died May 7, 1878, at the age of thirty-seven years. On Nov. 28, 1878, Mr. Snow married Sarah E. Bartlett, born in West Brookfield, Mass., May 8, 1852, a daughter of Ephraim and Parma (Walker) Bartlett. Of this union there is one child, Mabel Rebecca, born Dec. 6, 1879, who died Aug. 16, 1880. Mr. Snow is a Republican in national and local politics, and has been prominently before the public as an exemplary and public-spirited politician. He has been justice of the peace for several years, also a trial justice, and served in the Legislature of 1896, during which session he was on the committee on New Towns and Probate Districts. He and his wife are members of the Crystal Lake Grange, No. 60, of which Mrs. Snow is gate-keeper. As members of the Congregational Church they have given earnest support to the various organizations connected therewith, and Mrs. Snow is vice-president of the Ladies' Aid Society. Mr. Snow is a man of unquestioned integrity and enviable standing in the community, and his home is a model of neatness, and the center of unstinted hospitality.

IRA CARPENTER BAILEY, a well-known farmer and dairyman, as well as one of the most highly respected citizens of Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., was born Feb. 14, 1840, in Masonville, town of Thompson, Connecticut.

Thomas Bailey, the grandfather of Mr. Bailey, passed his life in Thompson, engaged in farming. His son Thomas was born in Thompson also, and followed the occupation of picker in the factory. His death occurred in Thompson in 1851, at the age of forty-five years. He married Mary, daughter of Horatio Carpenter of Ashford, and the children born to this union were: George A., who is a skilled worker in jewelry, in West Brookfield, Mass.; Almira, who married (first) George Thurbur and (second), Horatio Snow; Ira C., of this record; Emily, who married (first) George Hibbard, and (second) John Sprague; Ann, married to Calvin O. Nichols, of Putnam; Harriet, married to Charles Gleeson, of West Brookfield; Charles, a painter by trade, who lives in Sherborn, Mass., and married Eva Fleming; and Franklin, who married Addie Gorey, is a painter and lives in Natick, Massachusetts.

Ira C. Bailey attended two terms in the district school in Thompson and then went to live with his uncle, Resolved Bailey, at Dudley, Mass., and attended one term of school there. For two years he remained with his uncle, as the family at home was large and the resources small. When thirteen years old he went to live with David Whittlemore, with whom he continued two years, leaving there to go to Canaan, Conn. There he engaged in farming for Samuel Bennett for five years. On the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted for three months service in Co. F, 2d C. V. I., as a private and participated in the first battle of Bull Run. At the expiration of this service, he re-enlisted, as sergeant in Co. I, 11th Reg. C. V. I., and it was during this service that he received serious injury at Antietam, being wounded in the thigh. This dangerous and painful wound kept him in the hospital at New Haven until September, 1863, when he was discharged. Very justly the country he so faithfully served grants him a pension.

After his return from the army and recuperation from exhaustion produced by his injury, Mr. Bailey went to Woodstock, and there engaged for some three years in farming and lumbering. In the spring of 1887 he purchased the property known as the Charles Hibbard place, consisting of thirty acres in North Woodstock, and this has been his home, and farming and dairying his occupation, ever since. He keeps about ten cows and manufactures so choice a quality of butter that he can not supply the demand in Southbridge alone. Few men in his section are more thoroughly respected for integrity of character and good citizenship. Entirely self-made, thrown upon his resources when but a child, hampered by the necessity of assisting the family, early left fatherless, and later weakened by injuries received in his country's defense, Mr. Bailey fully deserves the prosperity which now attends him, and the universal esteem in which he is held in the community. In politics he is a Democrat. He is a comrade in Malcolm Armidon Post, No. 168, G. A. R., of Southbridge, Massachusetts.

On March 31, 1867, Mr. Bailey was united in marriage with Miss Lillian Arabelle Brown, daughter of William Harrison and Hannah Lydia (Lyon) Brown, of Woodstock, both deceased. The former was a well-known builder and contractor. Mr. and Mrs. Ira C. Bailey have had one daughter, Alice Jane, born April 16, 1869, in Woodstock, who married Dec. 10, 1891, John C. Brown, of Southbridge, Mass., where he is engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have one daughter, Ruth Lillian, born in Southbridge, Dec. 12, 1892.

COVELL. The Covell family is an old and respected one in eastern Windham county. The earliest representative of whom we have any particular record is Ebenezer Covell, a husbandman, son of Joseph, born Nov. 7, 1727, who resided in the eastern part of the town of Killingly, Conn. He died Aug. 23, 1805, and his wife, Martha, June 20, 1803. They had nine children: Samuel, born Jan. 13, 1752; Sampson, April 4, 1754; Mary, Sept. 15, 1756; Ebenezer, Jan. 11, 1759; Tamer, March 8, 1761; Keziah, Nov. 8, 1764; Martha, Jan. 26, 1766; James, April 10, 1768; and Hannah, Aug. 27, 1770.

(II) Sampson Covell, son of Ebenezer, a farmer of Killingly, married in Jan., 1779, Waity Smith, who was born Feb. 15, 1753. The children of this union numbered seven. Arba is mentioned below, and Sally, born May 19, 1782, died young. Oliver, a farmer, born Feb. 5, 1785, married Candice Smith, and lived in Killingly, dying there. Ziba, born June 14, 1787, married and had a large number of children; and the family resided in Providence, R. I., where the husband carried on a large trucking business. Nabby (Abigail), born July 14, 1790, married Silas Tucker, a farmer, and resided in Killingly, where she died. Joseph, born June 4, 1795, became an Episcopal minister; he died in the western part of Connecticut. Benjamin, born Aug. 18, 1798, left home when a young man and was lost trace of.

(III) Arba Covell, son of Sampson, born Nov. 24, 1779, married (first) Dec. 2, 1807, Mary Burgess, who was born Oct. 24, 1783, and, after her death, married (second) Betsey Elliott, April 1, 1838. By his first marriage there were two children: Sampson, who is mentioned below; and Mary, who married Waldo Bartlett, a farmer, who died in East Killingly. By the second marriage there were no children.

Mr. Covell was a large landholder, owning a 1,000 acre farm in the Eastern part of the town of Killingly, joining the Rhode Island State line, where he lived and was extensively engaged in agriculture. For the first twenty years of his business life Mr. Covell also taught school in winter. He was a man of considerable prominence, in politics a staunch Whig, and in religious sentiment a Baptist, being a substantial member of that Church at Chestnut Hill. He died suddenly Jan. 8, 1857, while working at his woodpile.

(IV) Sampson Covell, son of Arba and grandfather of Willis, Marcus A., and Horace Covell, was born in East Killingly in Feb., 1809. He attended the district school and lived on the home farm until 1859, two years after the death of his father. In early manhood Sampson Covell taught school for several terms. He married four times: first Lillis Bartlett; after her death, Louisa Elliott, who was born in Thompson, daughter of Albijence and Betsey Elliott; later, Sarah Elliott, of Thompson, daughter of Ebenezer Elliott; and finally, Mrs. Emily (Covell) Rouse, who now resides in Putnam. By the first marriage there was one child, Arba, who married Eunice Avery, and is now a resident of East Killingly. By the second marriage there was also one child, Albijence E., who is mentioned below. By his third wife Mr. Covell had four children, who were married as follows: Louisa, (deceased) to David Clark, farmer; she died in Putnam; Esther, to George Locke, a painter; they now reside in Putnam; Elizabeth, to Rufus R. Chase; now a retired citizen of Putnam; Benjamin, a painter in Webster, Mass., to Esther Thurber.

When about fifty years old Mr. Covell left the homestead in Killingly and purchased a farm in Putnam where he lived the rest of his life, dying there in January, 1882. He is buried in the Grove Street cemetery, of Putnam. Both in Killingly and Putnam Mr. Covell was a well-known Republican, holding at different times minor offices in each town. He was also a prominent Baptist, being a Deacon of that Church at East Killingly, and later a member at Putnam.

(V) Albijence E. Covell, son of Sampson, born in East Killingly, Feb. 26, 1841, was educated in the district schools of that town. At a very early age, on Jan. 19, 1859, he married Mahala J. Chase. Miss Chase was born in Killingly, July 26, 1840, a daughter of Cromwell and Mahala (Wood) Chase, well-to-do farming people in Killingly (Mr. Chase died there). Mrs. Covell, after having been a most estimable helpmeet for over thirty years died Nov. 20, 1891. About four years later, Jan. 4, 1895, Mr. Covell married Jennette A. Bassett, who was born in Killingly Jan. 8, 1847, a daughter of Daniel and Emiline (Baker) Bassett.

Mr. Covell's children by his first marriage were, viz.: Elizabeth, born Nov. 3, 1859, died Feb. 11, 1865; and three sons, Marcus A., Horace D. and Willis, mentioned below.

In the spring of 1860, soon after his first marriage, Mr. Covell purchased of the heirs of Byron Williams a 130-acre farm in the southwest corner of the town of Putnam, where he has since resided. He has from time to time made marked improvements in the place, largely increasing its value. Having confined his business activities almost exclusively to general farming and dairying, he has made a thorough success of his life work.

Mr. Covell is a public-spirited, upright and practical man, who has made a judicious use of his talents. As a keenly interested Democrat he has held a few town offices. Religiously in sympathy with the Baptists he attends their church in Putnam. He is well-known and highly respected in his community.

(VI) HON. MARCUS A. COVELL, son of Albion E., was born Nov. 16, 1863, in Putnam, and educated in the district schools of Pomfret and in the Putnam high school. He came to North Grosvenor Dale in 1881, and entered the grain and produce store of Mr. Converse, for whom he worked until he bought that gentleman out, Aug. 1, 1882. He has continued the business successfully ever since, a period of over twenty years, during which time it has increased in volume from $10,000 to $50,000 annually. On Aug. 5, 1885, Mr. Covell married Minnie H. Chandler, a daughter of Aldrich and Viana (Coman) Chandler, and a granddaughter of Winthrop and Betsey (Aldrich) Chandler. They have had five children: Minnie May, born May 28, 1886; Jennie June, June 24, 1888; Lois Elliott, April 9, 1890; Marcus Earl, June 25, 1892; and Dorothy V., Feb. 12, 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Covell are members of the M. E. Church at North Grosvenor Dale, of which he is a trustee. Mr. Covell has long filled a leading place in the public affairs of his town. He has been registrar of voters and for several years a valuable member of the Republican Town Committee. In 1900 he took the census for the Second District, scoring a point for accuracy. In 1901 he represented Thompson in the State Legislature, where his reputation for sound judgment won him a place on the important committee on Judicial Nominations, and he was re-elected for 1902-03, and placed on the committees on Senate and Congressional redistricting and Judicial Nominations. Upon his re-election he was the only old member returned from Windham county. Personally he is a man of genial disposition, enjoying popularity among all classes. Fraternally he affiliates with Quinnettset Grange No. 65, Quinebaug Pomona Grange No. 2, Corner Stone Lodge, No. 122, A. F. & A. M., of Thompson (of which he is secretary), and with Putnam Chapter, R. A. M. Solid merit alone has brought him to the front in his community.

HORACE D. COVELL, the well-known postmaster and prominent business man at Pomfret Landing, Windham county, was born in Putnam, Feb. 21, 1866. He was educated in the Putnam district school and reared to farm work, assisting his father on the home place till twenty-two years old. The Putnam Creamery Co. then hired him for a year, to drive their wagon for collecting cream, after which he went to Pomfret Landing, where for another year he was engaged in the same business.

At Pomfret Landing Mr. Covell saw chances for good openings in the grist mill and general store of George Lynne, who desired to sell; and in 1892 in company with his brother Willis, he purchased both the mill and the store. For two years they conducted a prosperous business under the firm name of Covell Bros. Then in April, 1894, Horace D. purchased his brother's interest, and has since been sole proprietor.

On June 29, 1892, he married in Danielson, Conn., Kate Belle Wilcox, who was born in Smyrna, N. Y., July 11, 1867. She was a daughter of William S. and Maria A. (Parker) Wilcox, who are mentioned more fully in this book in the sketch of W. S. Wilcox, a brother of Mrs. Covell. Mr. and Mrs. Covell have had three children: Mahala W., born Jan. 25, 1894; Harold A., Mar. 14, 1897, (died Jan. 21, 1898); and Harold W., Oct. 27, 1898.

Mr. Covell has from time to time enlarged the stock of merchandise in his store, and his grist milling has been profitable. His able management of both lines of business has won for him the confidence and favor of his fellow citizens; and since that office was left vacant by Mr. Lynne he has been the popular postmaster of Pomfret Landing. Politically he is a firm Republican. On July 1, 1902, Mr. and Mrs. Covell united with the Williamsville Congregational Church, Mrs. Covell by letter. She was formerly a member of the First Congregational Church in Norwich, N. Y. Clear-headedness and foresight have been promoters of Mr. Covell's notable success.

HON. WILLIS COVELL, born in Putnam, Oct. 15, 1872, is a rising agriculturist and popular business man of Abington, in the town of Pomfret, Windham county. He is also exceedingly prominent in public and social affairs. Early choosing the field of business for his future activities, after a thorough training in the common school of his district he took a course in the Bryant and Stratton Business College at Providence, R. I. After leaving school he went to Pomfret Landing where his older brother Horace was at work, and entered the partnership known as "Covell Bros. Grain and Grocery Business." He worked in this place for five years, gaining an experience which was to aid him materially in the future. In the meantime, June 19, 1892, he married Myrtle Evelyn Bennett, who was born in Putnam, Oct. 9, 1874, a daughter of William R. and Jane (Joslyn) Bennett. They have had four children: Ellsworth Willis, born March 17, 1893, (died Nov. 28, 1893); Herman Bennett, June 20, 1894; Ellsworth Lee, April 13, 1898; Gladys Evelyn, Sept. 27, 1902.

In 1894, after selling his interest in the mill and store at Pomfret Landing, Mr. Covell went to Abington and purchased of Williams Ingalls the "Sessions farm." This was a 130-acre tract, upon which was located a grist and a cider mill. Here Mr. Covell has since resided, making at different times various improvements in his property, and buying and raising stock until he now has fifteen cows, and conducts a profitable dairy business. He also runs his mills and carries on general farming with marked success. His gristmill has been especially profitable, due no doubt to his previous experience in that line at Pomfret Landing.

Mr. Covell is a man of large resources, who, besides managing his various branches of business with success has found time to fill various minor town offices and to serve the Republican party, with which he affiliates, in the State Legislature. During his term there, in 1901, in recognition of his legal ability he was appointed to a place on the committee on Forfeited Rights. Evincing a keen interest in religious affairs, Mr. Covell attends the Congregational Church, and his wife is a member of the Freewill Baptist Church of East Killingly. Fraternally he is a member of Putnam Lodge No. 46, F. & A. M., and also of the Wolf Den Grange, No. 61, of which he was secretary for some time. Mr. Covell is still a young man, being now scarcely past thirty. Owing to this fact and to his already brilliant success, he is looked upon as a man with a future.

COMFORT C. HUNT, one of the most highly respected citizens of Somers, Tolland county, is a descendant of William Hunt, who came from Yorkshire, England, to New England in 1635, in company with the Rev. Peter Bulkley. He settled in Concord, Mass., but passed his last years at Marlboro, where he died in 1667.

David Hunt, the grandfather of Comfort C., was a farmer, and died in Monson, Mass., while still in early life. Hannah Stacy, his wife, bore him one child, Simon S., the father of Comfort C., and after she became a widow was again married to Wareham Keep, by whom she had one child, Lucy A. This daughter married William Rhodes, and died in Chicopee, Massachusetts.

Simon S. Hunt was born Feb. 1, 1807, in Monson, Mass. His opportunities for schooling were not good, as his parents lived in a number of places in his native State and in New York. About the time of his marriage he located on a farm in South Wilbraham, Mass., which is now known as Hampden. This farm was owned by his mother, and on her death he inherited it. For more than a quarter of a century he was engaged in its cultivation, adding considerable to it in the way of land improvements. In March, 1856, he sold his estate, moved to Somers, and purchased the farm now owned by his son, Comfort C. At the time of its purchase it was known as the "Mudge farm," and belonged to Henry Fuller. This place before it passed into the hands of the Mudge family was owned by the Dickinsons, and was the birthplace of Submit Dickinson, wife of Rev. Dr. David Dudley Field, and mother of David Dudley Field, the famous jurist. Mr. Hunt remained on this farm for the rest of his life, and died there March 17, 1863, his interment taking place in the Center cemetery at Somers.

Simon S. Hunt and Persis Chaffee were married March 10, 1832. Mrs. Hunt was born Aug. 4, 1807, in Hampden, Mass., daughter of Comfort and Persis D. (Skinner) Chaffee, and died Oct. 2, 1868. To Mr. and Mrs. Hunt were born: Simon S., born March 23, 1833 married Mary Durkee, engaged in farming in Hampden, Mass., where he died Oct. 2, 1871; Comfort C., born March 30, 1835; Jane born March 24, 1842, married Silas B. Cooley (being his first wife), and died Aug. 13, 1882; Hannah A., born Oct. 27, 1845, married Frank V. Kibbe, of Somers, where she died, Dec. 17, 1880.

Comfort C. Hunt was born in South Wilbraham, Mass., where he attended the old red school house in district No. 6. His native town was his home until he reached the age of twenty-one, when he accompanied his parents to Somers. His boyhood was devoted to hard work, and after he was eleven years of age his schooling was confined to the short winter term. In 1856 he went to the southern part of Illinois, where he was a successful canvasser for books, and he spent a short time engaged in the same business in northwestern Wisconsin. In 1857 the panic in business drove him out of the canvassing field, and after visiting relatives in Michigan and Ohio he returned to Connecticut after an absence of something more than a year. Until the fall of 1862 he was engaged in assisting his father in the farm work. At that time he entered the United States Armory at Springfield, Mass., remaining about six months, when his father was taken ill with his last sickness. Then he came back to the farm and took charge of it until the death of his father. At that time Mr. Hunt bought the interests of the other heirs and assisted in caring for his mother in her declining years. Mr. Hunt has added to the estate, and now owns about 150 acres of choice land on which he does general as well as dairy farming.

Comfort C. Hunt and Mary M. Kibbe were married Dec. 13, 1864. Mrs. Hunt was born in Somers, Dec. 31, 1843, and died Nov. 1, 1888. She was a daughter of Frederick and Naome (Cooley) Kibbe, and a sister to Aretas F. Kibbe, of Somers, whose life is the topic of a sketch that appears in another place. To this union were born: (1) Carrie P., born March 18, 1867, attended the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., and married Dr. Howard Truman French, Oct. 13, 1891. Her husband is a successful physician at Deep River, Conn., and they have two children, Marion E., born Aug. 15, 1895; and Harold C., born July 3, 1899. Dr. French was born in Hartland, Conn., Aug. 24, 1866, and received his education in the common schools of his native town, in the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., in the Medical Department of Columbia University, New York, and was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1891, soon after locating in Deep River, where he has developed a fine practice. (2) Rufus C., born March 4, 1870, died April 18, 1871. (3) Ruth M., born April 15, 1872, is the wife of Eugene Markham, of East Long Meadow, Mass., and the mother of one child, Gladys L., born April 7, 1897. (4) Kibbe C., born Aug. 16, 1874, died Jan. 27, 1889.

Mr. Hunt was born and reared a Democrat; he became one of the first Prohibitionists in Somers, and is now a Republican. A member of the Congregational Church of Somers, he was first elected deacon of that church Jan. 18, 1884, and has filled the position continuously to the present time. He is an honest and hard-working man, with many friends in the community.

DANIEL EUGENE HICKIE, baker and farmer, is one of the leading citizens of West Thompson, Windham county, and was born in the city of Boston, Mass., Nov. 29, 1846.

John Hickie, the father of Daniel Eugene, was born in Cork, Ireland, and there grew to manhood and became proficient in his trade of baker. In 1833 he turned his eyes to America, believing that in this country he could advance his interests better than in his own. After several weeks spent in a sailing vessel on the Atlantic, landing was made at Boston, Mass., and the young man soon found employment in that city at his trade. For several years he worked as a journeyman, all the time providently saving his money, and finally found a suitable location at Providence, R. I. This was in 1848, and for years Mr. Hickie followed his business in that city. In 1876 he moved to Connecticut, desiring to spend his advancing years upon a farm. He located at West Thompson and enjoyed a quiet life until his death, June 14, 1889. His remains were taken to the Catholic cemetery at Providence. His devotion to the Catholic faith was consistent, and no kinder husband or more careful father ever lived. In politics he was a strong Democrat, but he never sought political favor.

John Hickie married Ann O'Callahan, a neighbor in his native land, daughter of Matthew O'Callahan. Mrs. Hickie was a kind and loving mother, faithful wife and good Christian woman, one who lived up to the teachings of the Catholic Church. She died Aug. 21, 1883, in Providence, while on a visit to a daughter, and was interred in the Catholic cemetery there. Eight children were born to John Hickie and wife, as follows: John, who died young, in Cork, Ireland; Mary, who married John O'Neil, and lives at Providence, R. I.; Christopher, who died July 2, 1901, in St. Louis, Mo.; William, who died in 1898, in Providence; John, who resides at Pawtucket, R. I.; Catherine, who is now the widow of John Hunter, and resides at Providence; Daniel E., of this sketch; and Ann, who is the widow of Henry Lincoln, of Providence, Rhode Island.

Daniel E. Hickie removed with his parents to Providence, R. I., when two years old, and there attended the public schools. With his father he learned the baking business and worked for three years with Rice & Hayward, on Broad and Pearl streets, and in 1864, went to Boston to follow his trade as a journeyman. There he was employed at the baking business until 1869, when he returned to Providence and bought out his father, conducting a bakery of his own on Orchard street, where he continued until 1871. Selling out in 1872 to his brother, W. A. Hickie, Mr. Hickie went to Chelsea, Mass., in 1873. There he married, July 18, 1875, Alice E. S. Smith, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Father McClue, of St. Rose parish. Mr. Hickie left Chelsea a few months later, coming, in 1876, to West Thompson, where he bought a tract of land upon which he lived until 1879, when he went back to Boston and worked there at his trade for six years. In 1885 he returned to West Thompson, where he began a baking business in March, 1886, being the first baker in the locality. Here Mr. Hickie built a proper oven and embarked in the business, first in a modest way, but during the past sixteen years it has increased to such an extent that he finds two wagons scarcely sufficient to satisfy the demands of his customers.

Mr. Hickie is not only a fine baker but is also an excellent farmer, his sixty acre farm showing signs of careful cultivation. A portion of his land he has devoted to small fruit and has a flourishing orchard of peach, pear, apple and plum trees.

Mr. Hickie has always been a supporter of the Democratic party. He is a valued and consistent member of the West Thompson Catholic Church.

Although Mr. Hickie started out in life with very limited means, he has accumulated property and has gained a fine standing in the business world through his own industry and ability. He has always been charitable and is regarded by the community in which he lives as a first-class citizen, a man of his word and one of the best examples in his locality of the good results which come through industry and honesty.

GEORGE F. TILLINGHAST. The ancestors of this prominent agriculturist of Canterbury, Windham county, belonged to some of the most distinguished colonial families.

Pardon Tillinghast, the first American of this line, born in Seven Cliffs near Beachy Head, now Eastborn, Sussex, England, in 1622, served in the English army under Cromwell, and fought in the battle of Marston Moor. He later came to New England, and in 1645 settled in Providence, R. I., where, obtaining his residentship, he bought a quarter interest in the original Providence purchase. He became a merchant in Providence, was exceedingly active in public affairs, and was widely known as a man of great religious zeal. With his own money he built, in 1700, the First Baptist Church at Providence, R. I., the oldest church of this denomination in America, and for over forty years (1678-1718) without any remuneration acted as pastor of that society. For over twenty-five years he held various posts of honor in the town and he also served the colony many times as deputy to the General Court. Further information concerning the Tillinghast genealogy will be found in the sketch of F. H. Tillinghast in this volume.

Cornelius Waldo, a prominent maternal ancestor of George F. Tillinghast, supposed to have been born in England in 1624, and to have resided at Ipswich, Mass., for a time, later moved to Chelmsford, where he owned considerable land. He also owned an extensive tract in Dunstable. As a highly respected Christian he was chosen deacon of Mr. Weld's church in Dunstable. He died in Chelmsford, Jan. 3, 1700, and his wife, Hannah (Cogswell), passed away Dec. 25, 1704. For further information concerning the ancestors of George F. Tillinghast see the sketch of the Waldo Family in this volume.

Judge Benjamin Tillinghast, grandfather of George F., was born in West Greenwich, R. I., and there passed his entire life on the extensive family homestead. He engaged extensively in farming and was one of the most successful agriculturists in his region. At first a Whig, later a Republican, Mr. Tillinghast often filled local offices and served for many years with marked ability as judge of probate. He died in West Greenwich, at the age of eighty-three. His wife, Eunice (Green), was a near relative of Gen. Greene, of the Revolutionary war, and by her he had the following children: (1) John married Abbie Vaughn and lived in Griswold, Conn. They had five children: A child that died in infancy; Daniel, who died at the age of thirty; Betsey, who died, unmarried, in Jewett City, Conn.; Henry, a druggist, who died in Illinois; he left a daughter, who is living in the West; John, a resident of Jewett City, Conn. (2) Caleb married Phoebe Tillinghast and lived in Plainfield, Conn.; he was killed by the cars. (3) Gideon G. is mentioned below. (4) Lydia married Dr. Alvin Gallup, of West Greenwich, R. I., and they had two children: William, who settled in the West, and Eunice. (5) Hannah married Ira Brown, of Hopkinton, R. I., and they had two daughters. (6) Eunice married Pardon Tillinghast and resided in Plainfield and later in Danielson, Conn. They had two children: Caleb, a state librarian at Boston, Mass., and Kate, who married Charles Thayer and, after his death, H. Wood, an undertaker of Danielson. They have one child. (7) Phoebe married Deacon Weaver, of Danielson. (8) Benjamin, a school teacher, married Alice Hazard, and lived in Rhode Island. He had two children who survived him, Dr. Frank and Agnes (who married William Hutchings, a hotel-keeper).

Gideon G. Tillinghast, father of George F., a well-remembered resident of Griswold, Conn., was born in 1810 in West Greenwich, R. I., in the schools of which as a youth he obtained a thorough education. When a young man he went to Griswold, Conn., and taught school for some time; and in this place he married Mercy Waldo, who was born in Canterbury, Conn., March 17, 1804. She was a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Gallup) Waldo, and granddaughter of Benjamin Gallup, of Voluntown, Conn. He had fourteen children, thirteen of whom lived to maturity and married. Mrs. Tillinghast died Dec. 14, 1885. By this union there were seven children: (1) Susan died in her seventh year. (2) Angeline married Warren D. Fiske, a farmer of South Coventry, Conn. They had a family of three children. (3) Caroline, who never married, died at the age of twenty-seven. (4) George Franklin is mentioned below. (5) Edwin died in his twenty-seventh year, and (6) Belinda in her twenty-first. (7) Gideon G., Jr., born Aug. 12, 1843, married, in Voluntown, Conn., Sept. 1, 1879, Sarah B. Gallup, daughter of Isaac and Olive (Park) Gallup. By this union there were five children: Clara B., born in August, 1880; Ladie Flora, April 4, 1882 (died Sept. 5, 1882); Arthur Gideon, Aug. 2, 1883; Hellen May, Sept. 19, 1885; and Waldo Elliot, June 4, 1887. Since his marriage Gideon G., Jr., has resided in Vernon, Conn., where he has been a merchant, but now raises fruit and poultry. As a Republican he has held several local offices. He is a member and active worker of the Vernon Center Congregational Church, to which his wife also belongs.

Mr. Tillinghast after his marriage purchased a large farm on Stone Hill. He died in April, 1843, and is buried at Pachaug, in the town of Griswold, Conn. As a young man Gideon G. Tillinghast belonged to the Rhode Island State Militia, of which he was quartermaster. In politics he was a Whig. Both he and his wife belonged to the Baptist Church of Jewett City. As a forceful man he exerted a wide influence in his community.

George F. Tillinghast is an honest and good citizen of Canterbury. Born in Griswold, Conn., Dec. 31, 1838, he obtained his education in the schools of his neighborhood. At the age of seventeen he entered a mill in Hopeville, where he worked for some time, and later entered another at Almyville, Conn. During this time the slavery trouble was stirring the country, and so deeply moved was Mr. Tillinghast that when the war broke out he was among the first to offer his services, enlisting in Company B., of the 2d Connecticut Regiment, which was commanded by Col. A. H. Terry. At the expiration of his first term he re-enlisted for three years in Co. D, 11th C. V. I., and with his regiment fought in some of the bloodiest battles of the war—First Bull Run, Newberne, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Suffolk, Bermuda-Hundred, Palmer Creek, Drury's Bluff and Petersburg. His last battle was before Petersburg, the three years for which he enlisted having expired. With the exception of a slight wound received at Antietam, and a shot through the blouse at Cold Harbor, Mr. Tillinghast escaped uninjured. He received an honorable discharge Nov. 26, 1864. After the war he went to Nebraska and purchased real estate, which he afterward sold at a considerable profit. In 1868 he returned East, and until 1875, in company with his brother, Gideon G., engaged in the book trade. On Dec. 27, 1876, he married Rosa Wilcox, who was born in Canterbury, daughter of Nathaniel and Julia (Palmer) Wilcox, and granddaughter of Potter and Lydia (Brown) Wilcox. Her maternal grandparents were Asher and Joannah (Ames) Palmer. Mr. and Mrs. Tillinghast have had three children: Andrew F., born Feb. 1, 1879, married, in November, 1900, Susie Brown, of Stonington, Conn. They reside at Groton, Conn., in the ship yard of which place he holds a lucrative position. Edwin, born Oct. 23, 1881, assists his father on the farm; and Annie Rosa, born May 29, 1889, also resides at home.

Since 1875 Mr. Tillinghast has been engaged in agriculture; since 1880 on the Adams farm in Canterbury, which he purchased in that year and where he has since resided.

At first a Republican, since 1888 a Prohibitionist, Mr. Tillinghast has always taken an active part in politics. While in Nebraska he did his full share in bringing the capital of that State to Lincoln instead of Omaha. In Canterbury he has held several town offices, among them that of selectman, and he has run on the Prohibition ticket as a candidate for the State Legislature. As an influential member of the Packerville Baptist Church, to which his wife also belongs, he serves on the church committee. Socially he affiliates with the G. A. R., Sedgwick Post, of Norwich, Conn., and has been a member of the Canterbury Grange.

HORATIO GODDARD, who is a notable farmer and poultry raiser, has his home near Mansfield Depot, in the town of Mansfield, Tolland county, and is a native of Granby, Conn., where his family was among the very earliest settlers. The earliest Godard, Gosard, Gozard, Goddard, Gozard or Gossard mentioned in the records of ancient Windsor, which formerly included Granby, was Daniel Gozard, who is mentioned as being in Hartford in 1646.

Rufus Goddard, the grandfather of Horatio, was a farmer and lived in Granby, Conn., where he died. His wife was a Miss Corsett, and they had children as follows: Ansel, a farmer in Granby; Curtis, a farmer and blacksmith, was also a local Methodist preacher and a mill owner, and lived in Simsbury; Joab moved to Edinburg, Ohio, where he died; the fourth child moved to Edinburg, Ohio; Ithia, the father of Horatio; Rebecca died unmarried.

Ithia Goddard, noted above, was born in Granby, here he was reared to farm work. Until his marriage he lived on the home farm, then he removed to a farm in the same town, where he lived several years. For several years he had charge of the saw mill at the Shaker village in the town of Enfield. After leaving the Shakers he lived for a time in North Somers, moving from there to Long Meadow, and dying in Springfield, Mass., at the advanced age of eighty-three years. A hard-working and industrious man, he had a life-long conflict with poverty. His standing in the community was good and his reputation was that of a thoroughly honorable and upright man. Ithia Goddard was twice married, his first wife being Eunice Chapman, of Vermont. She died in Long Meadow, Mass., at the age of sixty years. His second wife was the widow of Rufus Taylor. The children, who were all by the first marriage, were: Jane is the wife of Zolva Smith, a druggist of Springfield, Mass.; Lucy Ann, the widow of Samuel Greer, resides in St. Louis, and was for years in Dayton, Ohio; Horace was a brakeman and was killed by the cars at Warren, Mass., when only nineteen; Horatio; Cornelia is the wife of Jabez Billings, of Springfield, Massachusetts.

Horatio Goddard was born Feb. 23, 1840, in Granby, Conn., where he attended district school until he reached the age of sixteen years. When he was twelve years of age he was "put out" to work for a farmer in Granby, where he was to remain for four years, his remuneration being his board and clothes. The clothes were second-hand, and work was from early morning until late at night. Many a frosty morning when he was sent out after the cows he warmed his feet where they had lain. At the end of a year's service his parents took him away and hired him to a farmer at South Hampden, Mass., where he had seven dollars a month. At that point he remained two years, and was then employed by Orrin Hall, on Hall Hill, in Somers, Conn., where he remained for seven years. For four years he was employed as a teamster in a quarry at Long Meadow, Mass. In 1877 Mr. Goddard came to Mansfield and purchased a small farm near Eagleville, where he was engaged in farming until 1881. He then became head farmer of the Storrs Agricultural College, which has since become the Connecticut Agricultural College, a position he held for nine years. At the expiration of that time, in company with Charles Grant, of Hartford, Mr. Goddard engaged in drilling artesian wells in various places. In 1891 he sold out and moved to his present farm of thirty-five acres. In 1899 he put up his present neat and comfortable home. His time is devoted to general farming, though he gives much attention to poultry and especially to White Wyandottes.

Mr. Goddard was married in Mansfield to Austanna Bennett, who died in 1901. By this marriage he had one child, Clarence William, who was born Sept. 14, 1863, married Jennie Wilcox, and now resides in Hartford, where he is engaged in artesian well drilling. Mr. Goddard was married to Mrs. E. J. Fuller, of Lebanon, in Andover, in August, 1902; she has two daughters, Edna, married to A. H. Carpenter, and Helen, living in Willimantic.

Mr. Goddard was a Republican in his earlier years, but of late has been a Prohibitionist. He belongs to Coventry Lodge, No. 15, A. O. U. W., of South Coventry. Mr. Goddard is a member of the Baptist Church. He is a hard-working and thoroughly respected citizen.

GIDEON BROWN was born Jan. 8, 1844, in West Greenwich, R. I., and is a son of George Washington Brown, who was born in the same place, Dec. 28, 1822.

The elder Brown was a most industrious and hard-working man. Farming was his main business, but he was a lumberman, and did teaming on an extensive scale. For some years he dealt largely in cattle. In 1865 he came to Tolland and made a home near the Tolland and Coventry line, on the old Lathrop and Joslyn place, which he acquired by purchase. Here he lived until 1883, when he removed to Tolland street, where he died June 6, 1889. In politics he was a Democrat, and was a prominent man in the community, being assessor and holding various local offices in West Greenwich.

George W. Brown was married April 20, 1843, to Ursula Harington, born April 13, 1827, in West Greenwich, a daughter of Whitman Harington. She died Sept. 17, 1898. Mr. and Mrs. Brown were parents of this family of children: (1) Gideon; (2) John, born Nov. 13, 1846, married Hannah F. Madison, of Greenwich, in 1868, and is now a blacksmith in Coventry; (3) Phebe, born March 16, 1848, married Calvin G. Wilcox in 1865, and is now living in Mansfield; (4) Anna, born May 4, 1850, married Stephen T. Tyler in 1868, and died Feb. 4, 1898; (5) Sarah A., born Oct. 9, 1853, is a school teacher, and lives in Tolland; (6) Ruth C., born May 17, 1856, is a school teacher in Tolland; (7) Adelaide, born Dec. 29, 1858, died in 1882; (8) George W., born April 13, 1861, died Feb. 24, 1881; (9) Holden A., born Aug. 8, 1863, married Rosa Walker and is now living in Coventry. He is a farmer and is also engaged in the meat business; (10) Charles H., born Jan. 25, 1866, died Sept. 9, 1882; (11) Mary U., born Aug. 12, 1869, married James Williams, of Coventry, R. I., Sept. 1, 1896, and is now living in Summit, Rhode Island.

Solomon Brown, the grandfather of Gideon Brown, was born in West Greenwich, R. I., and died in his native community. He was a farmer and an active and industrious man.

Gideon Brown was educated in the home schools, and at the age of seventeen began working for the neighboring farmers on monthly wages, continuing this occupation for four years, when he came home to assist in the cultivation of the paternal acres. For some four years he helped his father, and then came to Tolland, Conn., where he purchased in November, 1869, the Warren Fitch farm, which became his residence for years. He added greatly to the original estate of 160 acres, and owned a splendid place of 275 acres, where he devoted himself to general farming, making something of a specialty of hay and feed for his cattle. He kept many cows, and sold milk and butter to many patrons in Tolland and elsewhere.

Mr. Brown is a Democrat, and represented the town in the General Assembly in the sessions of 1901 and 1902, serving on the committee on Legislative Expenses. For five years he was selectman, and served as assessor about three years. He was also a member of the board of relief, and has served as justice of the peace and in several minor offices. In all positions which he accepted he gave uniform satisfaction to the public and achieved distinction for himself.

Mr. Brown was married Nov. 26, 1866, to Amy E. Andrews, of Coventry, R. I., who was born Aug. 6, 1846, and was a daughter of Charles Andrews. She died April 29, 1900. They were parents of the following family: Minnie married Judson Williams, of Tolland, and is the mother of six children; Alice E., a school teacher in Vernon, is at home; Walter G. married Amy Walker, of Coventry, and is now engaged in the teaming business in South Manchester, where he lives; Arthur E. is employed by Cheney Brothers, of South Manchester; Lewis A. married Jennie Palmer, of Coventry, Conn., and is also employed by Cheney Brothers; Maud L., who is at home, attends the Rockville High School.

Mr. Brown sold his Tolland farm and in the spring of 1901 was married to Marietta Lamb, of Stamford, Delaware Co., N. Y. He purchased a farm and milk route in South Manchester, of which he took possession Jan. 16, 1902. Here he is a popular man, as in his former neighborhood, where his good spirits, honorable character and unswerving integrity are well known. He is a pleasant, genial gentleman and a very successful farmer.

GEORGE L. LYON, the "boss weaver" of the Quinebaug Company, at East Brooklyn, Windham county, belongs to an old and honored family, and holds a good standing in his own community.

The Lyon family runs back to William Lyon, its first American ancestor, who came to New England in 1635 and settled in Roxbury, Mass. William Lyon made the ocean voyage in the ship "Hope-well," being at that time only fourteen years old. He married June 17, 1646, Rachel, a daughter of Thomas Ruggles. Their children were: John, born in 1647; Thomas, born in 1652; Joseph, born in 1654; Sarah, born in 1657; Jonathan, born in 1666; Jonathan (2), born in 1672. Some of his children must have settled at Woodstock, Conn., for family traditions and recorded deeds show that Caleb Lyon, and his wife Margaret, who were the parents of thirteen children, located in Massachusetts, coming from Woodstock, and it seems that the Massachusetts and the Canterbury Lyons are closely related.

Ebenezer Lyon, the great-great-grandfather of George L., was a Baptist minister, and by deed bearing date of 1763, purchased land in the southwestern part of the town of Canterbury. This farm is still in the hands of his posterity, being owned by Nelson Lyon. The Rev. Ebenezer Lyon, who was born in 1717, married Mercy Clark, and died Aug. 27, 1795. His widow died April 10, 1804. Their sons, Abel and Ephraim married sisters, Susannah and Eunice Leach.

Captain Abel Lyon, the great-grandfather of George L., died Oct. 1, 1815, at the age of seventy-three years. Susannah Leach, his widow died April 2, 1829, at the age of eighty-four years. He was a farmer and lived on the paternal estate. In the local militia he held a position as captain. In his family were the following children: Sally; Ebenezer, who was born Dec. 25, 1769; Joseph Leach, born June 17, 1775; Spencer, born March 30, 1778; Ephraim.

Capt. Spencer Lyon, the grandfather of George L., was a farmer, and resided on the home farm. In the local militia he was at first a lieutenant, but was made captain by Gov. Roger Griswold, April 15, 1812. When the British threatened New London, he was there in command of a company. His death occurred on the old homestead in 1848, and his remains rest in the Westminster Yard in Canterbury. Capt. Spencer Lyon was a large land owner. In politics he called himself a Jacksonian Democrat. Sarah Williams his wife, was a native of Canterbury, and drew a pension after his death. They were married Nov. 9, 1800. She lived to an advanced age. Their children were as follows: Marcus, who married Emeline Fuller, was a farmer and school teacher. He lived in Killingly, Conn., and later in Centerville, R. I., going from there to East Greenwich, R. I., where he died. Mary, who married a Mr. Adams, lived in New York; William, who married Charlotte Ann Lyon, of Woodstock, was a farmer and had his home in Canterbury, where he died at an advanced age; Susan, married Capt. Walter Smith, a farmer, and died in Canterbury; Alexander, married Zerviah Collins, was a farmer and died in Canterbury; George W. Lyon.

George W. Lyon, the father of George L., was born Jan. 12, 1819, in Canterbury, Conn., and received his education in the local schools. For some years he remained at home assisting his father in the care of the farm. After his father's death he disposed of his interest in his father's estate to his brother Alexander, and in April, 1858, removed to Baltic, Conn. where he was engaged in the Sprague Mills, an enterprise which was started that year. Until 1866 Mr. Lyon remained in Baltic, when he went to Brooklyn, Conn., where he was employed for some two years as a teamster, by the Quinebaug Company. From Brooklyn he went to Wauregan, where he was employed for fourteen years at various kinds of labor. In 1881 Mr. Lyon located at East Brooklyn where he spent the remaining years of his life. For some time before his death, March 3, 1898, he had been in feeble health. He passed away at the home of his son, George L., where he had been residing for some time. His remains rest in the old Winchester graveyard at Canterbury. In politics he was a staunch Democrat, and while he lived in Canterbury he held a few minor offices. In his personal relations he was liberal and kind hearted and his home was noted for its hospitality.

George W. Lyon was married March 22, 1843, to Mary Ann Bottum, who was born Jan. 30, 1818, a native of Hanover, Conn., and a daughter of James Bottum. Her mother's maiden name was Morgan. She died at the home of her son, George L., March 24, 1900, and is buried beside her husband. Her children were George L.; Mary L., born July 26, 1845, married John Pickett, and died in Fall River, Mass., Dec. 25, 1879; Ann Eliza, born Feb. 8, 1847, married Edward Kelley, and died in New York City, April 13, 1891; Worthington B., born March 3, 1849, died Feb. 5, 1859; Charles A. born Aug. 28, 1851, died Sept. 21, 1870; James H. born April 5, 1854, married Laura Wood, and resides in Danielson, Conn. (they have the following children: Irving W.; Ella M.; Truman; and Ross F.); Washington Irving, born Sept. 1, 1856, died March 16, 1875.

George L. Lyon, whose name introduces this article, was born Nov. 28, 1843, in Canterbury, was reared to farm work and attended the district school until he was fifteen years old. He then began working in the Sprague Mills, as a chore hand in the weaving room. He was advanced, and when he was eighteen years old he was a loom fixer. At that age he left the Sprague Mills, to take a similar position in the cotton mills of Samuel S. Slater & Sons at Webster, Mass. In 1865 he left that place to take a position as loom fixer for the Quinebaug Company. After being here for about a year he was made "second hand" in the weaving room, and held this position for about three years. During this time he assisted in the starting of the new Whiting looms which had been installed in the factory. In 1869 Mr. Lyon went to West Warren, Mass., where at the age of twenty-six years he was overseer in the weaving rooms of the Otis Mills. Here he remained until March 1, 1871, when he accepted his present position. At that time he had charge of nearly 200 people; now there are 320 people under his direction, and he has charge of 1500 looms, on which he supervises the dressing, drawing and weaving work.

George L. Lyon was married June 17, 1867, to Alma F. Chadwick, who was born April 21, 1842, in North Scituate, R. I. She is a daughter of James and Phoebe (Bishop) Chadwick, and has become the mother of the following family: George Chadwick, born Nov. 29, 1872, died Oct. 29, 1873; Glenn Francis, born Aug. 3, 1874, is a mechanic in the employ of the Quinebaug Company; George W., born Feb. 5, 1881, is a machinist.

George L. Lyon is a Republican, and belongs to Moriah Lodge, No. 15, and Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M., of Danielson. He and his wife belong to the Danielson Congregational Church. His history is that of a hard working and upright man, who has always commanded the respect of his subordinates and the confidence of his employers.

SYLVESTER PRESTON MORRISON. A soldier of the Civil war, an active machinist for many years, a foreman in several of the large industries of Connecticut, Mr. Morrison has in recent years retired to the farm in Willington, Tolland county, where he now ranks among the foremost citizens.

The great-grandfather of Sylvester P. was Capt. John Morrison, a native of Inverness, Scotland, who emigrated to America, and in 1789, married Hopestill Brewster, of Middletown, a direct descendant of Elder William Brewster of the "Mayflower." He was a sea captain and was lost at sea in 1794, together with his ship and the entire crew, no trace of them ever being found. His only child, John Morrison, grandfather of Sylvester P., was born in New York City, March 20, 1790. He acquired the trade of wheelwright, and carriage and wagon maker, which he followed in Hebron, Conn., and later in Stafford, Willington and Mansfield. In politics he was a Whig, and his learning was a matter of note in those days, for he had acquired a thorough knowledge of ancient history, besides the important current topics of his time, and was a man whose opinion was ever sought and valued.

John Morrison married, Nov. 7, 1813, Elizabeth Quimby Palmer, who was born Jan. 11, 1792, daughter of Joshua Palmer, of Hebron. A family of nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Morrison, namely: (1) Charles Francis and (2) Maria Louise, twins, born Aug. 15, 1815, the latter unmarried, now residing with her sisters in Windsor. (3) Edward, born June 1, 1818, in Hebron, Conn., married (first) Jane Holt; (second) Harriet Topliff; (third) Harriet Brown; he was a wheelwright and died in Willington, Aug. 15, 1894. (4) Albert, born March 13, 1820, was a physician and surgeon; he married Harriet Bartholomew, of Hartford, and was killed by the cars at Windsor, July 18, 1873. (5) Clarissa E., born in Stafford, Feb. 28, 1822, lives unmarried in Windsor. (6)

John Henry, born Feb. 21, 1825, in Stafford, Conn., went to California among the Argonauts of 1849, came East in 1880 for a short visit, returned to the Golden State and died there unmarried in 1902. (7) Catherine, born Feb. 3, 1828, in Stafford, died Dec. 10, 1830. (8) Frederick and (9) Frances, twins, born in Stafford, May 22, 1831. Frederick was a resident of Holyoke, Mass., for a number of years, where he had charge of the packing room of the Merrick Thread Co. He was formerly an officer of the Connecticut State Prison. He married Lizzie Stiles. Frances resides in Windsor.

Charles Francis Morrison, the father of Sylvester Preston Morrison, was born in Hebron, Aug. 15, 1815. He acquired from his father the trade of wheelwright, wagon and carriage making. When a young man he came to Willington, where he started in business for himself, continuing uninterruptedly, until he retired in 1872, aged fifty-seven years. Ten years later he died in South Willington where he had lived for twenty-two years. In politics he was a Republican, and served two terms in the General Assembly; in local affairs he was quite prominent. For several years he held the office of first selectman, and was also the incumbent of several other town offices of responsibility and trust. He was conservative in business affairs, and was successful to an unusual degree. He was a man of excellent judgment, sound reasoning and wide information. He married, July 6, 1841, Louisa Preston, born in Willington, Feb. 13, 1819, daughter of Ainos and Martha (Taylor) Preston. The wife, Louisa, died April 6, 1896. The five children of Charles Francis and Louisa Morrison were as follows: Katherine L., born May 26, 1842, unmarried and a resident of Willington; Sylvester P., subject of this sketch; Charles Frank, born March 12, 1847, married (first) Josephine Benchly, and (second) Ada E. Souter, was a machinist by trade, and died in Whitehall, N. Y., July 25, 1893; John Henry, born March 27, 1849, learned the pattern-maker's trade, was a draftsman by occupation, invented several important improvements in spool making, married Emma A. Smith, and died in Willington, June 20, 1896; Edgar, born June 30, 1851, died July 8, 1852.

Sylvester Preston Morrison was born Nov. 17, 1844, in that part of Willington now known as Moose Meadow. He received a common school education, and at the age of sixteen left Willington, to become a clerk in the general store of H. Sidney Hayden, Windsor, Conn. There he remained until he enlisted Aug. 21, 1862, in Co. A, 22d C. V. I., serving until honorably discharged, July 7, 1863. During that winter his regiment was stationed on Arlington Heights, in defense of Washington, and in the spring they proceeded to Norfolk and Suffolk, Va., remaining at the latter place until their term of service had expired, when the regiment returned to Hartford and was mustered out.

Returning home in the summer of 1863, Mr. Morrison began work at the Merrick Thread Co.'s plant in Mansfield Hollow, Conn. There he had charge of the packing room for several months, and was then transferred to the spool department, where he remained in charge until his re-enlistment, at Hartford, Sept. 5, 1864, in Co. D, 1st C. H. A. He served in front of Petersburg and Richmond until mustered out, in the latter city, June 28, 1865. In 1866 Mr. Morrison began work as machinist at the Atwood Machine Co., Mansfield, Conn., where he remained several years. He removed with the firm to Willimantic, and later to Stonington, remaining with them in the latter city for a year. He then became associated with the works of the W. G. and J. H. Morrison Machine Co., Willimantic, Conn., and later, after working for a time with the P. W. Turner and Sons Machine Co., at Turnerville, Conn., he returned to the Morrison plant. In 1882 he secured a position at the thread factory of Gardiner Hall, Jr., & Co., South Willington, where he continued in nearly constant employment for fifteen years, or until in 1897, when he assumed the vocation of light farming. He had removed to Willington Hill in 1894, and there he has since resided.

Mr. Morrison married, April 21, 1866, Miss Ellen Slingsby, who was born in England, Oct. 6, 1845, the daughter of William Slingsby. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Morrison, Maude Louisa, Nellie Persis and Ernest. Maude Louisa, born April 14, 1867, married Charles Macfarlane, of South Willington, and they have two children, Elmer Myron, born May 27, 1891, and Dorothy Louise, born July 14, 1894. Nellie Persis, born June 4, 1874, married Rutherford H. Worden, March 12, 1901; they have had one child, Theodore Roosevelt, born Dec. 5, 1902. Ernest, born Sept. 1, 1870, died an infant, aged three weeks.

Mr. Morrison was one of the charter members of Elisha Johnson Post, No. 86, G. A. R., of Willington, and became its post commander. Owing to an insufficient membership in Willington, the charter of the post has been surrendered. In his younger days, Mr. Morrison was also a member of the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a Republican. In 1900 he was elected a member of the State Legislature, serving on the Putnam Memorial committee. In the following year he bought the store property of Moses L. Dimock, succeeding him in business, as well as being his successor in the offices of town clerk and postmaster. Mr. Morrison is held in esteem by his many friends and acquaintances.

EDWARD E. ASHLEY, who is now serving his second term as postmaster at Plainfield, descends from an old and prominent family, his line of descent being through Gilbert E., Luther, Jonathan, Abner, Samuel, Jonathan and Robert.

Robert Ashley appears on record at Springfield, Mass., about 1638. After that date he is referred to many times in the records of Springfield. He died in West Springfield, Mass., Nov. 29, 1682, and his widow, Mary, passed away Sept. 19, 1683. Their children were: David and a sister who was a twin; Mary; Jonathan, who was born about 1645; Sarah; and Joseph.

Jonathan Ashley died in Hartford, Conn., about 1704. He was married Nov. 10, 1669, in Springfield, Mass., to Sarah Wadsworth, and settled on a farm in the northern part of Springfield, Mass. He moved to Hartford in 1683, where he spent his remaining years. In that community he dealt extensively in land. His children were: Jonathan; Joseph; Samuel, who was baptized Feb. 26, 1687-88; Sarah; and Rebecca.

Samuel Ashley, who died in Hartford, Conn., Feb. 12, 1771, was married Aug. 19, 1717, in Lebanon, Conn., to Elizabeth Kingsbury. She was born Oct. 16, 1693, and died Aug. 21, 1750. Samuel Ashley inherited from his father a farm of eighty acres in Plainfield, to which he removed from Hartford. Mr. Ashley bought 200 acres in the north part of Windham, Conn., in April, 1717, and paid for it £180. This farm lay on both sides of Little river. It now lies in North Bigelow district of Hampton, and was owned in the family until 1863. Mr. Ashley was an ensign of the Northeast Company of Windham in 1730, receiving his commission Oct. 8, of that year. A man of substance and character, he was one of the leading men of the community. His youngest son inherited his homestead. Mr. Ashley was the father of the following family: Elizabeth, born in Plainfield (all the others were born in Hampton); Samuel; Abner, born May 10, 1722; Susannah; Joseph; Love; Jonathan.

Abner Ashley, who died in Hampton, Conn., Feb. 10, 1801, was married about 1745, in Hampton, to Mary Cressley, and to Patience Barrows after the death of his first wife. Abner Ashley settled on a farm in his native town, where he became prosperous and influential. He and his wife were buried in the old Hampton cemetery, their graves being marked by handsome brown stones. Their children were: Jonathan, who was born March 2, 1746, or the year following; Mary; Elizabeth; Ruth; Abner; Samuel; Daniel, Hannah and Lucy.

Jonathan Ashley died in Chaplin, Conn., Nov. 30, 1831. He was married June 13, 1773, in Hampton, Conn., to Lydia Humphrey, who was born in Barrington, R. I., May 4, 1752, and died in Chaplin, March 9, 1838. Jonathan Ashley settled in the north part of Windham near Parish Hill, and was one of the post riders, who carried the Phoenix (Windham) Mail, the first number of which was issued March 12, 1791. He and his wife passed their last days in the home of their son in Chaplin. Their children were: Sally, who died young; Sally (2); Luther, who was born June 14, 1781; James; Polly; Roxana; Lydia; and Jonathan.

Luther Ashley died in Scotland, Conn., Aug. 3, 1860. He was married Sept. 21, 1809, in Barrington, R. I., to his first wife, Eliza, the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Bullock) Humphrey. She was born March 12, 1785, and died Dec. 20, 1828. He married his second wife, Sarah Smith, May 6, 1829, in Hampton. Luther Ashley enlisted in the war of 1812, as Corporal of Capt. Charles Palmer's Company from June 13 to July 1, 1813. Camp life was not congenial to him, and he returned home. Most of his life was passed in Chaplin, but his last years were spent in Scotland, where he died at the home of his son, Gilbert. Mr. Ashley was a farmer, and served as selectman in Chaplin in 1822, and represented that town in the General Assembly in 1845. To him were born by his first marriage: Eliza Jane; Roxanna, who married Luther Martin, and lived at Northampton, Mass.; Lydia Dianna; John Humphrey; George, who lived and died in Chaplin, Conn.; Gilbert Everet, the father of E. E. Ashley, born Sept. 11, 1821; Sarah, who married Nathaniel Martin, and lived at Barrington, R. I.; Samuel Newell, who is a farmer in Scotland, Conn. He is married and has two sons.

Gilbert Everet Ashley died in Scotland, Conn., March 18, 1862. He was married April 29, 1845, in Windham, Conn., to Frances Elizabeth, a daughter of Alfred and Frances (Humphrey) Drown. Frances Humphrey was born in Seekonk, Mass., May 7, 1824, and died in Willimantic, Conn., Aug. 12, 1896. They were farming people, and removed from Chaplin to Scotland in the spring of 1855, where they purchased a farm of 120 acres on Pinch street, and there died. The children of Gilbert E. and Frances E. (Drown) Ashley were as follows: Edward Eugene, whose name introduces this article, born Nov. 24, 1847; John Humphrey, born Sept. 29, 1850, is a farmer at Ulysses, Neb., where he was married; Evelyn Maria, born Nov. 21, 1853, is unmarried, and has her home in Barrington, R. I.; George Drown, born Dec. 22, 1858, resides in Hartford, Conn. He is married, and has two children.

Edward E. Ashley accompanied his parents in their removal to Scotland when he was a child of eight or nine years, and there he received the major part of his education in the Pinch street school. At the age of sixteen he went to Norton, Mass., where for six years he was a clerk in a store. At the end of that period he came home to remain for a year, and there he married his first wife, Ellen Wood.

Mr. Ashley came to Plainfield in 1877, and for two years was employed by Deacon William B. Ames in the manufacture of brooms; then he entered the store of J. P. Kingsley & Son, of Plainfield, as a clerk, remaining in their employ thirteen years. For the greater part of that time he was acting express agent. In March, 1891, Mr. Ashley received the appointment of postmaster at Plainfield under President Harrison and continued in office until the advent of the Democracy in power. In January, 1897, he was appointed to the same position under President McKinley, which office he still holds. His administration of this responsible and exacting position gives satisfaction to the public. For eight years Mr. Ashley was local express agent, and upon purchasing the news depot of his predecessor, he has built up a very profitable trade in periodicals, papers, stationery, and notions.

Twelve years ago Mr. Ashley united with Protection Lodge, No. 19, I. O. O. F., of Central Village, where he also holds membership in the Encampment. For the last six years he has been a member of Hope Council, No. 78, O. U. A. M., of Moosup. Mr. Ashley was married in Scotland, Nov. 28, 1872, to Ellen Sophia Wood, a daughter of Oliver and Susan Barstow (Palmer) Wood. She was born Oct. 25, 1852, and died June 5, 1882. His second marriage occurred in Plainfield, Sept. 16, 1884, to Fannie Edna Starkweather, a daughter of Daniel and Mary Louisa (Frink) Starkweather. She was born in Plainfield, March 29, 1849. Mr. Ashley came to Plainfield in April, 1877. His children by the first marriage were: Susan Frances, who was born Oct. 14, 1873, married Edward Windsor, and is the mother of three sons, Clarence, Alfred and Milton. Alfred Drown, born Sept. 15, 1875, is a clerk in the employ of J. P. Kingsley & Son, of Plainfield. He married Alice Lewis, of Plainfield, by whom he has one daughter, Helen. To Mr. Ashley's second marriage was born one child, Edna Louise, July 20, 1891.

OSCAR PENNOVSKY, one of the old and respected business citizens of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., who for some time has been retired from active cares, is the subject of this too brief review. Many pages could be filled in properly setting forth the many struggles of Mr. Pennovsky from the time he landed in the United States, a raw German boy, with everything to learn in the new land, to his present position of substantial independence, esteemed and respected by the whole community where he has so long made his home.

The birth of Oscar Pennovsky occurred Oct. 15, 1836, in the city of Crimmitschau, Saxony, Germany. He was a son of August Pennovsky, a weaver, who, with his wife, died in Germany. The schooling of Mr. Pennovsky was in the free schools of his native land, and there he learned his father's trade. In 1854 he decided to come to the United States, being the only one of the family to do so. Sailing from Bremen, he was forty-two days making the passage, landing at New York, and going thence to Warehouse Point. A few days later he came to Rockville, arriving July 4, 1854, and there he almost immediately found work in the American Mill. Mr. Pennovsky went later to the New England Mill, and was at work in the Rock Mill when a German company was formed in the city for service in the Civil war; this Mr. Pennovsky joined, going with the others to New York, where they were attached to the German regiment, the brave 20th New York, which made such a gallant record.

Serving fourteen months as a brave soldier, Mr. Pennovsky was honorably discharged in July, 1862, and returned to Rockville. Shortly after he went for some time to Norwich, Conn., then returned to Rockville and again took up the carpenter trade, at which he had worked some little before, and during the succeeding years was employed by William Coggsell and also Edwards and Somers. He finally went into the business of building and contracting for himself, gradually doing less and less as he grew older and his other interests increased.

Mr. Pennovsky's first marriage was in 1866 in Rockville to Wilhelmina Zimmerman. She died in 1872. The second marriage of Mr. Pennovsky was in 1876 in Rockville, to Catherine Graf, a native of Switzerland, born in the Canton of Appenzell, Jan. 18, 1842, a daughter of Jacob and Walburger (Bar) Graf, who came to the United States in June, 1857, sailing from Antwerp. Mr. Graf located at Warehouse Point, but three years later came to Rockville, where he died, at the age of eighty-two, his wife still surviving at the age of eighty-five. Mrs. Pennovsky was the oldest child in a family of nine children.

By his first marriage Mr. Pennovsky had four children. The death angel has visited his house, taking away three infants, and the beautiful daughter, Louisa, who had been spared to her sad parents unto the age of twenty-two. By the present wife, formerly Catherine Graf, no children have been born.

Although in sympathy with the Democratic party, Mr. Pennovsky has never been anything of a politician and is perfectly satisfied to leave the cares of office to others. At one time he was a member of the Turner Society, and is connected with Sick Society, No. 1, and has been its secretary and is also a member of the D. O. H., of Rockville. Both he and his wife are consistent members of the German Lutheran Church, of which Mr. Pennovsky is a trustee, and where they are both highly regarded for their marked Christian character.

When Mr. Pennovsky and his wife first went to housekeeping it was on High street; later removal was made to Village street, and still later to the home he built on Ward street, on which street he owns considerable property including a business block and another residence. In 1856 Mr. Pennovsky made a visit to his home, and in 1896 both he and wife visited the scenes of their childhood in Germany and Switzerland. Mr. Pennovsky has been a successful man on account of inherent qualities, and not from any advantageous circumstances. His idea was when he came to this country to work hard, live honestly and save and invest his earnings, believing that it is better to have steady earnings and small savings, than to enter into wild speculations, and he has proved the wisdom of his course. Probably there is no more highly respected German resident of this city than Oscar Pennovsky.

WILLIAM E. LABELLE, a successful business man and a leading citizen of Dayville, Killingly, Conn., is a marked example of what can be accomplished through the exercise of energy and application. Mr. LaBelle is a self-made man and has justly earned the ample means and the high esteem which he enjoys.

The birth of William E. LaBelle occurred Sept. 2, 1855, at Athens, N. Y., in which place and in Rochester, N. Y., he lived only a short time. When quite young he moved with his parents to Cleveland, Ohio, where he attended the public schools. He also attended the Painesville Academy for two years. In 1870, at the age of fifteen, he was left fatherless, and with his mother he removed to Thompson, Conn., where he secured employment in the Grosvenor Dale mills. Applying himself with energy he mastered the machinist trade and remained in the employ of these mills for a period of eleven years. He worked between two and three years in the Quinebaug mill at Danielson. From Danielson Mr. LaBelle went to the Canada Cotton Mill at Cornwall, Ontario, and took the position of master mechanic, which he occupied for less than a year, the mill having closed down. He then came almost direct to the Sayles Mill at Dayville, taking the position of master mechanic, which he retained for eight years. He then went as master mechanic for John Slater at Slatersville, R. I., remaining nearly three years. While with Mr. Slater Mr. LaBelle remodeled the whole plant, the plant at that time consisting of four mills and employing about 1500 hands. Mr. LaBelle was making a fine success of his work when his health failed him, and he was obliged to engage in other business. In the meantime Mr. LaBelle was studying pharmacy and was well qualified when he opened his drug store, in May, 1895, at Dayville. Since that time he has confined his attention to the drug business and has prospered accordingly.

On Nov. 1, 1877, Mr. LaBelle was married to Nellie M. Dillaber, of Fiskdale, Mass. Their one child died in infancy. Mrs. LaBelle is an active member of the Congregational Church, to which Mr. LaBelle is a liberal contributor and where he is a regular attendant. In politics Mr. LaBelle is a staunch Republican and takes a lively interest in party affairs, but does not seek political favor. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, John Lyon Lodge, No. 45, and C. H. Bacon Company, No. 25, Uniform Rank, of Danielson.

In Pythianism Mr. LaBelle has been very active. He was district deputy to the grand chancellor, the district comprehending Willimantic, Putnam and Danielson, for the year 1888. In February of that year he instituted John Lyon Lodge, No. 45, of Dayville, and has passed through the chairs. He is a member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, of Danielson, and Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M., of the same place. Mr. LaBelle has been uniformly successful in all his undertakings:

JOHN BEASLEY is a very highly respected and substantial farmer, residing near Sadds Mill Station in the town of Ellington, Tolland county, and deserves the respect and esteem of the community by his industrious and well ordered life and upright character.

John Beasley, the grandfather of the Ellington farmer, was a sea-faring man, and made his home at Pawtucket, R. I., where he was born. There were four children in his family: Edward and William, who lived in Providence, R. I.; John, the father of John Beasley, whose name appears above; and Marion, the wife of the Rev. Mr. Miller, of Providence.

John Beasley, the father of the Ellington farmer, was born in Pawtucket, R. I., Jan. 25, 1792, and early in life was bound out to a neighboring farmer, whose name was Fitton. When he became a young man he went to New York City, where he learned the trade of a gunsmith under the instruction of a Mr. Hayden, with whom he worked during the war of 1812. When the British threatened an attack on New York he assisted in the construction of earth works. For thirty years he was employed in the United States Armory at Springfield, Mass., where he was a skilled mechanic. In 1833 he purchased the farm, which is now occupied by his son. This farm, which was then known as the "Tim. Holton place," consisted of 190 acres. John Beasley located on it in the spring, but worked in the Armory during the summer of 1833. The rest of his life was devoted to farming. He rigged up a small forge at his farm, and had a small shop where he repaired guns during his odd moments. Many of the old flint-lock muskets were changed by him to percussion cap guns, when the latter came into use. While he was a successful farmer, yet his heart was always in his shop, he was fond of tinkering, and was known as a most capable mechanic. Dying Nov. 17, 1854, he was buried at Ellington, and left behind him the name of an honest and hard-working man, who had become well-to-do by his industry and economy. Of him it was said that "his word was as good as his bond." Always an old-line Whig, he had no desire for official station, and devoted his life to his work.

Mr. Beasley was married in Suffield, Conn., by Priest Gay, to Susan Clough, a native of West Springfield, Mass., born in 1794, a daughter of John Clough. To this union were born the following children: (1) Susan, married W. A. Arnold, a tinner of North Hampton, Mass., where he died in 1836; (2) John, born in 1818, died an infant; (3) Elizabeth, born in 1821, married Elah C. Stacy in 1839, and died in Windsor, Conn., Oct.

18, 1859; (4) Harriet, born in 1823, married Henry Clark in 1845, and died in Marion, Ind., in April, 1900; (5) John, whose name introduces this article, born May 29, 1825; (6) Sarah, born in 1827, married Edward Barber, of South Windsor, in 1847, and died Sept. 21, 1851; (7) Abigail, born in 1829, married Leonard Risley in 1852, and died in Hartford in 1857; (8) Emeline, born in 1832, married Major Erskine Hanover at the home of her brother, John.

John Beasley, well known in Ellington, was born in Springfield, Mass., and his parents moved to Ellington when he was eight years old. His education was obtained in the public school, and in the Ellington high school, which he attended winters until he was twenty years old. Remaining on the home farm until after the death of his father he purchased the interest of the other heirs and became its sole owner. There he lived, making substantial improvements on the farm and caring for his widowed mother with filial devotion. This farm has been increased until Mr. Beasley now owns 250 acres, which he devotes to dairying, general farming and tobacco growing. Mr. Beasley is one of the few farmers in Ellington who can successfully grow Havana seed leaf, and devotes about six acres to it every year. His is a well-kept farm, and shows good management and careful cultivation in every part.

Mr. Beasley was married May 5, 1847, to Laura A. Clark, who was born in East Windsor, Feb. 12, 1824, and was a daughter of Charles and Chloe (Sadd) Clark, farming people. Mrs. Beasley died July 21, 1897. She was a member of the Congregational Church of Ellington, and is buried in the Ellington cemetery. Mrs. Beasley was the mother of the following family: (1) Marion E., born April 9, 1849, married Daniel H. Allen, and died at her home in Springfield, Mass., April 12, 1899. (2) John O. died in infancy. (3) J. Dwight, born June 23, 1851, was married Dec. 24, 1873, to Mary L. Allen, and is a farmer, having his home with his father. His education was received in the common school of Ellington, and in a select school at that place, which was kept by Edward Hall. J. Dwight is a Republican, and was elected first selectman in 1892, and again in 1896, serving four years in all in this office, and making a most efficient record. His children are: Florence, John M., who died an infant, Laura M., Eva, and Clara. (4) Emeline, the wife of George A. Allen, of Springfield, Mass., is the mother of Grace, George, Charles and Harry.

John Beasley is a Democrat, but not a strict party man, using his judgment as to the man for whom he shall vote. He was elected to the Legislature in 1875. For seven years he was a member of the board of selectmen, for three years being its chairman. Several years were devoted by him to the board of relief. He attends the Congregational Church, and has many friends in the community, who know his worth and character.

DAVID A. SYKES. Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., in the industrial world occupies an important position as a manufacturing city, being particularly noted for its production of woollens for men's wear. There is located the celebrated New Springville Mill, whose reputation for the production of fine cassimeres and worsteds is second to none in America. The enviable position occupied by this mill naturally, and to no small extent, reflects credit upon those under whose direction the manufacturing is conducted.

On May 1, 1887, David A. Sykes became the first superintendent of the new Springville Mill, a position that he has held ever since, during which time he has established the well earned reputation of being one of the very able men in his capacity in New England.

Mr. Sykes came from a family that for many years in America, and for several generations in England, has been connected with the woolen business. He was born Feb. 2, 1858, at Millville, Mass., the youngest child of his parents, John and Harriet (Durrans) Sykes, who came to America about 1851. The paternal and maternal grandfathers were, respectively, Joseph Sykes and Thomas Durrans.

David A. Sykes was reared in his native town, and there received his educational training, entering the Millville high school with the expectation of continuing school. In 1873 he entered the employ of the Millville Manufacturing Co., and thus at fifteen had finished with school books. Previous to this time he had done some work in the mill during vacations, with his companions of the locality, but in February, 1873, he became regularly employed. Since that time he has had a continuous connection with the woolen manufacturing business, during which time he has filled various and advancing positions. The first work which became his task in the mill was at a narrow loom, and for sixty-six hours per week he received $25 a month. For one year he remained in Millville, when the burning of the mill caused him to go to North Adams, in March, 1874, where he entered the employ of the North Adams Manufacturing Company, of which his brother, Thomas W., was superintendent. At this mill Mr. Sykes was assigned work in the designing room. There he began at the lowest position, gradually working his way up until for several years previous to his leaving there for Rockville he had become the designer for the mill. In October, 1886, Mr. Sykes came to Rockville, and entered the designing room of the Hockanum Mill, where he was employed until May 1, 1887, when the New Springville Mill began operations, and he became its superintendent. The Springville Mill is one of the finest equipped woolen mills in the country, with a capital of $250,000, employing about 350 skilled operatives; it operates eight sets of cards, and 135 broad looms. This company furnished the cloth for the inaugural suit of President Harrison in 1889. As will be seen Mr. Sykes' rise in the manufacturing circle with which he has been identified has been gradual. The force of his own merit has long since demonstrated his thorough efficiency in the responsible position he occupies. Thoroughly practical, his knowledge of the business has been acquired not by theory but by actual work.

As a citizen Mr. Sykes is of the highest type, thoroughly progressive and public spirited, ever ready and willing to encourage movements of interest or benefit to his city. He has declined rather than sought political honors, and while a staunch supporter of Republican principles, his interest in political affairs has been only that of a good citizen. His duty as such has never been shirked, and he has served several terms as a member of the Rockville city council. He is one of the incorporators of the Rockville Savings Bank, and is a director in the Springville Manufacturing Company. In 1901 he completed his elegant residence on Elm street, this being one of the most pleasant homes in the city.

In North Adams, Mass., Jan. 21, 1885, Mr. Sykes was married to Clara Darling, a native of that town, born Aug. 30, 1862, only daughter of M. B. and Abby (Hall) Darling. M. B. Darling was a successful merchant of North Adams, and the Darling family were highly respected and well known in that locality. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Sykes are: Arthur Darling, born July 13, 1888, and Corinne Hall, born Sept. 23, 1890. Mr. Sykes was reared in the Episcopal faith, and is a member of that church, but he attends the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Sykes is a member.

HENRY H. WILLES, proprietor of Willes Art Store, No. 1013 Main street, Hartford, is the son of Henry A. and Ann K. Willes, and was born in Norwich May 21, 1860. His father was a prominent dry-goods merchant of that city, and in his later years was engaged in the wholesale hardware manufacturing business in Philadelphia. The children were Henry H.; Flora N., wife of Judge Simmons of Vermont; and Claudius W.

Mr. Willes received his education in the public schools of Hartford, and the Hartford High School. When seventeen he taught the district school in Barkhamsted. Later he went to Maryland, where he taught and studied the classics under his uncle, Rev. Daniel Willes, a graduate of Yale. He is conversant with the modern languages and speaks several fluently. Returning to the North, he located in Chicago, where he was in the wholesale hardware business on La Salle street, but disposing of this interest to good advantage, he went to Wisconsin, and after a successful business career there went to Philadelphia, where he became vice-president and traveling representative of the Chemical Company, manufacturers of tools and hardware specialties. For fifteen years Mr. Willes successfully conducted this business, when he bought the art business formerly owned by his late uncle, J. H. Willes, at No. 1013 Main street, Hartford. He imports, wholesales and retails works of art, pictures, frames, oil paintings, engravings, etchings, water colors, pastels and artists' materials, and he makes mirrors and the regilding of frames a specialty. He is the manufacturer of upward of 12,000 picture frames per year; his business has been established nearly thirty years, being the oldest art store continuously in the same family in Hartford. Mr. Willes lives at Vernon Center, where he has resided for over twenty years, living on the original Willes homestead, formerly belonging to his grandfather, Horatio Willes, who was one of the most prominent men in Norwich, where he was engaged in the wholesale grocery business, and where for many years he served as selectman, and was a bosom friend of Governor Buckingham. His namesake, Henry H. Willes, was governor of Virginia.

The Willes family is an old and distinguished one and is descended from Judge Willes of England. Many of its representatives have been prominent in medicine, ministry and the law.

On Dec. 23, 1886, Henry H. Willes married Miss Jeannette Hoadley, of New Haven, a member of one of the leading families of that section, and a cousin of ex-Governor Hoadley, of Ohio. They have traveled extensively through Europe and America. One son has blessed the union, Hoadley H., born May 27, 1892. Mr. Willes has taken a vital interest in matters looking to the improvement of the town of Vernon. In religion he is a much respected member of the Congregational Church at Vernon Centre, having been president of the Ecclesiastical and Christian Endeavor societies. In politics he is a Republican. He was representative of the town of Vernon, and served as chairman of the committee on Manufactures; a fluent speaker, he took an active part in the proceedings of the Legislature of 1901.

JOHN M. TATEM, a successful manufacturer and influential and representative citizen of Eastford, Conn., comes of notable ancestry. He is a son of James B. and Mary Catherine (Allen) Tatem, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work.

John Melvin Tatem was born Jan. 17, 1860, in Woodstock, Conn., and his education was acquired in the district schools. Early in life he began work in the mill, filling in vacations and other spare time in this way, learning all the practical details. At the age of twenty-seven he was taken into partnership by his father, the firm name being James B. Tatem & Son, and in connection with his duties in the mill he acted as traveling salesman for the firm. Two years later the establishment was destroyed by fire and when the business was resumed it was at Eastford, where Mr. James Tatem had purchased the factory built by Arnold Bros., on the site of which stood the first handle making shop in that section.

The firm of James B. Tatem & Son continued with continually increasing prosperity until January, 1899, when John Melvin became the sole owner. The articles manufactured at this well known and reliable factory include ax handles of all kinds, hammer handles and picker sticks. The factory gives employment to a large number of people, bringing much wealth into this part of the county. It is the largest industry in the town, using about 200,000 feet of hard wood annually, and the output is sold both to dealers and consumers, the name having a high trade value. Mr. Tatem is the capable manager and owner of the business and spends a part of each year traveling in its interest through the New England States.

On March 4, 1881, Mr. Tatem was united in marriage with Minnie J. Dean, a native of Woodstock, daughter of Charles R. and Olive S. (Leonard) Dean. Ezra Dean, the grandfather of Mrs. J. M. Tatem, was born in Woodstock, Conn., and there died. He married Sally Works, and had the following children: Reuben, Zephaniah, Telamon, Lucy, Charles Rollin (father of Mrs. Tatem) and Almira.

Charles Rollin Dean was born in Woodstock, Oct. 10, 1816, and he died in the same town March 19, 1899. In 1847 he married Olive Stewart Leonard, who was born May 14, 1825, in Union, Conn., and who is now living in Eastford Conn. She was a daughter of George and Deborah (Stewart) Leonard, and granddaughter of Daniel Leonard, Sr. Charles R. Dean was always engaged in farming. Always a lover of home, he was quiet and unassuming. For many years he was captain in the State militia. In early life he was a close attendant and member of the Methodist Church, but later attended the Advent Church. His children were as follows: Deborah Florence, born Sept. 22, 1848, in Woodstock, married Oct. 3, 1867, Joseph S. Merrick, of the Merrick Lumber Company, Holyoke, Mass.; Emma Augusta, born March 16, 1850, married, Nov. 21, 1872, Cyrus W. Potter, of Woodstock, who is mentioned elsewhere; Ezra Leonard, born July 30, 1851, a pattern maker in business for himself, married (first) Angelia Caswell, and (second) Fannie Parmelee, now of Holyoke, Mass.; George Stewart, born Aug. 23, 1858, died aged eighteen years; Mary Jane, born June 20, 1861, married John Melvin Tatem, of Eastwood; Inez Isabelle, born Sept. 7, 1863 died aged seventeen years.

A family of four children came to the union of John M. and Minnie J. (Dean) Tatem as follows: Charles Dean, born April 30, 1882, a most capable and exemplary young man, his father's valued assistant; James Carlton, born March 4, 1884 also with his father; Harry Logan, born Oct. 5, 1887; and Kenneth Merrick, born Aug. 17, 1897, who died Aug. 1, 1899.

Although Mr. Tatem is a staunch Republican, his many business interests absorb him too much to permit his accepting political honors but in 1902 he was elected Judge of Probate. His fraternal connection is with the Masonic order, Putnam Lodge, No. 46, of Woodstock and Putnam Chapter, No. 41, R. A. M. of Putnam. Both he and wife are valued members of the Eastford Congregational Church. As a business man Mr. Tatem is recognized as possessing every desirable qualification, while in social and private life he lives up to a high standard. His home in Eastford is one of the most attractive and hospitable in the village.

WILLIAM THRALL, (deceased) was a prosperous and highly respected citizen of Ellington, Tolland county, where his entire life was spent.

Moses Thrall, the grandfather of William Thrall, was a son of Moses Thrall, who came to the town of Vernon from Windsor. The ancestral history of this family may be found more fully treated elsewhere under the name of Julius Thrall.

Moses Thrall, noted above, located in Ellington about 1790, and had his home near where the depot building now stands. A large land owner and a man of wealth, he was of a generous disposition, and through his kind heartedness lost much of his wealth, so that at the time of his death he was only in moderate circumstances. Marrying a Miss Hill, he became the father of the following family: William (1), the father of William Thrall; Reuben, who was a farmer, married a Miss Dorman, and lived in Ellington; Russell, located in Center-ville, N. Y., where he died; Mary.

William Thrall, noted above, was born and reared in Vernon, Conn. When a young man he bought a farm in Ellington, near the town line of East Windsor, where he lived until his death, which occurred when he was eighty-three years old. He was buried at the old cemetery in Ellington. On July 16, 1789, he married Aurelia Grant, who died Jan. 27, 1815. She was mother to: (1) Roxa, born in 1791, married Leonard Bradley, and went to Ohio, where they built a cabin in the woods, on the site of the present village of Vermilion, Erie county. There they both died. (2) Horatio, born in 1793, was the father of Russell Thrall, of Ellington, whose sketch appears on another page. (3) Betsy, born in 1797. (4) William, born in 1800, died in infancy. (5) Philura, born in 1802, married Timothy Coleman, and died in Coventry. (6) William. William Thrall was married (second) to Sallie Pember toward the end of the year 1815.

William Thrall, whose name introduces this review, was born Dec. 5, 1804, and was reared as a farmer, and remained at the old home attending the district schools until his maturity. He remained with his parents until his marriage, when he moved into a house just completed on the farm. With his brother Horatio he remained on the farm until his father's death, when the home fell to him. He added to his inheritance until he owned about 300 acres, and had what was pronounced the best place in the town. On this extensive farm he raised grain, and carried on a business far beyond the times. Of a free and easy disposition, his generous nature was often imposed upon and he was many times cheated, but he was a good spirit, a kind heart, very industrious, and always a good neighbor. He was a Democrat, and held a few minor positions, but never cared for office. Belonging to the Congregational Church at Ellington he was active in its behalf, and was a member of the choir, in which he played a bass viol for many years. Mr. Thrall and his brother Horatio taught singing school during the winters in Ellington and throughout the county. Both were fine singers, and often sang together, greatly to the delight of their audience. The perfect blending of their finely cultivated and sweet voices is still remembered by many of the older residents of the town. Mr. Thrall died Oct. 9, 1875, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Gladding, from Bright's disease, brought on by hard work. He was buried in the Ellington cemetery.

Mr. Thrall was married in June, 1835, to Amanda Hyde, born July 18, 1814, in Ellington, and the daughter of Horace Hyde, who died Aug. 15, 1874, at the age of eighty-one years. Her mother, Sarah Barber, died Sept. 19, 1879, and Mrs. Thrall died July 19, 1882. To Mr. and Mrs. Thrall were born: (1) Aurelia, born May 11, 1836, died Oct. 26, 1854. (2) Nelson, born Jan. 6, 1838, died Aug. 15, 1855. (3) Jason, born Jan. 10, 1840, died Feb. 1, 1863. (4) Harriet, born Dec. 17, 1841, married William A. Gladding Jan. 7, 1864. Mr. Gladding was born in Stafford, Conn., Feb. 17, 1840, and was a son of William and Mary (Stanton) Gladding, both of whom died in Ellington at the home of their son, William A. The father died at the age of eighty-nine, and the mother, at the age of eighty-three. (5) Alva, born May 5, 1844, married Rosina Grant, Aug. 22, 1865, who died in 1882. He was a farmer, and had his home in Ellington. They had these children: Blanche L., who became Mrs. Maher; William, of Hampden, Mass.; Leland A., who married Edna Tuttle; Agnes, who died at the age of sixteen years. (6) Betsy, born Nov. 17, 1848, married Clinton J. Charter, of Ellington, Feb. 19, 1867, lives in Ellington, and is the mother of: Arthur W., who married May Spade, of Springfield, Mass.; Leslie J., who married Eloise Pinney, of Ellington; Mahlon B.; Edith M.; and Edna.

WILLIAM A. GLADDING came from Stafford to Ellington when a young man and purchased the farm now occupied by his widow after they were married. It was then a tract of 135 acres, and was owned by Moses Allen. On this tract he made many permanent and valuable improvements, and converted it into one of the choice farms of the section. A large man, Mr. Gladding was overcome by the heat on the morning of Aug. 10, 1896, and died the same day in Ellington. His ashes rest in Ellington. Mr. Gladding and his wife were members of the Ellington Grange, and of the Windsor Methodist Church, where he served as a trustee. Having no children of their own, they adopted in 1884 Harriet B. Sommerman, who in 1893 became the wife of Arthur J. Ellsworth, of East Windsor, and is the mother of Evelyn, Elsie and the baby.

Since the death of her husband Mrs. Gladding has carried on the farm, making further improvements. She has remodeled the house within, making it one of the most comfortable farmhouses in the town; and has added forty-eight feet to the tobacco shed, making an estimated outlay of over $1,000. Mrs. Gladding is a most competent lady, understanding well all the workings and needs of the farm, which she has kept up to the high standard of her husband. She is very industrious, raises tobacco, corn, potatoes and hay. She drives the mowing machine herself, cutting the grass and putting it into the windrow, ready for the man to load. She has many friends, as had her husband, and her industry and thrift are indicated by the character of her home and its surroundings.

JAMES H. SMITH. In every community are found examples which teach lessons to those who are observing. By no means is it true that education and wealth insure success, and as an instance, the life of James H. Smith may be cited. No fortunate circumstances surrounded his youth, with the exception of his possession of most estimable parents, and his progress was accomplished entirely by his own efforts, from the very bottom of the ladder to his present responsible position as superintendent of the great Quinebaug Manufacturing Company, of East Brooklyn, Windham Co., Connecticut.

The Smith family is an old and honorable one of Windham county, and many members of it have become prominent in various circles of life. John Smith, the grandfather of James H. Smith, was a farmer who resided in the northeast portion of the town of Killingly, where he reared a large family and passed his whole life.

John Smith (2), son of John, was born in 1805, in Killingly, Conn., on the old farm of his father, and was reared a farmer boy, although at manhood he turned his attention in another direction. As a merchant he became well known to the residents of East Killingly, conducting a general store in that locality for nine years, moving then to Dayville, where he also embarked in a mercantile business, which he carried on for some years. A few years were spent on the farm in Killingly and his last years were spent at the home of his daughter in Pawtucket, R. I. His death occurred in 1890, and he was buried in Cranston, Rhode Island.

John Smith was a leading Democrat prior to the days of the Civil war, but the issues of that time brought him into the ranks of the Republican party. His marriage was to Susan Fenner, a daughter of Henry Fenner, a farmer of Johnston, R. I. She lived to the age of seventy-one years, dying in 1889, and her burial was in the cemetery at Cranston. Their children were: Almanzo, a mill operative, died in New Bedford, Mass.; Emily, married Horatio Brown and resides in Providence, R. I.; Arminda, married Frank A. Butler, and resides in New Canaan, Conn.; Joseph B., resides in New Bedford, Mass.; James H., of Brooklyn, Conn.; Everett, a mill operative, in Lowell, Mass.; Frank P., died at the age of two years; and Russell F., engaged in the mercantile business, in Norwich, Connecticut.

James H. Smith was born Dec. 14, 1850, in Killingly, Conn., and attended the district school until the age of nine years, this summing up his schooling with the exception of just three winters, at intervals. Not only did he early find it necessary to look out for himself, but his earnings were needed to assist in the support of the family, and as a lad of nine he began work in the cotton mill at East Killingly, then owned by a Mr. Young. His employment began in the spinning room, as "chore boy," and he was paid $1.25 per week, consisting of seventy-two hours, and as may be imagined this left little time for either recreation or study. In 1861 his parents moved to Williamsville, and there he immediately entered the spinning and carding room of the Williamsville Manufacturing Company, remaining there for the following nine years. By this time he was quite capable of filling a more lucrative position, and when the Attawaugan Company offered it, in their carding room, he accepted, and remained with them for two years, ending this connection in April, 1872. Then Mr. Smith entered the employ of the Quinebaug Company, in the position of second hand in the card room, where he had eighty employees under his supervision, and there he continued until September, 1874, when he was made overseer of the room. There he remained until July, 1897, at which time he was given his present responsible and prominent position, one for which Mr. Smith seems perfectly adapted in every way.

The marriage of James H. Smith occurred Nov. 4, 1879, in Killingly, to Aurilla R. Butts, who was born June 20, 1860, a native of Killingly, and a daughter of Henry and Sarah (Marple) Butts. One child has come to this union: Merrill C., who was born April 12, 1887. Although Mr. Smith is an ardent Republican, he has always refused political honors, his business and social interests claiming all of his attention. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons, being a valued member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M., of Danielson, which organization he joined in 1873. Mrs. Smith is a consistent and active member of the Congregational Church of Danielson, to which Mr. Smith has been a liberal contributor.

Among the employees of the great company which he so faithfully serves Mr. Smith is very popular, there never being any friction which his wise management and good judgment cannot satisfactorily adjust, while few men in a like position enjoy so close a relation with their companies as does Mr. Smith. His reliability has been tested in many ways, and has never been found lacking. Both as citizen and social factor he is held in esteem in Brooklyn.

HENDRICK BELKNAP is a prosperous and successful citizen of Ellington, Tolland county, where his manly qualities and frank and open character have won him many friends.

The Belknap family is an old one in Connecticut, and at one time it was numerous represented in East Windsor, where Hendrick Belknap was born. Ebenezer Belknap, the grandfather of Hendrick, was a farmer in East Windsor. He married Diamus Pease, of East Windsor. Elam Belknap, the father of Hendrick, was one of a family of six children, all of whom grew to maturity. The father was born in East Windsor, and spent his life on the farm where he was born. A man in moderate circumstances, he worked hard and was living at Wapping when he died, at the age of seventy-five years. Rachel Hendrick, his wife, was a native of East Hampton, and survived her husband, living to be ninety years, keeping her health and activity to an astonishing degree. Their children were: Hendrick; Olive, who married Elijah Osmer, of Wapping; James, a miller, who died in Glastonbury; Elam, a farmer, who lived in Wapping; Huldah, who died unmarried; Joseph, a farmer, who resided in Wapping.

Hendrick Belknap was born Oct. 27, 1828, and attended the local district school in his native community until he reached the age of sixteen years, working on the farm during the summer season. For thirteen years after leaving school he worked in the mills of the Broadbrook Manufacturing Company, at East Windsor. Beginning at the monthly wage of eight dollars, his wages were increased, and when he left the mills he was foreman of one of the spooling, dressing and tinting departments, and had a number of men and women under his direction. He was considered one of the most careful and correct workmen in the mill. He was assistant superintendent of the mill and time keeper for the whole mill for a number of years, three hundred hands being employed. With his savings Mr. Belknap bought a farm in Ellington, which was known as the Roswell Charter farm. To this he added from time to time, erected the various buildings, and when he sold out had a farm of 100 acres. Here for years he bought and sold stock, butchered and shipped to Hartford and elsewhere, which proved to be a very profitable enterprise. On this farm Mr. Belknap lived for more than forty years and became wealthy. He is considered one of the shrewdest business men in Ellington. In 1898 he settled in Ellington Center and devotes his time now to his various business enterprises.

Mr. Belknap was married in 1854 to Wealthy M. Redfield, a native of Killingworth, and a daughter of Jared Redfield, a successful farmer in that town. She died April 8, 1900, at the age of seventy-two years. She was a lady of rare merit, and tender memories of her goodness are cherished in many hearts. Mrs. Belknap was a member of the Congregational Church of East Windsor. They had one child, James Willie, who was born Nov. 8, 1857, and died Feb. 28, 1858.

Mr. Belknap is a Republican, and belongs to the Broad Brook Congregational Church, and his life well sustains the obligations that are imposed by his church affiliations.

JOHN ELIOT BROWN. The name borne by the subject of this review is one which has been long and honorably identified with New England history.

The original American progenitor of the branch of the family to which John Eliot Brown belongs was Chad Brown, who came from England in company with his wife and one son, on the ship "Martin," which arrived and dropped anchor in Boston harbor in July, 1636. Through the son mentioned the lineage is traced directly to John Eliot Brown, while in the various generations since the early Colonial epoch have been found men and women who have well played their parts in life and have lent new honor and dignity to a name already honored.

John Eliot Brown, who is one of the progressive and influential members of the agricultural community in the town of Tolland and who is known as one of the representative citizens of that section of the county, is a native son of Tolland county, having been born in the town of Stafford, May 29, 1860.

JOHN ADAMS BROWN, father of John Eliot, was likewise born in Stafford, the date of his nativity being Oct. 22, 1832. The latter was reared under the discipline of the farm, and, as his father died when he was a mere lad, he was early called upon to face the stern responsibilities of life and was thus denied even such educational advantages as fell to the lot of the average boy of the locality and period. He attended the public schools in a desultory way in his boyhood, but such was his alert mentality and such his assimilative powers that he was able to amply make good the lack of early advantages through his personal application and his association with the practical affairs of life. He became known as a shrewd and discriminating business man and as one whose integrity was absolutely unswerving, so that he ever commanded the uniform confidence and high regard of all with whom he came in contact in the various relations of life. When he was but two and one-half years of age his parents removed from Stafford to Union, and in the latter place he maintained his home until he was about twenty-three years of age, having early assumed charge of the parental farm, being but eleven years of age at the time of his father's death. At the age of twenty-three Mr. Brown in company with the other members of the family removed again to Stafford, and there he was for a time employed in a tannery, while later he returned to Tolland, where he became associated with Charles C. Smith in the purchase of a farm of about 300 acres, which was known as the Colonel Drake farm. The two partners held equal interests in the property, which is located one mile north of Tolland Center. They carried on the work of cultivating this farm for about four years, at the expiration of which time they disposed of the place and Mr. Brown once more removed to Stafford. There he entered the employ of Howell & Dennis, who conducted an extensive tannery for the day, and with this firm he remained for several years, in the meanwhile purchasing another farm. He also established himself in the butchering business in Stafford, continuing this enterprise about one year. In 1865 Mr. Brown disposed of his interests in Stafford and removed to Willington, Tolland county, where he engaged in the lumber business, having as a coadjutor in the enterprise his brother-in-law, William D. Ruby. Under the firm name of Brown & Ruby they conducted a very successful business, making the enterprise one of wide scope and importance, taking out a great amount of native timber and making a specialty of the manufacture of railroad ties and the handling of heavy timber. With this ably conducted and prosperous industry Mr. Brown continued to be more or less identified until his death, which occurred July 4, 1900, and he was known as one of the substantial and progressive citizens of his section of the State. In the meanwhile he had retained possession of his farm property, but in February, 1888, he traded the place in Willington for the Stephen Arnold farm, located on the eastern boundary of Tolland county and adjoining Willington, the tract comprising more than 300 acres.

John Adams Brown was in every sense the architect of his own fortunes, and few are they who have more worthily and more successfully made use of the opportunities presented. His life was one of consecutive application and he had a normal conception of the duties and responsibilities of human life, placing a due valuation upon men and things and having been significantly free from that sycophantic conventionality which so often handicaps successful effort. Thus he had a wholesome and unqualified appreciation of the dignity of honest toil, in whatever field of endeavor, and a sublime contempt for the man who shirked or who feared to soil his hands, fearing the criticism of the superficial. During the panic of 1857, when business in all lines was practically at a stand-still, he went to work chopping wood in order to secure an honest livelihood, and he was never afraid of work of any kind. Flattery could not cajole him into a compromise of principle, and the darts of enmity and inconsequent criticism were powerless to move him. He was true to himself, strong in the self-respect which every honest man may and must maintain, and thus his life was one upon which rests no shadow. His fine physical health and his distinct mental equipoise represented that best of all human condition—"mens sana in corpore sano," a sound mind in a sound body. In politics he was a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party, with which he became identified soon after its organization, and he was an active worker in the local ranks of the party. For four years he held the office of jailor of Tolland county, in which connection he also had charge of the county-house where the indigent and unfortunate are cared for. He was a member of the board of county commissioners from 1888 until 1892, and his attitude was always that of a public-spirited citizen. For about fifteen years Mr. Brown served as road inspector of Willington, and for many years he also held membership on the board of relief of the county, his influence and aid ever being cast in favor of good government and all that conserved the general welfare. Further evidence of popular confidence and esteem was his, since in 1872 he was elected to represent the town of Willington in the State Legislature. Here he served with credit to himself and his constituents, bringing to bear the same business sagacity and mature judgment which had insured his prestige in his personal business, and while a member of the assembly he was assigned to the house committee on Roads and Bridges. He was for several years a member of the Republican State central committee and also held membership in the town committee of his party in Willington, ever taking an active part in public affairs of a local nature and doing much to further the party cause through his practical and timely advice. When Mr. Brown first became a member of the Republican town committee Willington showed a Republican majority of forty-five, and when he resigned the office the normal majority had been increased to one hundred and forty-five.

On Jan. 25, 1857, John A. Brown was united in marriage to Emily A. Ruby. She was born Sept. 13, 1836, the daughter of James and Nancy (Daggett) Ruby, of Willington, and she survives her honored husband. Of their children we enter the following record: John Eliot is the immediate subject of this sketch; Maggie E., born Nov. 28, 1874, Jan. 5, 1895, was united in marriage to William J. Bowler, of Ellington, Tolland county, and has children, John Timothy, Ruby Rose and William Adams; Winfred Hawley, born Jan. 19, 1878, in Willington, there received his educational discipline, and he has since continued to be identified with the operation of the homestead farm, in which he is associated with his brother, John Eliot; like his father he is a staunch Republican in his political proclivities.

He married, Jan. 1, 1901, Agnes Manning, of Tolland.

John Eliot Brown, whose name initiates this sketch, accompanied his parents on their removal from Stafford to Willington, and in the public schools of Willington and Tolland he secured his early educational training. At the age of eighteen he completed his specific school work and identified himself with the duties of the home farm, where he remained until he had attained the age of twenty-five years, when he removed to Minnesota and leased a farm of 160 acres in Dakota county, forty miles south of the city of St. Paul, and there he was successfully engaged in the raising of grain and the operation of a dairy for a period of two years. After this he returned to Tolland county, where he was in practical charge of the old homestead until April 1, 1901. This is the largest farm in the town of Tolland, comprising 330 acres and being most attractively located along the Willimantic river, a fact which also adds greatly to its value since it is thus made one of the most fertile and prolific places in that section of the State. The homestead is devoted to diversified farming, and a very successful dairy business is also conducted, the cream product being sold to the Vernon creamery, while the herd of fine cattle on the place numbers about forty head. Mr. Brown has the same business acumen and discrimination which so eminently characterized his honored father, and is animated by the same genuine and sincere spirit of integrity. His success is certain to be cumulative under his careful and wise system of operations, and he is known as one of the sterling sons of the county and as a worthy representative of a name which has been long honored in his section of the State. In politics Mr. Brown is an uncompromising Republican, but he has never desired public office, though he consented to serve one term in the capacity of town assessor.

On the 5th of August, 1883, was solemnized the marriage of John E. Brown to Ella A. Ferry, of Stafford, a daughter of George L. and Lucy J. (Root) Ferry. Of the four children of this union two sons and one daughter died in infancy, the only surviving child being Raymond Arthur Niles, who was born Oct. 26, 1889.

In conclusion, while not reverting in detail to the genealogy of John Eliot Brown, by reason of the record found elsewhere, we may appropriately state that his paternal ancestor, Arthur Niles Brown, who was born in Rhode Island, April 20, 1759, became a successful and influential farmer and trader in Tolland county, Conn., having located in the town of Union, where he acquired a large landed estate and where he passed the remainder of his life. At the time of the war of the Revolution he ran away from home in order to tender his services in behalf of the colonists who were striving to gain the great boon of independence and to hurl oppression back. He thus became a private in the marine department of the Continental service, having also served in the line as a private, and his record was that of a valiant soldier of the Republic, in the establishment of which he thus aided.

JORDAN BROTHERS, the well-known dealers in hardware, sporting goods and kindred wares in Willimantic, Windham county, have built up a thriving business by their energy, thrift and perseverance, and by their upright principles and unwavering integrity have won an enviable commercial standing.

Peter Jordan, the father of William P. and Frederick D. Jordan, of Willimantic, was born March 22, 1822, in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, son of Paul and Lena (Page) Jordan. Paul Jordan was a farmer, and died in 1829, leaving three children, as follows: Philopena, who married Adam Klein and died in Germany; Lena, who became the wife of Adam Page, and died in the Fatherland; and Peter. Peter Jordan was but a boy of seven years when his father died and being the only son in the family was early obliged to assume unusual responsibilities for a lad of his age. He attended the public school until the age of fourteen, going a few months each winter, the summer season being devoted to hard work on a farm. As a boy he was capable of doing a great deal of hard work, and while his wages were small, as were all wages in his native country, yet all his earnings on the farm and as a laborer were applied to the support of the family. He later engaged at road contracting, at which he was quite successful, but wishing to better his condition he decided to come to America. Bidding friends and relatives good bye and taking a last look at the scenes of his childhood, Peter Jordan purchased with his savings a ticket to the far-off land chosen for his future home. He sailed from Havre, France, in April, 1848, on a sailing vessel bound for New York. When five days at sea the vessel sprang a leak and the captain turned back to Falmouth, England, for repairs, which were completed in a fortnight and the voyage resumed. After a somewhat rough passage the vessel sailed into New York harbor on July 20, being forty days from Falmouth. Mr. Jordan found himself a stranger in a strange land, with a capital of $50 and energy, determination and resolution. He was willing to accept work at anything to make an honest dollar. He found employment at construction work on the Pennsylvania Railroad, between New York and Philadelphia, remaining there for two months, when he became ill and for four months was unable to work. The following March he was employed by a farmer about twenty-five miles north of New York City, receiving $5 a month for the first two months, when his wages were increased to $10 a month for the next four months. He then went to Norwich, Conn., where a boyhood acquaintance, Jacob Gross, was residing. On the following day, Sept. 25, 1849, Mr. Jordan found employment with Orlando Johnson, a farmer in Lebanon, with whom he remained about three months, working as a farm hand. His next work was in the tannery of George Hill at Lebanon, where he remained for four years. During the last year of his working for Mr. Hill Mr. Jordan was married, and the following spring he went to Norwich and for seven months was employed on the premises of Gen. William Williams, a prominent and wealthy citizen there. Returning to Lebanon Mr. Jordan located near the tannery where he was formerly employed, and for a year worked as a laborer. He then rented a nearby farm, now occupied by Charles H. Loomis, and there resided until March, 1852, when he rented for a period of five years his present farm, buying it at the end of that time and going heavily into debt for it. It consists of 172 acres, and nearly all the buildings now standing were erected by Mr. Jordan. He has greatly improved the land and has since been engaged as a general farmer.

While advanced in age, Mr. Jordan is spry and active, his faculties but slightly impaired. The management of the farm has for the past ten years devolved upon his son Charles. Mr. Jordan is liberal in his political views, and while he has never sought political preferment he has served two terms on the board of relief. He attends the Baptist Church. He is a self-made man in the fullest sense of the word, but to his worthy wife is due a large share of credit for his success; by their united energy and perseverance they have won for themselves a firm position in the community, and their integrity is unquestioned.

In New York City, Jan. 1, 1853, Mr. Jordan married Philopena Page, born Dec. 18, 1826, in the same town as her husband, a daughter of Peter Page; she came to the United States in 1851 in company with an uncle. The children born to this union were: (1) Elizabeth became the wife of Brigham Spaulding and died in Willimantic. (2) Catherine married Thomas Little, of Willimantic, and has three children, Harriet May, Willard Hill and Frederick Parker. (3) Harriet died unmarried at the age of twenty-two years. (4) Charles and (5) John, twins, are both unmarried and residing on the home farm. (6) William Peter and (7) Frederick Dwight, are mentioned below. A few years ago Peter Jordan returned to his native land for a visit, the first he had made since leaving there.

WILLIAM PETER JORDAN was born Feb. 28, 1863, on the homestead in Lebanon. He attended the district school, the select school at Liberty Hill taught by Edward S. Hinckley, a well-known instructor, and Natchaug high school at Willimantic, from which he graduated in 1882. Entering the employ of the Willimantic Linen Co. as a timekeeper, he worked a few months and then resigned to teach school. He began teaching in the school at Lebanon Centre, and after one term there taught the district school at South Coventry for two terms. He then opened a private school at Lebanon, which he conducted for two terms. In 1884 he accepted a position as clerk in the drug store of Wilson & Leonard, at Willimantic, and later with Mr. Wilson, who had bought out his partner and conducted the business alone for a time. In 1890 Mr. Jordan bought an interest in the store, and the firm became F. M. Wilson & Co. Mr. Jordan remained there until 1898, when he purchased the interest in his present business from the heirs of the late A. B. Carpenter, who was a partner of Frederick D. Jordan.

On Nov. 22, 1888, William P. Jordan was married to Lina A. Little, of Mansfield, Conn., who, having lost her parents in childhood, was brought up by a sister. Their children are: Marion R., born July 5, 1893; and Maurice P., Jan. 7, 1897. In politics Mr. Jordan is a Republican, and he has served one term as alderman from the Second ward, is now chairman of the Republican city committee, and is a member of the Republican town committee. Socially he is a member of Obwebetuck Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F.; Windham Encampment, No. 10, same order, and he has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge and State Encampment and he has been through all the chairs in the I. O. O. F. He attends the Congregational Church.

FREDERICK DWIGHT JORDAN was born Feb. 18, 1865, in Lebanon, on the farm above mentioned. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and his education was received in the district school, several terms at a select school kept by Edward S. Hinckley at Liberty Hill, and at Natchaug high school in Willimantic. The summer season was devoted to farm work. He then began teaching school in the Village Hill district, and after one term there took charge of the school at the north end of Lebanon Green. He was there one term and then taught two years in the school at Lebanon Centre. In 1886 Mr. Jordan came to Willimantic and became clerk for Carpenter & Fowler, who had a hardware store on the corner of Main and Railroad streets. He remained there for three years or until October, 1889, when he became a partner of Mr. Carpenter, who had dissolved partnership with Mr. Fowler the previous May and had established a business in the room now occupied by Jordan Brothers. The firm became Carpenter & Jordan and so continued until May, 1898, when William P. Jordan bought the interest of Mr. Carpenter from the latter's heirs, Mr. Carpenter having died the month before. The firm then became Jordan Brothers and has so continued.

On Sept. 5, 1889, Frederick D. Jordan was married to Nettie M. Brewster, of Lebanon, daughter of Eldridge and Drucilla (Holberton) Brewster, and a descendant of Elder William Brewster of the "Mayflower." Their children are: Roland B., born May 15, 1892; and Myrtle V., Aug. 21, 1895. Politically Mr. Jordan's affiliations are with the Republican party, but his interest in political matters ends in the casting of his vote. Socially he belongs to Obwebetuck Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F.; and to Willimantic Lodge, No. 7, A. O. U. W. He attends the Congregational Church.

Jordan Brothers are of the best type of the energetic young American business men—the type that has brought America to the position of commercial supremacy which she holds today. They are wide-awake and progressive, honorable and upright, wholesouled gentlemen.

ORREN C. WEST is one of Rockville's substantial business men, and is a well-known citizen of Tolland county, having served his county, town and city in positions of honor and trust. Coming to the front in spite of early discouragements, his present success is much to his credit, and now his name stands for integrity as well as capacity in commercial circles.

It is easy to trace the West family to its fountain head in America, as it is one of the oldest which settled in New England, and is of Pilgrim stock. Three brothers of the name came to Plymouth, and later settled in Duxbury, Mass., in the early settlement of that town, the record telling of their prominence in public affairs. The branch of the West family to which Orren C. belongs possesses some distinct features. From the earliest family records there has not been a black-eyed male representative, and there was never a female one until the generation to which he belongs, his sister, Mary E., who married Albert Lamb, being the first exception to the family rule.

Mr. West is a descendant of Joshua and Elizabeth (Williams) West, the former of whom was a farmer and a prominent man in Lebanon, which he represented in the Connecticut Legislature for many years. He was also justice of the peace there for many years, and some of the court records kept by him prior to 1750 are now in the possession of Orren C. West. During the Revolution he was a member of Gov. Jonathan Trumbull's Council.

David West, son of Joshua and grandfather of Orren C., married Mercy Clark, and they had six children, of whom but three grew to maturity, Charles, Jabez (father of Orren C.), and Hattie (who died at the age of twenty-eight). Charles, the eldest to grow up, went to Columbus, Chenango Co., N. Y., in 1847. He was a blacksmith by trade, but engaged in farming the greater part of his life.

Jabez West, the father of our subject, was born in 1799 at Lebanon, was reared there and learned the trade of blacksmith from his father. In 1824 he married, in Mansfield, Conn., Miss Fanny Balch, who was born June 21, 1801, a daughter of Balillel and Ruth (Davis) Balch, and who died Feb. 4, 1885. In 1844 Mr. West moved from Colchester to Vernon, Conn., and in the following year to Rockville, where he was the first butcher in the city. In those days a butcher bought the cattle alive, slaughtered them at night and the next day peddled the meat. Refrigerators were unknown, and western dressed beef unheard of. Mr. West resided in Rockville until 1851, when he removed to the town of Tolland and engaged in farming, retaining there all his succeeding days, dying at the age of seventy. Both he and wife lie side by side in Grove Hill cemetery. The family born to Mr. and Mrs. West were: Mary E., widow of Albert Lamb, died in Hartford; Fanny H., widow of W. H. Thompson, lives in Waterbury; Aurelia M. married Henry Stebbins, and died in Rockville; Susan married Thomas Burt, and died in Holyoke, Mass.; Caroline N. is the widow of James W. Burton, of Pawtucket, R. I.; Andrew Jabez, deceased, was a farmer in Tolland; Orren C. is our subject; Julius C. is a farmer of Tolland; and William W. died in Colchester, Connecticut.

Mr. West was a staunch Democrat, and at one time was one of but four Democrats in the town of Colchester. In 1861 he served as selectman in Tolland, and represented that town in the Connecticut Legislature. Mr. West was a man of fine presence, standing five feet ten and one-half inches, and weighing over 200 pounds. In religious faith he was a Universalist, well-known in the community and respected by all.

Orren C. West was born Jan. 18, 1837, in Colchester, Conn., and was but a lad of tender years when his parents located in Rockville, in 1845, at which time the town was but a hamlet, giving little promise of the thriving city which now teems with industry. Mr. West attended school on the site where the Henry Block now stands, and there he studied the standard books—Colburn's Mental Arithmetic, with geography, spelling and reading, being the extent of the curriculum. The excellent memory which still stands him in good stead assisted him, and he soon mastered all there was to learn. During vacations when a lad he carried tools for the builders at work on the American Mill, receiving $10 per month, and later he entered into regular employment at the Rock Mill in "drawing warps," for which he was paid $12 per month and boarded himself. When the first school house was built on School street, and Emery Strong was the teacher, our subject attended school for a time, but at the age of fourteen his school days were over, as about that time his father moved to the northwest part of the town of Tolland, at the head of Snipsic Lake. From that time on his life was continued on the farm, and here he worked and played quite as other boys of his age have done. At this time a great deal of hauling of heavy timber for the mills was done in this section, and he was employed in this manner until the Rockville Mills were completed.

Mr. West was first married on Jan. 18, 1866, in Greenwich, Washington Co., N. Y., to Miss Amanda Walla, a native of that county, the daughter of Sidney and Miranda (Jordan) Walla. The father of Sidney Walla was one of the pioneers in the manufacturing business in Greenwich. Mrs.

C. C. West

West died on Sept. 20, 1871, in Rockville, at the age of twenty-seven, leaving one child, Fanny A., the wife of C. H. Merrick, of Rockville. On Oct. 15, 1872, Mr. West married, in Mansfield, Conn., Miss Mary E. Fuller, born Sept. 1, 1844, a daughter of Samuel and Olive (Hibbard) Fuller, the former of whom was for forty-nine years postmaster at Mansfield, Conn. The children born to this union were: Mary E., Ernest David, Mable and Grace Balch, the last named being the only survivor.

In 1868 Mr. West removed to Rockville and bought the ice business of R. S. Lewis, which he has conducted with success ever since. As a politician Mr. West has become well known through the county. In 1860 he cast his first presidential vote for John C. Breckenridge, and from that time has been a staunch Democrat and an active worker for his party's success. For many years he has been one of the advisers and counselors of his party in this section. In 1883 he was a member of the Connecticut Legislature, and enjoys the distinction of being the first man elected to fill a vacancy, this being caused by the death of Mr. Bindheimer, and during this time he efficiently served on the committee on School Funds. In the fall of 1883 Mr. West was elected sheriff of Tolland county, and served three years, and for three years was first selectman of Vernon. During this long term of service the town house was built and the vault at the cemetery. It was due to Mr. West that the system of waterworks in the town house was put in, giving that institution an independent system. The town house was built after plans originated by Mr. West, making it one of the best in the State. His service was marked by a conscientious discharge of duty and the town never had a more efficient official. Mr. West was treasurer of the Tolland County Agricultural Society, and he is a director of the Rockville Fair Association. Socially he is connected with Fayette Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Adoniram Chapter, and is also a member of the A. O. U. W. Mrs. West is eligible to the D. A. R., as she is the granddaughter of Gen. Hibbard, a man who was very prominent in the Connecticut militia for years, lived in Mansfield, and died at the age of ninety-five; his father served seven years and ten months in the Revolutionary army.

When Mr. West located in Rockville, in 1868, he resided on School street, but in 1875 he removed to Mountain street, occupying the first house that was built on that street; it was erected in 1848, has been renovated and remodeled, and is one of the pleasant and delightfully located homes of the city. Other buildings have been erected to accommodate Mr. West's teams and wagons for his business. As an owner, judge and admirer of fine horses, he is one of the best known in Tolland county. His stable has always been able to turn out just about as fine a pair as his city possessed.

No man takes more pride in the appearance and quality of his horses, and few owners, anywhere, are able to maintain that pink of condition that invariably characterizes Mr. West's horses. In his religious belief Mr. West is a Christian Scientist. He is a man of remarkable memory, well posted on the issues of the day, and is one of the best representatives of the commercial life of Rockville.

PHILIP KRAMER. Among the substantial citizens of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., is Philip Kramer, who now lives in retirement after a busy and successful career in that city, where he is one of the best known of the German-Americans. The birth of Mr. Kramer occurred Jan. 9, 1835, in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. He was a son of George and Catherine (Rau) Kramer, both of whom lived and died in Germany, where the father followed the trade of baker. Philip Kramer was one of a family of seven children, and was one of the three boys who came to America.

In the German schools Philip Kramer acquired his education and in his father's bakery he learned the business which he so successfully carried on himself in later years. In 1854, deciding to come to the United States, he sailed from Havre on the sailing vessel "Congress," and landed in the city of New York thirty days later. When he started from his home he had put aside for emergencies a sum of $17 in gold, but of this he was relieved by some deft pickpocket soon after landing in the strange city. Fortunately he obtained work on the second day after his arrival, and for four and one-half years he remained in New York at his trade, earning enough to permit of a short visit to his old home, when he bade his parents a last farewell and again sailed from Havre on his way to New York, this trip being made on the vessel "Homeward." Mr. Kramer remained in New York City until early in the sixties, when he came to Rockville, bringing with him his wife, who had formerly been Fanny Getzman. She was born in Baden, Germany, Dec. 26, 1828, and came to this country with her first husband, in 1854.

After locating in Rockville Mr. Kramer entered the employ of Mr. Ferris in the stone yard, but soon found employment in his own line, and in time opened a bakery of his own on Orchard street, where for a number of years he continued in the business, satisfying the public with his goods and reaping substantial benefit for himself. In 1886, he retired from business, since then contenting himself with a supervision of his property interests in the city, which are large and valuable.

In national affairs Mr. Kramer is a staunch Democrat, but his interest in local matters is more in the man than the party. Mr. Kramer for twenty-seven years has been an active member of the Turner society, of which he was the efficient treasurer for some time; he is a leading member of the Sick Society, No. 1, and since 1885 has been its treasurer. Considerable property on Orchard, Village, and Ward streets is owned by Mr. Kramer, who by his industry and economy was able to accumulate a comfortable fortune during the years when he was best fitted for active work.

To Mr. Kramer and his wife one son was born, named Philip, but his death occurred in Rockville, at the age of twenty-six. One son, Albert Nagle, was born to Mrs. Kramer, by her first marriage. Not only by the German residents of his city is Mr. Kramer held in high esteem, but he possesses the respect of the whole community where he is well known. His life history goes to show what a young man can accomplish if he possesses grit, determination and energy. Mr. Kramer was fortunate in his selection of a wife, as Mrs. Kramer to no small extent shares the credit for her husband's success, and with him shares the highest esteem of all.

FRED LAWTON DOUGLASS, the proprietor of the "Junction House" at Plainfield, Windham county, has won a well merited success. He descends from sturdy Scotch progenitors, who several generations ago came to America and made their home in Rhode Island.

James Douglass, the great-grandfather of Fred L., was born at Kingston, R. I., where he spent his active life in farming. He died at Stony Creek, Conn., an inmate of the home of his son James, Jr., a hotel man of that place. His death occurred April 12, 1888, at the advanced age of 110 years, seven months and sixteen days. His wife died comparatively young. Their three children were: James, Jr., of Stony Creek; Polly, who had two husbands, Mr. Potter, and Mr. Slowcome; Nicholas G., the grandfather of Fred L., born at Kingston, R. I., Dec. 16, 1799, and died in Pawtucket in 1888.

Nicholas G. Douglass was married in Warren, R. I., to Elizabeth Cowing, a native of that town. She was born Aug. 27, 1800, and died at North Providence, R. I., March 5, 1880. Mr. Douglass was a mill worker during his entire life, and for a long period was overseer in the factory now owned by his son George at Pawtucket. Seven of his eight children are still living: (1) George, born Jan. 15, 1823, is the owner and operator of a factory for making shoes, corset laces and similar goods at Pawtucket. (2) Elizabeth, born Nov. 24, 1824, is now the widow of Wells Brace, and resides at Southwick, Mass.; she is the mother of four children: George, Elizabeth, Charles and John. (3) Mary, born Jan. 3, 1827, is the widow of William Cummings, and the mother of Elizabeth, now Mrs. Philips, of Willimantic; Mary, of New Haven; Julia, now Mrs. Yeomans, of Hartford; and William, of Columbia; (4) David Kelly, the father of Fred Lawton, born Sept. 6, 1829. (5) Maria, born Jan. 12, 1833, was married Oct. 10, 1853, to Wheaton S. Plumb, who died at Southington, Aug.

1, 1897, one of the most successful and progressive citizens of that town; two children were born to this union: Eva M., the wife of Homer W. Terry; and Willard W. (6) John, born Feb. 9, 1836, was a sailor for many years, never married, and now lives in Southwick, Mass.; (7) Charles, born Sept. 24, 1838, responded to the first call for troops in 1861, and died of Typhoid fever at New Orleans in 1862; (8) William, born Jan. 5, 1843, is unmarried, and lives at South Coventry, Conn., where he is engaged in farming.

David K. Douglass, born at Bozrahville, was taken by his parents when he was three years old to North Providence. There they remained some three or four years and then came back to Connecticut. Mr. Douglass has always been a farmer, though he has for years been connected with cotton and woolen mills, and has been employed in rubber factories. He lived in Lebanon two years; in South Coventry five years; in Berlin four years; in Fitchville two years; at Bozrah two years; and at Naugatuck five years. From 1855 to 1861 he had his home in Colchester, where he was employed in the rubber factory. In 1873 he moved to Moosup where he kept hotel until 1876, and in 1876 engaged in hotel-keeping in Plainfield for fourteen years, conducting the small hotel just east of the Plainfield station. For the past few years Mr. Douglass has practically given up active work, though he still carries the mail between the station and the post office. In politics he is a Democrat.

Mr. Douglass was married in Naugatuck, Conn., to Nancy, the daughter of Harry and Polly Newcome, residents of Windham, where she was born in 1827. To this union came: (1) Lillian, born in March, 1852, married Emerson Lovegrove, by whom she had Pearl L., Minnie and Harriet. For her second husband she married George Wellman, of Olneyville, R. I.; (2) Fred Lawton, whose name introduces this sketch; (3) Susie B., married Arthur Widdup, and resides in Olneyville, R. I.; (4) Charles B., who is now engaged in the livery business at Plainfield Junction, married Mary E. Brown, and has children: Elizabeth G. and Sidney Charles.

Fred L. Douglass was born in Colchester, Conn., July 1, 1857, and from 1861 to 1873 he lived mostly at South Coventry, where he attended school. After the family came to Moosup in 1873 he studied in the local schools, and in 1882 purchased a livery business, in Plainfield, which he conducted successfully for seventeen years, and then sold out to his brother, Charles B., in April, 1899. In April, 1896, he purchased the property on the hill which he has since developed into the "Junction House," a popular and well patronized temperance hotel. It has steam heat, running water, and a gas plant.

In politics Mr. Douglass has been a Democrat, and has been offered many offices, but has declined them all. During the last few years his adherence to the party has not been close, as he believes its leaders are drifting away from old time ideals and he now classes himself as an Independent. Mr. and Mrs. Douglass are charter members of the Plainfield Grange, No. 140, Patrons of Husbandry, which was organized Feb. 16, 1894. Mrs. Douglass was the first lady assistant steward, and Mr. Douglass served on the executive committee. In 1891 Mr. Douglass united with Protection Lodge, No. 19, I. O. O. F., of Central Village. His wife belongs to Rebekah Lodge, No. 34, I. O. O. F., of Central Village. In 1892 Mr. Douglass united with Quinebaug Lodge, No. 22, A. O. U. W., of Central Village.

Mr. Douglass was married March 4, 1883, to Rosa L. Greene, a daughter of Albert C. and Margaret Louisa (Brown) Greene. The first of the Greene family in America was James Green, and his son Abel was a life-time resident of Greenwich, R. I., where he married Nancy King, and served in the war of the Revolution. Abel Greene had a reputation for strength, and when he was taken prisoner he was yoked with a fellow captive and in a trial of strength made obligatory by his brutal captors killed his mate because of his extraordinary physical powers.

Jeremiah Greene, son of Abel, was born and reared in West Greenwich, R. I., where he married Freelove Hopkins, who was born in Plainfield in 1784, and died at Plainfield, July 24, 1868, at the age of eighty-four. Mr. Greene was engaged in the milling business, and also worked as a carpenter. In 1823 he brought his family to Plainfield, where he purchased a farm in Flat Rock district. To him and his wife were born the following family: (1) Sally, born in 1802, married Christopher Warner of Natick, R. I.; (2) Ruth, born in 1804, married twice, her husbands being Stephen and Serial Spaulding, and lived in Plainfield, where she left nine children; (3) Samuel, born in 1806, married Adeline Moses, and had four children, Charlotte, Jane, Laura and Mary, who live in Providence, R. I.; (4) Alice, born in 1808, married Josiah Belknap, by whom she had seven children, of whom Lucy, unmarried is now the only survivor; (5) Mary, born March 29, 1810, married Harvey Phillips, of Plainfield, by whom she had three children: George H. and Angeline J., both deceased; Harriet, the wife of Edgar Armstrong, has her home in Plainfield; (6) Nancy, born in 1814, married Pierce Handle, of Rhode Island, by whom she had four children, the only one living being Adelia, the wife of A. A. Parsons, of Putnam; (7) Daniel, born in 1816, married Chloe Brown, the oldest daughter of Rufus and Eunice Brown, and moved to Pennsylvania, going from there to Ohio, where he died. He had the following children: Ellen, George, Frank, Alice and Freelove. (8) Jonathan, born Feb. 7, 1818, was married in 1869 to Loretta Brown, and died Feb. 6, 1897. Their children were: Carrie M., Frank B., Grace, who is Mrs. William P. Babcock, and Harry E. (9) Almira, married Jason Wood, and lived at Pachaug. Two of their six children are living. (10) Lucy, born Feb. 19, 1821, married Thomas Lynch, of Portland, Me.; and four of their six children are living: Charles, Ellen, Lula, Hattie. (11) Albert Collins, born Feb. 21, 1823, married in 1849, Margaret Louisa Brown. (12) Jeremiah, born Feb. 21, 1825, the youngest of the family, and the only survivor. He married Sally Gallup, by whom he had two children: Albert and Ella. He owns a fine farm in the Flat Rock district, Plainfield.

Albert C. Greene was born in West Greenwich, R. I., Feb. 21, 1823, the year the family came to Plainfield. There his father died while he was still a child, so that he was early forced to shift for himself. When he was eight years old he entered the cotton factory, known as the little brick mill at Central Village, when the long day of service extended from daylight to dark. Later he worked as a farm hand, and attended the winter term of school. When he was twenty-three he entered the sash and blind factory at Charlestown, Mass., where he remained five years. Mr. Greene then became a house carpenter, and worked in that line many years. Devoting himself in his lifetime to a variety of work, he had that natural aptitude and skill which fitted him for any undertaking. In 1868 he bought a farm south of Plainfield village, where he remained until 1884, when he turned over the cultivation to his son, Turner, who has purchased the property since his father's death, and has made himself one of the leading dairymen of his vicinity. He has christened the place "Meadowbrook Farm." Albert C. Greene was a Democrat and represented the town in the State Legislature in 1876. He has served as tax collector and as constable. Mr. Greene belonged to the Masonic fraternity, and was connected with the Moosup Lodge, No. 113, A. F. & A. M. He died Nov. 11, 1897.

Albert C. Greene was married in Charlton, Mass., July 24, 1849, to Margaret Louisa Brown, who was born Dec. 8, 1823, and died Jan. 15, 1861. To this union were born: (1) Turner E., born in Charlton, Mass., Nov. 30, 1850, married Oct. 1, 1882, Carrie E., a daughter of Dennison and Nancy (Gray) Richmond. They have two children: Dora Louise, born Dec. 14, 1883, and Elmer Lewis, born June 22, 1885. Turner E. belongs to the Odd Fellows, and with the entire family is a member of the Plainfield Grange. (2) Samuel, born Feb. 16, 1852, died March 29, 1852; (3) Daniel F., born Aug. 27, 1855, married Mary Phillips, and is a prosperous farmer of Plainfield. Their children are as follows: Albert F., George, Walter Adams. (4) Rosa L., born June 24, 1860, is the wife of Fred L. Douglass, of Plainfield.

The Brown family, referred to above, descends from Rufus and Lydia Brown, the great-grandparents of Mrs. Douglass, and residents of Southbridge, Mass. Their son, Reuben, the grandfather of Mrs. Douglas, was born at Southbridge, Mass., in 1792, where he married Eunice Clemmens, who was born in 1799. She was a daughter of Reuben Clemmens, who died in 1850, at the age of seventy-seven years. He was twice married, first to Chloe Chubb, and then to Zylphia Eddy. Reuben Brown spent the greater part of his life in farming at Charlton, Mass., and there his children were born: (1) Chloe, who is the widow of Daniel Green, of Plainfield, was born Sept. 7, 1821; (2) Margaret Louisa, born Dec. 8, 1823, was the mother of Mrs. Douglass, and died Jan. 15, 1861. (3) Caroline W., born Jan. 29, 1826, is the wife of Lowell E. Colman, and lives at Chardon, Lake Co., Ohio; (4) Reuben C., born Nov. 4, 1830, married Caroline E. Upham, and has his home in Charlton, Mass. (5) Abial S., born Sept. 28, 1833, is a farmer in Rileyville, Wayne Co., Pa. (6) Clara E., and (7) Christopher C., born April 17, 1837, twins; Clara E. married Edmund Taylor, from Yorkshire, England, and lives in Willimantic; Christopher C. went West, and for twenty years was engaged in mining and prospecting in Idaho, where he died in 1896.

JOHN RAMSBOTTOM, one of the well-known and reliable merchants of Rockville, Tolland county, was born in Ramsbottom, Lancashire, England, in September, 1840, a son of George and Alice (Rushton) Ramsbottom. In some sections of the country this name is unknown, but in the immediate vicinity of the old home of Mr. Ramsbottom, it has many representatives. So far as Mr. Ramsbottom has ever discovered he has no relatives of the name in the United States.

The parents of John Ramsbottom lived, died and were buried at Ramsbottom, where the ancestors of the family had resided for many generations, and where John received his schooling, although under difficulties. The school house was a long distance from his home and it was at night school and in the Sunday-school that he received the education he possesses, being an apt pupil and ambitious to get a good education. Living in a mill district, with other boys of his age, he was early put to work in a cotton cloth mill and became thoroughly instructed in the business. Mr. Ramsbottom was naturally industrious and sensible enough to remember that the money he saved would be the capital which he could later draw upon and when he decided to come to America he had sufficient to pay his passage. In January 1869, he sailed from Liverpool on the steamer "Manchester" of the Cunard line; after a voyage of thirty days over a tempestuous sea the vessel reached New Foundland where it was necessary to coal, and finally landed safely in the city of New York.

When Mr. Ramsbottom left England he had no particular destination in view, but during the voyage he formed the acquaintance of some other passengers from whom he learned that Rockville, Conn., was a great manufacturing center and this caused him to make his way there. Immediately he found employment in the Leeds mill, taking the first chance offered for work, rather than remain idle, and he continued at work there until the death of his father in the fall of 1869 recalled him to England, but in the following spring he returned to Rockville and entered the Florence Mill, where for two years he worked in the gig room.

On Jan. 1, 1872, Mr. Ramsbottom married Emma A. Root, a native of Columbia, Conn., who was born Feb. 13, 1847. When but a child she came to Vernon, with her parents, William Bliss and Abby Jane (Ross) Root, who reside now in Rockville. Mr. Root having worked a long time for Mr. Hunt in Vernon Center, as a tanner and currier. During the Civil war he was a member of Co. D, 14th C. V. I., and served faithfully in that historic regiment. Mrs. Ramsbottom attended the district schools of Vernon, and when fifteen years old went into the store of Bissell & Brown, on West Main street, Rockville, to learn the millinery trade. When her apprenticeship was completed she entered the employ of Mrs. E. Stevens Henry, of Rockville, where she continued until 1874, when she started in business for herself, succeeding Mrs. Henry.

At his marriage Mr. Ramsbottom left the Florence Mill and entered the employ of the Singer Sewing Machine Co., and with this business and with a gradual introduction of a line of novelties in the millinery business, it was soon found necessary to make other arrangements. Later these were made by his giving up the machine agency and entering entirely into the other business which had grown to considerable magnitude and until 1889 a very flourishing business was conducted by the partners, Mr. Ramsbottom and his talented wife. Following the sale of the store in 1889 a short rest was taken but in 1892 the present store was opened, in the line of handling dress remnants, and has been successfully conducted ever since.

Mr. Ramsbottom takes no great interest in politics, but always votes with the Republican party. His social connection is with the A. O. U. W., and at one time he was a member of the Masonic order, in Rockville. For some time the family residence was on Vernon avenue, but later Mr. Ramsbottom built his present comfortable home on Brooklyn street at the same time erecting a residence on North Park street, which later he sold. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ramsbottom have been successful in business and reap the reward of their early energy and industry, and possess the esteem of the community in which they are so well known.

PAINE FAMILY. While this is not an old family in Windham county, its various representatives in the town of Killingly have been among the most prominent and successful citizens of their day.

The Paine family has long been established in Rhode Island, and we trace its history back to Benjamin Paine, who was a farmer and wheelwright near Chepachet, R. I., where he lived and died, being buried at that point. He married Phoebe Aldrich, by whom he had a large family. Of their children, Ransom Paine, born Dec. 13, 1787, spent his early life near Chepachet, and was reared a farmer. After his marriage he removed to Mendon, Mass., where he lived a few years, and then went to Glocester, where he lived until his death, Jan. 15, 1854. Phoebe Smith, his wife, was born June 12, 1794, and died March 12, 1860. She was a native of Glocester, R. I., and a daughter of Thomas Smith. She lived a widow for some years, and died at the age of sixty-four. These were her children: (1) Almon M.; (2) Mary, married J. Mason Adams, who spent his earlier manhood in farming near Glocester, R. I.; later they removed to Foster, R. I., where both died. (3) Emily, had two husbands, Elijah Mann, and James Bennett, and died in Foster, R. I. (4) Adeline, died young. (5) James Angell.

JUDGE ALMON MONROE PAINE was born Sept. 15, 1820, in Glocester, R. I., where he attended the common schools and Scituate Seminary. Reared to agricultural pursuits, he began teaching when he was about fifteen years old, teaching for nine winters, the summer seasons being devoted to farm work. His mercantile career was begun by the purchase of a store at Hopkins Mills, where he remained until 1846, when he purchased the "Line Store" at Sterling, where he remained for several years. Later he disposed of this interest and located at Elliottville, in the town of Killingly, where he spent several years in trade. Then he sold out to his brother, James A. Paine, and established himself on Chestnut Hill, where he made his home for many years, finally disposing of his property to his brother, James A. Judge Paine removed to Mechanicsville, in the town of Thompson, where he was also long engaged in mercantile business. Finally disposing of this he came back to Chestnut Hill, where he resided until his death, June 7, 1890, being engaged in looking after his private affairs. He was buried in the Grove street cemetery at Putnam. He died wealthy.

Judge Paine was a Republican and held the office of justice of the peace and served as assessor for many years. During President Lincoln's administration he was postmaster at East Killingly. From 1857 to 1861, he served as judge of probate in Killingly, and during his residence in Thompson for two years he held the same position. In 1864 he was chosen a director in the First National Bank of Killingly, and filled that position until his death. He was one of the corporation and served as trustee of the Windham County Savings Bank, and at different times was trustee and administrator of many estates. His wife was a member of the Methodist Church at Danielson, though he attended the Calvinistic Baptist Church. Phoebe Salisbury, his wife, was born April 28, 1817, in Sterling, Conn., and was a daughter of James and Mary (Potter) Salisbury. She was the mother of two children, Eliza D., born March 31, 1848, died Jan. 16, 1869; and Emily Maria, June 12, 1854, who now resides at East Killingly. Mrs. Phoebe Paine died April 6, 1879.

JAMES ANGELL PAINE was born April 9, 1834, in Mendon, Mass., and was quite young when the family returned to Rhode Island, where his education was secured in the local schools. Though reared to farm work, after the death of his father, he came to East Killingly and at the age of seventeen secured employment as a clerk in the store of his brother, Almon M. After spending some years with his brother, he bought him out, and carried on the store at Elliottville for himself until 1862. That year Mr. Paine sold the store at Elliottville, which is now Mashentuck, and for quite a time was engaged in trading and speculating. In the spring of 1867 he purchased the store of his brother Almon M., who was then located at Chestnut Hill, and considerably enlarged the business, and carried it on successfully for several years. Finally selling out he engaged in the manufacture of shoes at Chestnut Hill. Two years of the shoe business, however, satisfied him, and he rebought the Chestnut Hill store, which he carried on until his death, June 17, 1897, after a brief illness from pneumonia. He was buried at Westfield. Eminently successful as a merchant, he died quite wealthy. In politics he was a Republican, and held the office of constable for several years. Religiously he was associated with the Baptist Church in East Killingly.

James Angell Paine was married, Jan. 1, 1861, to Marietta Matthews, who was born June 9, 1837, in Danielson, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Mitchells) Matthews. She now resides at East Killingly. These were her children: James Monroe, born July 21, 1863; Almon M., born Sept. 30, 1869, the present owner of the mercantile business which his father conducted at Chestnut Hill.

HON. JAMES MONROE PAINE was born in East Killingly, where he attended the district school, and was a student in the Danielson high school, and the English and Classical School at Providence, from which he was graduated in 1882. The same year he entered Brown University with the intention of preparing himself for the law, but he left the university in the sophomore year, and for two years assisted his father in the store. For another two years he was employed in the office of the Providence Gas Company. After this he came back to his father, who made him a partner in the store, and the two continued together as long as the father lived. After his death, James Monroe and a brother carried on the store together under the firm name of James A. Paine's Sons, until 1899. That fall James Monroe disposed of his interest in the store to his brother, Almon M., who is still carrying on the establishment.

James Monroe Paine is a Republican, and was elected to the Legislature in 1897, where he served on the committees on Insurance and Joint Rules. In 1897 he was a member of the town school committee, and has been acting school visitor since that time. He was a director in the First National Bank in Killingly, and when that bank was purchased by the Windham County National Bank he became a director in the latter institution. He is also a trustee in the Windham County Savings Bank, a director in the Uncas Knitting Company at Danielson, and a man of wide business associations and high standing. Mr. Paine is a member of the Killingly Grange, No. 112, and of the Free Baptist Church, where he holds the position of chairman of the church committee.

THEODORE DWIGHT POND, who efficiently fills the public offices of town clerk and judge of probate, is a leading citizen of Brooklyn, Windham Co., Conn. The Pond family is one of age and respectability in the State of Connecticut and numbers among its members leading citizens in almost all professional circles.

Great-grandfather Enoch Pond was a Congregational minister at Ashford, Conn., and his death occurred while he was in charge of a church in that place. His eloquence was such that at one time Gen. George Washington went to hear him expound the gospel.

Enoch Pond (2), son of Enoch, was born in Wrentham, Mass., during a pastorate of his father in that place. The former was endowed with great musical ability, which induced him to become a teacher in his earlier life, but for more practical reasons he learned the shoemaking trade, later developing a large shoe business in Chaplin, Conn., where he died. His first marriage was to Mary Clark, of Chaplin, and all his children were born to this union. Later he contracted two other marriages, but they were without issue. His children were: Elvira Minerva married Sheffield Snow, an Adventist preacher, and she died at Mott Haven, N. Y.; Enoch, the father of Mr. Pond, of Brooklyn; Mary Ann Delia, married Ebenezer Robbins; Margaret Smith, died, unmarried at the age of twenty-seven years; and Theodore Dwight, married Mary Ann Preston, and was a cabinetmaker in Brooklyn, Connecticut.

Enoch Pond (3), son of Enoch (2), was born in Wrentham, Mass., May 11, 1810. His education was pursued in the district schools of the time and locality, but he was early started to work out a career for himself. For a short time he was employed in Brookfield, Mass., but he was only fourteen years old when he came to Brooklyn, Conn., to learn the trade of cabinetmaker, with Moses Clark, of that place. There he attended school for a few weeks during the winter seasons, and thus gained a fair knowledge of the foundation principles, remaining with Mr. Clark until he was twenty-one years old. At this time he entered the employ of Henry Clark and went to the northern part of Georgia, where he remained until he was about twenty-five. Upon his return to Brooklyn, he resumed work at his trade for several years, finally purchasing the cabinetmaking business of David Clark and following this for the remainder of his active career.

In 1862, Mr. Pond combined an undertaking business with his other lines, forming a partnership with Timothy Herrick which lasted until 1866, when the latter's interest was purchased by Mr. Pond. Several years prior to his death, Enoch Pond suffered a stroke of paralysis which rendered him an invalid, and from which he never recovered. His death took place April 16, 1892, and he was buried in the Brooklyn cemetery.

In earlier years Enoch Pond was a member of the Brooklyn Congregational Church, but in his later years he transferred to the Second Advent Church, of Abington, and in this organization he was a deacon at the time of his death. Mr. Pond was a deeply religious man and he was well read in the Bible. Although he was a life-long Republican, his tastes and aspirations never lead him to care for political preferment.

The first marriage of Enoch Pond (3) was to Lydia Ashly, of Chaplin, Conn., who died about one year after marriage. His second marriage was Nov. 30, 1837, to Sarah A. Utley, who was born June 26, 1817, a native of Chaplin, Conn., and a daughter of James and Phebe (Clark) Utley, mention of whom is more extended in another part of this volume. Mrs. Pond died Feb. 11, 1903. The children of this union were: Lydia M., born Feb. 23, 1839, married Isaac Pickering, and died at the early age of nineteen years; Theodore Dwight, born March 21, 1842; Mary A., born June 23, 1845, died at the age of seven years; George E., born July 5, 1847; John C., born Jan. 6, 1853; and Charles F., born in October, 1856.

Of this family the sons have all become conspicuous and have made for themselves notable careers. George E. Pond at the age of sixteen years enlisted in Co. K, 21st. C. V. I., and was wounded in the battle of Drury's Bluff. After a gallant service, although but a lad, he was honorably discharged with his regiment in June, 1865. Upon his return he became a clerk in Stillman's hat store, in Hartford, Conn., where he remained for two years, at the end of which time he was given the appointment to West Point Military Academy, by Congressman H. H. Starkweather. Graduating with honor from this national institution, he was then assigned for duty to the western frontier, and for several years was located at Fort Garland, Colo., and later at Fort Riley, having charge of the erection of the garrison there. On the Mexican border he saw hard service and through ability he has risen to the position of Quarter Master General and is located at present at Fort Snelling, St. Paul, Minn., receiving in November, 1901, the well deserved appointment of lieutenant-colonel. His marriage was to Elizabeth Bahnson, of Salem, N. C., and the children born to this union were: George B., who is serving as 1st. Lieut. in the U. S. A., in the Philippine Islands; and Bessie U., who died in young womanhood.

John C. Pond was for many years the overseer of the Windham County jail, at Brooklyn, Conn., and later was a watchman and hall keeper at the State Penitentiary, at Wethersfield, Conn. Later he removed to Kansas City, Mo., where for a time he was agent for the Bandera Flagstone Co., and is now a paving stone and curbing contractor in that city. His marriage was to Elsie Dibble, and their two sons, Arthur and Paul, are both students at St. John's Academy, at Salina, Kansas.

Charles F. Pond has become no less prominent in the Navy than his older brother in the Army. His primary education was obtained in the common schools of Brooklyn, Conn., and he was successful in the competitive examination for admission to the Annapolis Naval Academy, and graduated from that magnificent institution. During the Spanish war, he was stationed at Brooklyn, N. Y. and in New York City. In 1900 he was given charge of the survey to the Midway Islands, for the United States cable line to the Philippines, and he now is the able commander of the ship "Iroquois." The marriage of Capt. Pond was to Emma McHenry, and the children born to him are three: Charles McHenry; John Enoch, who is now a student at the Naval Academy; and Elizabeth Kieth.

The birthplace of Theodore Dwight Pond was Brooklyn, Conn., and he received his primary education in the common schools of his native town. In his father's business he early took an interest and was also engaged in photography, in Hartford, until Aug. 7, 1862, when he offered his services in defense of his country. Enlisting at that time in Co. K, 21st C. V. I., he entered upon a three years' service, under Capt. Jeremiah M. Shephard of Plainfield, and Col. Arthur H. Dutton, taking part in the battles of Reeds Ferry, Fredericksburg, Suffolk, Drury's Bluff, and Cold Harbor. Following the last named battle, Col. Dutton was placed in command of the Brigade, and took with him Mr. Pond, as a clerk. At the battles of Fort Harrison and the siege of Petersburg, the clerical headquarters had the very doubtful advantage of being located at the front. Until the close of the war Mr. Pond continued in this detached service, and received his honorable discharge June 16, 1865, at Richmond, Va. From Jan. 1, 1865, he had filled the rank of Sergeant. For several months after the close of the war, Mr. Pond was engaged in traveling through the State of Pennsylvania, and in 1866 he returned to Brooklyn and purchased the interest of Mr. Timothy Herrick, who was engaged in the undertaking business with his father. Since that time Mr. Pond has carried on this business there, under the firm name of E. Pond & Son, this being one of the oldest establishments in this line in the city.

Mr. Pond has ever been strong in his partisanship and devoted to the interests of the Republican party. In the public affairs of the nation as well as the local matters pertaining to his community, he has ever been identified with progress and advancement, and takes a just pride in the strides taken by the country whose flag he fought to keep unsullied. Mr. Pond has been called on to fill many town and county offices, notably that of constable, collector of town taxes for nine years, registrar of voters, and for over twelve years has dispensed impartial justice as justice of the peace. In 1897 he was appointed to the office of town clerk by the selectmen, to fill the unexpired term of H. H. Davison, deceased. Under Judge Davison he was clerk of the probate court and was acting judge until the election of 1898 placed him in the office. He also represented the town in the General Assembly in 1881.

In fraternal and social circles, Mr. Pond is well and most favorably known in his community and beyond, being in good fellowship in Mortlake Council, No. 12, O. U. A. M., of Brooklyn, and treasurer of that organization. Mr. Pond was the organizer of Sedgewick Post, at Wauregan, and was commander of the same during his membership there, later transferring to McGregor Post, No. 27, at Danielson, where he is now the efficient commander. In the Brooklyn Baptist Church he has been useful and active for many years, being at the present time church clerk and the senior acting deacon.

The marriage of Mr. Pond, in Brooklyn, Conn., April 28, 1869, was to Delia M. Brown, of that place, a daughter of Deacon Benjamin Brown. The children born to this union were: Theodore H., who married Miss Nellie Hall, is a bookkeeper, at Providence; George H., died young; Wallace L., married Mary Shippee and is a bookkeeper for the Nicholson File Co., of Providence, their one child being—Rita; Mary L., married Ralph P. Bennett, of Danielson, their son Roy, dying aged five months; and William R., who resides at home. As a citizen Mr. Pond enjoys the esteem of all and his usefulness is valued in the public, religious and social circles of his community.

DEACON BENJAMIN BROWN, JR., the father of Mrs. T. D. Pond, was born May 25, 1807, in the north part of the town of Brooklyn, and he was a son of Benjamin and Susannah (Cooper) Brown, the former of whom was born Oct. 30, 1776, and moved from Seekonk, Mass., when a young man. In 1805, he married a daughter of Nathaniel Cooper, of Seekonk, who was born Nov. 8, 1777. Grandfather Benjamin Brown located in Brooklyn on a farm which his father-in-law purchased from Peter S. Putnam, who was a son of Gen. Israel Putnam, of Revolutionary fame.

Benjamin Brown was a farmer with his father-in-law for a number of years, but when his son Benjamin was about twelve years old moved to Pomfret, Conn. There he rented a large tract of land and remained on it for five years, returning then to his old farm in Brooklyn, where he remained until his death, Oct. 29, 1852, at the age of seventy-six years. His wife had preceded him but a few months, her death having occurred the 26th of the previous March. Both were laid to rest in Brooklyn. Grandfather Brown was a patriot and took part in the defense of New London, Conn., in 1812. A family of four children were born to him and his wife: Susan, born Feb. 9, 1806, married Nathaniel H. Parkhurst, a machinist by trade, her death occurring in New Haven; Deacon Benjamin, Jr., born May 25, 1807; Emeline, born Jan. 1, 1809, married Daniel Stevens, a farmer, and they located in Delavan, Wis., where she died; George T., born Dec. 20, 1810, died March 17, 1833, unmarried.

Deacon Benjamin Brown, Jr., was born in Brooklyn, Conn., very near the Pomfret town line. When he was four years of age he was sent to school, beginning then and continuing during the summers until he was sixteen. When he had attained that age he took a memorable trip to Charleston, S. C., and in that beautiful city of roses he spent one winter, returning to the North for the summer, but making Charleston his home for the two following winters. Mr. Brown remained in the employ of his uncle, Nathaniel Cook, a shoe dealer in Charleston, for whom he worked as clerk, until the uncle failed in business, after which Mr. Brown came back to the farm in Brooklyn. During the following winter Mr. Brown taught school in Brooklyn and continued to teach in district No. 4, through the winters of 1826-'7-'8 and during 1828-'9 in the north district of Pomfret. In 1829-30 he was engaged in teaching in Attleboro, Mass., and at least one of his pupils has become distinguished in the educational world—no less a person than Ezekiel Robinson, who later was the honored president of Brown University. During 1830-31, Mr. Brown was engaged in the schools of the south district of Pomfret and Pomfret Landing, and in 1831-32-33, he taught in Eastford, Conn., having by this time become so well known as an educator that he was engaged to take charge of the summer school here, also. During the summer of 1833 he taught at Attawaugan, Conn., and in the fall of that year began teaching in a private school at Providence, R. I. In this cultivated city he remained in his profession for five and one-half years. His last years in the educational field were the winters of 1839-40 and 1841 in Pomfret. Mr. Brown resigned then from this arduous profession to enjoy life in the freedom of agricultural pursuits. Locating on his father's farm Mr. Brown continued the operation of this property until 1900, when he moved near the village of Brooklyn, where he now resides surrounded by all the comforts of life, the center of a devoted family circle, and the oldest citizen of the town. His long career as an educator resulted in a wide circle of attached friends, many of whom hold him in grateful remembrance. Many of these Mr. Brown recalls with pleasure also, and he heartily enjoys showing a generous hospitality and recalling the people, places and events, which have made impressions upon his memory.

As an educated and intelligent man, Mr. Brown took always an ardent and enthusiastic interest in both national and civic affairs. One of the first votes he cast was for William Wirt, who was at that time the Anti-Masonic candidate for the Presidency of the United States. Later he became thoroughly aroused on the slavery question, was a pronounced Abolitionist, and voted the Anti-slavery ticket in State and national affairs. Later, in John C. Fremont, he thought he saw the deliverer of his party and after voting for him, he continued in the Republican ranks until he saw another great issue before the people, and since that time he has voted with the Prohibition party. Mr. Brown ably represented Brooklyn in the State Legislature, in 1849, on the fusion ticket of the Liberty or the Anti-slavery party, and the Democratic party. When the great issues seemed to change, Mr. Brown was elected by the Republican party to the Legislature in 1861, at all times working with all his strength of mind and gift of speech for those principles which he believed to be right. However, in all of his public duties Mr. Brown never lost sight of the wants and needs of his own community, and was ever ready to serve as selectman and on the school board when his influence and labor seemed likely to produce beneficial results.

During his residence in Providence, R. I., Mr. Brown became connected with the 2d Baptist Church, and when he returned to Brooklyn he brought with him his letter of membership. In May, 1858, he was judged suitable to be honored with the office of deacon in the Church, holding the same through all these years, and served that religious organization as clerk for a continuous term from 1842 to 1858. Mr. Brown has always had the power to gain the respect of those who often differed with him in political and social views, and has particularly won the esteem and affection of kindred and those who have been permitted to know him intimately.

The marriage of Deacon Benjamin Brown, Jr., took place Aug. 29, 1837, in Providence, R. I., to Emmeline Godfrey Mason, who was born Aug. 9, 1812, in Providence. She was a daughter of Joseph R. Mason, a shoemaker and dealer. Her lamented death occurred March 19, 1881. Their children were: George T., who was born Feb. 18, 1840, married Sept. 5, 1866, Wealthy M. Tarbox, and they reside in Providence; Ardelia M., who was born Dec. 21, 1841, and is the wife of T. D. Pond; Ann Catherine, who was born July 26, 1843, and was married Feb. 3, 1873, to J. H. Potter, and they are residents of Brooklyn; Benjamin F., who was born Nov. 24, 1845, and was married Oct. 14, 1875, to Emma Morse, who died Nov. 11, 1897, and he resides in Providence; Susan C., who was born June 20, 1848, married June 20 (her birthday), 1870, Theodore S. Snow, and died Feb. 12, 1881, in Chester county, Pa.; Charles J., who was born Aug. 2, 1850, unmarried; John E., who was born Aug. 18, 1852, married April 2, 1885, Harriet G. Utley, a farmer in Brooklyn, Conn.; James Albert, who was born Feb. 27, 1855, and married Oct. 27, 1887, Helen L. Wilcox, and is now a Baptist clergyman, at Ypsilanti, Mich.; and William Henry, who was born Dec. 3, 1857, and was married April 7, 1897, to Martha Nuttall, and they are farming people in the town of Brooklyn.

DONDERO. The Dondero Family is of Italian origin, and is of the very highest respectability, of broad intelligence, and the utmost refinement, which does credit to any community, and finds its place among the best elements of any town where it might be represented.

CHARLES DONDERO, who died in Willimantic Aug. 12, 1890, was a thrifty and enterprising fruit dealer, thoroughly American, and of a most liberal and progressive character. His death was practically at the beginning of his business career, yet he had made a substantial start towards the accumulation of a competence. He was born in the village of Cornia, in the province of Genoa, in December, 1855, of poor but respectable parents. When seventeen years old he came to the United States with but little more than his passage money, and for a time lived in Boston, where he was married to Miss Pascolina Bacigalupo, who was born near Genoa, and came to this country when a girl of seventeen. She landed in New York, but soon went to Boston, where she had friends. The young couple settled in Boston, and the husband with his modest savings was able soon to go into the fruit and ice cream business at Milford, Mass. In 1879 he located in Willimantic, at the southwest corner of Railway and Main Streets, where he began the fruit business which he followed until his death. This ended a career that was displaying much more than the usual business ability, and which had already resulted in the accumulation of a considerable competence. After his death the widow continued the business for nine years, when the oldest son took charge. Mrs. Dondero is a shrewd business woman, and the responsibilities she assumed upon the death of her husband, were ably met, her management of her business winning the commendation of all who were familiar with the facts in the case.

Mr. and Mrs. Dondero were the parents of the following children: (1) Rosina M., born in Boston, graduated from the Willimantic High School, and from the Boston Art Museum in 1898. She is now teaching drawing, painting and china decorating in Boston, and is a most accomplished young woman. (2) John Charles, born in Milford, Mass., was graduated, in 1895, from the Willimantic High School, and is now conducting the business which his father established. (3) Louis Nelson, born in Willimantic, was a member of the high school class of 1899 until within four weeks of its graduation, when he took a business course, and is now living at home. (4) Charles John, born in Willimantic, attended the high school three years, and then took a course in a business college. (5) Esther, born in Willimantic, died at the age of three years and seven months. (6) Esther Florine is at home. Mr. Dondero had purchased the southwest corner of North and Spring streets, and greatly improved the property and since his death Mrs. Dondero has bought other property and built three good houses on Valley Street opposite the Normal School.

Charles Dondero was a kind-hearted and liberal man, taking much interest in his family, and his desire that his children should have a good education has been fulfilled by the widow. In the community he had many friends, and was highly regarded by all who knew him. His name is remembered as that of an honorable, upright and intelligent gentleman, and as a business man of approved integrity and honor.

GEORGE SCHOFIELD is the present efficient superintendent of the American Woolen Mill at Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn. The ancestors of George Schofield belonged to the agricultural class of England, where George Schofield, the grandfather resided in Gomersal, Yorkshire, all his life, and where Thomas, the father, also lived and died. Thomas Schofield married Eliza Watson, her death occurring in 1900, at the age of seventy-two, the children of this union being: George; Frank, a farmer of Gomersal; Herbert, a joiner, living in the same place; and Thomas K., the manager of a store in his native town.

The birth of George Schofield was in Gomersal, Yorkshire, England, where he attended school until he was eleven years old, at this age entering a factory for work during the day, and taking advantages offered by the night schools. These schools were well conducted and are still so conducted, the pupils being almost entirely those who work in the mills. George Schofield's first work was that which a child could perform, doing odd jobs, such as must always be done in an institution of this kind, and in this way, Mr. Schofield has had experience from the very bottom. His wages were $1.50 per week, and he lived at home, but by the time he was nineteen he was in charge of a room in which the employees were much older than he.

Labor and wage conditions were such at that time in Mr. Schofield's country that many young men were leaving for America in the hope of bettering their condition, and with others he sailed from Liverpool, in an Inman Line steamer the "City of Paris," for New York. His destination was Philadelphia, where he hoped to join friends who had preceded him. Upon reaching his destination, Mr. Schofield found work in the large woolen cloth mill of John and James Dodson. After remaining with them for two months, he went to Norwich, Conn., where he obtained employment in the Falls Worsted Mill, which has since been burned. For nine months he continued there, at which time the concern failed and he went to Lawrence, Mass., entering the Prospect Worsted Mill, where he was placed in charge of a room and remained a year. Going from there to Holyoke, Mass., he accepted a position with the Farr Alpaca Co., which he held for nearly five years and resigned to accept an offer to learn the woolen business with his brother-in-law at the New England Mill, in Rockville. In accepting the latter position, Mr. Schofield took up the manufacture of woolen goods, his previous experience all having been in worsted goods, and he started to learn this new line under superintendent B. F. Mellor. He remained with this mill for the five succeeding years, during which time he had charge of the various departments. In 1887 he accepted a position in the American Mill as designer and superintendent and has held this important and responsible position ever since.

The marriage of Mr. Schofield, June 8, 1881, in Rockville, was to Etta M. Mellor, born Nov. 24, 1857, a native of Woonsocket, R. I., a daughter of Joseph and Nancy (Bentley) Mellor, and to this union have been born: Herbert M., Joseph K., Edgar A., Shirley, Percy, Lila, and Ernest.

Mr. Schofield has taken an active part in public affairs in Rockville, is a Republican and has faithfully served the third ward as alderman for one term, and is socially connected with Lodge No. 49, I. O. O. F. The religious connection of the family is with the Unitarian Church, of which Mr. Schofield is treasurer, and in which there is no more highly esteemed family.

DAVID NORTHAM JONES. This branch of the Jones family, well and worthily represented at Turnerville, Tolland Co., Conn., by the gentleman whose name introduces this article, descends from Thomas Jones.

Thomas Jones came from Surrey or Kent near London, one of twenty-five who landed at New Haven. He settled at Guilford, his name appearing as one of the original Church at Guilford in 1639. He was the sixth signer of the plantation covenant and the first marshal of the plantation. A part inventory of his estate is recorded on probate records of Guilford, 12, June 1656 Book A. His wife Mary, died in September, 1650. Their children were: Nathaniel, died single; Thomas, died in infancy; Sarah; Samuel.

Captain Samuel Jones, the youngest member of the above family, married Mary, a daughter of Deacon Francis and Mary (Chapman) Bushnell, by whom he had the following children: (1) Deborah, died at the age of four years; (2) a son, died the day of his birth; (3) Samuel; (4) Mary, married a Mr. Parker; (5) Martha, married a Mr. Whittlesey; (6) Thomas, married Priscilla Kirtland; (7) Caleb, married Rachel Clark, and was the first of the family to settle in Hebron; his two nephews, Daniel and Samuel, sons of Ensign Samuel Jones, of Saybrook, came to Hebron and settled later; (8) Sarah married John Clark.

Captain Samuel Jones, noted above, was a legatee of Joshua Uncas, Sachem, who willed away more land than he owned. To Capt. Jones he gave 4,000 acres. The land he gave away was divided into eighty-six shares according to quality, among the proprietors of Hebron. In 1702 this division was made. The land belonging to Capt. Jones was divided among his three sons, Samuel, Thomas and Caleb, and the agreement by which the parting of the land was made is an interesting document, and was dated April 15, 1709. It is found on page 212, Vol. II, of the Saybrook Records. Stephen Post and Samuel Curtice were appointed to bound and determine the several lots, according to the will and the agreement of the brothers and their report is entered on the first book of records of Hebron, folio 6, May 5, 1713.

Ensign Samuel Jones, of the three brothers mentioned above as the sons of Captain Samuel Jones was born in 1666 and died in 1746. All his life was spent in Saybrook. There he married Deborah Sanford, by whom he had the following children: Samuel; Daniel, married Hannah Stannard; Gideon; Cornelius, who lived in Springfield; Nathaniel, who married Sarah Whittlesey.

Ensign Samuel Jones, the oldest member of the above family, was born Nov. 29, 1694, in Saybrook, and came to Hebron, where he died Oct. 13, 1735. His home was made on lands belonging to his father, and he was married March 24, 1719, to Rachel Dibble, who was born Feb. 3, 1700, in Saybrook. They were the parents of the following children: (1) Rachel died in infancy; (2) Rachel (2), born in 1722, died in 1743; (3) Anna, born in 1724, died in early childhood; (4) Mary, born in 1726, died in 1741; (5) Samuel, born in 1728, died in 1733; (6) Ezekiel, born March 27, 1731, died Nov. 30, 1791; (7) Col. Joel, born April 5, 1733, died June 17, 1792, (he married Margaret Day, and became a wealthy and prominent man in the town, a large landowner, and a public-spirited citizen. The building now occupied as the post office in Hebron was erected by him); (8) Samuel, born Feb. 18, 1735, married Lydia Tarbox, and died in May, 1814.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Jones married, Aug. 8, 1738, Dr. Benjamin Kneeland, who died June 20, 1746; Dr. Mann was her third husband; and Deacon Samuel Emmons, of East Haddam, Conn., her fourth. She died Feb. 25, 1765.

Ezekiel Jones, the sixth child of Ensign Samuel Jones, was married Sept. 13, 1753, to Mindwell, a daughter of Azariah and Lydia (Burt) Beach, who was born Aug. 11, 1731, and died July 8, 1799. To them were born the following children: (1) Samuel, born Oct. 31, 1754; (2) Apollos, born May 24, 1756, died Feb. 9, 1761; (3) Eliphas, born May 24, 1758, married Lavinia Barker, and died Dec. 30, 1796; (4) Ezekiel, born March 14, 1760, died Nov. 20, 1776; (5) Mindwell, born Dec. 12, 1762, married John Waters, and died July 2, 1841; (6) Anna, born March 20, 1765, married Roger Phelps, Feb. 1, 1787, died Feb. 2, 1821; (7) Rachel, born May 11, 1767, died Jan. 4, 1795; (8) Catherine, born April 30, 1769, died Aug. 6, 1852; she was the wife of John Day; (9) Charity, born Jan. 1, 1772, married Abijah Root, and died Jan. 26, 1847; (10) Mary, born Dec. 19, 1774, died July 6, 1832; she was the wife of Solomon Jones, the son of Gideon Jones.

Samuel Jones, the first born of the above family, was born in Hebron, Conn., and had his home on Jones street until about 1782, when he moved to a location near Grayville in Hebron, where he died Aug. 18, 1813. He was a man of good information, owned considerable property, and was married Feb. 13, 1777, to Huldah Pepoon, who was born in Hebron in March, 1758, and died Dec. 7, 1819. To this union were born: (1) Timothy, the grandfather of David N. Jones, born Feb. 13, 1778, died March 6, 1863; (2) Huldah, born Jan. 26, 1780, died June 10, 1847. Her husband was Russell Ford, and both lived and died in Old Saybrook; (3) Henry, born May 4, 1782, died April 11, 1787; (4) Dan, born Aug. 14, 1784, married Cornelia Manley, was a farmer, and died Feb. 28, 1878; (5) Henry, born March 6, 1788, died Jan. 26, 1843. His business was that of a mason and contractor; he married Mary A. Jones, and died Jan. 26, 1843; (6) Polly, born Jan. 8, 1792, died June 9, 1823, unmarried; (7) Mindwell, born June 12, 1795, married Russell Ford, a carpenter, and died April 10, 1870; (8) Samuel, born Jan. 5, 1799, married Mary Ann Dean, was a farmer and mason, and died in Hebron, Jan. 11, 1873.

Timothy Jones, the grandfather of David N. Jones, was born in Hebron, where his entire life was spent in the mason trade, a business he also taught his son. The latter years of his peaceful and useful life were spent in the home of his daughter, Lydia, where his death occurred. Mr. Jones was married Jan. 25, 1806, to Nancy Taylor, who was born in Colchester, March 12, 1781, a daughter of John and Nancy (Fitch) Taylor. John Taylor was a veteran of the Revolution, drawing a pension for his services in that war, and had two sons, Benjamin and Nathan, who served in the war of 1812.

To the marriage of Timothy and Nancy (Taylor)

Jones came the following children: (1) William Taylor, the father of David N. Jones, was born Sept. 17, 1806; (2) Lydia P., born March 16, 1809, married Nathan Bolton, a mason in Hebron, where she died April 16, 1869; (3) Timothy F., born Jan. 9, 1812, died May 13, 1863; he married Mariette Strong; they lived in Hebron, where he followed the mason trade and farming; (4) Samuel F., born Oct. 25, 1815, married Hannah Tefft, followed the mason trade, and is now residing in Westbrook, Conn.; (5) Salmon A., born April 12, 1819, married Sarah Moss, was a mason, and died in Middletown, Feb. 27, 1900; (6) John M., born Jan. 21, 1822, married Mrs. Anna A. Jones, the widow of Dr. Henry D. Jones, and a daughter of Pardon and Mary Almy, of Little Compton, R. I. Mr. Jones went to Minnesota in 1858, and secured a farm. While there he enlisted in Company G, 3rd M. V. I., and died in the hospital at Pine Bluff, Ark., Oct. 7, 1864. After his death his widow moved to Redwood Falls and has become a large land owner.

William Taylor Jones was born in what is known as Jones street, in Hebron, and had a common school education. Though reared to farm work he learned the trade of mason, and soon after his marriage he took an extensive contract in company with his uncle on the factory buildings in South Glastonbury. His trade carried him into various parts of the State, and he had charge of the building of the light house at the mouth of the Mystic river, and the Locks between New Haven and Northampton, Mass. The brick house now owned by Edward Bill was erected by him for a home, and in it he lived many years. Later in life he moved to the site of the present home of David N. Jones, and erected most of the building now occupied by him. William T. Jones died Sept. 7, 1888, as the result of exposure which produced a chill fatal at his advanced age.

Mr. Jones was also interested in a small way in a paper factory and in cotton manufacturing in Hebron. A staunch Democrat, he represented Hebron one term in the General Assembly. In his religion he was a member of the Hebron Episcopal Church.

Mary Elizabeth Northam, wife of William Taylor Jones, was born in Hebron, Feb. 13, 1815, a daughter of David and Mary (Kellogg) Northam. A sketch of the Northams appears on another page. She died April 18, 1900, in the home of her son, David N. To this union were born: David N., born July 16, 1838. Emily, born March 20, 1842, died July 19, 1844. William W., born June 2, 1845, had a district school education, and attended the Bacon Academy at Colchester.

WILLIAM W. JONES, at the age of nineteen, engaged in a store in New York in company with his brother, David N. After retiring from the store he purchased a farm in Westchester, Conn. This land was in timber, and much of it was sold to the Colchester Rubber Company and the Bissell Tannery. After carrying through this enterprise very successfully he sold the farm, and learned the mason trade with his father, which he followed a number of years. After his marriage William W. Jones moved to Willimantic where he was agent of the Howe Sewing Machine Company, as well as being engaged in various other employments. Returning to Hebron he purchased a farm of his father, on which he resided for about three years, working at his trade in Colchester and elsewhere. The Joseph White farm on "Barrows Hill" was bought by him, which he made his home for a time, when he sold it and bought his present place of John S. Wells. In 1885 he purchased a stock of goods of Andrew J. Hanks, and carried on a store in Hebron Green until 1898, when he disposed of it and is now engaged in real estate and farming. Mr. Jones was married June 3, 1871, in Salem, Conn., to Esther J. Blish, who was born May 15, 1852, in Marlborough, Conn., a daughter of Chauncey and Esther (Slate) Blish. To this union have come the following children: (1) Carlton B., born Oct. 17, 1872, was for many years a clerk in his father's store, and also served as assistant postmaster, is now a blacksmith in Hebron. He was married March 23, 1893, to Ellen Maria Hills, of Gilead, by whom he has had children: Claude Wallace, born June 17, 1894; George Merle, born Sept. 20, 1896; Elsie Myrtis, born Nov. 8, 1899; (2) William Clinton, born Jan. 21, 1879, was married April 23, 1898, to Ellen Porter, by whom he has one child, Mildred Elizabeth, born Nov. 17, 1899. (3) Fitch N., born May 1, 1882.

Mr. Jones is a Democrat, and was postmaster under the first administration of Grover Cleveland. For eight years he was on the Central Democratic committee of the 23d district. For six years he has served on the board of selectmen, and for a number of years has been justice of the peace, and registrar of voters.

David Northam Jones was born in the brick house now owned by Edward Bill. Until he was sixteen years of age he attended the district school, and then entered the employ of Lucius J. Hendee, a store keeper at Hebron, Conn., where he became very skilled at bookkeeping. Mr. Hendee being an expert in that work, his instruction in bookkeeping was considered compensation for his clerking. After two years with Mr. Hendee Mr. Jones went to Colchester to enter the employ of A. B. Isham, the proprietor of a general store, which Mr. Jones managed for some two years. At the end of that time he returned to Hebron and in company with E. B. Page bought the store of Mr. Hendee, and the two continued in business for a short time under the name of Page & Jones. When Mr. Page retired Mr. Edward Rockwell purchased his interest, and Jones & Rockwell kept in business until shortly after the breaking out of the Civil war, when they divided the goods, Mr. Jones taking the dry goods and Mr. Rockwell the groceries. Mr. Jones presently found his stock greatly advanced, and was able to dispose of it at fancy prices. For some time he was engaged in the grocery trade in New York City in company with his brother William Wallace, who personally looked after the business at the corner of 62d street and Third avenue. On the day of President Lincoln's assassination, April 19, 1865, they sold out. Mr. Jones was also engaged during the war in the manufacture of twine, wicking and cotton bats in company with George Jones, they having bought out the Hebron Manufacturing Company. Fire destroyed their factory which was located at Grayville, in 1866, and it was rebuilt at Hope Valley, where they continued for a year and then sold out.

Since that time Mr. Jones has been engaged in farming and in real estate in which he has become prominent and successful. For about twenty-five years he was traveling salesman for hardware and other goods, covering New England, New York, Pennsylvania and Canada. In July, 1902, he sold his property in Hebron and purchased a house in West Haven, Conn., where he now resides, and is engaged in the real estate business.

Mr. Jones was married April 30, 1872, to Caroline M. Lathrop, who was born in Salem, July 30, 1846, a daughter of Seth E. and Caroline (Worthington) Lathrop, farming people. To this union were born: (1) Mabel Caroline, March 3, 1876, attended district school and the Bacon Academy, Colchester, taught school two years in her native district, and was married Jan. 11, 1897, to Fred G. Button, a merchant and lumber dealer of Turnerville, now at Merrick, Mass. (2) Myron William, born July 16, 1879, attended Bacon Academy, taught school one year in his native town and is now engaged in the printing business at New Haven formerly at Turnerville; (3) Herman David, born March 4, 1883, attended Bacon Academy, and is clerk in general store at Middlefield, Connecticut.

Mr. Jones is a Democrat, has held a few town offices, and with his family formerly attended St. Peter's Episcopal Church, at Hebron, of which Mr. Jones was organist for many years. All the family evince great musical talent.

GEORGE HENRY JACOBS, one of Thompson's well known citizens, and a soldier of the Civil war, was born at Dudley, Mass., June 27, 1844, and is a member of an old English family of prominence.

The Jacobs family of Thompson, Windham county, is one of the oldest in Connecticut. Nicholas Jacobs, the first of that name in America, was born in Hanover, County of Suffolk, England, and was son of John Jacobs of the same county. Nicholas came to America accompanied by his son John and his daughter Elizabeth, and also by Thomas Lincoln, a brother of Samuel Lincoln, and nephew of Nicholas Jacobs. One Samuel Lincoln located in the Wyoming Valley of Pennsylvania, but after the noted Indian massacre removed to Kentucky, and from this branch of the Lincoln family came Abraham Lincoln.

(I) With his wife and family, Nicholas Jacobs settled at Hanover, Mass., where he died June 5, 1657. His children were: Elizabeth; John; Sarah, who married John Cushing; Hannah, who married Lieut. Matthew Cushing; Deborah, who married Capt. Matthew Thomas; and Joseph.

(II) Joseph Jacobs, son of Nicholas, born in 1646, in Hanover, Plymouth Co., Mass., married Hannah Whitman, born in Hull, Plymouth county, April 30, 1650. They became the parents of five children: Joseph, born Feb. 20, 1672; Joseph (2), born April 20, 1676; Dr. Joseph Jacobs, son of Joseph, married Mary, daughter of Samuel Storrs, of Mansfield, Conn. Their daughter Sarah married Elias Birchard in 1758. Their son Roger married a Perkins and moved to Vermont in 1780. Their daughter Sophia married Rutherford, father of Ex-President Hayes; Benjamin, born April 10, 1680; Nathaniel, born June 29, 1683; and Mary, born in 1696, died in March, 1698. The parents of these children removed to Rhode Island, locating first at Pawtucket, and later at Bristol, where Joseph Jacobs, the father, died Feb. 9, 1708.

(III) Nathaniel Jacobs, the youngest son in the family of Joseph (1), was born in Hingham, Mass., June 29, 1683, and removed with his parents to Rhode Island, locating at Bristol, where he made his home for many years. Later he removed to Woonsocket, R. I., where he spent one year, and thence came to Connecticut, locating in Thompson parish, then a part of Killingly, where he bought a tract of land on which he spent the remainder of his life. He died there Feb. 22, 1772, and is buried in the East Thompson cemetery. On Oct. 22, 1713, Mr. Jacobs married, in Bristol, R. I., Mercy Whitman, born in 1689, a daughter of Rev. Zachariah Whitman, of Hingham, Mass. She died in Thompson, Feb. 21, 1774, aged eighty-five years, and was buried in East Thompson cemetery. This couple had children as follows: Joseph, born July 12, 1717, died Oct. 10, 1739; Benjamin, born April 26, 1719. He married (first) Hulda Bisworth, who died Oct. 9, 1749, leaving one son, born Sept. 11, 1749. On Dec. 27, 1750, Benjamin Jacobs married (second) Dorothy Arnold, and they had one son, Peter, born May 7, 1758. Nathaniel Jacobs, the third son of Nathaniel, was born April 26, 1721, and lived at Royalston, Mass.: Hannah, born in 1723; John, born May 25 (or 29), 1725; Whitman, born May 3, 1727, was the first Baptist minister in Connecticut, the organizer of the Brandy Hill Church; Mercy, born April 20, 1729, married Dec. 12, 1751, Joseph Dresser, and died May 29, 1810. Mr. Dresser died in 1769; and Elnathan, born Jan. 5, 1731, died Aug. 31, 1745.

(IV) John Jacobs, born in Thompson, May 25 (or 29), 1725, was a landowner and farmer there. In 1751 he married Sarah Plank, and they had these children: John, born in 1751; Jesse, born Nov. 30, 1752, died in March, 1842, a survivor of the Revolutionary war, who married Louise Martin; Asa, born April 18, 176-, married Sarah Emmerson, born Aug. 7, 1767, who died Jan. 4, 1835, and married (second) Phebe Greenwood, and died Nov. 27, 1847, a survivor of the Revolutionary war; Amasa, born in 1766, died June 12, 1837, married Emma Joslin, who was born April 24, 1766; Mercy, born April 26, 1760, married Israel Tourtellotte; Jerusha, died unmarried; and Sally, married Hale Mason, who was lost at sea, their one child dying in infancy. For her second husband Sally married Joseph Chapin, of Oxford, Mass., who was a landowner, hotel-keeper and farmer in Thompson.

(V) John Jacobs, son of John, born Sept. 12, 1751, was a farmer and landowner and quite a prominent citizen in his locality. In addition to conducting his own affairs, he settled up estates, etc., and was known as 'Squire Jacobs. He was a representative in the Legislature, and held other offices, serving also as a soldier during the Revolutionary war. His death took place in Thompson, June 8, 1837, and he was buried in East Thompson cemetery. John Jacobs (2) married Dinah Tourtellotte, of Thompson, a daughter of Isaac and a sister of Israel Tourtellotte, and they became the parents of these children: (1) Ezra, born in September, 1778, died Aug. 17, 1855, married (first) Dinah Joslin, April 2, 1804, (second) June 20, 1807, Hannah Whitmore, and (third) Nov. 27, 1845, Charlotte Vina; (2) Ira, born in 1779, died Sept. 16, 1819, married Azubath Joslin, who died in 1864, and they had these children: Betsey, who married Daniel Spaulding of Southbridge, Mass., Lucia, born Dec. 27, 1804, married Nelson Bates, Esther married Jesse Alton; Cyrille married Betsey Towne; and Sophia married Parson Tourtellotte, of Thompson. (3) John, born in 1787, married Polly Prince, and died May 29, 1866; (4) Lydia, who died in 1843, married (first) Silas Joslin and (second) Calvin Vinton, of Dudley; (5) Hale, born June 26, 1792; (6) Mercy, born in 1796, married David Plummer, and died Feb. 27, 1877; (7) Lucy, married Rufus Brown, of Oneida, N. Y.; (8) Sally, married John Towne; (9) John, born in 1803, died March 22, 1824. The second marriage of John Jacobs (2) was to Alice Dike, and they had one child, Elmira, who died May 31, 1857, aged thirty six years, the wife of Jeremiah Olney, of Thompson.

(VI) Hale Jacobs, the grandfather of George Henry Jacobs, was born June 26, 1792, and Jan. 18, 1815, married Betsey Joslin, who was born Oct. 21, 1794, and died Sept. 21, 1873, a daughter of Edward Joslin and a granddaughter of Israel Joslin. Their children were the following: (1) David Nelson, born April 16, 1816, died July 27, 1886; (2) Ira Franklin, born April 8, 1819, died Feb. 3, 1901, at Southbridge, and married Samantha

M. Morse; (3) Salem, born June 23, 1822, died June 4, 1876, married June 4, 1861, Mary Jane Wright, a widow; (4) Hale, born Jan. 7, 1825, died 1887, at Malden, Mass., on Sept. 29, 1853, married Fanny M. Edmonds, a distinguished musician; (5) George A., born Aug. 19, 1827, died Aug. 28, 1870, married (first) Elizabeth Robinson, had one child, Elmer S., of Providence, and (second) Emily Bixby and has one child; (6) Elizabeth, born April 5, 1830, died April 27, 1830; (7) Julia A., born July 22, 1832, died March 20, 1856, married Jan. 18, 1853, Corbin Mills, of Thompson, who died Sept. 13, 1873; (8) James Monroe, born March 27, 1833, married Sarah M. Lane in 1851 and their children were: Clarence, born March 28, 1858; Lillian, born Oct. 5, 1861, died Jan. 19, 1862; James M., born Feb. 27, 1864, died Sept. 27, 1868; Julia A., born Nov. 29, 1866; William F., born Jan. 31, 1869; Millie, born Sept. 19, 1871, married John W. Dunlapp, Feb. 4, 1892 (with their one child, Robert Ray, they reside in Missouri); Frederick, born Sept. 3, 1877.

(VII) David Nelson Jacobs, the father of George Henry Jacobs, was born in the town of Thompson, April 16, 1816, was a farmer and land-owner and was also for many years agent for the New York and New England Railroad, now the New York, New Haven and Hartford, at Thompson, where he died July 27, 1886, and was laid to rest in the Thompson cemetery. Mr. Jacobs was an attendant of the Baptist Church, and fulfilled to the utmost every duty of a good citizen.

On March 30, 1840, Mr. Jacobs was married to Mary Ann Morris, born in Dudley, May 15, 1820, and died in Thompson April 11, 1899; she, too, rests in the Thompson cemetery. For years her place was seldom vacant in the Baptist Church. The children born to David Nelson Jacobs and wife, were these: George Henry, born June 27, 1843; Emily Frances, born in Dudley, Jan. 18, 1847, was a school teacher much esteemed in Thompson, where she died Aug. 1, 1872.

(VIII) George Henry Jacobs was given excellent educational opportunities, and passed with credit through the district schools of Thompson and Nichols Academy, at Dudley. For one term he taught school, but this was about the time when the loyal youths of the country were hastening to answer the call to come to her assistance, and with others no older Mr. Jacobs testified to his patriotism by enlisting in August, 1862, in Co. D, 18th C. V. I., under those excellent officers, Col. W. G. Ely, and Capt. Joseph Matthewson, of Pomfret. It proved no holiday time for the young soldier, but he safely passed through all dangers and participated with valor in every engagement in which his company took part. Upon his return he entered the employ of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, at Boston, where he spent fifteen busy years. Since that time, Mr. Jacobs has been employed as a traveling salesman for a business firm in Cincinnati, but he makes his home on the farm in Thompson.

Mr. Jacobs has been a member of Webster Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and the Chapter at Southbridge for a long period. He is no politician, leaning in the direction of the Republican party, but voting independently in many cases. While he does not subscribe to any particular religious doctrine, few men in the busy walks of life do more acts of kindness or show more truly the practical way to understand and follow the great "Golden Rule."

On Dec. 25, 1865, in Thompson, Mr. Jacobs was married to Emily C. Joslin, who was born in Thompson, a daughter of Welcome B. and Ann G. (Jacobs) Joslin, extended mention of this family being found in another part of this work. The children of this marriage were: Adfur, born Sept. 14, 1866, died Sept. 28, 1866; Florence, born Aug. 26, 1867, died July 4, 1868; Harry M., born Dec. 25, 1870, is in business as a bookkeeper, at Woonsocket, R. I., and married to Ellen Tuaro, of Portland, Me.; and Lucy C., born June 12, 1876, died Dec. 7, 1876.

(VII) Ira Franklin Jacobs, son of Hale and father of Franklin Jacobs, deputy-sheriff of Worcester county, Mass., was born in Thompson, Conn., April 8, 1819, where he was educated and prepared for his life work, which by his own selection was farming. In Dudley, Mass., he carried on agricultural operations until advanced in life, when he removed to Southbridge, and spent his last days with his son Franklin, who gave him filial care in his old age, and with whom he died, Feb. 3, 1901, at the age of eighty-two years. His burial took place in the Southbridge cemetery. His life had been irreproachable, he had long been a member of the Methodist Church, and was esteemed and respected wherever known. His political belief was with the Republican party. Ira Franklin Jacobs married Samantha M. Morse, daughter of Alpha Morse, of Southbridge, where she died in 1882 and was buried in the cemetery in that place. Her record is that of a most excellent Christian woman, a member of the Methodist Church, and one who was particularly devoted to her husband and only son, Franklin.

(VIII) Franklin Jacobs was born at Dudley Feb. 7, 1842, and acquired his education in the district schools and at Nichols Academy. In 1860 he offered his services in the Civil war, enlisting a Dudley in Co. H, 51st M. V. I., under Col. A. B. R. Spegree and Capt. H. Hobbs, was a non-commissioned officer, and served for about eleven months. Upon his return Mr. Jacobs remained with his parents on the farm until 1872, when he came to Southbridge, where he was appointed to the position of superintendent of the Southbridge Optical Works, in which he served until 1885, when he was called to accept the position of deputy-sheriff of Worcester county. His office remains at Southbridge, and in his official capacity as well as in the

of a private citizen, he has won the esteem of the community. For the past seventeen years Mr. Jacobs has retained this office, his peculiar fitness for it making him acceptable to all but evil-doers.

Although Mr. Jacobs is not a native of Connecticut he is bound to the State by ties of kindred and interest, and is well known in the vicinity of Thompson. Mr. Jacobs is well known also in Masonic circles, and belongs to many of the more advanced branches, belonging to Chapter and Council, is a Knight Templar, and belongs to Massachusetts Consistory of Boston; he is also a member of the Royal Arcanum and has been adjutant of the G. A. R. Post at Southbridge.

Mr. Jacobs was married in Dudley, to Martha Dwight, daughter of Ralph Dwight, a lady of much culture and refinement, who, with her husband, belongs to the Methodist Church, in which he is a steward.

FRANK L. LOOMIS is a prominent farmer in the town of Bolton, Tolland Co., Conn., where his high character and business ability have been recognized by his election to the position of selectman.

Jerijah Loomis, the grandfather of Frank L., was born in Bolton, where he married Susanna Risle. He engaged in farming, having in his possession the old homestead, on which he died at the age of seventy-seven years. With his wife he joined the Congregational Church in 1816. All their children are dead: Electa, was married; Hannah, married Ira Lyman, and moved to Stockbridge, N. Y.; Terza, married Jacob Sanders, and lived in Homer, N. Y.; Sarah, married Judah Strong, and lived in Bolton; Sophronia, married Judah Strong, and was his second wife; Fidelia, married Lysander Chapman, and lived in Stockbridge, N. Y.; Mercy, married Charles Lyman, of Stockbridge, N. Y.; Jerijah, the father of Frank L. Loomis.

Jerijah Loomis, the father of Frank L., was born on the old homestead, where he attended the local school, and was reared to manhood. He married Mary Ann Rice, a native of Belchertown, Mass., and a daughter of Christian Rice. Mrs. Loomis died Jan. 17, 1898, at the age of eighty-nine years; her husband died Feb. 8, 1895, at the age of eighty-six years. The other heirs to the homestead were bought out by Mr. Loomis, and he made the place, a fine Connecticut property of 100 acres, his home until his death. Mr. Loomis was very successful in his farming operations, and became quite well-to-do. In politics he was a staunch Republican, and was a life-long subscriber to the Hartford Courant. In 1881 he was a member of the General Assembly.

To Mr. and Mrs. Loomis were born: (1) Louisa, born Oct. 8, 1835, now the widow of De-loss Sanders, is living in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where her daughter, Maude Louise, who married Dr. F. A. Faust, is living. (2) Ellsworth J., born April 10, 1837, married Mary Rose, of Waterford, Conn., and is the father of two daughters. (3)

Mary, born July 25, 1840, married Dwight Warner, of Bolton, Jan. 3, 1866, and is the mother of the following children: (a) Robert Loomis, born Aug. 1, 1870, married Hattie Howard, and has the following children: Ruth, Mary Elizabeth and Hattie; (b) Charles Royal was born June 15, 1876. (4) Nathaniel, born Nov. 11, 1838, at Bolton, married Electa Thompson, and is the father of a daughter, Alta M. (5) Frank L. (6) Josephine, born Jan. 31, 1845, married Orville D. Burr, of Chester, and is the mother of Harry H. and Frank; (7) Watie Adelaide, born Feb. 20, 1848, married Ferdinand Williams, of Bolton, Conn. (8) John A., born July 2, 1850, now of Windsor, Conn., married Ella Alvord, who died in 1898.

Frank L. Loomis was born on the old homestead June 20, 1842, and there his boyhood and youth were passed, though from the time he was ten until he was fifteen years old he lived much out of town, having his schooling both in Bolton and in Manchester. At the age of eighteen he began working on the farm for himself. In Bolton he was married to Julia S. Martin, a daughter of Arnold and Julia Ann (Strickland) Martin.

The Martins and Stricklands are both old and honored families in this part of the State. Charles Martin, the grandfather of Mrs. Loomis, married Sarah Armour, a relative of the noted Phil. Armour. Mrs. Julia Ann (Strickland) Martin makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Loomis, and though advanced in years, retains the control of her faculties to a remarkable degree. She is a daughter of Chester and Sophronia (White) Strickland, and a granddaughter of Jonah and Annie (Cone) Strickland. Annie Cone was a descendant of David Cone, of Haddam, in 1662, being one of its twenty-eight original proprietors. Chester Strickland, who was born in 1797, was a grandson of Jonah Strickland; Sophronia (White) Strickland was born in 1794; their only child, Julia Ann, became Mrs. Martin, as noted above. Arnold Martin and his wife had two children: J. W., born Nov. 7, 1842, is a commercial man, of East Hartford, and married Josephine E. Loomis; their daughter, Elulia Josephine, born Sept. 15, 1866, married William E. Alvord, of Bolton, and has a son, Martin Earl, born Nov. 9, 1901. Julia S., who is Mrs. Loomis, was born March 18, 1851.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Loomis have had the following family: (1) Clinton F., born Dec. 15, 1872, married Josephine M. Clark, of Durham, Conn., and their daughter, Madeleine Louise, born Feb. 8, 1889, is the fifth generation to live in the old Strickland homestead in Bolton, which was built by Jonah Strickland; (2) Freddie M., born April 29, 1875, died June 3, 1883; (3) Bertha J., born April 11, 1880, married George B. Tryon, of Manchester, Conn., in December, 1899.

After his marriage Mr. Loomis was in North Coventry for four years, where he was engaged in operating a grist and shoddy mill and a saw mill.

which he owned. Then he bought a farm and spent four years in its cultivation. In 1881 he removed to Bolton and settled on the place where his wife was born and reared. There he has been engaged to the present time in farming. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and has filled various local positions, such as selectman and member of the board of relief. Mr. Loomis attends the Congregational Church, of which his wife is a member. The family are all members of the Grange.

SIMON FARLEY. In a publication which purports to touch upon the history of the men and forces whose contribution to the development and material prosperity of Windham county has been of distinctive scope and importance, it is but consistent that more than passing attention be accorded to Messrs. Simon and George Farley, who have been of marked service to their city, county and State, through various avenues of usefulness, being identified with enterprises which can not be considered as other than potent factors in connection with the industrial activities of this favored section of the State of Connecticut. We are thus gratified in being here able to enter individual sketches of the careers of these honored citizens and representative business men of the city of Putnam, offering in the sketch of the elder brother such genealogical data as is available. Success does not depend so much upon the possession of talents or powers, unusual to the majority of mankind as upon the exercise of those qualities which are common to all. Hope is of the valley, while effort is climbing the mountain side, so that personal advancement comes not to the one who hopes alone, but to the one whose hope and faith are those of definite action. We may thus hold in high esteem the result of individual accomplishment, and accord due credit and honor to those who have achieved success through worthy means, as have Simon and George Farley.

Simon Farley is a native of the Dominion of Canada, having been born in the town of St. Norbert, County of Berthier, June 5, 1846, his ancestry in the agnatic line being of Scotch-Irish extraction, and in the maternal line of pure French strain.

Hypolyte Farley, his father, was born on the Isle of Du Pas, Province of Quebec, Canada, June 20, 1810, and his death occurred Feb. 17, 1893, at Berthierville, Canada, where he had long maintained his home, and where he commanded unqualified confidence and esteem by reason of his sterling integrity and honor in all the relations of life. He was a blacksmith by trade, and to the same he devoted more or less attention during the major portion of his long and active life, while he also attained success in connection with the great basic industry of agriculture, with which he was long identified, being a man of unflagging industry and excellent business ability. He was a man of influence in his community, and was naturally called upon to serve in various positions of public trust and responsibility, in which connection it should be noted that for three years he was identified with the commission which had in charge the determining of the dividing line between Canada and the United States. He was a man of marked mental and physical vigor, having escaped the many neutral ills to which human flesh is heir, and having retained exceptional health until the closing years of his life, while his genial and kindly nature won to him warm and lasting friendships. In the year 1839 was solemnized the marriage of Hypolyte Farley to Domithilde Durand, who was born in Berthier, Canada, daughter of Paul Durand, who was of staunch French lineage. She is still living, maintaining her home in Berthierville, Canada, and being seventy-nine years of age at the time of this writing (September, 1902). Concerning the children of Hypolyte and Domithilde Farley we enter the following brief record: Adolph, who is now living retired in St. Gabriel, Canada, was for many years successfully engaged in farming in that locality, where he has reared his four sons and two daughters. Exilda died the age of sixteen years. David is a retired farmer, residing in St. Gabriel, Canada, and he has five daughters. Simon is the next in order of birth. Louis, who was for fifteen years engaged in the bakery business in Berthierville, Canada, is now living retired, in that place, and has one son and one daughter. George, who is one of the prominent business men of Putnam, Connecticut, is the subject of the sketch which immediately follows this. Paul, who is engaged in the harness business at St. Gabriel, Canada, has five sons and two daughters. Edward, who is a prominent shoe merchant of Woonsocket, Rhode Island, has six daughters and two sons. Henry was the manager of an extensive clothing establishment in Fall River, Mass., but now resides in Pawtucket, R. I.; he has one daughter. Eloize is the wife of Gardien Coutu, who was formerly a sea captain, was twenty years alderman and is now superintendent of the waterworks at Berthierville, Canada. Marie Louise became the wife of Jerimie Lefebvre, a farmer of Berthierville, Canada, where her death occurred in 1900; she left three sons and four daughters.

Francois Xavier Farley, the grandfather of our subject, was born in the Isle of Du Pas, Canada, and passed his entire life in the dominion, having been a successful farmer and having acquired a valuable estate, which is still in the possession of his descendants. He lived to attain the patriarchal age of ninety-three years, and was endowed with that fine physical vigor which has been characteristic of the family, and which ever stands typical of right living. Francois X. Farley married Elizabeth de Sicard, likewise of French descent, and she died at the age of eighty-seven years. They became the parents of eight children, whose names, in the order of birth, were as follows: Antoine, Hypolyte, Louis, Amable, David, Clement, Auralie and Delphine. Of these it may be stated that Amable Farley was a valiant soldier in the army of the United States during the Civil war, in which he held the office of captain, and in which he attained a high reputation for bravery and gallantry. He was named for an uncle, who was a captain in the King's service during the war of 1812. On one occasion his men were suffering for want of food and other provision, and the intrepid captain met the exigency by breaking into one of the king's provision houses and securing rations for his command, regardless of what the consequences might be, his men fearing to follow his leadership in this bold effort.

The great-grandfather of our subject in the agnatic line was James Antoine Phillips Farley, who was born in the north of Ireland, whence he came to Canada when a lad of twelve years, in 1707, becoming an extensive and influential farmer in the county of Berthier, and owning the farm which is still held in the possession of his descendants. He was one of the first settlers in that section of the Dominion, and was one of the honored and influential citizens of the locality. The church and parsonage are located on land which was donated by him for the purpose, and he was ever foremost in the promotion of all worthy enterprises for the advancement of the civic and material prosperity of the community in which he lived to venerable age, and in which he held the respect and high esteem of all who knew him. He married Elizabeth Lemarise, daughter of Lord Lemarise, of Montreal, and they reared a family of several children.

Simon Farley, whose name initiates this review, was reared in his native county, receiving his preliminary educational discipline in the parochial schools, after which he entered Berthier Academie, where he completed a five years' course of study, being graduated as a member of the class of 1863. After leaving school Mr. Farley gave inception to his practical business career by securing a clerkship in the general merchandise establishment of Francois Gervais, in Sorel, Canada, retaining this incumbency for four and one-half years, at the expiration of which time, in 1867, he came to the United States, visiting divers sections of the Union for the purpose of gaining a knowledge of the country and business methods. In this connection he tarried for an interval in a number of the leading cities, including St. Paul, St. Louis, Memphis, New Orleans and New York, and gaining much practical information which proved of great value to him in his future business career. On July 15, 1868, Mr. Farley arrived in Putnam, Conn., where he was employed for several months in the Morse cotton mills, and then he secured a position in the store of Ely & Co., in Danielson, continuing in the employ of that firm until the death of Mr. Ely representing a period of nearly fifteen years, within which he had advanced to a position of responsibility through his able and faithful service, while he became familiar with all details of the dry-goods business, so that he was well equipped for conducting an enterprise on his own responsibility at the time when he withdrew from the service of the firm mentioned. He opened a dry-goods and clothing store in Danielson, while later he opened branch establishments in Putnam and Grosvenor Dale. In Danielson he originally occupied quarters in the Evans block, but his business so rapidly increased in scope that he was obliged to erect a new building in order to secure the requisite accommodations, and after conducting a profitable enterprise for a period of four years he disposed of his realty in Danielson, and removed his stock of goods to Putnam, continuing the business at Grosvenor Dale for a period of eight years, and then adding the stock from his store there to the one in his main establishment in Putnam, a fire in the former store having entailed to him a considerable loss just prior to the consolidation. Mr. Farley opened business in Putnam under favorable auspices, being first located in the Bailey block, whence he later removed to the old Mansfield building, where he continued business some time. Recognizing that larger and more eligible quarters were demanded for the proper display of his goods, and the accommodation of the increasing trade, he contracted for one of the stores in the new Court House building, which was in process of erection at the time, and there he continued his dry-goods and clothing business until June 15, 1900, having built up a large and prosperous business during the thirteen years of his identification with the industrial activities of Putnam, and having gained prestige as one of the town's most able, conservative and successful business men, his course having been such as to gain to him unequivocal confidence and esteem, and a resulting support of the most representative order. On the date mentioned Mr. Farley disposed of his stock and business to N. H. Hurlburt, who still conducts the enterprise. Since his retirement from the business noted he has given his attention to the handling of real estate, and to the conducting of a rapidly increasing insurance business, while in addition to this important enterprise he purchased, in September, 1901, the drug store of J. F. Donahue, so that he is still identified with the mercantile activities of Putnam, while his personal popularity insures to the latter enterprise a continual growth in patronage.

In politics Mr. Farley gives an uncompromising allegiance to the Republican party, of whose principles and policies he is a staunch advocate, and though he has had no personal ambition in a political way he has rendered effective service to his party, and is at the present time a member of the city Republican committee of Putnam, while he has been incumbent consecutively of the office of tax collector from the time of the incorporation of Putnam as a city, in 1896. He and his wife are zealous and valued members of the Baptist church, in which they have held membership since 1888, and fraternally Mr. Farley is identified with the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Foresters of America. It may be noted in the connection that he was the first person of French descent to become a naturalized American citizen in Danielson.

On June 20, 1869, in Moosup, Conn., was solemnized the marriage of Simon Farley to Miss Mathilde Reeves, daughter of Eugene and Zoe (Senecal) Reeves, of Canada. Of the children of this union we incorporate the following record: Eugenia, born in Danielson, March 31, 1870, is the wife of Dr. Oswald Gregoire, a prominent dentist of Southbridge, Massachusetts. George W. H., born in Danielson, Sept. 6, 1873, is engaged in the bakery business and in the manufacturing of a patent clasp for ladies' skirts, in Chicago; he married Miss Lillian M. Blair, of Chicago. Arthur Paul, born in Danielson, Dec. 30, 1874, is engaged in the practice of dentistry in the city of Providence, R. I.; he married Ada Bampton, of Providence. Albina, born in Danielson, June 8, 1877, is the wife of Dr. Andrew J. Fortier, who is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Pawtucket, R. I. Louise Delvina, born in Danielson, April 9, 1880, was graduated in the convent at Fall River, Mass., as a member of the class of 1899, having exceptional musical talent and now devoting her attention to the study of vocal music, in which line her interpretations have met with most favorable criticisms.

GEORGE FARLEY. From the study of the life history of the honored subject of this review one may learn many valuable lessons. The spirit of self-respect and self-help is the source of all genuine worth in the individual, and is the means of bringing success to a man who has been denied the advantages of wealth and fortuitous influence. This spirit as exemplified illustrates in no uncertain manner what it is possible to accomplish when perseverance and determination form the keynote to a man's life record. Depending upon his own resources from his boyhood days, looking for no extraneous aid or support, Mr. Farley has risen through his own efforts to a position as one of the representative business men and honored citizens of Putnam, Windham county, and it is but consistent that he be accorded consideration in a work of this kind. It is left to specific biography to perpetuate the record of those law-abiding citizens who in the midst of the active affairs of this work-a-day world stand forth in integrity of purpose, loyalty to the institutions of the land, and in that enterprise and industry which make for the well-being of their respective communities. Of this class is the subject of this brief sketch, to whose personal career we now direct attention, his ancestral history having been adequately outlined in the foregoing article, which has to do with the life history of his brother, Simon Farley, who is likewise a representative citizen of Putnam.

George Farley is a native of the parish of St. Norbert, County of Berthier, Province of Quebec, Canada, a distinctively French section of the Dominion, and one in which the French language is commonly used, so that our subject was unfamiliar with the English at the time when he came to the United States, on which score he had an added burden placed upon him in acquiring the prevailing vernacular while laboring assiduously to make his way toward the goal of material success and prosperity. That he proved equal to meeting all exigencies is shown in the position which he holds to-day. He was born Feb. 18, 1850, and his early educational discipline was confined to about two years' attendance in the parochial schools of his native county, while as a boy he contributed his quota to the work of the homestead farm. In the autumn of 1859, before he was ten years of age, Mr. Farley left the parental home and went to St. Culbert, Canada, where he entered upon a four years' apprenticeship at the shoemaker's trade. After completing his term of apprenticeship and becoming an expert and discriminating workman at his trade, he went to the town of Sorel, Quebec, where he was employed for a period of six months, at the expiration of which he proceeded to the town of Joliet, in the same Province, where he entered the employ of the firm of Michaux & Gilbeault, for whom he worked as a journeyman for about six months. He then, in the spring of 1866, left Canada and came to the United States, first locating in Webster, Mass., where he worked at his trade for a fortnight, and then came to Putnam, Conn., where he made his advent June 15, 1866. He entered the employ of the firm of Corbin & Tourtellotte as a contracting shoemaker, and under these conditions he continued operations for a period of six years, within which time he had not only acquired valuable business experience, but had also, through association and personal application, become familiar with the English language, and otherwise supplemented his somewhat limited education. At the expiration of the period noted Mr. Farley accepted a clerical position in the shoe store of Leonard Brothers, of Putnam, with whom he remained for nine months, when he resigned to enter upon an independent business career whose outcome was to be a definite and worthy success. He opened a grocery store on the site of his present establishment, beginning operations on a modest scale, but conducting his affairs with such distinctive discrimination, enterprise and fairness that the business steadily expanded in scope and importance. He began business March 21, 1873, and Dec. 23, 1885, to his now large and well equipped establishment, he added a complete stock of drugs, and this department of his business enterprise has been pushed forward to a point of tantamount success, while in March, 1899, Mr. Farley still further extended the field of his business operations by adding a stock of shoes and men's furnishing goods, dry-goods, etc., so that he has now a well equipped department store, and one which caters to a large and discriminating patronage, the establishment representing one of the leading mercantile enterprises in the county. He is known as one of the progressive and successful business men of this section of the State, and as a citizen whose life has been dominated by high principles and a determination to achieve a success worthy of the name, so that he has not been denied the fullest measure of confidence and esteem.

Mr. Farley has ever shown a deep interest in all that tends to conserve the progress and general prosperity of the community, and his influence has ever been cast in favor of all worthy enterprises. His political proclivities are shown in the unwavering support which he accords to the principles and policies of the Democratic party, and he has served in various offices of local trust and responsibility, his tenure of the same indicating the confidence and respect in which he is held in the community. He has thus served as a member of the board of review and as assessor, while at the time of the incorporation of Putnam under a city charter, in 1897, he was elected as the first representative of the Third ward on the board of aldermen, in which capacity his fidelity and earnest efforts in the promotion of municipal interests have caused his successive re-election, so that he has continuously held the office to the present time. His religious faith is that of the Catholic church, in which he was reared, and he is identified with various fraternal and social organizations in his home city. That he has been the architect of his own fortunes is shown unmistakably when we revert to the fact that when he left Canada to become a resident of the United States his entire capitalistic reinforcement was represented in the sum of fifteen dollars. Energy, determination, consecutive application and inflexible integrity of purpose have, however, proved adequate in enabling him to surmount obstacles and to win a position of independence and prosperity, together with the confidence and good will of all with whom he has come in contact in the various relations of life.

On Oct. 14, 1867, Mr. Farley was united in marriage to Miss Maria Bibeau, daughter of Antoine and Marie Louise (Anger) Bibeau, of Putnam, and of the children of this union we enter the following record: Marie Louise, died at the age of six months. Georgiana is the wife of Frank Foisy. George William, was born in Putnam, where he is now successfully engaged in the bakery business, and where was solemnized his marriage to Donald, daughter of P. M. Leclair; they have two children:

Mabel and Henry. Delphine, who was born in Putnam, is the wife G. Le Maitre, of that town. Alexina and Armand are at the parental home.

WILLIAM H. CADY, chief of police in Rockville, Tolland county, who is distinguished as being the first incumbent of the office after the city was formed, is a native of Massachusetts, born Dec. 25, 1842, in Brimfield.

The Cady family was founded in America by Nicholas Cady, who is supposed to have come hither from England some time between the years 1635 and 1640. He settled in Watertown, Mass., and the records show that he owned lands there in 1645. He married Judith Knapp, daughter of William Knapp, of that place, and they had these children: John, born Jan. 15, 1650; Judith, born Sept. 2, 1653; James, born Aug. 28, 1655; Nicholas, born Aug. 2, 1657; Daniel, born Nov. 7, 1659; Ezekiel, born June 14, 1662; Nicholas, born Feb. 20, 1664; and Capt. Joseph, born May 28, 1666. Nicholas Cady removed to Groton, Mass., in 1683.

(II) James Cady, son of Nicholas, was born at Watertown, Mass. On June 19, 1678, he married Hannah Barron and died at Groton, Mass., Dec. 2, 1690. His children were: James, born at Groton, Mass., April 1, 1679; John; Daniel; Abigail; Elizabeth, born April 10, 1686; and Aaron, born April 4, 1688.

(III) Daniel Cady, son of James, was born in Groton, Mass., about 1682, and married Abigail Cady, daughter of John Cady, of Killingly, Conn., April 24, 1704. She was probably a cousin. They first resided in Groton, but in 1707 they moved to Killingly and in 1721 they were residents of Tolland, Conn. In 1725 they removed to Canterbury, Conn., and about 1730 returned to Killingly. Their children were: Ephraim, born Feb. 19, 1705; Amos, born April 13, 1707; Zeeruah, born in Killingly, Sept. 7, 1711; Timothy, born Nov. 25, 1714; Sarah and Abigail, twins, born in 1716; Jonas, born Oct. 18, 1719; Jedediah, born 1724; and Lydia, born June 30, 1728.

In the spring of 1741, Daniel Cady and his son Timothy of Killingly, purchased of Samuel Chapman, of Tolland, Conn., 245 acres of land in the town of Stafford, its description being: "Said land lieth toward the north-west in the said township." The consideration paid was: "Four hundred and thirty pounds, current money." The deed was dated April 21, 1741, and recorded March 26, 1742, in Stafford. They were the first persons of the name to own land in Stafford. Its location as near as can be ascertained was on an abandoned road north of what is known as Pond Hill and a mile or more south-west of the school house in Ziclag. This land was deeded to the two sons of Daniel Cady, Timothy and Jonas. They owned the land in partnership until 1752, when they divided and became separate owners.

(IV) Jonas Cady, son of Daniel, married Mary Green of Killingly, Oct. 27, 1746. Their home was located as above described. At the session of the General Court of Connecticut, Jonas Cady was appointed and commissioned Ensign of the 13th Co. of the 5th Reg., of the Colonial army. He died Feb. 28, 1775, in the fifty-sixth year of his age, and is buried in the old cemetery in West Stafford. His grave stone bears this inscription:

Father, I give my spirit up and trust it in thy hand,
This dying flesh shall rest in hope and rise at thy command.

His widow afterward married Benjamin Davis. She was cared for in her old age by her son, Jedediah Cady, and died at his home, June 6, 1823, aged ninety-four years, and was buried in the Old cemetery, at Stafford. Jonas Cady's children were: Hezekiah, Jesse, Asa, Jedediah, Timothy, and twin daughters who died in infancy.

(V) Judge Jesse Cady, son of Jonas, was born in 1751, in Stafford. He was a very highly esteemed and useful citizen of Stafford and was early called upon to occupy positions of responsibility. He was justice of the peace, judge of probate and judge of the court of Tolland county. From 1781 to 1798 he was a member of the Legislature and served as State's Attorney from 1798 until May 8, 1810, when his death occurred. His record shows him to have been a broad-minded, intelligent man. While his education was confined to the teaching of the common schools, he received much assistance through acquaintance and friendship with the Rev. Mr. Willard, a Congregational minister at Stafford, who was a brother of President Willard of Harvard University. In his younger days Jesse Cady was the librarian of Stafford and these gentlemen, particularly the clergyman, took pleasure in developing his mental gifts.

Judge Cady was a man of kind and sympathetic nature, yet never permitted the softer elements of his character to sway him in the administration of justice. He was the main supporter of the Congregational Church in Stafford, was active in promoting its field of usefulness, and was one of its deacons until his death. On many occasions, during the absence of the pastor, he conducted the services with dignity and reverence.

In 1773 Judge Cady was married to Jerusha Chapin, who died July 22, 1829, aged eighty years. Their children were: (1) Polly, named Mary, born Dec. 1, 1774, died Sept. 2, 1850, unmarried. (2) David, born April 6, 1777, married Abigail Chapin, March 1, 1804. He was a farmer in Somers, where he died April 4, 1857. He was a very devout Christian and was deacon in Somers Congregational Church many years previous to his death. He held many of the local town offices and was land surveyor for many years. In character he was a man of unswerving integrity, firm in his views, a strong advocate of temperance and a man with the courage of his convictions. Of his several children, only one now survives, Mary, born Oct. 28, 1816, the widow of Spencer Davis, residing in Somers. This venerable lady retains all her faculties, has a remarkably clear memory and is a genealogist with a wide fund of information regarding the early families and citizens of Somers. She is often consulted by acquaintances for information and to her is due the completeness and authentic history of the Cady family. (3) Lois Cady, born Feb. 20, 1779, married Nov. 16, 1797, Persis Austin, who was a farmer in Canterbury, where she died. (4) Anna Cady, born April 9, 1781, married March 31, 1807, Eber Spellman. From Stafford they moved to Moscow, Livingston Co., N. Y., where she died July 6, 1862. He was a farmer and died there also. (5) Abigail, born Feb. 18, 1783, died unmarried Oct. 29, 1835. (6) Jerusha, born Nov. 22, 1785, died Feb. 25, 1803. (7) Ruth, born Sept. 10, 1787, married July 10, 1810, Deacon Wilder Pease and resided in Enfield, where he was a farmer. She died March 27, 1865. (8) Jesse, became the grandfather of Mr. Cady, of Rockville, and was born April 3, 1791. (9) Moses C., the youngest of this family, was born April 3, 1794, and married Rachel Bartlett, Oct. 31, 1850. By trade he was a joiner. His death occurred in Somers, Dec. 23, 1877.

(VI) Jesse Cady, son of Judge Jesse, was born in Stafford. After learning the tanner's trade in South Wilbraham, Mass., he located in Somers, in the north-east portion of the town, and converted an old still into a tannery; he owned also a small tract of land, which he farmed in addition to carrying on the tannery and working at shoemaking. Although he was a man of such energy and industry, Jesse Cady was a cripple, having fallen upon a broad axe when a child, severing some of the tendons of his left knee. His whole life was spent on the farm, although he was never in excellent health, in addition to other troubles being a sufferer from asthma. His death occurred on his farm, after a short illness, Nov. 17, 1866, and he was interred in the North cemetery at Somers. He was well known in Republican politics, but he never sought office.

The first marriage of Jesse Cady was in 1816, to Abigail Williams, born in South Wilbraham, Mass., daughter of Eleazer Williams. She was a descendant of Rev. John Williams, who was taken prisoner by the Indians at Deerfield, Mass., during Queen Anne's war, in 1704, and was carried into Canada. Stephen Williams, son of Rev. John, was the first minister in Long Meadow, Mass. Abigail Williams Cady died Feb. 11, 1835, aged forty-one years. The children born of this marriage were: Julia, born June 30, 1817, married May 4, 1836, Simeon Prior, and died in Somers April 27, 1873. Although crippled Mr. Prior was an excellent shoemaker. W. D.; Sarah, born March 9, 1821, was the wife of Cyrus Lee, of Somers, whose sketch appears elsewhere; Sophia, born March 17, 1825, married in April, 1852, Jefferson Dunham, and died in Mansfield, Conn., Feb. 26, 1875. The second marriage of Jesse Cady was in 1835, to Persis Chapin, who died July 22, 1842, aged forty-seven years, leaving one child— Mary Ann, born June 26, 1836, who resides in Hartford, a maiden lady. The third marriage was in May, 1843, to Jerusha Welsh, who died in 1873, aged eighty years.

(VII) W. D. Cady, son of Jesse Cady, was born April 2, 1819, in Monson, Mass. The tanning trade he learned in Somers, Conn., whither his parents had removed when W. D. was but a boy. The latter was married in Canterbury, Conn., to Lois Austin, a native of Plainfield, Conn. For some time the family resided at Brimfield, Mass., and then removed to Warren, Mass., after which Mr. Cady followed the trade of shoemaker. Later he made a short trip to Nebraska, and after his return to Connecticut, contracted fever and ague from which he never fully recovered. On account of failing health he tried farming and lived for a time on a farm in Westford, Conn., but this labor was too hard for him and he returned to Somers where he died July 18, 1888, at the age of sixty-nine years. He was buried in New cemetery, at Somers. His wife died at Lakewood, N. J., aged about sixty years.

Mr. Cady was a staunch Abolitionist and was known as such far and wide. His home was open to escaping slaves and more than once his cellars sheltered them. His connection with the "Underground Railway" and his anti-slavery utterances caused trouble in the church which at that time held opposite views. Mr. Cady claimed that the major portion of reforms start outside the church. On one occasion at a prayer meeting, which he always attended, he listened to a long prayer from one of the deacons in which he heard prayers for almost everything and everyone except the American slave. This impressed him no little. Mr. Cady was a man who had the courage of his convictions, was outspoken and extremely conscientious; whatever he thought was right he would endorse and champion. His anti-slavery views made him enemies, yet he lived to see the triumph of those views, and his bitterest opponents join him finally in what at one time they considered impractical and fanatic ideas.

W. D. Cady's family consisted of three children, namely: William H., of Rockville; Lambert W., who for years was a blacksmith at Somers, where he died, has a memorial sketch in this volume; and Mary E., who is the widow of Capt. C. A. Parks, of Sag Harbor, is now a resident of Rockville.

(VIII) William H. Cady son of W. D., was but an infant when his parents removed to Warren, Mass., from Brimfield. His education was acquired at Quaboag Seminary, at Warren, and at the age of seventeen he began factory work in the woolen mill of Knowles & Sibley, of Warren. Mr. Knowles was the great loom-maker and a man who was as well known as any other in woolen manufacture. For two years Mr. Cady remained in that factory and later worked in Somers, Conn., in mill work. He then went into the palm-leaf business, the great Shaker industry of the making of the Quaker hoods. For ten years he was in the employ of T. M. Gowdy in that line of work which was then extensively carried in. On account of impaired health, Mr. Cady then went to Lakewood, N. J., where he secured out-door employment and his health greatly improved. For eighteen years he was a resident of Lakewood, during which time he was for a number of years in the employ of a cracker firm, selling goods on the road. He saw Lakewood develop from its infancy into one of the most popular winter resorts of the North, being really one of the pioneers of that place.

Mr. Cady embarked in the bakery business upon his return to Connecticut, at Hazardville and later at Somerville, where he also conducted the company eating-house. Mr. Cady remained in Somerville until 1888, when he came to Rockville. His first employment there was with Carlos Doane in baker work, but soon after he went into business for himself, opening a first class bakery on High street, this being purchased later by Yost & Regan.

In 1889 when Rockville was incorporated as a city, Mr. Cady was appointed by Samuel Fitch, the city's first mayor, to the position of chief of police. This position he has efficiently filled ever since, his administration of the office reflecting credit upon himself and honor upon the city. In politics Mr. Cady has always been a Republican. During his residence in Lakewood, N. J., he became a member of the order of Odd Fellows, and he also belongs to the A. O. U. W. organization.

On June 8, 1863, Mr. Cady was married, in Stafford, Conn., to Emma Jane Hulburt, born Aug. 14, 1843, in Somerville, Conn., daughter of Henry and Emeline (Fields) Hulburt, natives of Somers, the latter a daughter of Daniel and Cherry (Wood) Fields. Henry Hulburt was a son of Job Hulburt, who was born in August, 1781, in Somers and who married Lucinda Collins, daughter of Deacon Jabez Collins. The parents of Job Hulburt were Job and Dorcas (Spencer) Hulburt, this family being one of the oldest in Somers. Mrs. Cady was reared in her native town of Somers, was educated there and lived there some years after marriage. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Cady were: Nellie, born Feb. 18, 1864, the wife of F. J. Cooley, whose sketch is given elsewhere as one of the prominent citizens of Rockville; Clarence W., born Dec. 24, 1873, the head designer of the New England mill at Rockville; and Charles L., who died at the age of ten years.

Mr. Cady is everywhere recognized as one of the city's most useful citizens. A man of courtesy and education, he has many personal friends, while his long career in his present official position has made him well known. Under his pleasant exterior lie hidden those same attributes which made his father firm in the support of right, and Chief Cady can not be swerved from the path which he deems it wisest, for the city's good, to have pursued.

DWIGHT NASON, of Mansfield, Tolland county, is one of its most esteemed citizens, and resides on Chestnut Hill. His father, Benjamin Nason, was born in North Kingston, R. I., and was reared to farm work. After coming to Mansfield he was employed as a farm hand by James Slate, on the farm now occupied by Deacon James J. Slate, his grandson. For several years Benjamin Nason remained in the employ of Mr. Slate, and later was employed by various farmers in the town. After his marriage he bought a farm in the western part of the town, where he resided the rest of his life. He died Jan. 16, 1874, at the age of seventy-seven, and was buried at Spring Hill, in Mansfield. For many years he had been a Jeffersonian Democrat, and was a member of the Baptist Church.

The marriage of Benjamin Nason was to Ann Coles, a daughter of Capt. Thomas Coles, of the Revolutionary army, who, enlisting from Greenwich, R. I., served under Gen. Green, and was both captain and paymaster, receiving twelve pounds a month for his services. The mother of Dwight Nason was born in Wickford, R. I., lived to be eighty-eight years of age, and was buried in Mansfield. The children of these worthy people were: (1) George W., married Mrs. Julia Ann Bosworth, the widow of Joshua Bosworth, and a daughter of Ebenezer Gurley, late of Mansfield. He was a carpenter, and died in Willimantic; his three children were: Agnes, who died young; Orion, who married Emma Connell; and Frank, deceased. (2) Alfred, became a sea-faring man and died in Philadelphia, Pa. (3) Porter, married Mrs. Sarah Thurston, the widow of Edwin R. and daughter of Ebenezer Gurley, Sr. She was an aunt of the wife of his brother George. His trade was that of stone mason, and he died without issue in Mansfield. (4) John, died unmarried, in Mansfield. (5) Frank, died young. (6) Hector was a sea-faring man and was lost from his vessel in New Haven harbor and his body was never found; he was unmarried. (7) Earl, married Emily Parks, resides at Mystic, Conn., no issue. (8) Dwight Nason.

Dwight Nason was born May 27, 1841, in Mansfield, and was educated in the common schools. Early in life he began to assist his father on the farm, and also worked for neighboring farmers until after his marriage. He then rented a small farm in Mansfield, where he resided until the death of his father, when he removed to the homestead which had come into his possession. For three years he remained there and then removed to Coventry, where he was employed as manager and overseer of the large farm of Chauncy Howard. The seven succeeding years he spent on that farm, then he removed to Hop river in the town of Columbia, and was employed in the mills there until March, 1890. Then in company with Henry H. Goldsborough he purchased of Mr. Nichols the Fitch Palmer place, a farm of eighty-five acres, and there the partners have made great improvements and carry on general farming and dairying.

Mr. Nason on Aug. 17, 1871, was united in marriage to Ella A. Gurley, a native of Mansfield, a daughter of Dwight and Amelia (Crane) Gurley. No children being born of this union, Mr. and Mrs. Nason adopted in 1892 Minnie Bell Clark, who was born June 12, 1884, and is now a bright pupil at the Willimantic high school.

Mr. Nason is a Prohibitionist and very consistent in his belief. Mrs. Nason is a most estimable lady and a devoted member of the Coventry Methodist Church, which she joined when a resident of that place. Both Mr. and Mrs. Nason have a large circle of friends and are universally respected.

Dwight Gurley, the father of Mrs. Nason, was born in Mansfield May 10, 1827. He was a son of Orson F. and Amy (Starkweather) Gurley, and was educated in the district schools of Mansfield. At the age of seventeen, and for several years following, he taught school in Mansfield and Coventry, and during one year conducted a select school at Mansfield Depot. Later he went to South Easton, Pa., where he engaged in teaching until a year prior to his death. For many years he was principal of a school there and had seven schools under his care. Mr. Gurley was an excellent instructor. His death occurred in Columbia, Conn., at the home of his father.

Mr. Gurley (first) married Amelia Crane, of Mansfield, a daughter of Charles and Theoda (Bennett) Crane, her death occurring June 28, 1854, at the age of twenty-three years. Mrs. Gurley left two small children: Ella A., and Hattie, who died in infancy. The second marriage of Mr. Gurley was to Serenda Cline, of South Easton, Pa., who survived him, although now deceased. One child was born of this second marriage, Orson Fitch, now a resident of South Easton.

HENRY H. GOLDSBOROUGH, who owns the farm in connection with Mr. Nason, and resides with him, was born Oct. 5, 1860, in County Galway, Ireland, and was a son of Robert and Mary (McAvoy) Goldsborough, the former of whom was a laboring man who resided during his last years in Willimantic, where he died from the kick of a horse. Mr. Goldsborough came to America with his parents when an infant, and resided in Willimantic until the age of ten years. He then went to Lebanon, Conn., where he was employed at farm work until 1873, when he came to Mansfield, where he worked on various farms for several years, and then was employed for three years on the Chauncey Howard farm. The next three years were spent on the farm of W. C. Jillson at Hop river. In 1890 he moved to his present farm.

Mr. Goldsborough is a Prohibitionist, an industrious and energetic man, and is highly respected. His religious connection is with the Baptist Church at Spring Hill.

ELLIOTT E. ALLEN. There are few families in all New England who can trace a clearer ancestral line than the Allen family, a worthy representative of which is found in the person of Elliott E. Allen, the leading merchant and esteemed citizen of Brooklyn, Windham Co., Connecticut.

(I) Samuel Allen and his wife Ann resided in 1620 in Bridgewater, Somersetshire, England, and they founded one branch of this name at Braintree, Mass., as early as 1632, where Samuel was made a freeman in 1635. Ann died in 1641.

(II) Samuel Allen (2), son of Samuel, the settler, was born about 1633, and in 1658 married Sarah, a daughter of George Partridge. He was an early settler of Bridgewater, of which town he was the careful town clerk, and in 1693 a deputy to the General Court, dying in 1703. His children were: Samuel, born in 1660; Essial, born in 1663; Mehitable, born in 1665; Sarah, born in 1667; Bethiah, born in 1669; Nathaniel, born in 1672; Ebenezer, born in 1674; Josiah, born in 1677; Elisha, born in 1679; and Nehemiah, born in 1681.

(III) Samuel Allen (3), son of Samuel (2), was born in 1660, and in 1685, married Rebecca Carey, who died in 1697. In 1700 he married Mary Alden, who was a granddaughter of John and Priscilla Alden, of the "Mayflower." The children of the second union were: Joseph, born in 1701; Benjamin, born in 1702; Mary, born in 1704; Rebecca, born in 1706; Mathew, born in 1708; and Seth, born in 1710.

(IV) Joseph Allen, son of Samuel (3), born in 1701, at Bridgewater, Mass., married April 29, 1729, Rebecca Fuller, a daughter of Samuel Fuller, then of Preston, but afterward, of Mansfield, Conn. He settled first in Newent Society, in Norwich, Conn., later purchasing land in Windham, now Scotland, Jan. 13, 1731, and died Jan. 1, 1777, at the age of seventy-six years. His widow passed away in 1778 at the age of seventy-seven years. Their children were: Barnabas, born in 1730; Jemima, born in 1731; Betty, born in 1734; Joseph, born in 1739; Samuel, born in 1740, died in the same year, and was the first person buried in the Scotland graveyard; and Asahel, born in 1742.

(V) Barnabas Allen, son of Joseph, was born Feb. 24, 1730, in Norwich, and married April 21, 1752, Elizabeth, a daughter of Rodolphus Fuller, of Mansfield, and settled in Canterbury. Mr. Allen died Oct. 10, 1815, aged eighty-five years and his wife died in June of the same year, at the age of eighty-six. The children of this marriage were: Silas, who became a physician and went to Vermont, later to Ohio; Lemuel; Jared, born in 1759; Rebecca, born in 1761; Anna, born in 1764; and Elizabeth, born in 1766.

(VI) Jared Allen, son of Barnabas, was born June 3, 1759. He married and settled on the old homestead and died Aug. 14, 1836.

(VII) Deacon Barnabas Allen, son of Jared, was the grandfather of Elliott E. Allen, and followed farming in Westminster Society, in the town of Canterbury. His life extended to the age of seventy-one years, and both he and wife were buried in the new Brewster cemetery, in Canterbury. In early life he was a very determined Whig, later becoming a Republican, and for many years was one of the honored deacons in the Congregational Church. Deacon Allen married Elizabeth Walton, who lived to be nearly ninety-one years old. The children born to Mr. Elliott's grandparents were: Sabrina, who first married John Francis, and second Asher Briggs, died in Canterbury; John N., who married and removed to Meigs county, Ohio, where he was a farmer and owned a mill, and where he died; Daniel, who also located in Ohio, later removing to Illinois, where he died, having been a farmer; Jacob M.; Lucetta, who married William Carson, and died in Ohio; Adeline, who married John Hyde, of Greenville, Conn., later John Kerr, and died in Ohio; and Jared, who was married three times, was a blacksmith by trade, and died in Worcester, Massachusetts.

(VIII) Jacob M. Allen, son of Deacon Barnabas, was born Feb. 7, 1817, in Westminster Society of Canterbury, and remained on the home farm as his brothers and sisters had left home, and the care of his parents fell upon him, a duty which he performed in a most filial manner. After their decease the farm came into Mr. Allen's possession and he resided upon it until 1867, when he disposed of that estate and purchased one near Canterbury Green, residing upon the latter until the time of his death, Jan. 16, 1894. Through a long and useful life he closely followed the path of rectitude and duty, was industrious and provident, accumulating means enough to provide comfortably for his family.

Jacob M. Allen was a member of the Westminster Congregational Church, later transferring his membership to Canterbury Church. In politics he was in full sympathy with the Republican party and held a few of the local offices. The general verdict was that his death removed from the community one of the most honest and upright citizens, whose straightforward and estimable life reflected credit upon his family and church.

On April 17, 1841, occurred the marriage of Jacob M. Allen and Marianne Branch, the birth of the latter being Feb. 8, 1812, in Lisbon, Conn. She was a daughter of Elisha and Mary (Herrick) Branch; her death took place Dec. 1, 1894. The children of this union were: Alonzo N., who was born May 23, 1843, married Mary Brown, and for many years had a confectionery store in Norwich, Conn., his death occurred Jan. 30, 1883; Mary E., who was born May 13, 1845, attended the New Britain Normal School, and later taught school for several years. She cared for her parents with filial affection and solicitude, and then removed to Brooklyn, where she still resides; Albert L., who was born July 17, 1847, married Julia Ferris, and is a member of the firm of Allen Bros., grocers, located at 466 Main street, in Hartford, and has one son, Frederick; Irving W., who was born March 13, 1850, (first) married Cora Dyer, and (second) Lena Eastman, and is a member of the firm of Allen Bros.; and Elliott E., of Brooklyn, born April 29, 1855.

Westminster Society of Canterbury, Conn., was the birthplace of Elliott E. Allen, and he was twelve years of age when his parents removed near to Canterbury Green. There he continued in the public schools until he was eighteen years of age, later assisting on the home farm for some years, going then to Hartford. In the latter city he became a clerk in the establishment of Allen Bros., remaining for twelve and one-half years, returning then to his home at the urgent request of his father. The latter through the infirmities of age required assistance on the farm, and this his dutiful son gave him, remaining in the management of the estate and the business until his father's death.

In April, 1898, Mr. Allen purchased his present store at Brooklyn, Conn., formerly owned by Oscar F. Atwood, and with new stock, modern improvements and added efficiency in every line has made his business known over a wide extent of country and attracted a large and liberal patronage.

Mr. Allen was married Dec. 29, 1881, in Westfield, Mass., to Emma S. Barnes, a daughter of Farrington Barnes, of Westfield, who died two months prior to his daughter's birth. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Allen were: Ethel G., born March 7, 1886; Raymond E., born April 7, 1888; Harold L., born in June, 1890, died Oct. 18, 1893; and Carroll B., born Oct. 2, 1895.

In politics, Mr. Allen is a staunch Republican, but he craves no political preferment, being closely attentive to his business and his duties in the Congregational Church, of which both he and his wife are prominent members. Socially he is connected with Brooklyn Grange, No. 43, and is popular with his associates in that organization on account of his pleasant personality as well as his excellent judgment in matters pertaining to the effectiveness of that order.

GEORGE ALBERT PETTIS, a substantial farmer and most estimable and respected citizen of Putnam, Windham county, belongs to an old Rhode Island family which has more or less always been connected with agricultural pursuits.

Jonathan Pettis, the grandfather of George Albert Pettis, was born May 16, 1771, in Coven-try, R. I., where his death took place in 1842. He carried on the business of burning charcoal in connection with his farming operations, and he and his sons bought and sold considerable real estate. He married Isabel Sherman, born Nov. 23, 1773, and their children were: Almy, born Aug. 31, 1793; Lydia, born March 18, 1795; Gardner, born Feb. 23, 1797; Arnold, born Oct. 21, 1798; Hannah-ritta, born May 2, 1803; Welcome, born Feb. 22, 1805; and Mary, born Nov. 9, 1810.

Welcome Pettis, son of Jonathan, was born Feb. 22, 1805, in the old home in Coventry, R. I., and died in the residence in which his son now lives on Nov. 3, 1862. During his early life he assisted in the charcoal burning business, but after he moved to Putnam in 1837, he became thoroughly interested in farming. His first purchase of land was the Gary farm, consisting of seventy-five acres, to which he added until it amounted to 110 acres. In addition to this it was his custom to buy different tracts of woodland in the vicinity and clear them, in this way accumulating a large amount of real estate, a great deal of which is still retained in the family. Mr. Pettis understood farming very thoroughly and was regarded as one of the most successful agriculturists of this locality. He was a very vigorous man, possessed of sound health and with a great love and capacity for work. Being very quiet and unassuming, he was erroneously thought by those who did not know him well, to be stern. His death was occasioned by an attack of pneumonia. Mr. Pettis was not a politician, but believed in the Whig party and supported it with his vote. Being a man of reliability, many offices were offered him, but he served in very few, being opposed to all office seeking. For many years he belonged to the Methodist Church, but in his latter years inclined to an independence of belief not hampered with any dogmas.

On May 1, 1826, Welcome Pettis was married to Celynda Rouse, who was born in Coventry, R. I., April 13, 1805; she died Feb. 23, 1891, in Putnam. This union was blessed with the following children: Isaac Arnold, born March 1, 1827, in Coventry, R. I., died in Westfield, Mass., in 1887, where he had followed the trade of wheelwright; George Albert, of this sketch; and Mary Elizabeth, born Sept. 24, 1844, in Putnam married (first) Horatio N. Thurber, of Pomfret, Conn., and (second) R. A. Turner, of Newark, N. J., where she resides.

George Albert Pettis was born July 21, 1835, in Coventry, R. I., and was two years of age when his family removed to Pomfret (now Putnam), and in the Gary District, No. 4, he attended school until he was sixteen years of age. After leaving school he began actively to assist on the farm, and at the death of his father took entire charge of the home place, conducting it ever since. Mr. Pettis has 125 acres under cultivation, and in connection with the successful management of his own property, for one year he also operated Dr. Segur's farm, in a near locality. He has been very successful in his chosen line of work and owns some valuable and desirable land.

In politics Mr. Pettis inclines toward the Republican party, but prefers to be bound by no party ties, voting as his judgment indicates. Like his father he cares nothing for the honors or emoluments of office, and leaves such cares to those who desire them.

On May 12, 1857, Mr. Pettis was united in marriage to Harriet Newell Hall, born May 4, 1831, in Hampton, Conn., daughter of John and Mary Ann (Corey) Hall, of Hampton. The children reared by Mr. and Mrs. Pettis are as follows: (1) George Albert, Jr., born Dec. 22, 1860, in Putnam, now resides in Thompson, where he is a contractor and builder. On Jan. 1, 1886, he was married to Ida May Harris, of Blackstone, Mass., and they have one daughter, Sybil Payne, born June 19, 1887. (2) Ida Pettis Dewing, born Feb. 6, 1862, married Feb. 6, 1879, Clarence Nash Kent, of Putnam, and has children—Clifford, Edith May, Earle, Mabel, and Harold. (Mrs. Kent was reared by Mr. and Mrs. Pettis, as their own, but never being legally adopted did not take the name.) (3) Elmer Ellsworth, born July 21, 1866, in Putnam, was a member of Co. G, 3d Conn. N. G., of Putnam, for several years. (4) Eleanor Eva, born Feb. 1, 1867, in Putnam, married (first) June 23, 1885, Loren R. Stockwell, of Douglass, Mass., and (second) Sept. 7, 1896, Elmer Ellsworth Sanderson, a farmer of Pomfret. Mr. Sanderson died Dec. 25, 1900. The children of Mrs. Sanderson are: Hattie Eliza Stockwell, born July 13, 1886, and Florence Pearl, born June 28, 1899.

In religious belief Mr. Pettis and his family are zealous in the cause of Spiritualism. They are much esteemed and respected in their community and have a wide circle of attached friends.

HON. JOHN E. FAHEY. Prominent among the popular and well-known citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, is John E. Fahey. By the exercise of push, energy and perseverance, Mr. Fahey has become one of Rockville's most valued citizens, and time and again has been honored by his fellow-townsmen by election to positions of honor and trust. Mr. Fahey has proven himself efficient and faithful and fully deserving of the honors which have been given him.

John E. Fahey was born Dec. 18, 1857, in Manchester, Conn., a son of David and Mary (Burke) Fahey, both of whom were born in Ireland, and came to the United States early in life, their marriage being celebrated in Manchester. Mr. Fahey, the father of John E. Fahey, was employed in the mills of the Hilliards, in Manchester. In 1864 he moved to Rockville, where he entered the Hockanum Mill, and later the American Mill, continuing his residence in that city until his death, July 11, 1886, at the age of sixty-five. John E. Fahey's mother resides in Rockville. David Fahey was a man of retiring disposition, a Democrat in his political faith, and kept well posted on the issues of the day. Mr. Fahey was a man of strict temperance belief, and when he found his son had signed a temperance pledge, criticised his action on the ground that he should have had firmness enough to abstain from drink without any pledge.

The children born to David Fahey and wife were: Dennis, who resides in Manchester, Conn., an employe of the Hartford Screw Co.; John E.; Michael, deceased; David, who is overseer for the Regan Mfg. Co. of Rockville; Mary, who is Mrs. Thomas Foley, of Hartford; William, an electrician of Providence, R. I.; James, an overseer for the Regan Co.; Bridget, of Rockville; Katy, deceased; and Edmund, an operative of the Rockville Company.

John E. Fahey attended the primary schools of Manchester, Conn., and was but a lad when his parents removed to Rockville. He remained with an aunt until later, but before he was ten years old began work in the mill, early learning the industrious habits which have in no small way contributed to his success in life. The mill now known as Adams' Warp Mill, which in his day was known as Selden's Cotton Mill, was the scene of his first labor, his wages being twenty-five cents per day, and twelve hours a day's work. Flour was $18.00 per barrel, the father was not robust, the family large, and the assistance of every one was needed. A short time was spent in Selden's Mill and a short time more in the Carlisle Thread Mill, and following this Mr. Fahey worked for the White Manufacturing Co. on West Main and Vernon avenue, where gingham were the product. For a year Mr. Fahey was employed by the Hilliard Mfg. Co. in the mill at Manchester, and finally entered the employ of Samuel Fitch & Sons, where for fifteen years, until this firm was closed out, he was overseer of the spinning. Following this Mr. Fahey engaged with the J. J. Regan Mfg. Co., where he became assistant superintendent. On Nov. 1, 1900, Mr. Fahey concluded his work with this company his public duties requiring his full attention.

From youth Mr. Fahey took a deep interest in politics, enjoying his father's intelligent comments and criticisms of public men and events, and his first leanings were toward the Republican party, his reading causing him to believe the principles advocated by that organization to be the best. His first presidential vote, however, was cast for Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock, on account of an admiration he had conceived for the man as an individual. The appointment as alderman was Mr. Fahey's first entrance into political life, this being from the 3d ward, which is now Democratic. During this administration he made an admirable record on the committee on Public Works, of which he was chairman. In 1895 Mr. Fahey represented the town of Vernon in the State Legislature, serving on the committee on Cities and Boroughs, and in 1895 was elected first selectman, receiving a re-election in 1896. The fall of 1900 brought him forward once more, and he was again sent to the Legislature. A faithful public servant, Mr. Fahey has been of great value to his constituents.

Socially Mr. Fahey is a member of Rising Star Lodge, I. O. O. F. at Rockville; is a prominent member of the Foresters, and is a past chief ranger of Court Snipsic at Rockville, and in August, 1897, he was supreme representative from the Grand Court of Connecticut to Denver. In the A. O. U. W. Mr. Fahey is also prominent, and fills the office of assistant supervisor of the order in his State.

The marriage of Mr. Fahey took place Nov. 9, 1880, to Alice O'Neil, a native of Tolland, born Nov. 28, 1861, a daughter of Patrick and Bridget (Comisky) O'Neil. The children born of this marriage are: Gertrude Alice, born July 30, 1883; Alice Irene, March 15, 1884; and John P., March 18, 1887.

Mr. Fahey is still a young man in a political sense, and his strong partisanship, his loyalty to his friends, have made him a favorite with his party, who believe him when he asserts his desire to assist in the elevation of political standards through the creditable methods which have adorned his career.

HENRY LEWIS KEENS, a native of England, came to America when a young man and by the practice of industry and thrift has won for himself a competence and a position in life eminently useful and honored. Ill health has in recent years induced him to retire from the pursuit of his trade to the valuable and well tilled farm of 300 acres in Willington, Tolland county, where he now resides.

Mr. Keens was born in London, England, Jan. 14, 1853, the son of Henry Lewis and Ellen (Fyler) Keens, and grandson of Henry Keens, an artist, who married a Miss Larrouch. Her ancestors were prominent people of France, who fled from that country to London during the French Revolution. Henry Lewis Keens, the father of Henry Lewis (2), was born in London, England, and acquired the watch-maker's trade which he followed for many years. He at one time manufactured watches in London, employing a number of men. He died in Bradford, Yorkshire. His widow still survives residing near Liverpool, England. The family of Henry Lewis and Ellen (Fyler) Keens were six in number, namely, Ellen, who is married and resides in Bradford, England; Henry L.; Alfred, of Hartelpool, England, a foreman engineer in one of the largest engineer works in the north of England; Austin, a cabinet maker of Bradford; Christopher, foreman in a large paper mill in Holyoke, Mass.; and Cornelius, foreman in a large shoe store at Nottingham, England.

When seven years of age Henry L. Keens (2), removed from London to Leeds and a year later to Bradford, where at the age of eight years he began to work at spinning in the woolen mills of that city, continuing in succeeding years in various departments of the woolen mill industry. At the age of eighteen he began an apprenticeship at the machinist's trade, at which he worked steadily until he emigrated to America in 1876 at the age of twenty-three years. He had married in England in 1870 Annie Hartley, daughter of Edward and Isabelle (Parfitt) Hartley of Bradford. Her father was for twenty-five years foreman in the linen factory of Marshall & Co., Leeds, England, during which time he never lost a day. In later years he engaged in the clothing business at Manchester Road, Bradford, where he has also for many years practiced medicine. He is still living at the advanced age of nearly eighty years and for a man of his age is remarkably active. Mrs. Keens for two years conducted a dry-goods store in Bradford.

In 1876 Mr. and Mrs. Keens and their son, Edward Horatio, sailed from Liverpool on the ship "Moravian," reaching Toronto, Canada, in course of time. There Mr. Keens resided for a year. In 1877 he removed to Holyoke, Mass. He worked for a year as repairer in the alpaca mills, then removed to Chicopee, where for eight years he worked at his trade in the Ames machine shop, having charge of a floor with about six men. Mr. Keens then worked at his trade for about two years at Springfield, Vt., having his residence at Willington for a year then removing his family to Bridgeport for the sake of educational advantages for his son. He was then for three years connected with the Springfield Emery Wheel Co. Mr. Keens then removed to the farm in Willington. He worked for some months with Pratt & Whitney, in Hartford, but on account of ill health gave up his trade and returned to the farm where he has since resided. His excellent and well cultivated farm comprises over 300 acres in the northwestern part of the town of Willington. This farm is owned by Mrs. Keens to whom it was deeded by her father.

In politics Mr. Keens is independent, not a party man. He is a member of the Universalist Church of Bridgeport. Mr. and Mrs. Keens have one son, Edward Horatio, now a Universalist minister at Whitman, Mass. He was born in Bradford, England, and is a graduate of the Universalist Theological Seminary, Camden, N. Y. He married Jane Houghton of Long Island, and they have one daughter, Phillis, and a son whose name is Norwell Orton Keens, born in October, 1902.

Mrs. Keens has five sisters and two brothers living. Samuel Hartley lives in England and is carrying on a clothing store; William is a boss carpenter in New Zealand. One of the sisters, Mrs. Whitker, has a clothing and dressmaking establishment in Wellington, New Zealand; her husband is a tailor. Another sister conducts a restaurant in Bradford, England, and still another is married to J. Hansworth, a master wheelwright of Manchester Road, England. Two of Mr. Keen's sisters reside in Holyoke, Mass. One is the wife of Mr. Earl of Holyoke, the other a widow—Mrs. S. Wade.

Mr. and Mrs. Keens are greatly interested in philanthropic work and in 1891 Mrs. Keens had charge of the fresh air home of Bridgeport, supported by Mrs. P. T. Barnum, under the auspices of the Universalist Church. The home was at Fairfield and was a great success. Eighty-two children of every nationality and every denomination were cared for, and all went back to their homes well and happy after a most pleasant vacation.

HOLT. Since its earliest settlement Connecticut has been a commonwealth that has bred high-minded and honorable citizens, whose representatives have come to the front in every community where the name is found. The Holt family is well and widely known. The etymology of the word makes its meaning that of a grove or small forest.

The founder of the Holt family in America was Nicholas Holt, who, with his wife, Elizabeth, came to this land from England in 1635. He settled in Newburyport, Mass., and in 1644 became one of the first settlers of Andover, Mass., where his son Nicholas was born.

(III) Abiel Holt, son of Nicholas (2), was also born in Andover, but (IV) Caleb, son of Abiel, was born after the family removal to Windham, Conn. His first marriage was to Mary Merrick and his second to Chloe Hatch. His birth occurred March 6, 1729, and he became one of the early settlers of the town of Willington, Conn., and was a delegate to the State convention called to ratify the Constitution of the United States.

(V) Caleb Holt, son of Caleb, was born in Willington, Conn., on April 23, 1759, and died Sept. 8, 1826, aged sixty-seven years. He married Sarah Goodale, and they had five children: Horace, Ryal, Joshua, Ralph and Julianna. Caleb was a wealthy farmer owning large tracts of land, which he divided among his sons, giving them each a farm.

(VI) Ryal Holt, second son of Caleb and Sarah (Goodale) Holt, was born in Willington, Conn., Dec. 2, 1786, where he spent the greater part of his life, dying there in 1864. His marriage was to Lovina Lamb, a native of Vermont, whose father was in the war of the Revolution; at the age of sixteen he was a waiter boy for General Washington, and served as such until the end of the war. They had twelve children, seven sons and five daughters: Austin, Mary, Otis, Almira, Clark, Sarah, Amirett, Elijah, Caleb, Warren, Gilbert, and Ann Eliza. Warren died in childhood, but the others all married; nine of them spent their days in Connecticut and six of them lived to be more than three-score years and ten. They inherited robust constitutions, large physiques, were of pleasing address, unostentatious, of ready wit and ever enjoying a joke. They were brought up to attend the old Baptist Church in Willington, but afterward the greater number of them chose a different order of worship, many of them becoming faithful Christian workers. They were all very mechanical, gaining a livelihood as farmers, merchants and manufacturers. Their children, of whom there were thirty-two, nineteen living, mostly reside in Connecticut and have enjoyed better educational advantages than did their parents.

(VII) Austin Holt, eldest son of Ryal and Lovina Holt, was born in East Windsor, Conn., Aug. 4, 1810, and died in Willimantic, Conn., April 13, 1884, at the age of seventy-four. His wife was Almira Dimmock, of Rockville, and they had four children: Henry, born in Rockville, Dec. 26, 1839, died in Willimantic, Conn., April 26, 1873; Parmelia Louise, born in Manchester, Conn., Sept. 28, 1845; Julia Alice, born in Manchester Jan. 29, 1848, married Arthur Carpenter, of Willimantic, in 1875, who died April 12, 1898; George Holt, born Jan. 16, 1850. Austin Holt was a manufacturer living in Rockville, Manchester and Willimantic; for some years he was agent of the Hockanum Mill in Rockville.

Mary L. Holt, eldest daughter of Ryal and Lovina Holt, was born in Willington, Conn., March 9, 1812, and died in North Haven, Conn., Aug. 25, 1876, aged sixty-four years. She married Nathan W. Brown, a station agent for many years in North Haven, Conn. They had one daughter, Mary J., who was born April 18, 1844. She married Francis S. Smith, of New Haven, and they had three children, Laura Minerva, born July 27, 1871, and died July 15, 1872; Sherman Woodward, born Nov. 25, 1873, and died July 11, 1874; and Frances Sherman, born Dec. 8, 1874.

Otis Holt, the second son of Ryal and Lovina Holt, was born in Willington, Conn., Dec. 13, 1813, and died in Rockville, Conn., May 10, 1857. His marriage was to Clarissa Allen. He was a farmer by occupation. They had three children—Rhoda, born Aug. 9, 1840, married Origen Dodge, May 12, 1866, and died in Mansfield, Conn., April 7, 1872; Roland, born July 10, 1846, died June 17, 1873, having been a soldier in the Civil war; Horace W., born June 20, 1853, married Nov., 1883, Ellen Slattery, of Northampton, Mass. By occupation he is a gardener. They have one child—Hazel May, born in Rockville, Dec. 24, 1884.

Almira Holt, daughter of Ryal and Lovina Holt, was born on Aug. 5, 1815, at Willington, Conn., and married Harvey Lyman, of Andover, Conn., in 1841, and died in Andover April 14, 1889. They had four children—Julia and Lewellyn, who died in childhood; Julius Austin, a resident of Meriden, born Aug. 14, 1849, and married Edna Curtis in 1881. They had one child that died in infancy. By occupation he is a carpenter and joiner. Clark Lyman, the youngest son, was born June 6, 1855, and is occupied in mechanical work of various kinds.

Clark Holt, third son of Ryal and Lovina Holt, was born in Willington Oct. 6, 1817. In 1841 he married Mary A. Winchell, daughter of Chauncy and Mary Vibberts Winchell, of Rockville, and they had one son, Grenville, who died in infancy. His business was manufacturing and insurance. He died in Manchester July 22, 1888.

Sarah G. Holt, third daughter of Ryal and Lovina Lamb Holt, was born Nov. 6, 1819, at Willington, Conn., and died at Mansfield Oct. 6, 1890. She married Abel Johnson, of Willington. They had five children: (1) T. Legrand, born June 24, 1844, married Louisa Manning, of Willington, April 5, 1866. By occupation he was a farmer and contractor, and had lumber interests. He was accidentally killed unloading logs in the woods in 1902. (2) Elisha, born Aug. 25, 1845, died July 13, 1863. He served in the Civil war, a member of Company D, 14th C. V. I. (3) Frederick E., born June 5, 1847, was twice married; on Sept. 10, 1874, he married Bessie Fisk, and on June 10, 1885, he married Emma Jacques, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Frederick had one child, a daughter, born Sept. 10, 1887, and died May 13, 1890. By profession he is a physician and is located at Mansfield Depot. (4) Grace Johnson, only daughter of Abel and Sarah (Holt) Johnson, was born in Willington, Aug. 1, 1852, and June 6, 1876, married R. Rogers Frisbie of New Haven, who died in 1882. They had one son, William Rogers, who was born Sept. 11, 1877. Mrs. Grace J. Frisbie married for her second husband, Sept. 11, 1889, George A. Huntington, of Mansfield, and their present home is in Sharon, Mass. (5) Truman Johnson, youngest son of Abel and Sarah (Holt) Johnson, was born in Willington, Sept. 28, 1854, and married Jennie A. Bixby, a daughter of Rev. Moses Bixby, of Providence, R. I. She was born in Burmah, India, Oct. 23, 1855. Truman Johnson is medical missionary to Burmah and his wife has been with him part of the time. Their child, Merle Truman, was born in Burmah, July 14, 1887.

Amirett Holt, fourth daughter of Ryal and Lovina Holt, was born Oct. 21, 1821, at Willington, Conn., and Nov. 20, 1840, married Otis Freeman, of Mansfield. They resided there and in Hartford for a great many years but finally removed to southern Illinois. They had four children—Eugenia A., was born Nov. 22, 1841, and died April 2, 1872, was a teacher of mathematics in the Chicago schools; Mary J., born April 8, 1844, died Jan. 15, 1853; Fred F., born March 8, 1846, died Aug. 7, 1846; Edwin O., born Aug. 10, 1851, Feb. 14, 1882, married Isabella Hooker, of Murphysborough, Ill. Their residence has been in Cobden and Murphysborough. They had four children—William Otis, born Jan. 13, 1883; Eugenia A., born Feb. 24, 1884; Edwin C. A., born Sept. 2, 1885; and Maude Eliza, born March 28, 1899.

Elijah Holt, the fourth son of Ryal and Lovina Lamb Holt, was born in Willington, Conn., Nov. 6, 1823, and died in Rockville, March 17, 1896, at the age of seventy-two, having been a patient sufferer for many years. Elijah Holt was always interested in manufactures and when young learned the wool-sorting business. He was superintendent of a satinette mill in Manchester, Conn. Later he was superintendent of a thread mill in Rockville. In his declining years he was the head of the wool-sorting department of the American mill. He was twice married. His first wife was Nancy L. Harwood, the eldest daughter of Ebenezer and Mirerva (Dimmock) Harwood, of Crystal Lake, Conn. They had two sons—Grenville E., and Irving Lucius. Grenville Holt was born in Manchester, Conn., March 6, 1847. He married Isabella Jackson, of Shelton, Conn., is now a superintendent at the Seth Thomas clock factory, at Thomaston. Irving Lucius, the second son of Elijah and Nancy Holt, was born in Somers, Conn., Sept. 1, 1851. He was a graduate of Williston Seminary of East Hampton, Mass., and also spent one year at the Sheffield Scientific School, Yale College, and for a time was principal of one of the grade schools of Meriden, Conn. For many years he has been in the insurance and real estate business in Meriden. On Aug. 11, 1875, Irving L. Holt married Ella M. Rice, daughter of Hinsdale and Nancy (Munson) Rice, of Meriden. They had two sons—Harry H. and Ralph G., the latter dying in infancy. Harry H. was born May 28, 1876, was a graduate of the Meriden high school and at present is employed in the office of his father. Elijah Holt married for his second wife, Lucy W. Armstrong, youngest daughter of John and Esther (Dorrance) Armstrong, of Columbia, Conn., May 3, 1865. They had three children—Jennie A., Clarence D. and Frederick H., all graduates of the Rockville high school. Jennie A., was born in Rockville, May 11, 1866, and Aug. 22, 1894, she married Arthur E. Richardson, son of Rev. Dr. E. H. and Jane (Steven) Richardson, of New Britain, Conn. At that time Mr. Richardson was a dry goods merchant in Rockville, but his residence now is in Springfield, Mass. where he is floor manager for Meekins, Packard & Wheat. Clarence D. was born in Rockville Feb. 9, 1868, and Oct. 3, 1895, he married Frances Smith, a daughter of Francis and Mary J. (Brown) Smith, of New Haven. They have two sons—Wesley Reynolds and Keith Gilbert. The former was born July 26, 1897, and the latter May 18, 1900. Their residence is in New Haven, where Mr. Holt is in the wholesale paper business, making a specialty of school supplies, fire works and valentines.

FREDERICK H. HOLT, teller of the Rockville National Bank, and a worthy representative of the old family, was born in Rockville Aug. 28, 1869, and May 13, 1891, he married Mary Lillian Hendey, the eldest daughter of George and Medora Hendey, of Waterbury, Conn. He is a graduate of Rockville high school. In 1886 he entered the Rockville National Bank as bookkeeper, which position he resigned two years later and entered the office of the Chapinan & Armstrong Mfg. Co. of Waterbury, Conn. In 1892 he accepted the position of bookkeeper for Lilly, Swift & Co., wholesale beef dealers in Waterbury. On March 1, 1893, Mr. Holt returned to Rockville and again entered the employ of the Rockville National Bank as teller, which position he at present holds. Mr. Holt is an active worker in the Union Congregational Church, having served as president of the Y. P. S. C. E., as superintendent of the Sunday-school, and at present he is one of the junior deacons. In politics he is a Republican, and for a number of years has served as agent and treasurer of the town deposit fund.

Caleb Holt, fifth son of Ryal and Lovina (Lamb) Holt, was born in Willington, Conn., Feb. 1, 1826, and died in Providence, R. I., Aug. 28, 1894. His marriage was to Elizabeth Coggsall. He was a merchant and a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y., Mansfield, Conn., and Providence, R. I. He had two sons—Warren H. and Frederick, the latter dying in childhood. Warren H., the eldest son of Caleb, was born Jan. 5, 1856, and married Emma J. Weaver, of Mansfield. They had two daughters—Flossie May, born Nov. 18, 1884, died Sept. 2, 1885; and Elsie Modell, born April 8, 1886. Their residence is in Providence, R. I., where Mr. Holt is a bookkeeper.

Warren Holt, sixth son of Ryal and Lovina (Lamb) Holt, was born in Willington, Conn., Jan. 17, 1828, and died Aug. 10, 1834.

Ryal Gilbert Holt, seventh son of Ryal and Lovina Holt, was born in Willington, Conn., Aug. 3, 1830, and died at Rockville, July 15, 1891. On Oct. 1, 1852, he was married to Eliza Matson, of Windsorville, Conn. He resided in Rockville, where his business was manufacturing. He died July 15, 1891. Ryal G. had two sons—Frank L. and Charles H. The former was born in Rockville, July 11, 1853, and died in Bridgeport, Conn., Jan. 14, 1890. Frank L. was a graduate of the Yale Scientific School and an attorney at law in Bridgeport, where he became prominent as a bright and rising young man. Charles H. was born in Rockville Sept. 27, 1857, and July 11, 1894, married Gertrude H. Benjamin, of Rockville.

Ann Eliza Holt, the youngest daughter of Ryal and Lovina Holt, was born in South Coventry, Conn., Oct. 31, 1832, and Feb. 10, 1856, she married Chauncey Hibbard, of Rockville, who died June 30, 1856. On May 7, 1862, she married George P. Lines, of New Haven, Conn., who died June 10, 1874. Her residence is in New Haven, Connecticut.

The descendants of Ryal and Lovina Lamb Holt comprise, at the present time (1902), twelve children, thirty-one grandchildren, eighteen great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren.

THOMAS RITTER ADAMS is the leading marble and granite dealer of Tolland county, and one of the best business men of Rockville. This business was established by the ancestors of Mr. Adams, his maternal great-grandfather, John Ritter, being a stone cutter and in the tombstone and monument business in New Haven years ago, his shop being located on the old canal, near Grand street bridge. At that time the stone was delivered direct from the canal boats to his yards. The maternal grandfather, David Ritter, was in the same business in New Haven.

Thomas Ritter Adams was born in New Haven, Conn., a son of Watson and Grace (Ritter) Adams, the former of whom was born in Wethersfield, a son of Uzial Adams, also a farmer of that place. Watson Adams was reared in his native town and while still a young man went to New Haven where he learned the trade of marble cutter, in the shop of David Ritter, and there married Grace Ritter, a daughter of his employer. Early in the sixties Watson Adams removed to Ellington, Conn., and about 1864 moved to Rockville where he was employed by H. T. Bolles at the trade of marble cutting. He worked there for a number of years, at the end of which time he went into business for himself. Both he and his wife now rest in the Grove Hill cemetery. Mr. Adams was a good citizen, and voted the Republican ticket because he thought it right to do so although he was never a politician. He attended closely to his business, and set an example of a quiet, temperate life.

The family born to the parents of Thomas Ritter Adams was: David R., who resides in New Haven; Angella, a resident of Rockville; George W., a resident of New Haven; Elizabeth J., deceased; Elizabeth W., now Mrs. George E. Nettleton, of Hartford; Delia R., now Mrs. Thomas Rhodes of Melrose, Mass.; and Thomas Ritter Adams.

In the excellent schools of New Haven, Thomas Ritter Adams received his education, among his teachers being one well known at that time, John A. Lovell, who in later years was presented with a home by his former pupils in recognition of his exertions in their behalf. While still a boy the family removed to Ellington and there Mr. Adams entered the Ellington high school at the time it was under the scholarly care of Prof. Bolles, this practically ending his opportunities. When about fourteen years old Thomas R. Adams began learning his father's trade, in the shop of H. T. Bolles, his salary being $7.00 per month, which included board, and from that beginning he remained in the same position until his wages were $3.75 per day, this amount being paid him several years before he left.

In the spring of 1881, Mr. Adams, in association with Joseph Eldredge, bought the business from Mr. Bolles and the firm of Eldredge & Adams was established and continued until 1898, when Mr. Adams became the sole proprietor. This business is one not surpassed by any of its kind for reliability in the county. The plant is well equipped and the careful and elaborate work done there does great credit to Mr. Adams and those whom he employs. Cemetery work of all kinds is furnished and much of the fine adornment found in the surrounding cemeteries comes from this shop.

On April 20, 1875 Mr. Adams was married in Rockville to Mary Josephine Eldredge, a native of Willington, Conn., who was born Sept. 20, 1851, a daughter of Joseph and Susan Stone (Wilson) Eldredge. Mrs. Adams died Dec. 18, 1899, and is buried in Grove Hill cemetery. She was a consistent member of the Congregational Church. Two sons were born of this marriage; Henry B., who died at the age of seven months; and Howard Eldredge, born in Rockville, Conn., Oct. 4, 1881, who graduated from the grammar school in Rockville and then took a complete course in Huntsinger's Business College at Hartford, and is assistant to his father. Socially Mr. Adams is connected with Star Lodge, I. O. O. F. at Rockville and also with the A. O. U. W. of the same place. The first presidential vote cast by Mr. Adams was in 1872, for Gen. Grant, and the Republican party has no more ardent supporter than Mr. Adams. The stone and granite business has been built to its present proportions by the energy and application of Mr. Adams, and his finished work is known throughout all eastern Connecticut and southern Massachusetts.

CLARENDON M. GREEN. When we revert to the fact that the subject of this review is, in the agnatic line, of the eighth generation of his family to be identified with the annals of American history, it will be at once discerned that the original American progenitor must have located here in the early Colonial epoch. This is clearly authenticated by records extant, and that he became a resident of the colony of Massachusetts in the first half of the seventeenth century will be shown in the genealogical record to be here entered.

The Green family has been one of prominence in Connecticut since early in the eighteenth century, and on this score alone there is peculiar consistency in giving in this work an epitome of the genealogical history of Mr. Green, while his personal career has been such as to render this the more consonant. He has long been an honored citizen and business man of Putnam, and his life has won distinction to the name which he bears and upon which no shadow rests as the lineage is traced from one generation to another.

(I) The original American ancestor was Thomas Green, who was born in England, probably in the year 1606, and who died in Malden, Massachusetts colony, Dec. 19, 1667. His first wife's name was Elizabeth, and it is practically certain that the majority if not all of his children were born of this marriage. Elizabeth Green died Aug. 22, 1658, and Sept. 5 of the following year Thomas Green married Mrs. Frances Cook, the widow of Richard Cook, who died Oct. 14, 1658. She had previously been the widow of Isaac Wheeler. She was born in 1608. The inventory of the estate of Thomas Green Jan. 10, 1668, the month following his death, was given as £285 and 18s. His ten children were as follows: (1) Elizabeth, who was probably born in England, in 1628; (2) Thomas, also supposed to have been born in England in 1630, married Rebecca Hills, in 1653; (3) John, born in England in 1632, married, Dec. 18, 1660, Sarah Wheeler; (4) Mary, born in England, in 1633, married in 1655 Capt. John Waite; (5) William, born in 1635, married Elizabeth Wheeler; (6) Henry, born in 1638, married Esther Hasse, Jan. 11, 1672; (7) Samuel, born in March, 1645, married in 1666 Mary Cook; (8) Hannah, born in 1647, married Joseph Richardson, of Woburn, Mass., Nov. 5, 1666; (9) Martha, born in 1650; (10) Dorcas, born in Malden, May 1, 1653, married, Jan. 11, 1672, James Barrett of that place; she died in 1682. The exact date of the arrival of Thomas Green in America is uncertain, but it is practically ascertained that it must have been in either 1635 or the following year, and it is believed that he emigrated to Massachusetts from Leicestershire. He probably lived in Ipswich, Mass., until 1649 or 1650 and then removed to Malden, of that colony, where he accumulated a farm of sixty-three acres in the north part of the town now known as Melrose. A portion of this farm remains to the present day in the possession of his lineal descendants. He was selectman of Malden in 1658, and official records also show that he served several times on the grand jury of Middlesex county.

(II) Lieut. Henry Green, son of Thomas, was born in Ipswich, Mass., in 1638, and he died in Malden Sept. 19, 1717, at the age of seventy-eight years. His marriage to Elizabeth Hasse occurred Jan. 11, 1672. She was born in 1649 or 1650. They became the parents of seven children, namely: Henry, Jr., born Jan. 24, 1673, was married to Hannah Flagg, Jan. 9, 1696; Esther, born in September, 1674, was married Jan. 17, 1695, to Eleazer Flagg; Joseph, born in October, 1678, married Hannah Green; Daniel, born in 1681, was married Dec. 29, 1708, to Mary Bucknam; Dorcas, born in 1683, married a Mr. Wiley; Lydia, born Aug. 11, 1685, married Thomas Lynde; and Jacob, born May 6, 1689, was married, July 8, 1713, to Dorothy Lynde. Lieut. Henry Green resided in Malden where he was selectman for thirteen years, between 1682 and 1714, while he also was a representative in the council of the colony in 1689, 1694, 1702.

and 1704. He had a numerous posterity, and his widow survived him thirty years, her death occurring Feb. 26, 1748, at the venerable age of ninety-eight years.

(III) Henry Green, son of Henry and Elizabeth (Hasse) Green, was born Jan. 24, 1673, in Malden, Mass., and was married Jan. 9, 1696, to Hannah Flagg, who was born March 12, 1675. Their eleven children were as follows: Henry and Ebenezer (twins), born in Charlestown, Mass., Sept. 21, 1696; Hannah, May 6, 1698; Seth, March 6, 1700; Eleazer, March 18, 1702; Nathan, March 1, 1703; Timothy, May 7, 1706; Esther, May 17, 1708; Phineas, Sept. 10, 1710; Amos, Dec. 30, 1712; and Abigail, July 23, 1715. Henry Green (2d), father of the above named children, resided in that part of Charlestown, Mass., which, in 1725 was incorporated as Stoneham. On Jan. 30, 1719, for £760 of "passable money," he sold to his brother Daniel, of Malden, sixty-four acres of land in Charlestown, "with the housings, buildings, etc.," also nine acres of woodland in that place, and eleven and one-half acres of upland meadow in Malden and six acres of salt marsh in Charlestown. Soon afterward he seems to have removed to Connecticut.

(IV) Henry Green (3d), son of Henry and Hannah (Flagg) Green, was born in Stoneham, Mass., Sept. 21, 1696. His wife was named Judith, and she bore him six children, their names and dates of birth being here given: Sarah, Nov. 30, 1725; Mary, March 20, 1729; Esther, July 12, 1731; Hezekiah, Oct. 13, 1733; John, May 12, 1736; and Abigail, April 20, 1738. Henry Green (3d) lived in Killingly, Conn., where his children were born.

(V) John Green, son of Henry and Judith Green, passed his entire life in Killingly, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was Abilene Guile. Their five children were as follows: Abigail, born Oct. 18, 1759; Ephraim, July 27, 1764, died young; Benjamin, March 11, 1766; Mary, Jan. 23, 1768; and Bradley, Nov. 28, 1769.

(VI) Benjamin Green, son of John and Abilene (Guile) Green, was born in Thompson, Conn., March 11, 1766, and there his death occurred, Dec. 7, 1846. His first marriage was in 1785, when Tamar Moffat became his wife. She was born Sept. 23, 1766, and died in Thompson, March 20, 1795. Their four children were Betsey, born June 15, 1786, died Sept. 26, 1801; Abilene, born Feb. 9, 1788, died May 22, 1854, having (first) married Abraham Tourtelott and (second) a Mr. Rattray; Theodore, born March 4, 1790, married Cynthia Frost; and Inda, born Oct. 3, 1793, married David Robbins. In 1796 Benjamin Green consummated a second marriage, being then united to Esther Jewett, who was born in Killingly, March 1, 1769, the daughter of Joseph and Rachel (Nichols) Jewett, the former of whom served as lieutenant and later as captain in the war of the Revolution for which he later drew a pension. Mrs. Esther (Jewett) Green died in Thompson, Nov. 17, 1851. Of her eight children we enter the following data: John J., born July 2, 1797, was twice married—first to Betsey Jacobs, and second to Hannah Elliott; Joseph J., born Aug. 13, 1799, married Polly Spencer, and his death occurred Jan. 31, 1857; Eliza, born Feb. 22, 1802, married Dyer N. Elliott; Phoebe, born Oct. 10, 1804, married Halsey Bixby; Winthrop O., born March 22, 1807, married Emily Allen; Harriet, born June 2, 1809, married William Lyon (4); Benjamin F., born Dec. 26, 1811, died Jan. 2, 1813; and Marquis is of the seventh generation in the direct line.

Benjamin Green was born in Thompson, which was a part of the town of Killingly, and there he passed his entire life, carrying on agricultural pursuits on quite an extensive scale. He was a man of fine physique, social and genial in nature, animated by the utmost integrity and ever striving to follow the Golden Rule in his intercourse with his fellow men. His second wife, Esther (Jewett) Green, was in the fourth generation of descent from Isaac Jewett, a blacksmith, who became one of the first settlers of Thompson, Conn., whither he came from Ipswich, Mass., in 1712. He was the founder of the family in America, emigrating from England to the colony of Massachusetts in an early day, and being known as a man of sterling character.

(VII) Marquis Green was born in Thompson, Conn., Jan. 19, 1816, and in his native town attended the public schools, also beginning to assist in the work of the homestead farm when a lad. At the age of seventeen he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of carpenter under the direction of his brother-in-law, William Lyon (4), of Woodstock, with whom he was thus associated for a period of three years. At the expiration of this time he went to Millbury, Mass., where he secured employment in a sash and blind factory and where he remained about six years. Marquis Green then removed to Grafton, Mass., and was there employed in a similar establishment for about eighteen months at the expiration of which he proceeded to Worcester, Mass., where he engaged in business for himself, entering into partnership with a man named Rice, under the firm name of Rice & Green. Mr. Green continued operations as a carpenter and builder under these conditions for three years, when he sold out his interest in the well established business and came to Grosvenor Dale, Windham county. There he was employed at his trade for several months, and in 1848 went to Woodstock and later entered the employ of William Lyon as foreman, where he was engaged for five years. In 1854 Mr. Green started in business for himself as a contractor and builder, and it should be noted that he was actively concerned in the work of his trade for fully thirty-five years.

In 1848 Mr. Green had purchased a home in Woodstock, and after years of consecutive toil and endeavor he finally retired in 1868. From this time until his death he gave his attention to the management and improvement of his property. He was very successful in his efforts as a contractor, employing from four to twelve workmen as occasion required, and being known for his absolute fidelity to every contract and for his exceptional ability in the line of his vocation. He erected many buildings in Grosvenor Dale, Southbridge, Putnam, Pomfret, Thompson and Woodstock, and there are many monuments to his skill in the county where he passed so many years of his life. He was a man of strong mentality, progressive ideas and marked public spirit, and he always took a deep interest in all that concerned the welfare of the communities in which he lived, while his upright character and genial personality won him the esteem of all and gained him warm and lasting friendships. In early life Mr. Green gave his allegiance to the Whig party of the old line, but transferred to the Republican party as soon as it became a definite candidate for public support. He was chosen as selectman of the town of Woodstock, and in 1871 was elected to represent the town in the Lower House of the State Legislature, where he rendered timely and efficient service, having been assigned to the important committee on Constitutional Amendments. In 1889 Mr. Green removed to Putnam, and there lived retired, from active business until his death, which occurred Jan. 2, 1901. Mr. Green had reached the venerable age of eighty-five years, lacking only seventeen days, while he and his cherished and devoted wife had been companions on life's journey more than sixty years, their golden wedding anniversary having been appropriately celebrated in Putnam. Marquis Green was one of the incorporators of the Putnam Savings Bank, and was a member of its directorate until his death. In religion he inclined to the faith of the Congregational Church in which he had been reared. He was a member of no secret societies.

On Aug. 26, 1840, was solemnized the marriage of Marquis Green to Clarissa Goddard, who was born in Orange, Mass., Aug. 9, 1819, and who is still living. She is the daughter of David and Czarina (White) Goddard, the former of whom was an influential farmer at Royalston, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. Green became the parents of but one son.

Clarendon Marquis Green, the immediate subject of this review, was born in Grafton, Mass., Feb. 18, 1844, and his educational training was received in the public schools and the academy at Woodstock. He began working with his father at the carpenter trade when only fifteen years of age, and was but eighteen when his youthful patriotism and ardor prompted him to respond to the clarion call to arms and go forth in defense of his nation, now menaced by armed rebellion. On Aug. 4, 1862, he enlisted as a private in Co. B, 18th C. V.

I., at Woodstock, and was mustered into the service, at Norwich, on the 18th of the same month. He proceeded to the front and thereafter participated in all the engagements in which his regiment took part up to the time of receiving a serious wound, July 24, 1863, in the engagement at Kernstown, near Winchester, Va. Three months later he rejoined his regiment and continued with it in all its operations until his honorable discharge, June 27, 1865. It should be stated that Mr. Green has never fully recovered from the effect of the bullet wound received in his left side. His regiment was in the three-days' fight in front of Winchester, and he participated in numerous engagements in that vicinity and in the battle at Harper's Ferry, July 4, 1863.

After making a record as a valiant and faithful young soldier, Mr. Green returned to his home and completed his apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, becoming an expert workman and eventually succeeding to the business of his father. He was associated with his father until 1875 when he began operations on his own responsibility, as a contractor and builder, meeting with marked success and securing many important contracts in his section of the State. In 1896 he took up his residence in Putnam, where he has ever since maintained his home and where he is known as a representative citizen. Since 1898 he has been practically retired from active business. In politics he is a stalwart Republican, and has served three years as a member of the board of selectmen in Putnam, being two years clerk of the board, of which he is now chairman. He is one of the prominent and popular members of the A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, Grand Army of the Republic, of which he is past commander, and both he and his wife are members of the Congregational Church of Putnam.

On Jan. 9, 1867, Mr. Green was united in marriage to Virginia Sawyer, who was born in New York City, daughter of James J. and Sophia (Harsen) Sawyer, who long maintained their home in Putnam, Conn. Mr. Sawyer was an artist of ability and high reputation in New England. Mr. and Mrs. Green have three children: Justin Sawyer, the eldest is mentioned below. Clara Sophia, born in Woodstock March 15, 1874, was married, June 25, 1901, to Harry E. Wheeler, of Worcester, Mass., a graduate of the technical school of that place and a mechanical engineer by profession. James Marquis, born in Woodstock Jan. 31, 1879, is now studying electrical engineering, with the view of making that profession his vocation in life.

Justin Sawyer Green was born Oct. 21, 1869, at the old home in Woodstock, and during his boyhood attended the district schools, supplementing his early instruction with three and a half years study at Woodstock Academy, which he left at the age of eighteen years. At that time he took his grandfather's homestead place, which consisted of twelve acres, to which he has added six acres, and on this neat little tract he carried on general farming, giving particular attention to the raising of small fruit. In this work he has met with well merited success, his land giving ample evidence of the intelligent care bestowed upon it.

On Dec. 19, 1893, Mr. Green was married to Orill Frances Blackman, daughter of Capt. Erastus and Sarah Helen (Bigelow) Blackman, of Woodstock Hill, Windham county. Two children have come to this union both born in Woodstock: Wilton Gerald, Dec. 25, 1894; and Irma Orill, July 1, 1899. The entire family attend the Congregational Church of Woodstock, of which Mrs. Green is a member. She takes an active part in all the work of the church, being a member of the Ladies' Aid and Christian Endeavor Societies, and for years a teacher in the Sunday-school. Both Mr. and Mrs. Green hold membership in Woodstock Grange, No. 150, in which he is a past master. Mrs. Green has served as lecturer and done her full share in advancing the work. Fraternally Mr. Green unites with Putnam Lodge No. 46, F. & A. M., of Woodstock. He is a staunch Republican in political faith, but not a particularly active member of the party, office holding having no charms for him.

MARCUS BURNHAM MORSE. The record of a busy life, a successful life, must ever prove fecund in interest and profit as scanned by the student who would learn of the intrinsic essence of individuality, who would attempt an analysis of character, and trace back to the fountain head the widely diverging channels which mark the onward flow of such individuality. All human advancement, all human weal or woe, in short, all things within the mental ken, are but mirrored back from the composite individuality of those who have lived and labored. "The proper study of mankind is man," says Pope, and aside from this, in its broader sense, what basis of study and information have we? In taking under consideration the life labors of those who have figured as the founders and builders of the section of Connecticut with which this publication has to do, there is eminent and significant propriety in according special attention to the family of which Marcus B. Morse is a worthy scion, and on other pages of this work will be found a genealogical record which indicates that the name has long been identified with the history of Connecticut, and with that of the particular section known as Woodstock, in Windham county, and the truly appreciative student will have recourse to the various articles which show briefly how worthy have been the lives and labors of those who have here borne the name of Morse. The line is traced in these other connections down in a direct way to Nathan Morse, the father of Marcus B., and one who was long and prominently identified with the industrial activities and civil affairs of this locality—a man of inflexible integrity, who held the unqualified confidence and esteem of the community. Thus adverting to the genealogical record, we may now properly proceed to take more particularly under review the individual career of the gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph, and of his honored father whose life was spent in Woodstock, where he held the respect of the entire community.

NATHAN MORSE, born Dec. 24, 1815, was married in 1844 to Eunice Bass, born Feb. 25, 1822, a daughter of John and Betsey (Smith) Bass (the latter a daughter of Eleazer Smith), and a descendant of Deacon Samuel Bass, of Braintree, Mass., as early as 1632, her lineage being through Deacon Thomas, John, Henry, Capt. Ebenezer and John Bass. Nathan Morse was reared on his father's farm in East Woodstock, and had such education as the common schools of the neighborhood afforded. He became a manufacturer of sash, blinds, doors, etc., in his native town. Later in life he transferred his manufacturing interests to his son, Marcus, and bought the Col. Elisha Lyon property, consisting in part of a gristmill, sawmill and blacksmith shop, which were operated under his lease or supervision until his death. He was of a retiring temperament, but, though not ambitious for public office, he was interested in public questions, on which he held and maintained intelligent and positive convictions. Politically he affiliated with the Republican party. He was straightforward in business, and held the confidence and respect of those who knew him. He died Nov. 23, 1898.

The children of Nathan Morse and his wife (all born in Woodstock) were:

(1) Chauncey, born Oct. 21, 1844, married Sept. 14, 1870, Harriet E. Chandler, born April 22, 1849, in Woodstock, daughter of William Chandler, of that town. Their children (all born in Millbury, Mass.) are: Clara E., born Dec. 21, 1871, married Rev. William Mortimer Partridge, and they have one child. Earnest, born Aug. 16, 1875, was graduated from Amherst, and is now practicing law in New York City. Alice, born Sept. 23, 1877, resides (unmarried) in Putnam, Connecticut.

(2) Marcus Burnham is mentioned farther on.

(3) Leonard, born May 26, 1848, was reared in his native town, and prepared for college at Nichols Academy, Dudley, Mass. He entered Amherst College, from which he was graduated in 1871. He then taught school for two years. His tastes and inclinations led him to preparation for the legal profession. He pursued his studies in Hartford and at Norwich, and two years later, in 1875, was admitted to the Bar at the latter place. He began practice, but some months subsequently, in 1876, he located in Hartford, in which city he has since remained, engaged in the active practice of the law, and where he has made for himself a creditable place among his professional brethren at the Bar. From 1885 to 1889 Mr. Morse was an efficient member of the common council of Hartford, being president of the board in 1886. In 1888 and 1889 he served as alderman. In 1897 he was appointed by the common council judge of the city court of Hartford. He was re-elected to this judgeship in 1899, and a second time in 1901, and is now serving his third term. This court has civil jurisdiction only, and is unlimited as to amount of damages which it can give in judgment. Judge Morse has never married. His political affiliations are with the Republican party.

(4) John, born March 2, 1851, married at Providence, R. I., Nov. 8, 1874, Sarah E. Lyon, born April 25, 1854, a daughter of Col. Elisha Lyon, of Woodstock, and to them came one daughter, Josephine E., born March 19, 1876, in Providence, where she now resides, unmarried. Mr. Morse died at Providence March 29, 1892.

(5) Jane Cary, born Jan. 12, 1855, married (first) at Woodstock, April 8, 1880, Newton R. Potter, of that town, who died, and she married (second) Granville I. Perry, of Woodstock. One son, Henry James Potter, was born to the first marriage Feb. 22, 1881, and he is now a student at the Polyclinic Institute, at Worcester, Massachusetts.

(6) Ellen Burnham, born May 3, 1858, died in Woodstock, July 11, 1875.

(7) Florence Nightingale, born March 22, 1862, died in Woodstock, Sept. 8, 1863.

This Morse family is of the same parent stock as Jedediah Morse, D. D., the geographer, and Prof. Samuel Finley Breese Morse, the inventor of the electric telegraph. The posterity of Nathan Morse through his wife Eunice (Bass) are descendants of Rev. John Robinson, the pastor of the Pilgrim Fathers, and of Cornelius Waldo, who came from England to Ipswich, Mass., in 1654, and was the ancestor of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Marcus Burnham Morse was born in East Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., July 22, 1846, and was reared under the invigorating discipline of the farm, receiving his early educational training in the district schools. He also attended a select school for one year, and later continued his studies in the academy at Dudley. At the age of nineteen he laid aside his text books and turned his attention to the practical affairs of life. He found employment in the sash and blind factory and gristmill, owned and operated by his honored father, and with these enterprises continued to be identified until the latter's death, at which time he assumed control of the gristmill and sawmill which he has since operated with a marked degree of success, being recognized as an enterprising and progressive business man, and as one whose integrity of purpose is beyond doubt. He controls the best waterpower in the town, and the enterprises which he is carrying forward with such energy and discrimination have important bearing on the welfare and material prosperity of the community. Mr. Morse has achieved prosperity through his own efforts, and his course has ever been such as to commend him to the confidence and good-will of all with whom he has come in contact in the various relations of life. He has gained prestige as one of the representative citizens and business men of Woodstock, and his public-spirited attitude is shown in the ready encouragement and support which he accords to all worthy projects and enterprises advanced for the general good.

Fraternally Mr. Morse holds membership in Woodstock Lodge, No. 42, A. O. U. W., having been a charter member of the same, and having served as its recorder for a period of three years; he is also one of the charter members of Senexet Grange, No. 40, Patrons of Husbandry, in Woodstock; and of the Fraternal Helpers, of which he is treasurer at the present time, while as grand deputy of the order he acted in the capacity of grand organizer of the lodge of that body in Woodstock. Mr. Morse is one of the prominent and zealous members of the Congregational Church in East Woodstock, in which he has served for twelve years as clerk of the Society. He became a member of this Church when eighteen years of age, and during all the intervening years his interest in the work has never flagged, and he has done all in his power to forward the spiritual growth and temporal prosperity of the Church as well as the Sunday School, of which he has served as superintendent. He has also been active and zealous in the cause of temperance in connection with the late Rev. E. H. Pratt. Though according an unqualified allegiance to the Republican party, and ever being mindful of the duties of citizenship, Mr. Morse has never manifested any predilection or desire for the honors or emoluments of public office, considering his business interests worthy of his undivided attention. He has taken a deep interest in all that concerns his native town, and this interest has been significantly shown in the personal attention and care which he has given to the beautifying and permanent improving of what is known as the "common," in East Woodstock, this being but one of many evidences of his public spirit. He has also succeeded in raising funds for the improvement and better care of the cemeteries in East Woodstock.

On Dec. 18, 1879, Mr. Morse was united in marriage, in Woodstock, to Miss Nettie Florence Sanger, who was born there May 22, 1860, daughter of the late John C. and Henrietta (Hibbard) Sanger, of East Woodstock, and to this union has come one son, Carl Clifford, who was born in East Woodstock, Feb. 11, 1888, and who is now a student in the Woodstock Academy. The family home is a center of generous and refined hospitality, and Mr. and Mrs. Morse and their son are active in the social affairs of the community.

CHAUNCEY CUSHMAN SEXTON (deceased) was a well known and highly respected citizen of Somers, Tolland county, where his long and useful life was spent, and where he was the oldest male citizen of the town at the time of his death.

The Sexton family is an old and honorable one in Connecticut. James Sexton, the first American settler of the name, was a native of England, and settled in Windsor, Conn., where his son John was born. The latter moved to Westfield, Mass., at a time when that settlement contained only thirty-nine white families. Indian troubles, however, impelled him to move to Enfield, Conn.

Joseph Sexton, a son of James Sexton, was the great-grandfather of C. C. Sexton, and came from Enfield to Somers, locating on what was afterward a portion of the farm of his great-grandson. Daniel Sexton, brother of Joseph, came to Somers a few years later, and located within a mile of the home of Joseph, who became an influential man in his neighborhood, being town clerk for many years and deacon of the Enfield Congregational Church for more than forty years. He built the house on his farm in which he lived and died.

Deacon Joseph Sexton, the grandfather of C. C. Sexton, was born July 4, 1726, and came to what is now Somers with his parents, when he was fourteen years old. All his life he followed farming, and lived to a ripe old age. For many years prior to his death he was a deacon in the Somers Church. His death occurred Jan. 10, 1819, and on the stone that marks his grave in the old cemetery at Somers is carved: "Sacred to the memory of Deacon Joseph Sexton, who died Jan. 10, 1819, in the ninety-third year of his age, in the joyful and assured hope of eternal life through the merits of his Redeemer. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord, Jesus Christ." On Nov. 19, 1749, Deacon Joseph Sexton married Rebecca Chapin, who died May 22, 1759. They became the parents of the following children: Elizabeth, born April 9, 1751, married Stone Pease, a school teacher, and died in Enfield; Joseph (2), born Aug. 25, 1753; Ezra, born Feb. 6, 1756, died Nov. 18, 1756; Ezra (2), born Jan. 25, 1758, went to Ohio, where he died. On Jan. 31, 1760, Deacon Joseph Sexton was married second to Mary Sexton, a daughter of Daniel Sexton, and a cousin to her husband. She was born in 1735, and died Feb. 3, 1815. To this marriage were born the following children: A daughter, born Aug. 30, 1760, died the same day; A son, born July 29, 1761, died the following day; Lucy, born Dec. 11, 1762, married Dr. Amos Skeele, and died in Chicopee, Mass., in June, 1839; Simeon, born March 27, 1765, died June 1, 1802; Mary, born Oct. 13, 1767, died July 20, 1774; Levi, born April 12, 1771, moved to New York, and then to Ohio, where he died; Timothy, born Sept. 22, 1773, died in Simsbury, Conn., Nov. 23, 1859; Freegrace, the father of the gentleman whose name introduces this article, was born Sept. 21, 1776; Charles, born Oct. 31, 1779, married Mary Bartlett, was a merchant for many years in Ellington, and later lived at Sault St. Marie, Mich., where he died.

Freegrace Sexton was born in the house which was built by his grandfather when the latter located in Somers, and which stood across the street from the site of the home of Chauncey C. Sexton. In 1810 Freegrace Sexton built the house which became the home of his son, and built the farm buildings on a generous scale, devoting his life to the cultivation of the family estate, not a very extensive tract, but he kept clear of debt. The timber he employed in building came from his own land, and was cut and prepared by himself.

Mr. Sexton was closely identified with the Congregational Church of Somers, of which he was a devout and consistent member, rendering constant and varied assistance to its work. He played the bass viol and led the church choir, and often in the absence of the minister would officiate at funerals. A deacon in the Church, he gave with a free hand to its needs out of his limited means. His death occurred Feb. 17, 1853, and he is still remembered as having led a singularly useful and unselfish life. Anna Cushman, who became his wife, Oct. 19, 1797, was born May 22, 1780, and died May 2, 1859. To them came these children: Ruby, born Aug. 17, 1798, married Quartas Chapin, and lived for a time in Illinois, and then moved to Waltham, Mass., where she died; A daughter, born Oct. 9, 1799, died the following day; Lyman, born April 16, 1801, died very young; Lyman (2) born April 7, 1802, married Mary Ann Smith, and lived in Illinois, Alabama, and died in Topeka, Kansas, where he was engaged in farming; Delina, born April 9, 1804, married Orrin Pease, of Somers, where he was engaged in farming; Lorana, born May 4, 1806, married Lemuel Parsons, a farmer in Somers, and died July 7, 1851; Chauncey C., born June 7, 1808, lived the life commemorated in this sketch; a son, twin to Chauncey, was still born; Anna, born June 24, 1810, married Elisha Buckley, and died in Rockville; Lucy Aurelia, born May 3, 1813, married first Orrin Wilson, and second G. W. Taft, and lived in Ellington many years, but spent her last days in South Hadley, Mass., where she died; Parmelia, born June 5, 1817, is the widow of Daniel Davis, to whom she was a second wife, and is living in Somers; Nancy W., born Nov. 9, 1819, was an invalid, and died in Ellington; Joseph, born July 11, 1822, married Caroline Warner, of Ellington, and lived for a time in Illinois, where he was engaged in farming, but moving to California, followed the same calling, and died while on a visit to relatives in Ellington; Freegrace, born July 22, 1824, married Joann McIntire, and is now living in Santa Anna, Cal.; and Miss Caroline E., born Aug. 4, 1827, lives in Springfield, Massachusetts.

Chauncey C. Sexton was born in Somers, and moved into his late home with his parents when he was but two years old. Attending the district school for his education, he early displayed studious habits and a love of learning that marked all his life. Mr. Sexton was born and bred a farmer, and he remained a farmer to the last. With the exception of a few years in which he lived in an adjacent house almost his entire life was passed in the house his father built.

The natural instincts of Mr. Sexton did not run to a farming life, as he was of a scholarly and literary disposition, but that seemed to be the thing for him to do, and he made a very successful farmer; working hard and accumulating a competence. His farm consisted of some eighty acres, and it was maintained at a high stage of cultivation that reflected credit upon its owner. In religion Mr. Sexton was a member of the Methodist Church, of Somers, and was a devoted worker of the Church, having been a constant attendant upon the service from a very early age. With his father he was a liberal contributor to the expenses of the present church building. In politics he was a Democrat. After a short illness, he died of pneumonia, March 17, 1900, and was buried in the West Cemetery. A man of refined tastes and temperate habits, he is remembered by many in this community as a man of high character and noble ideals.

Chauncey C. Sexton and Jemima F. Bissell, of East Windsor, Conn., were married Nov. 28, 1839. Mrs. Sexton was born Dec. 20, 1812, and died May 26, 1845, the mother of the following children: (1) Mary A. J., born Dec. 10, 1840, married Charles Clark, a farmer of Orange, Conn., where she died May 10, 1872, leaving four children: Ellen Rhoena, who married George Judson Smith, and is living in Milford, Conn., has three children, Judson, Alvin and Helen May; Arthur, living in Orange, Conn.; Charles; and May. (2) Lawrence B., born Oct. 6, 1842, married Hattie Sales, and is a stair builder in Hartford, Conn., where they have the following children: Grace, the wife of Frederick Spooner, of Long Meadow, Mass., and the mother of Ernest and Marion; Clara. (3) Henry W., born Dec. 30, 1844, married Georgiana Chapin, and is a carpenter in Springfield, Massachusetts.

For his second wife, Mr. Sexton, on Nov. 27, 1845, married Henrietta Bissell, a sister of his first wife, born Nov. 27, 1814; she died Jan. 13, 1851. One child came of this union, Ellen L., born July 10, 1847, died Oct. 10, 1847.

On April 9, 1851, Mr. Sexton and Rhoena Pease, of Enfield, Conn., were married. Mrs. Sexton was born Aug. 26, 1813, a daughter of Simeon and Sybil (Terry) Pease. The Pease and Terrys were two of the prominent families in Enfield. Mrs. Rhoena (Pease) Sexton attended the Wilbraham Academy, and taught school twenty-two terms in Enfield and vicinity; a very capable and excellent woman, she greatly aided her husband in enlarging and increasing the value of his estate. She died April 5, 1891, leaving one child, Rhoena

H., born Nov. 20, 1852. Miss Rhoena attended Wilbraham Academy, and taught school several terms in Somers. At the present time she is living on the old home, which she inherited on the death of her parents, for whom she cared with a tender devotion in their old age. Devoting much attention to botany, she has made a rich collection of the flowers and plants of this vicinity, and is a lady of many charms and graces.

HEZEKIAH P. HIBBARD is first selectman of the town of Woodstock, and one of the best farmers in Windham county. He is a member of one of the time-honored, successful, and substantial families of the county, whose individual members have left their impress for good on the social, educational, and religious institutions of the different communities in which they lived.

The family of Hibbard is of English extraction. Robert Hibbard is the first member of the family of which there is record, he having lived in Salisbury, England, where he was baptized March 13, 1613. The Christian name of his wife was Joan, or Joanna. With her he came to America between the years 1635 and 1639. Here he located in Salem, Mass., where it is of record that he and his wife were admitted to the church in 1646. Mr. Hibbard was a salt maker, and also a brick maker. He lived in that part of Salem which later became Beverly, and there died May 7, 1684.

(II) Robert Hibbard's son Samuel was the next in line of this particular branch of the family. The record of his baptism is given as June 20, 1658, in Salem; he married Nov. 16, 1679, Mary Bond, of Haverhill. Samuel Hibbard was a mason and farmer. He died in the summer or fall of 1702.

(III) Jonathan Hibbard, son of Samuel, was born May 24, 1689, in Beverly. He married Anna Taylor. Mr. Hibbard is heard of at Portsmouth; N. H., as early as 1710, and later at Coventry, Conn. He died about 1751 at Dudley.

(IV) The next in line was Jonathan Hibbard (2), born about 1720, and married about 1740. His wife was Experience Warfield, and they lived in Dudley, Mass. It is recorded that they "owned the Covenant of the Church" in 1744.

(V) Ebenezer Hibbard was the great grandfather of Hezekiah P. Hibbard, the record of his baptism being given March 29, 1745, in Dudley. He married Hannah Hagan, and died in Thompson, Conn., June 17, 1806. His wife died June 30, 1847, at the extreme old age of 101 years. Her funeral was attended by eight children whose ages ranged between fifty-two and seventy-two, all of whom were born in Thompson.

(VI) Grandfather Isaac Hibbard was born in Thompson Aug. 13, 1775. He married Jemimah Jordan, and settled in East Woodstock, on the so-called Wright place, now owned by N. H. Lippett, where all his children were born. Grandfather Isaac Hibbard had ten children: John, Abial, Asa, Charles,

Nancy, Lucy, Isabell, Lyman, Mary and Isaac. Mary died in 1843 at the age of thirty; the other brothers and sisters all lived to be over seventy years of age. Grandfather Isaac himself reached the age of ninety-one, his death occurring in 1866. His wife died in 1837 at the age of sixty-four. Isaac Hibbard was quite an extensive farmer and kept a large dairy—finding a market for dairy and farm products in Providence. In 1830 he moved to a farm (now owned by Moses L. Perrin) which he had purchased in North Woodstock.

Isaac Hibbard was not a public man and never sought office of any kind, though he was a life-long Democrat. Honest and upright in his dealings with his fellow-men, a hard working, industrious man, his word was as good as his bond in the estimation of those who knew him.

(VII) Lyman Hibbard, the father of Hezekiah P. Hibbard, was born in Woodstock April 30, 1811, and died April 6, 1883, in North Woodstock. On March 26, 1840 he was joined in marriage to Abbie P. Palmer in North Woodstock. She was the daughter of Hezekiah and Lucy Bugbee Palmer, of Woodstock, and bore the following children: (1) Albert, born June 18, 1841, died in the army during the Civil war, a prisoner of war in Andersonville Prison. He was a member of Company B, 18th C. V. I., and was unmarried. (2) Frank E., born Dec. 25, 1843, married Dec. 23, 1878, Ida May Giggey and at present resides in Hyde Park, Boston, where he is a cutter by trade and is employed in a large factory, manufacturers of ladies' goods. Frank E. and his wife have one child, Ernest B., born Feb. 15, 1882, at West Medford, Mass. (3) Henry Emerson, born Nov. 13, 1845, is now living in Boston, where he is captain of engine company No. 21 in the Boston Fire Department. He married Louise V. Briggs, and they have one child, Bertha L., born Nov. 27, 1869. (4) Hezekiah P. is the subject of the review. (5) Isabelle Maria, born Dec. 19, 1849, married May 4, 1875, Gilbert L. Upham, of Dudley, Mass., and is now a resident of East Woodstock village, their children being: Everett L., born Nov. 15, 1876, Sidney A., Jan. 19, 1879, Allen W., Nov. 22, 1885, and Ethel E., Dec. 1, 1889. (6) Evelyn Lucy, born Dec. 25, 1855, married H. C. Leavitt of Spencer, Mass., where he is now a manufacturer of shoddy. Their children are Wallace H., born May 28, 1878, Kenneth W., May 3, 1880, and Kathlene Evelyn, May 3, 1880, all born in North Woodstock.

Lyman Hibbard was a successful and well-to-do farmer. Upon his marriage he removed to North Woodstock where he settled upon the farm where his son Hezekiah P. now resides. In political faith he was a staunch Republican, but cared nothing for public office. He was a life-long member and liberal supporter of the North Woodstock Congregational Church. In disposition he was exceedingly genial and good natured, and was a man who was very popular in the community. He was a very hard working, industrious man, of robust health and good physique.

(VIII) Hezekiah P. Hibbard, was born in North Woodstock on the farm which he now cultivates, Oct. 29, 1847. There he received his schooling in the district schools, and also in select schools taught by Miss Helen Carpenter and Prof. Herindeen. At nineteen he entered upon his life work of farming with his father, and upon his marriage took upon himself the entire charge of the farm which he has since continuously cultivated. The farm consists of 100 acres which he keeps in a splendid state of cultivation, every feature about it evidencing the care of a thorough-going master of agriculture. He devotes it to general crops, and keeps a small dairy of ten cows. He also makes a specialty of poultry, keeping from 175 to 200 of the best breed, the product of which he sells in Webster, Mass. Mr. Hibbard is a member of one good fraternity, the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is an earnest and active member of the North Woodstock Congregational Church, in which organization he has served as clerk and superintendent of Sunday-school. His wife and family are also active workers in this church. In political matters Mr. Hibbard is a supporter of the party of Lincoln, and has been called upon to serve his town in many offices of public trust. He served as constable for seven years, assessor three years, justice of the peace and grand juror seven years, and is now serving his fourth year on the board of selectmen of which he has been chairman for the past three years. If Mr. Hibbard has any particular hobby in town affairs it is in looking after the condition of the roads, he having had charge more or less of portions of the town roads for many years.

Henrietta Maria Pike was the maiden name of Mrs. Hibbard. Mr. Hibbard and Miss Pike were married Aug. 28, 1877. She is the daughter of Henry and Laura (Humphrey) Pike of Dudley, Mass., where her father was a weaver by trade. The children born to these parents consist of: (1) Albert H., born Dec. 1, 1879, received his schooling in Woodstock. When he arrived at years of maturity he learned the blacksmith trade and is now successfully conducting a blacksmith business of his own in East Woodstock village. (2) Walter P., born Nov. 6, 1881, is now a fireman on the N. Y., N. H. & H. Railroad, located at Willimantic, Conn. (3) Florence Isabelle, born Feb. 18, 1884, was a student at Woodstock Academy, class of 1903. (4) Lyman Emerson, born Aug. 27, 1898, is the youngest child.

CHAUNCEY MORSE bears a name which has long been identified with the annals of New England, where the family was established in the days when the American colonies were still under the control of the British crown.

The name of Morse has been prominent in connection with public and civil affairs and industrial activities and has ever been representative of the highest honor and integrity. On other pages of this work appear sketches concerning the lives and labors of other members of the family, and as the genealogical record is therein incorporated with adequate detail it will not be necessary to give further exploitation in this article, though incidental references will of course be demanded.

Chauncey Morse is a native son of Connecticut, having been born in East Woodstock, Windham county, Oct. 21, 1844, and being a son of Nathan and Eunice (Bass) Morse, the former of whom was born in Woodstock, Dec. 24, 1815, while his death occurred Nov. 23, 1898. His wife, Eunice (Bass) Morse, was born in Scotland, Conn., Feb. 25, 1822, being a daughter of John Bass, a representative of one of the old and honored families of the State, and her death occurred Aug. 21, 1900. Of the children of Nathan and Eunice Morse we enter brief record as follows: Chauncey, is the immediate subject of this review; Marcus, who is a resident of East Woodstock, is individually mentioned on other pages of this work; Leonard, is a leading attorney in the city of Hartford; John, died at the age of forty years; Jennie Carey, who was born Jan. 12, 1855, was married April 8, 1880, to Newton Potter, who died Oct. 12, 1885. She subsequently became the wife of Granville I. Perry, of East Woodstock, where they still retain their home; Ellen B., the next in order of birth, died at the age of seventeen years; and Florence N., died at the age of one and one-half years.

The preliminary educational discipline of Chauncey Morse was received in the public schools of his native town, and after returning from the army this was supplemented by a year of study in Nichols Academy, at Dudley, Mass. There he completed his specific literary work at the age of twenty-one years, and then went to Millbury, Mass., where he secured employment in the sash, door and blind factory conducted by his uncle, Charles D. Morse. He had previously learned the trade under the direction of his father, who was long and prominently identified with this line of industrial enterprise. Mr. Morse continued to be an active factor in the business in Millbury, Mass., for the long period of twenty-one years. He secured a partnership interest in 1870 and thereafter for six years was identified with the thriving enterprise which was conducted under the firm name of C. D. Morse & Company. At the expiration of this time the well equipped plant of the firm was destroyed by fire and the partnership was dissolved, though Mr. Morse continued to be associated with his former partner until March 1, 1887. He then removed to Putnam, where he entered into partnership with John F. Chandler, of East Woodstock, under the firm name of Chandler & Morse. They effected the purchase of the hardware establishment conducted by Allen & Tatem, the headquarters of the enterprise being in the Union block, where they have since successfully continued the business. This is one of the representative enterprises of the sort in this section of the State, the stock being large and comprehensive in all lines, while the interested principals have gained distinctive prestige as progressive, reliable and straightforward business men, fully meriting the esteem and confidence in which they are held by the community.

In his political proclivities Mr. Morse has ever been a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party, though he has never been in the least moved by personal ambition in a political way and has never sought public office. While a resident of Millbury, Mass., he was elected to the office of assessor, which he held for a period of five years. Fraternally he is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic and the A. O. U. W., while his religious faith is indicated by his holding membership in the Second Congregational Church of Putnam. In this church he has served as deacon for several years, while he has ever taken an active part in the church work, laboring earnestly for the promotion of its spiritual and temporal welfare. While a resident of Millbury, Mass., Mr. Morse became one of the charter members of George A. Custer Post, No. 70, Grand Army of the Republic, in which he was honored with the office of commander, and upon coming to Putnam he affiliated with A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, in which he has held all the official positions, including that of commander.

It is imperative that we enter a brief record concerning the military career of Mr. Morse. On Sept. 10, 1862, he enlisted as a member of Company F, 26th C. V. I., and he was mustered into the service at Norwich, where also he was mustered out Aug. 17, 1863, at the expiration of his term of enlistment. He served in connection with General Banks, and at the siege and fall of Port Hudson, La., participated in a number of sharp engagements, but fortunately was not wounded, though on one occasion a ball passed through his hat. He was ever at the post of duty and was a leal and loyal soldier in the greatest civil war known in the annals of history.

On Sept. 14, 1870, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Morse to Harriet Elizabeth Chandler, daughter of William and Caroline (Child) Chandler, of East Woodstock. Of the three children of this union we enter a brief record in the concluding paragraph of this review: Clara Estelle, who was born in Millbury, Mass., Dec. 21, 1871, completed her educational discipline in Wheaton Seminary, at Norton, Mass., where she was graduated as a member of the class of 1894. On Oct. 20, 1898, she was united in marriage to Rev. Welles M. Partridge, of Peabody, Mass., who is a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church and who was formerly a missionary in Sitka, Alaska. Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Partridge have one child, Dorothy, who was born in Peabody, Mass., Sept. 19, 1901. Ernest Chandler Morse, the only son of Chauncey Morse, was born in Millbury, Mass., Aug. 16, 1875, and he was graduated from Amherst College as a member of the class of 1897. After this he was for three years engaged as an instructor in the Holbrook Military Academy, at Ossining, N. Y., at the expiration of which time he matriculated in the New York Law School, where he was graduated in June, 1902. He is now engaged in the practice of his profession in New York. Alice, the youngest of the three children, was born Sept. 23, 1877, and like her sister she attended Wheaton Seminary, one of the excellent educational institutions of New England, and she is now at the parental home.

ALBERT B. WEBB, who lives on Allen Hill, Brooklyn, Windham Co., Conn., is one of the most extensive and prosperous farmers of the region. He can tell of seven generations of Webbs in direct male line before himself—all Webbs well woven.

The first of the woof that we know of was Christopher Webb, born about 1630, married in 1654 to Hannah Scott, and died in 1694 in Braintree, Mass. The second was his son Samuel, who in 1686 married Mary Adams. He lived in Braintree, Mass., until Jan., 1706 or 1707, when he purchased the fifth town lot in Windham Center. He died about 1739 at the age of seventy-eight years, followed by his wife in 1744 at the age of eighty. Samuel's son Nathaniel was born in 1696 and married in 1718. He lived on the homestead. His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of John Fitch. Nathaniel died in 1750, and his wife in 1780 at the age of eighty-four. Their son John was born in 1719. In 1746 he married Ann Devotion, who survived his death at sixty-eight, in 1787, until her own end in 1805 at the age of eighty-one. The fifth in this line of Webbs was John (2). He was born Nov. 12, 1749, and married on his birthday twenty-three years later. His wife was Zipporah Robinson, daughter of Reuben Robinson. Both parties to this marriage were long-lived, but in this case the husband was the longest survivor. He lived until ninety-three years of age, dying March 14, 1842, while his wife had died Nov. 23, 1834, in her eighty-fourth year. Their son in the series we are considering was Jonathan, born Sept. 10, 1779. Jonathan was the grandfather of Albert B., whose name heads this article. He was a farmer who lived and died in Scotland, Conn. He married Sybil Snow of Windham, and their children were: Ann, married Schuyler Chaffee and died in Quinebaug, Mass.; Clarissa, married a Mr. Jacobs and died in Providence, R. I.; Thomas, father of Albert B.; Lucy, married Jonathan Bennett and died in Brooklyn, Conn., and Ralph, a farmer, married Eliza Bailey and died in Brooklyn, Conn.

Thomas Webb, father of Albert B., of whom especially we write, was born March 20, 1817, in Scotland, Conn., where his early life was spent. He was reared to farm work, but learned the mason's trade from Capt. Hovilah Taylor of Brooklyn, Conn. Soon after serving his apprenticeship with Capt. Taylor Mr. Webb married his first wife Maria, daughter of Rufus Pellet, of Canterbury, and made his home in Canterbury, where, and in various places in eastern Connecticut, he worked at his trade. He erected a brick house in Canterbury and lived there until after the death of his first wife, which occurred in July, 1861, when she was thirty-seven years of age. Later Mr. Webb moved to New London, where he continued to follow his trade as a mason until age compelled him to retire from hard work, which he was able to do comfortably as the result of careful living and his good habit of saving. He is now living retired in comfortable circumstances. His second marriage was to Catherine Quinn, who bore him three children. He was married the third time to Clara Rockwell, now living, who is the mother of two children. Albert B. Webb was the second child of the first marriage. The others were: (1) Frances, now living in Springfield, Mass., is the wife of Edmund Tupper, overseer in an envelope factory at Holyoke, Mass. (3) Anna, of whom there is a further account elsewhere, married James Dawson, and lived for many years in New York, whence they moved to the home farm in Canterbury, where they are now living in retirement. (4) Irvin, married a Miss Ford, and lived in New London until her death. Then he went West and all trace of him has been lost. (5) Isavene, widow of Joseph Martin, is teacher of languages in the schools of Springfield, Mass. (6) Clarence, a mute, is unmarried.

Albert B. Webb was born May 9, 1846, in Canterbury, Conn., and spent his boyhood there. He had only a common-school education, and was brought up to farm work. He attended school until he was eighteen years old, but after the age of fourteen only in the winter season. At the age of ten years he was hired by Eben Shepard, a farmer of Canterbury, with whom he remained for six months. The days of his boyhood were spent at hard labor, and he continued to work out at farm work until his marriage in 1866 when he hired a small farm in Canterbury on which he remained for six years. Then he took a large one, the Jireh Hyde farm in Canterbury, and remained on it for three years, until 1875. Coming then to Brooklyn Mr. Webb rented the "White farm," now occupied by Samuel Harris, on which he remained only a year and moved to the Putnam farm in the south part of Brooklyn. After tilling this farm for three years, until 1880, he rented the Cogswell farm from C. S. Burlingame, and lived on that for eight years. His next move was to the William H. Putnam farm, which he occupied for three years. Then he went back to the Cogswell farm, which this time he bought of Mr. Burlingame and on which he continued to live. The Cogswell tract consisted of 167 acres to which Mr. Webb has added ninety-five acres, making his present acreage 262, and his farm being one of the best in Brooklyn. Its owner is also one of Brooklyn's most successful farmers. In addition to carrying on general farming Mr. Webb's dairying is a considerable business. He keeps an average of about twenty-five milch cows. Mr. Webb's improvements on his farm have been extensive, including in 1901 a fine new barn, which is one of the largest in the town of Brooklyn.

Mr. Webb was married in Brooklyn, Jan. 1, 1866, to Eunice Wilson, a native of Plainfield, daughter of John Wilson, of that place. She was born March 4, 1848, and died Aug. 23, 1899. Her children were as follows: Gertrude, who died in infancy; Esther, who is unmarried; Henry, who died at the age of four months; Willie, who died aged eight months; Everett, who died when five years old; Frank, who married Lillian Batcheler, and died aged twenty-eight years, having been killed in a trolley accident in May, 1901, in New York City (he was crushed between the car of which he was motorman, and another car; his remains are buried in Brooklyn, Conn.); George W.; Charles; Alfred. The last three are all at home with their father. The mother in girlhood became a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Webb attends the Unitarian Church. In politics he is a Democrat. He has served several terms as assessor and as tax-collector. He is now and has been for several years on the board of relief; and in every way has always discharged the duties of his citizenship. Mr. Webb is a member of Protection Lodge, No. 19, I. O. O. F., of Central Village, of Brooklyn Grange, No. 43, and of the Pomona, as was his first wife also. He was one of the organizers of the Brooklyn Creamery Association, of which he served as a director for several years, and in 1896 was chosen president to succeed Charles G. Williams, deceased. He is a member of the Windham County Agricultural Society, and of its executive committee.

On March 26, 1902, Mr. Webb married a second time, Mrs. Agnes Tripp, widow of Elihu Tripp, of Plainfield, becoming his wife. Mr. Webb is entirely a self-made man—made by hard work which he began early and kept at untiringly. He is a citizen of the best type who certainly has earned the esteem in which he is held by all.

JOHN M. MARTIN has been a resident of Willimantic, Windham county, since 1878, coming here from South Coventry, Conn., and very soon making a creditable place for himself both as a man and as a business force in this city. His calling is that of a general truckman and a dealer in wood and coal, and in that line he has won for himself the respect and confidence of all with whom he has had to deal.

Mr. Martin is a native of Quebec, Canada, where he was born June 19, 1848, on a farm seven miles from Richmond, where his father, William Martin, had located on coming from his native land, Wales, some years previously. John M. Martin was reared a farmer boy, and was the youngest of a family of three children, two boys and a girl, left in a broken home by the death of his mother when he was only two years old. His schooling practically amounted to nothing, and when his father married a second time the domestic relations became such that young John was very anxious to leave home and find a more pleasant place. Very early in his youth he had learned to work hard, and when he was sixteen years old, he struck out for himself, presently finding himself in the States, with the clothes on his back, and ten cents in his pocket as his entire resources. This supported him for three days. On the day Mr. Martin left home he walked thirty miles to a place where he supposed he would find his brother, Joseph, only to be disappointed by his brother's absence. The next day John Martin found his brother, and spent the ensuing night with him, and that was the last time he ever rested his eyes on the brother or any other member of his father's family.

Entering the States at the time of the Civil war, Mr. Martin tried to enlist at White River Junction, Vt., but his youth hindered his acceptance, and in company with a companion he came on to Hartford, Conn. This man had come with him from Canada, and induced young Martin to call him "uncle," and by deceit and sharp practice he secured $450 of the $500 that our subject received for enlisting at Hartford. Mr. Martin became a member of Company E, 1st Conn. Heavy Artillery, soon after his enlistment in December, 1864, joining his regiment before Petersburg. He served until October, 1865, and was discharged at Hartford. The young soldier, then only seventeen years of age, had no home in the State, and settled at Plainfield with Henry Waltherson, a soldier companion in the Company to which he belonged, spending about three years in that community and devoting much time to recovering his health, which was badly shattered from his war experiences. On March 4, 1866, he remembers doing almost his first work after his return from the war, cutting that day half a cord of wood for Walter Palmer, of Plainfield; on account of this, he suffered a partial relapse, but recovered his strength gradually. In the summer of 1868 he was in the employ of the Widow Coleman, on her farm in South Coventry, and the year following he was employed in Plainfield. After his first marriage, in 1870, Mr. Martin made his home in South Coventry, where he lived a number of years. It was in 1878 that he removed to Willimantic, and here he has lived to the present time. During the last ten years he has been engaged in the timber business, buying wooded lots, and cutting the timber for the purpose of putting on the market ties, poles, piles, and cord wood. Mr. Martin has also done a general trucking business since his coming to Willimantic.

In 1870 Mr. Martin was married in South Coventry to Miss Minnie Grant, a daughter of George and Mary (Curtiss) Grant, and to this union were born three children: Mary, a widow, lives in Providence; Emma died in childhood; and Betsy lives in Bozrahville, Conn. Mrs. Martin died, and Mr. Martin wedded, for his second wife, Miss Isabella Harvey, of Willimantic, a daughter of Alfred and Amelia (Kenyon) Harvey. To this marriage have come the following children: Clitus M., Lawrence and Eva Belle.

Mr. Martin has always been a Republican, and is an honorable and upright man. The lack of an early education has been a drawback in his career, and more than once advantage has been taken of his simple and straightforward character, so that he has lost considerable money by being made the victim of the dishonest plans and schemes of those who have sought to cheat him. All his life he has been an honest and industrious man, and has had his full share of the ups and downs of life. Much credit is due him for his determined spirit and indomitable will.

CHARLES S. FULLER is one of the leading citizens of Somers, Tolland county, and descends from an old Connecticut family, which is mentioned more fully elsewhere. He is a great-grandson of Solomon L. Fuller, a Revolutionary soldier, and a grandson of Solomon Fuller.

Solomon Fuller, father of Charles S., was born April 3, 1817, in Somers, about one mile south of the Center, where he was reared a farmer boy. His education, begun in the district school, was continued at Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass., and was concluded at a law school at Chillicothe, Ohio, where he was a fellow student of many famous men of the last generation, including the late Hon. Allen G. Thurman, who was known as the "Old Roman." For a time Mr. Fuller practiced law in Chillicothe, and then coming back to Somers, engaged in both farming and in the practice of law as consulting attorney. Soon after returning to Somers he was elected town clerk and judge of probate, and held these positions for some four years, at the end of which time he resigned to go to Olmstead, Iowa, where he had a saw mill and was engaged in lumbering for about two years. Then, disposing of his business interests in the West Mr. Fuller returned to Somers where he was again elected town clerk, treasurer, and judge of probate. These positions he held until his death, which occurred June 4, 1896, after a brief illness. Mr. Fuller was a Republican, and represented the town of Somers in the General Assembly in 1863.

Solomon Fuller married Mary Killam, of Enfield, daughter of Lot and Tabitha Pease (Potter) Killam, who died Dec. 2, 1898, at the age of eighty years. Their children were: Edward L., born in November, 1852, who died Oct. 5, 1875; and Charles S., whose name introduces this article.

Charles S. Fuller was born March 23, 1855, in the house in which he is living at the present writing. His education was obtained in the public schools and the academy at Wilbraham, Mass., which he attended three years. Leaving school at the end of that time he was a clerk for C. A. Arnold, at Somers and was later interested in a mercantile enterprise at North Wilbraham, Mass., as a member of the firm of E. B. Gates & Co. There he remained four years, returning to Somers in 1886 to open the "Elmwood House" and engage in the hotel and livery business. The livery was connected with the stage line between Somers and Hazardville station, which has been conducted by Mr. Fuller for a number of years. When his father died Mr. Fuller disposed of the hotel, and was chosen to succeed his father in the various public positions which he had so long and ably filled.

Charles S. Fuller was married, Dec. 18, 1877, to Minnie I. Champin, of New York City, daughter of William and Emily (Ripley) Champin. To this union came one child, Ernest Solomon, born Sept. 1, 1879. He was educated in the high school at Somers and the Monson (Mass.) Academy and Wesleyan University, which latter institution he attended two years. He is now a member of the firm of Needham & Fuller, merchants of Somers. Mr. Fuller and his son are both members of the Congregational Church at Somers.

The parents of Mrs. Fuller are both deceased. She is a descendant on her mother's side of the emigrant ancestor, William Ripley, who came from England in 1632.

FRANK W. BENNETT, who is numbered among the most representative men of Dayville, has been in the employ of the Dayville Woolen Company since a boy, and in 1901-1902 was serving as a member of the board of selectmen of Killingly, Windham county.

Deacon William Kelley, a descendant of John Kelley, the first of the name in America, an early settler in Massachusetts, was born in Barrington, R. I., in 1747. He was a carpenter and a farmer, and removed to Killingly, Conn., in 1789. During the Revolutionary war he bore arms for the rising republic, and died in 1831, his remains being laid to rest in the old cemetery at Putnam, Conn. He was married to his wife, Rebecca, in Barrington, R. I., and their children were: (1) Ebenezer, ancestor of Frank W. Bennett; (2) James, who had a son, Adrian; (3) Joseph; and (4) John, who served as deputy sheriff, and died at the age of forty-four years.

Ebenezer Kelley, the son of William Kelley, was born in 1780, and died in 1864. During the war of 1812, he served as captain in the American army. His wife, Esther, was a daughter of Neil and Esther (Smith) Alexander. For four terms he filled a chair in the General Assembly. In his business he was very successful, being a contractor and builder and having charge of the erection of a number of the mills at Chestnut Hill. He accumulated quite a fortune for his day, his estate being worth at his demise some $10,000. His political relations were with the Democratic party, and he was counted one of the leading men of the day.

To Ebenezer and Esther Kelley were born the following: (1) Norman, died at the age of fifty-six; he carried on a mill and married Esther Jencks. (2) Calista married Henry Dexter, who attained distinction as an artist and sculptor. They resided in Cambridge, Mass. The statue of Gen. Warren that stands at the entrance of Bunker Hill monument is Mr. Dexter's production. Calista died in 1857, and is buried in Mount Auburn cemetery, Cambridge, Mass. (3) Jane married Cyra Bassett, lived for a number of years in Southbridge and died in Killingly. (4) Esther married Leavens Jencks, and lived at Dayville; three of her six children are dead. (5) Abby married Samson Bennett, and became the mother of Frank W. Bennett. (6) John was born in Killingly, Sept. 8, 1821, and was a member of the Legislature in 1867, and again in 1877. He held various town offices, and for seven years, beginning in July, 1886, was county commissioner. In 1842 he married Eliza, a daughter of Norman Curtis, by whom he had the following children: Helen, Norman, William P., George S. and Mary Jane, who is now dead. In politics Mr. Kelley was a Republican. He belonged to the Congregational Church, and served in the war of the Rebellion.

William P. Kelley was born in Killingly, Conn., Oct. 28, 1848, and his early education was acquired in the district school. He attended the Danielson high school, and took a course in a commercial college. For some three years he was engaged in a mercantile career at Versailles, Conn., where he filled the position of postmaster for a portion of that time. In 1882 he came to Dayville, where he kept a general store for about four years, when he bought the store of M. & A. Wood, and consolidated the two. In 1876 he was married to Anna F., a daughter of Rev. A. H. Bennett, and their children are as follows: John B., Mary E. and Helen M. Kelley.

Mr. Kelley is a staunch Republican, and is a hard worker for the success of that party. When he represented the town of Killingly in the State Legislature, he served on the committee on Railroads, but was best known as the persistent advocate of the Factory Inspection Bill, a measure strongly opposed in both branches of the Legislature. It finally passed by the narrow margin of three votes, Mr. Kelley being highly complimented by the friends of the measure for his hard work in its behalf. He was appointed Factory Inspector by Gov. Lounsbury, and held that position during his administration. Mr. Kelley was again a representative in 1893, and served on the committee on Incorporations.

Samson Bennett, the grandfather of Frank W., was a resident of Brooklyn, Conn., where he was engaged as a miller and in farming, and where he died. His remains rest in Sterling cemetery. His children were: (1) Mahala, who married Matheson Hopkins; (2) Matilda, who married Luther Young; (3) Dolly, who married George A. Niles; (4) Esther, wife of Charles Durkee, of Brooklyn, Conn.; (5) Hannah, who married a Mr. Roberts, and went to the West; and (6) Samson.

Samson Bennett, the father of Frank W., was a native of Brooklyn, Conn., and when a young man learned the mason's trade. Soon after his marriage to Abby R. Kelley he removed to Killingly, Conn., and for many years was the leading contractor in that portion of the State. He was universally respected for his sterling honesty and fearlessness. He died at Killingly, Sept. 14, 1891, at seventy-four years of age. His wife, Abby R. Kelly, died Jan. 14, 1892, aged seventy-five years. The children of this union were: (1) Frederick Alexander, born in 1840. He early developed considerable artistic talent, and was a brilliant scholar. Following his artistic bent, he studied at Cooper Institute, New York, and learned steel engraving. Before finishing the course he felt called to serve his country, and enlisted in the 149th N. Y. V. I. Soon after reaching the front he was wounded in the campaign before Atlanta, Ga., taken to the field hospital, and then transported to the general hospital at Chattanooga, Tenn., where he died Aug. 4, 1864. Those that knew him in his young manhood tell of him as an exceptionally fine young man in Christian character and attainments. The reports from his captain and associates in the army were that he proved himself a good soldier, and was wounded while nobly doing his duty. (2) Herbert W., born in 1851, died at Killingly, Conn., Nov. 17, 1865. (3) Frank W., whose name appears at the opening of this article.

Frank W. Bennett was born in the town of Killingly, Conn., Aug. 30, 1859, and secured his education in the Killingly schools, attending one year the high school in Exeter, N. H., and taking a business course at Eastman's Business College. His first work was in the office of the Sabin L. Sayles Manufacturing Company at Dayville, when he was but fifteen years old. Since that time except in 1880 and 1881, he has remained in the office of this factory though it has changed hands several times. In 1880 and 1881 he was in the employ of T. E. Hopkins, a manufacturer at Elmville, in the town of Killingly.

Mr. Bennett began his business career as a young lad in a very subordinate position, but by close application and strict attention so mastered all the details of the office work and showed such merit that he was soon advanced to positions of trust and responsibility, becoming bookkeeper and paying clerk while still a very young man. When the concern became the Dayville Woolen Company he was made assistant treasurer. He continues to hold a position of trust though the property is now passing through a change of ownership.

Mr. Bennett was married May 20, 1885, to Carrie W., a daughter of Asa and Ellen Williams, of Killingly. To Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have come three children: Ruth, born Aug. 2, 1890; Wayland W., Dec. 2, 1891; and Merrill Kelley, Feb. 13, 1897.

Mr. Bennett is a staunch Republican, and has always taken a lively interest in home affairs. He has been auditor for the town, and in 1901-1902 served on the board of selectmen, his careful management of his employers' business warranting the belief that public interests are safe in his hands. Mr. Bennett belongs to Assawaga Lodge, No. 20, A. O. U. W., and John Lyon Lodge, No. 45, K. P. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bennett attend the Congregational Church.

JAMES BREEN, one of the best known mill men of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., has held the position of first boss spinner at the New Springville Mill ever since it started, and has been connected with the Hockanum Co. for almost thirty-five years. He holds the record for men in his line, which speaks well for his reliability as well as his skill. James Breen began life with few advantages in the way of family, fortune or education, and what he has acquired and the responsible position which he has reached, are due to his own efforts.

Mr. Breen was born June 15, 1843, on a farm in Alleen, five miles from the town of Tipperary, in County Tipperary, Ireland. He was a son of Michael and Johanna (Ryan) Breen, the latter from Limerick, the former from Tipperary, where his people had lived for generations. In May, 1849, the family consisting of the parents and four children, Dennis, James, Sarah and Michael, sailed from Queenstown in the vessel "Sarah," and after a short voyage of twenty-one days landed in Boston. Their destination was Webster, Mass., as the grandmother, Sarah Ryan, had located there the year previously.

Michael Breen went to work on the farm of Timothy Aldrich, which was located midway between Webster and Oxford, where he remained four and one-half years. He then took charge of the Graham farm, located near Webster; removing to East Webster he entered the employ of Nelson Slater and during life continued in charge of his large dairy barn. His services were thoroughly appreciated by his employers, as he cared for the valuable stock with judgment and increased its value accordingly. The death of Mr. Breen occurred at the age of sixty-six, his decease taking place in the same house, in North Webster, where his wife had passed away a few years before. The family consisted of: Dennis, who was killed at Lynchburg, Va., on June 18, 1864. He was a member of Co. H, 34th M. V. I., in which he was color sergeant, under Gen. Hunter. His death was caused by a rifle shot from a sharpshooter. James. Michael, who died in Lynn, Mass., a shoemaker by trade, who served in the Civil war, enlisting from Boston in the heavy artillery, and serving through the war. Sarah, the widow of Mr. McHugh. These additional children were born in America: John, deceased; Simon, a resident of New York; Johanna, of Webster; and Patrick and Maggie, who died when children.

James Breen was a boy of six when his parents brought him to the United States, and at Oxford Plains, Mass., he attended the first and only school he ever entered, but his natural ability and intelligent interest in people and events have given him an education which has served to make him a successful business man and one esteemed and respected by the best in the land. When but ten years of age work in the cotton mill was his lot, and in an establishment of this kind, in North Webster, he started as "back-boy" in cotton spinning, at a salary of one dollar per week. The days were thirteen hours long, beginning work at 5 A. M. and quitting at 7 P. M., with severe penalties for tardiness. Later James entered the mills at East Webster and was promoted to the position of "piecer" and finally to that of spinner, and by 1858 had become expert enough to be trusted to run the Sharps and Roberts operators in the old Green Mill, at East Webster, at five dollars per week.

Encouraged by his advancement James went to work on hand-mules, where there were 1,600 spindles to the pair, making yarn for paper cambric. He was not engaged in woolen spinning until 1861 when he went to South Webster, where he remained until Feb. 8, 1866, when he came to Rockville, where he started as a boss spinner in the new Florence Mill, working the first "Jacks" in that mill. About nineteen months later Mr. Breen went to the Hockanum Mill as boss spinner, remaining there until he became the first boss spinner in the New Springville Mill, where he has been ever since, a long record of honest work to his own and his employers' advantage.

The first marriage of James Breen was Dec. 29, 1869, at St. Bernard's Church, to Bridget A. Dowling, a daughter of Michael and Elizabeth (McDerby) Dowling, the latter of whom was born in the Province of Leinster, Queens Co., Ireland, in 1848, and with her mother and others of the family came to America, settling first in Ellington, later in Rockville, Conn., where both parents died. Mrs. Breen died June 10, 1889, and was buried in St. Bernard cemetery, her children being: Margaret, born in 1870, married William J. Norton, of Rockville; Francis S., born in 1871, married Mary Quinn, of Warehouse Point and lives in Rockville; William J., born in 1875, married Harriet C. McLagen, and they live in Hartford; James J., born in 1877, married Mable F. Juno, and resides in this city; George Ambrose, born in 1879, a loom fixer; Alice Mary, born in 1880; and three other children, who died in infancy. On June 29, 1890, Mr. Breen was married a second time, to Mrs. Margaret Bradley, a native of County Cork, Ireland, born in 1852, who first married Dennis Bradley, in Putnam, Conn., and was the mother of one child by that union, Margaret, who was born Dec. 22, 1881, and who lives in the home of Mr. Breen.

Mr. Breen is politically in sympathy with the Democratic party, but is no office seeker, although he has always been much interested in all the public affairs in his city. He served for two years as fire commissioner and at one time was chief of the volunteer fire department. Socially he is connected with the order of Foresters and is one of the most consistent members of St. Bernard's Church.

The first home which Mr. Breen built for his family was erected in 1878 on Morrison street, and he still owns that property. In 1893 he erected a large tenement house on West Main street and bought others, so that he now owns eight tenements and three store rooms, all of which are in good condition, well located, and rent for enough to very materially add to his annual income.

Mr. Breen is a keen business man, as well as a fine mechanic and is universally regarded as one of the most efficient men in his line of work that can be found through New England. With it all he is a plain man, who does his full duty to family, church and city, and is one of the most valuable citizens of Rockville.

DENNIS MURPHY, agent for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company at Scotland, Windham county, and a prominent agriculturist of the town, is a well known and prominent Irish-American. He was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, in 1830, a son of Daniel and Margaret (Tooley) Murphy, both natives of the same county, where they were engaged in farming and where they died. They were communicants of the Roman Catholic Church.

Dennis Murphy received a limited education in the national schools of his native county, and because of his own limited opportunities in that line has learned the value of an education. He has become a warm advocate of good schools and has given his children the best advantages. Mr. Murphy remained on the home farm until he was fourteen years old, when he went to Yorkshire, England, and worked with his brother Patrick, at gardening. Patrick afterward accompanied his brother to America, and died in Willimantic leaving a family. After spending a year in England, Dennis Murphy embarked on a sailing vessel at Liverpool, and after eight weeks on the water landed at New York. From there he came to Norwalk, Conn., where he was employed as a laborer on the construction of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. He remained at this until a strike occurred, and not wishing to be idle he found employment on the Hartford, Providence & Fishkill Railroad, on construction work. When the station was opened at Scotland, he was made its agent, and for fifty years he has faithfully performed his duties, giving satisfaction to the company and to the public. In 1881 he bought a tract of 225 acres of land in the town of Scotland, and has greatly improved it. This farm is now conducted by the eldest son Daniel T. Mr. Murphy is well known and ranks high in the estimation of the entire community. Politically he is a Democrat but he has never sought office. The family attend the Roman Catholic Church at Baltic.

In February, 1865, Mr. Murphy was married in Moosup, Conn., to Catharine Clark, who was born in County Meath, Ireland, daughter of Thaddeus and Mary (Farrell) Clark. Six children came to gladden their home: Daniel T., is mentioned below; John D., who is engaged in the meat business at Providence, R. I., married Susan Downey, of New London, Conn.; Sylvester, is at home; Mary, who was educated in the schools at Scotland and at Holy Family Convent at Baltic, and who successfully taught school several years, is now the wife of William Buckley, of Norwich; Catherine, who was educated in the schools at Scotland, and at Holy Family Convent at Baltic, has taught school in Scotland and Margaret, died at the age of four years.

DANIEL T. MURPHY, eldest son in the above family, was born in the town of Scotland. His preliminary education was received in the district school of his native town, and in the Holy Family Convent at Baltic, and in Windham. He completed his education at St. Michael's College, Toronto, Canada, where he spent six years, and from which he was graduated in 1891. After returning home his first employment was on the Providence milk train, and in this he continued for six years, when he left to take charge of the home farm. He has made a thorough study of agriculture, and has put into execution the most practical methods of up-to-date farming. His well cared-for fields, neat buildings and general air of prosperity well attest his industry and skill. He is very popular with all classes, his simple unassuming manners and genial disposition winning and retaining many friends. Politically he is a Democrat, and he has taken an active part in the work of his party. He has been registrar of voters and a member of the school board. In 1902 he was nominated by his party for the State Legislature and while he was defeated by seven votes, he polled the largest vote ever cast for his party in that district, running far ahead of the ticket.

OSCAR OLNEY TANNER was born in Willimantic, Conn., April 4, 1858. His ancestry more than two centuries, both direct and collateral, has been American. Through the female branch he is a lineal descendant of Hon. Joseph Jenks, who was governor of Rhode Island from 1727 to 1731.

His grandfather, Warren Tanner, was born in the latter State, eventually engaged in the livery business at Centerville, where he married Almira Jenks, and in 1852 moved with his family and business to Willimantic, Conn. There he built up the largest livery establishment in Windham county and successfully conducted the same until his business retirement shortly prior to his death.

Oscar Fitzallyn Tanner, son of Warren and father of Oscar Olney, was born in Centerville, R. I., where he attended school until seventeen years of age. He then accompanied his parents to Willimantic and was connected with his father's business until 1858. He married Nancy Catherine Gavitt, who was born in Willimantic, a daughter of John C. Gavitt and Elizabeth Healey, both born in North Kingston, R. I. Her great-grandfather was seriously wounded in the Revolutionary battle of Princeton—compelling an amputation of his leg. Her mother died at the advanced age of ninety-seven years.

There was born to Oscar Fitzallyn and Nancy Catherine Tanner, a son, Oscar Olney, and a short time subsequent to the latter's birth, Oscar Fitzallyn Tanner, when but twenty-two years old, was accidentally killed on the Hartford, Providence and Fishkill Railroad. He left a widow and this one child.

Oscar Olney Tanner graduated from the famous Natchaug high school, and immediately entered upon a business career in C. N. Andrew's hardware store at Willimantic. After two years experience with that firm he accepted the position of salesman and collector for the installment house of Boyle Brothers, traveling all over New England. When the firm in 1880 located in Boston, Mr. Tanner was placed in charge of an office, and later, when Boyle Brothers became the leading credit house of New England, Mr. Tanner was appointed manager of the collection department, with an active staff of over 150 clerks and collectors. He retained the management until 1896, winning the confidence of employers and patrons and the permanent respect of his subordinates.

Upon severing his connection with Boyle Brothers Mr. Tanner returned to Willimantic and was immediately elected a member of the common council. His varied experiences, business tact and affable manners attracted public attention and approval as councilman, and in Dec., 1897, he was elected the first Democratic mayor the city ever had, by the largest majority in its history. His administration received loyal support from all classes, irrespective of party, and was unprecedented for municipal improvements and economical management. A permanent system for building macadam streets was inaugurated, the water system, for the first time, was placed upon a paying basis, sewer construction was intelligently planned and sewer assessments promptly collected, a sinking fund to meet bonded indebtedness was established, and the taxes levied were for the first time in many years more than sufficient to meet running municipal expenses. Mr. Tanner may well feel proud of, and the tax-payers grateful for, the mayoralty record he established.

Fraternally Mr. Tanner is a Mason, being a member of Baalbec Lodge, F. and A. M., of East Boston, Mass. He is also a member of Lodge No. 19, B. P. O. E., of Hartford, Conn. He has traveled extensively both sides of the Atlantic, having visited England and Ireland twice, and has a large acquaintance in London. He is also well-known in the Dominion, particularly in St. John and Halifax. Mr. Tanner is a great admirer of athletic sports and is a baseball enthusiast, having been connected with a number of first-class clubs. He is very popular with all classes and retains the high esteem and sincere regard of all who know him.

RILEY B. WITTER, a prominent and leading business man of Brooklyn, Windham Co., Conn., was born in Hampton, same county, but has lived in Brooklyn since his third year, when he came here with his parents. His ancestry may be termed American for six generations before him.

Ebenezer and Joseph Witter came from Scotland to settle in America. Joseph died in Rhode Island. Deacon Ebenezer Witter was born in Scotland in 1668. Coming to America he located in Preston, New London Co., Conn., where he died in 1712. His wife, Dorothy, survived him until 1750, dying at the age of eighty-four years. She was the mother of three sons and four daughters. One of these Ebenezer, was married in 1729 to Elizabeth Brown, born in 1702. They resided in Preston, where they had fifteen children, of whom Deacon Nathan Witter was one. He was born in Preston in 1731. He moved to Brooklyn in 1754, after marrying Keziah Branch, and located on the farm now owned and occupied by Joseph B. Stetson, one of his descendants. Deacon Nathan cleared this land and farmed it until his death, at the age of ninety-one, Oct. 30, 1822. His wife had passed away Oct. 25, 1806, aged seventy-two years. Both are buried in the Witter cemetery, for which they gave the land, in the western part of Brooklyn. They had thirteen children. Of these Deacon Nathan Witter, Jr., was born in 1760. He was a farmer and lived on the home farm, where he died, Nov. 14, 1856. He married Mary Fuller, who died May 24, 1837, aged seventy-seven years. She was the mother of six children, of whom Nathan Witter, grandfather of Riley B., was born in November, 1790. His entire life was spent in Brooklyn, in whose district schools he received his education. He taught school for several years when a young man. His farm was located south of the home farm, now occupied by Joseph B. Stetson. He was a successful and well-to-do farmer, frugal and industrious. He died Nov. 5, 1861, and is buried in the Witter cemetery. Politically he was a Whig and later a Republican. He married Abigail Litchfield, a native of Brooklyn, born April 13, 1797, died Oct. 30, 1886. The children of this marriage were: Nathan P., father of Riley B.; Emily Eliza, Aug. 25, 1823, the wife of Addison Mascraft, of Putnam, Conn.; James H., Feb. 6, 1834, a farmer, now residing in Canterbury, near the Brooklyn town line, with his wife, who was Sarah H. Taylor. He is more fully noticed elsewhere in this work.

Nathan Pierce Witter, father of Riley B., was born in Brooklyn on the old home farm and educated in the district schools. He remained at home on the farm until after his marriage, when he rented an adjoining farm and later another in Hampton, whereon he resided for a few years. Coming to Brooklyn again he purchased the farm now occupied by his son Nathan Wolcott Witter and lived on it the rest of his life. He was an extensive farmer, a large land holder, and the greatest corn grower in the town. His activity continued until his death, which occurred Sept. 20, 1892, from apoplexy, the stroke falling while he was in bed, in apparently the best of health. His remains are buried in Brooklyn. He was a Republican in his politics, but did not seek office. He married Harriet Hawkins, of Brooklyn, born Dec. 9, 1816, died Dec. 30, 1888. She was the daughter of Daniel Hawkins, also of Brooklyn, and the mother of three sons and two daughters: (1) Riley B., of whom especially we write; (2) Nathan Wolcott, born March 28, 1849, married Almanza Shipee, of Hampton, and now farming his father's place as noticed above; (3) Harriet A., born March 3, 1851, now the wife of W. B. Gardner, a master-carpenter at Salesville, R. I.; (4) Olive, born Dec. 20, 1852, died Oct. 7, 1853; (5) George Albert, born Jan. 26, 1857, married Ellen Shipee, of Hampton, and lives in Brooklyn.

Riley B. Witter was born July 11, 1847. He was educated in the public schools. He worked on the home farm until 1876, when he moved to the village and engaged in the business of teaming and selling agricultural implements. In 1878 he bought the Timothy Herrick place, where he has since lived. He built a large modern house and a new barn in 1894, and remodeled the other buildings, making many valuable improvements and adding much to the attractiveness of what is one of the prettiest places in Brooklyn.

Mr. Witter does a large teaming and general jobbing business and is an extensive dealer in agricultural implements, grass seeds, fertilizers, etc. He is also a license auctioneer. He is a Republican in politics, has served as tax-collector for several years and on the board of relief for nearly twenty years. He is a charter member of both Mortlake Council, O. U. A. M., of Brooklyn, and of Chauncey F. Cleveland Colony of Pilgrim Fathers. He has been connected with the Baptist Church for over thirty years, having been a member of the society committee for most of the past twenty years, and he is also one of the trustees.

Mrs. Riley B. Witter is also a member of the Baptist Church and its organist. She is Mr. Witter's second wife. The first wife was Ellen Clapp, of Hampton, daughter of Deacon David Clapp, born Feb. 14, 1851, married to Mr. Witter Dec. 13, 1876, and died Feb. 13, 1879. The present Mrs. Witter married her husband Dec. 28, 1881. She was Rebecca C. Clark, daughter of Deacon Thomas G. Clark, of Canterbury, mentioned elsewhere. Mr. and Mrs. Witter have one child, a daughter, Helen Louise, born June 26, 1892. She is named after the authoress, Louise Chandler Moulton, a cousin of her mother.

SERGEANT. HENRY HALL, a veteran of the Civil war, lives quietly in the town of his birth, after a laborious and active life. He was born in Plainfield, April 19, 1818, and though nearly eighty-six years old, has vivid memories of events three-quarters of a century ago. One of his early recollections is of shaking hands with Gen. Lafayette, in October, 1824, on the steps of the old "Eaton Hotel." The hardships endured by Sergeant Hall during the war of the Rebellion have left their impression upon him, though a slight limp and a trifling deafness are the only evidence that he has passed the allotted time of life.

Mr. Hall was born in the house now owned and occupied by Judge Waldo Tillinghast, and attended school in Flat Rock and Stone Hill Districts. When he was eighteen he began driving stage between Brooklyn and Norwich, a business which was only discontinued by the introduction of the railroad. For several years he was employed in Providence by Charles H. Childs and a Mr. Baxter. After the completion of the Providence & Worcester railroad he was employed by that company for ten years, advancing step by step until he became a conductor, and had a train for some six years.

Henry Hall became a soldier early in life, serving two years in the Seminole war in Florida. He enlisted in the Union army in February, 1862, becoming a member of Company D, 1st C. H. A., holding the position of sergeant until his discharge, March 1, 1865. During these memorable years he took part in several of the bloodiest battles of the war, a few of the engagements in which he participated being Yorktown, Hancock Court House, Gaines' Mill, Malvern Hill, Fredericksburg, Cold Harbor and Fair Harbor. At Malvern Hill he was run over by a piece of artillery, a thirty-pound Parrot gun passing over his left ankle, and crushing the foot so badly that amputation seemed necessary. However, the waters of the James river saved his foot, though there is no strength in it now. As it was, he was laid up in the hospital for some time, and when he returned to his company he was on detached service until his discharge.

For nine years following the war Mr. Hall was employed in the shops of the New Jersey Railroad & Transportation Company at Newark. Returning to Plainfield, he took up house and sign painting, an occupation at which he was engaged until a few years ago, when he gave up active employment, and is now living quietly in a neat cottage near the Plainfield postoffice. In politics he is an independent Republican, and is a member of Kilborn Post, G. A. R., of Central Village, Connecticut.

Mr. Hall was married, in Pomfret, to Juliette Gallup, who is now deceased, and to this marriage were born two sons: (1) Willis A., born Oct. 20, 1843, enlisted in Company H, 9th C. V. I., was taken sick and was discharged from the service at New Orleans. His health was never fully restored, and he died in Massachusetts Oct. 18, 1877, being at the time of his death an engineer on the Boston & Gardiner railroad. He married Belle Cord, of Plainfield. (2) Ernest C., the second son, was born June 17, 1862, is a druggist, and lives in New York, where he married and has a family.

Mr. Hall possesses an oil painting executed by a brother, and which he prizes very highly. It represents one of the battles of the Civil war, and shows a bloody engagement, as seen by one who participated.

MYRON WINSLOW LITTLE, a descendant of one of the old families of Columbia, and a successful farmer, traces his ancestry back to Thomas Little, who came to Plymouth, Mass., from Devonshire, England, in 1630.

In 1633 Thomas Little married Ann Warren, daughter of Richard Warren, who came over in the "Mayflower" in 1620, but whose wife and children came over in the "Fortune" in 1623. Thomas Little was a lawyer and much engaged in public affairs; had a coat of arms and kept servants. After buying several hundred acres of land in Marshfield, Mass., he removed there, in 1650, and his descendants still occupy this old homestead. His death occurred in 1671, and he left several children.

(II) Ephraim Little, son of Thomas, born in 1650, married Mary Sturtevant in 1672, and died in 1717.

(III) John Little, third son of Ephraim, was a magistrate and a man of influence and wealth, owning four stores. At his death his estate was valued at 4345 pounds, 15 shillings. His birth occurred in 1681, and he married Constant Forbes, of Little Compton, R. I. Of his eleven children, eight were living at the time of his death, in 1767, aged eighty-six. To Forbes Little he gave a farm in Little Compton, R. I.; to his sons William and John he gave farms in Lebanon, Conn. To each of his daughters, Anna White and Ruth Oakman, he gave a negro slave; to his three sons, Ephraim, Thomas and Samuel, he gave each a farm in Marshfield, Massachusetts.

(IV) John, son of John (1), settled in Lebanon about 1740, and had these children: Gamaliel; John; Consider; Otis; Rebecca; Faith; Mary; Charles and Charles (2), all born between 1742 and 1764.

(V) Consider, third son of John (2), born in 1746, married Rebecca Buckingham, born in 1755. She died Oct. 25, 1825, aged seventy-five, while her husband died Aug. 3, 1831, aged eighty-five. They had eight children, as follows: Samuel, born Aug. 18, 1774, died Sept. 22, 1853; Sarah B., born Dec. 29, 1777, died July 25, 1853, married Andrew Scovill; Mary, born Feb. 7, 1776, died Aug. 12, 1853, married a Lathrop, of Norwich, Conn.; Rebecca, born June 17, 1779, married Eleazer Dewey; Fanny, born March 3, 1781, died Sept. 12, 1794; Levi, born Dec. 1, 1781, died in 1854; George, born March 25, 1788, died April 6, 1864; Lydia, born March 20, 1791, died June 20, 1807.

(VI) Samuel Little, son of Consider, was born Aug. 18, 1774, and married Levina Richardson, who was born in 1777, married May 28, 1801, died on June 16, 1807, aged thirty. At her death she left: Levina, born May 11, 1802, died May 24, 1807; Samuel, born March 6, 1804, died Feb. 8, 1876; Anson, born June 20, 1806, died in Hebron, 1896. The father, Samuel, married again, June 23, 1809, his second choice being Jerusha Bailey, of Lebanon, Conn., by whom he had four children: Emily, born April 27, 1810, died June 14, 1830; Saxton B., born April 9, 1813, living in Meriden, Conn., married Sarah Morse Tacy; William Buckingham, born June 6, 1815, died Dec. 16, 1897, married Harriet N. Palmer, May 19, 1841; Rev. Charles, born Sept. 26, 1818, died in Lincoln, Neb., Aug. 20, 1892 (a graduate of Yale, he became a minister and missionary to Madura, India; he married Amelia Newton, of Sherburne, N. Y., who died July 14, 1848, and he then married Susan Robbins in September, 1853).

Grandfather Samuel Little, father of the above family, was a lifelong resident of Columbia. When a young man he followed the trade of a hatter, his place of business being a short distance south of the Green. Later he devoted his entire attention to farming and owned an extensive farm on Chestnut Hill. He was one of the active men of the town, always intrested in public affairs, a Whig in politics, and was widely known as a justice of the peace and as a member of the Congregational Church.

(VII) The father of Myron Winslow, William B. Little, grew up on the home farm and devoted almost his entire life to agricultural pursuits. When a young man he joined a surveying party and went to New York State, assisting in the survey for the Erie Canal. His farm was a fine one, consisting of 240 acres, which he largely improved. William B. Little married Harriet N. Palmer, a native of Vernon, Conn., a sister of Horatio L. Palmer, deceased, of Rockville, whose sketch appears elsewhere. Mrs. Little, although advanced in years, has retained her faculties to a remarkable degree.

William B. Little was a senator in 1854 and judge of probate for many years, and recognized as a man of strictest probity and integrity. The following family was born to Mr. and Mrs. William B. Little: Myron W.; Elliot Palmer, born July 3, 1844; Anna Maria, born June 23, 1846; Hubert, a contractor of Meriden, born Nov. 4, 1848, married Alice Brown, and as a second wife, Martha Williams, of Meriden; Alonzo, born April 17, 1851, on the old homestead, married Hattie Isham (see sketch elsewhere); Elbert Cornelius, born Oct. 24, 1853, secretary of Straight University of New Orleans, school for colored children, married (first) Anna Dewey and (second) Luella Hale; Prescott Palmer, of Manchester, express agent, born Sept. 16, 1856, married Eliza Clark, of Columbia; Payson Elliot, born Aug. 3, 1859, bookkeeper for Crane Bros., paper manufacturers of Dalton, Mass., married Emma Bascom.

Myron Winslow Little was born Oct. 11, 1842, attended the Chestnut Hill school and two terms at Bacon Academy, Colchester, then conducted by B. F. Parsons. Later, he began farming on the old homestead, and for many years has been located on his present farm on Chestnut Hill. Here he successfully carries on general farming, paying special attention to dairying. In politics he is a Republican, although not prominent in public affairs, and the entire family are consistent members of the Columbia Congregational Church. Mr. and Mrs. Little, as well as their daughter, Grace, are members of Columbia Grange, and Mr. Little joined the Lebanon Grange before the local order was organized.

On Nov. 15, 1869, Mr. Little was married to Emily A. Wright, a daughter of George Wright and Mersha (Downer) Wright. Grandfather Charles Wright married Betsy Barstow and had two brothers, Joel and Uriah. Charles Wright was a son of Seth Wright, the first of the name to locate in Columbia, coming there when twenty-one years of age. George Wright, who was born March 25, 1801, married May 12, 1824, Mersha M. Downer. She was a daughter of Rogers and Anne (Kinne) Downer, born March 12, 1805. George and Mersha (Downer) Wright had these children: Emily A., born July 7, 1825 (died Jan. 25, 1842); Elizabeth J., May 5, 1827; Charles H., April 18, 1834; Emily A. (2), Feb. 6, 1842, wife of Myron W. Little; Elizabeth J., who married Silas A. Holbrook April 10, 1850, died Jan. 29, 1891; Charles H., died Dec. 11, 1878; he had married, Nov. 25, 1858, Harriett E. Whittlesey. George Wright engaged in farming in Columbia, owned the farm directly across the street from the present house of Myron W. Little, and there Mrs. Little was born.

To Myron W. and Emily (Wright) Little were born: Louis Wright, April 29, 1873, employed in a grain store at East Hampton, Conn.; Grace Elizabeth, May 28, 1874, married Oct. 19, 1893, to Tressillion Tucker, a son of Joel Tucker, who resides in Columbia; Cora Palmer, Oct. 1, 1876, graduate of Willimantic high school, in class of 1894, and Willimantic Normal school, class of 1897, taught several years, married May 14, 1901, Henry B. Hutchins, of Columbia; William Elliott, Oct. 22, 1879, traveling salesman for Hodgman Rubber Co., of New York City, attended Middletown Business College; Leon George, April 3, 1885, attending Willimantic high school.

MARSHALL BOLIEAU. Among the successful and well-known citizens of Stafford, Tolland county, is Marshall Bolieau, who was born July 31, 1846, in Senacus Ayer, Quebec, Canada, a son of Charles and Zoia (Frazu) Bolieau, the former of whom was born Nov. 3, 1810, also in Canada, a son of Peter Bolieau, a native of France, who became a Canadian farmer and died there in 1812. His wife was Rosette Leland, and they had a family of fifteen children, of which family Charles is the only survivor.

Until he was twenty-one years of age, Charles Bolieau remained in Canada, having been employed during these years in a sawmill. In 1839 he moved to Palmer, Mass., and was employed there in the Thorndyke Co.'s factory for a number of years, not locating in Stafford until 1861. Here he was employed for almost ten years in the George M. Ives cotton mill, but in 1870, he became associated with Smith & Cooley, and here he has since remained, being a most indispensable man in many lines of work, particularly in assorting flocks, etc.

Charles Bolieau was married, in 1839, to Zoia Frazu, who was also born in Canada, and who died in Stafford, in April, 1900, at the age of eighty-four years. Their children numbered thirteen, viz.: Zelda, who died at the age of four years; Peter, born in 1839, who died in 1882, in Stafford, where he was the boss carder in what was the Granite mill; John, who was born in 1841, and is a mechanic and a resident of Stafford; Marshall, of this sketch; Joseph, who was born in 1847, and is an engineer with Smith & Cooley, of this place; George, who was born in 1849, and is employed in the Phoenix Woolen Co.'s mill, at Hydeville, Stafford; Henry, who was born in 1850, and is employed with Smith & Cooley; Louis, who died in infancy; Amelia, who was born in 1852, and is married and lives in Salem, Mass.; Charles, who was born in 1855, and is engaged in the express business in Stafford; Celenda, who died at the age of two years; John T., who was born in 1860, and is employed with Smith & Cooley; and Napoleon, who was born in 1862, and is employed with Rawitzer Bros. Charles Bolieau, the father of the above family is without doubt, one of the most remarkably well preserved men for his years to be found in New England; while well along in his ninety-third year he is a wage earner, and bids fair to round out a century and more.

MARSHALL BOLIEAU

The educational advantages afforded Marshall Bolieau were of the most limited character, and after the family had removed from Canada and located at Franklin, Vt., although only nine years of age, he left home to find a career for himself. It was not long before he found a good home with a farmer by the name of Maynard Felton, and with him he remained for three years. His father owned some land in Canada, and when he went back to that country, Marshall accompanied him and attended school there for one winter. He then came back to the United States, locating at Thordike, Mass., where he worked for a short time in a cotton mill, and then spent three years in agricultural pursuits. In 1861 Mr. Bolieau came to Stafford and worked in various departments in the Granite mills, for a period of five years, leaving there to accept a position with the Converseville Woolen Co., and for three years managed their dye house, later taking charge of the transportation department, in which he remained for six years. He then came back to the Granite mill, and was the second hand in the weaving room for several years.

In 1870 Mr. Bolieau started in the trucking business in which he has been unusually successful. In August, 1900, he purchased the entire business of a competitor, E. N. Washburn, and is now thoroughly equipped for all kinds of trucking.

On July 25, 1867, Mr. Bolieau was united in marriage to Miss Edna M. Puffer, of Stafford, a daughter of Elijah and Caroline (Trumbull) Puffer. For many years he kept a shoe store in this place and the family is well and favorably known. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bolieau are members of Mayflower Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah, of Rockville, and he is one of the prominent 32d degree Masons, belonging to Ionic Lodge, Orient Chapter of Stafford Springs, Adoniram Council, No. 14, of Rockville, St. John's Commandery, of Williamantic, Norwich Consistory, and Phoenix Temple, of Mystic Shrine of Hartford. In the orders I. O. O. F. and A. O. U. W., he is valued and takes an active part. In politics our subject is a staunch Republican from principle, for he has never been willing to accept any political office, although many have been offered him, and no one could serve the public more acceptably. Both he and his wife belong to the Methodist Church, in which this estimable lady is very prominent, being a devoted and useful member of the Ladies Aid and the Missionary societies. As one of the highly esteemed citizens of Stafford, Mr. Bolieau enjoys a leading position in the business world in this community, his industrious and exemplary life winning him many friends in social circles also.

ARTHUR B. DAVIS, who has for a number of years been ranked among the substantial farmers in the town of Ellington, Tolland county, has developed very extensive real estate interests and is known as one of the leading stockmen of his part of the county.

Avery Davis, the grandfather of Arthur B., was born in Willington, Conn.; he moved to the town of Stafford, when he became a man of mature years, and there followed farming all his life. He died at the age of sixty-eight years. He was a Democrat, and prominent in local affairs, had held several of the town offices and taken a leading part in the affairs of the Congregational Church. His wife, Hannah Lyon, was born in Stafford, daughter of Deacon Samuel Lyon, and died about four years previous to the death of her husband. To Avery and Hannah (Lyon) Davis were born the following children: (1) Charles, a farmer, was also engaged in mercantile business in North Haven, where he died. (2) Eliza, the wife of Sanford Le Doyt, resided in Stafford. (3) Mary lived to be seventy-four years of age and never married. (4) Edward was married to Betsy Augur, and lived and died a farmer in the town of Hampden. (5) Samuel, who was married to Emily Mansfield, was a farmer in Hampden, and moved to New Haven, where he spent his last days. (6) William died when he was a young man. (7) John.

John Davis, the youngest member of the above family, was born Jan. 23, 1826, in Stafford, Conn., where he attended the public school and devoted his time to the cultivation of the farm until he was twenty-one years old. At that time he went to Rockville where he was engaged for a brief period as a teamster for Frank Wells, until his services were again needed on the home farm in Stafford. When his father sold this place he went back to Rockville with John and bought a twenty-acre tract on the outskirts of the village where they engaged in farming and teaming and also dealt in milk. The father saw that the city of Rockville, rapidly and steadily growing, had a brilliant future and that the most desirable building lots were to be found on his farm. He bought additional land and began the work of local improvement. His first enterprise was the laying out of Talcott avenue, and then of Davis street and Florence street. These lots sold rapidly and well, and, with the exception of Florence street, are now included in the city limits.

All the enterprises of Mr. Davis in his community proved extremely remunerative, and at the time of his death he was known as one of the most substantial farmers and business men of the day. His death, which was quite sudden and unexpected, occurred Jan. 11, 1899. A Democrat, he never sought or held office, but voted for the general good of the community. With his wife he belonged to the Union Congregational Church of Rockville. Aurelia Allen, his wife, was born Nov. 28, 1826, in Ellington, and was a daughter of Joseph and Penelope (West) Allen. Their children were as follows: (1) Willie, who died at the age of fifteen years. (2) Arthur B. (3) Edward, born Feb. 4, 1856, had two wives, Dena Marshall and Kate Hall. He was a farmer in Rockville, and had two children, Frank M. and Edna M. (4) Ella J., born April 8, 1859, married A. B. Collis, and died in Warren, Mass., Feb. 14, 1896. She was buried in Rockville, and left one child, Florence J. (5) Charles A., born March 18, 1861, married Elizabeth Sunderland, and was engaged in the teaming and livery business in Rockville. They have three children: Florine Sarah, Elmer, and William George. (6) George F. born Feb. 13, 1863, had two wives, Anna and Sarah Furfie, sisters, and four children, Minnie, Walter, John and William. (7) Elizabeth B., born March 24, 1867, married Raymond L. Kingston, and is living in Rockville. They have one child, Leonard D. (8) Florence May, born Dec. 18, 1869, married Albert H. Crossley, and is now living in Rockville with two children, John D. and Aurelia E.

Arthur B. Davis was born May 2, 1853, in the town of Vernon, and received his education in the common schools of Rockville. Remaining at home he assisted his father in the work of the farm, and for many years drove a milk wagon in the city of Rockville. After his marriage he moved to the farm formerly owned by his father, and which was known as the "Capt. Chester" farm in the early days. It contained about fifty acres, and is one of the most valuable farms in that part of the county. Under Mr. Davis' thorough and admirable management extensive improvements have been made. The house was entirely remodeled and the barns rebuilt, and the place brought up to modern ideas. Here Mr. Davis carried on farming, dealt in real estate, handled stock, and did teaming on a large scale. Until 1893 he ran a milk wagon in Rockville. He has cultivated about four acres every year of tobacco, and probably buys, to sell again, more cows than any other man in Tolland county, handling several hundred every year. Last year he did not do quite so large a business.

Arthur B. Davis was married Sept. 22, 1873, in Springfield, Mass., to Elenora E., a daughter of Charles and Mary (Fox) Ingraham. She was born in Berlin, Conn., and her father lost his life in the Civil war. To Mr. and Mrs. Davis have come the following children: (1) Harry B., born June 6, 1875, was educated in the district and grammar schools of Rockville, and at the Huntsinger Business College, Hartford. He married Gertrude Taft, and is the father of one child, Alice. He is a farmer in Ellington. (2) Edith M., born July 15, 1878, is living at home. Edith M. received her education in Ellington district school and Rockville grammar school. (3) John W., born Sept. 15, 1880, attended the district schools of Ellington. He married in October, 1902, Minnie Wagner, daughter of Charles and Bertha Wagner of Vernon. He is in the employment of Mrs. George Maxwell, of Rockville. (4) Ray A., born Sept. 27, 1886, was educated in the district schools, and is at home helping his father at teaming and general work. (5) Everett, born March 12, 1894, died when three days old.

In 1901 Arthur B. Davis removed from the farm, which he now rents, to his present comfortable home at 12 Florence street, Ellington. Mrs. Davis died at this home in May, 1901, and is interred in Rockville cemetery.

The maternal ancestry of Mr. Davis should not be dismissed without notice, as Joseph Allen, the father of his mother, was an old and honored resident of Ellington. He was born in Ellington, and in his early life was a cloth dresser. In his mature years he bought a farm in Ellington, where he lived until about a year previous to his death, when he moved to the farm on which his grandson, George F. Davis, is now living, where he died at the age of eighty-one years. Penelope West, his wife, was born in Marlborough, and survived her husband less than a week, dying at the age of seventy-nine, after a married life of over sixty-one years. Their children were: (1) William, who married Maria Aborn, of Tolland, settled in Racine, Wis., where he died at an early day. (2) Alanson, a bachelor, who located at Racine, Wis., where he died. (3) Minerva, who married Dwight Fox, and died in Springfield, Mass. (4) Julia, who married George Leonard, and died in Ohio. (5) Aurelia, who became Mrs. Davis, the mother of Arthur B. Davis.

Mr. Davis is a Democrat, and though not an office seeker is influential in party affairs. He has served on the school committee, and for several terms has been a member of the board of relief. An earnest and industrious worker, he follows in the footsteps of his father, who was known in his life time as one of the hardest working men of the day. Mr. Davis is a fine judge of stock, and is now closing up as administrator his father's large estate.

RANDOLPH HENRY CHANDLER. The tracing of the Chandler family ancestry recalls some of the earliest settlers and most momentous days in the New England colonies. Those were the times and the people the historian delights to remember, for the founding of those early families and settlements made possible the great events which followed.

(I) William Chandler with his wife Annis came to New England in 1637 and settled in Roxbury, Mass., and in 1640 he took the freeman's oath. William Chandler lived a religious and god-like life and died Nov. 26, 1641. His widow remarried and died March 15, 1683.

(II) Deacon John Chandler, son of William the settler, married, Feb. 16, 1658, Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of William and Anna (Mattle) Douglas, and both became members of the church at Roxbury. Mr. Chandler became one of the planters of what is now Woodstock, Conn., in 1686, and was chosen one of the early selectmen of that town, was moderator of town meetings and a deacon in the church. He was one of the six who bought of Capt. James Fitch, of Norwich, "The Mashawoquet Purchase" (Pomfret), of 1,500 acres. Deacon Chandler died April 15, 1703.

(III) Capt. Joseph Chandler, son of Deacon John, born June 4, 1683, in Roxbury, married, June 29, 1708, Susannah Perrine, of Roxbury, born Aug. 20, 1687, daughter of John Perrine, Jr. He located in Pomfret, inheriting an estate of 114 acres of land by the will of his father. He was admitted to the church April 20, 1719. He was a selectman in 1716 and collector of taxes in 1726. He died in Pomfret, Jan. 5, 1749-50, and his widow passed away Jan. 22, 1755.

(IV) Joseph Chandler (2), son of Capt. Joseph, born June 16, 1710, in Pomfret, married, Dec. 24, 1734, Elizabeth Sumner, born June 30, 1709, daughter of George Sumner. He lived in Pomfret and by occupation was a saddler. In 1754 he was chosen collector. He died July 4, 1780, and his widow followed Jan. 22, 1797.

(V) Joseph Chandler (3), son of Joseph (2), born Aug. 30, 1745, married, Feb. 4, 1777, Olive Backus, of Woodstock, born Nov. 21, 1757. He resided on his father's homestead farm in Pomfret. He was first sergeant of the First Company, 11th Conn. militia, under Capt. Caleb Clark, at New Haven, Conn., Sept. 13, 1776, on their march to Westchester, N. Y. While living he gave his sons each, as they went from home, $1,000, and each of his daughters $500. He died Oct. 11, 1831, and his widow died in 1832.

(VI) Randolph Chandler, son of Joseph (3), born July 24, 1789, married, in Taunton, Feb. 22, 1814, Harriet Tisdale, born April 9, 1788, daughter of Joseph Tisdale. They resided in Providence, R. I., where for fifty years Mr. Chandler was at the head of a mercantile house, and was successful in his business undertakings. He was a man of good judgment and for many years was a bank director. His person was commanding; he was tall, broad-shouldered, of dark complexion, dark hair, large features, had a keen eye and made a noble-looking old man. He passed the last years of his life with his only child in Thompson, Conn., where he died, Sept. 12, 1861, aged eighty-two years. His wife died Sept. 20, 1864, at the house of her son in Thompson, Connecticut.

(VII) Hon. William Henry Chandler, son of Randolph, born April 14, 1815, married, March 24, 1842, Martha Helen Allen, born July 11, 1822, in Pomfret, daughter of William and Emily (Chandler) Allen. Mr. Chandler was graduated from Yale College in 1839, a classmate of the late Gov. Hubbard, of Connecticut, Hon. William M. Evarts, and Donald G. Mitchell, the author, of New Haven. He attended the Harvard Law School, but owing to trouble with his eyes he abandoned his professional studies, for which a legal mind fitted him, and turned his attention to farming. Through his industrious and frugal habits, his good management and financiering, he became one of the wealthiest men, as well as one of the most influential, in eastern Connecticut. He bought a rough farm in Thompson, Conn., upon which he worked diligently for some twenty and more years, and thereby cured his eyes and brought about good physical health. He was admirably fitted for public life and held positions of honor and trust; was justice of the peace, and in 1847 represented his town in the State Legislature, and in 1867 his district in the State Senate. Mr. Chandler commanded the esteem and respect of his fellow-townsmen.

The children born to William H. Chandler and wife were: (1) Charlotte Helen, born in Thompson in 1843, graduated from Maplewood, at Pittsfield, Mass., in 1863, and March 31, 1868, married George Luther Whitman; (2) Harriet Tisdale, born April 1, 1846, married, Oct. 15, 1868, Charles Robert Forrest; (3) Randolph William, born Sept. 24, 1848, died Aug. 24, 1852; (4) Sarah Backus, born in August, 1850, died in June, 1851; (5) Randolph Henry was born in the year 1853; (6) Sarah Hodges, born June 23, 1855, married, at Thompson, Sept. 28, 1881, John H. Boswell, a lawyer of New York City; (7) Emily Allen, born Dec. 24, 1857, married June 5, 1879, Charles Buckley Hubbell, a member of the law firm of Denning & Hubbell, of New York City.

The maternal ancestral line of Randolph Henry Chandler is equally interesting and illustrious. Capt. Nathaniel Allen, of London, England, was born in 1699 and followed a sea-faring life. As early as 1757 he removed from Boston, Mass., and settled in Shrewsbury in the same State. Mr. Allen was captain of a packet ship between Liverpool and Boston. His wife was formerly Dorcas Bower. Capt. Allen died at Shrewsbury, Nov. 1, 1770, and soon after his decease his widow removed to Leicester, Mass., and there died.

(II) Thomas Allen, son of Capt. Nathaniel, born in 1728, probably in Boston, married Elizabeth, widow of John Shockmaple, Jr., surveyor of Connecticut, and daughter of Christopher and Sarah (Prout) Christophers, of New London, Conn. Thomas Allen resided at Shrewsbury, later removed to New London, Conn., where it is probable he was married, and there died Nov. 19, 1793, and his wife died Aug. 5, 1787, aged sixty-seven years.

(III) Capt. Thomas Allen, son of Thomas, married Amelia Taber and lived on Fisher's Island, and in Pomfret, Conn. During the war of the Revolution Mr. Allen kept a public house on Main street, New London, which was referred to as the "City Coffee House" and which was regarded as the center of good living and commercial brotherhood.

(IV) William Allen, son of Capt. Thomas, married Emily Chandler and lived in Pomfret, Connecticut.

(V) Martha Helen Allen, daughter of William, born July 11, 1822, married March 24, 1842, William Henry Chandler, and they became the parents of Randolph Henry Chandler of this biography.

Randolph Henry Chandler, son of William H., was born in 1853, in Thompson, Windham county. At an early age he entered the well-known Phillips Academy, at Andover, Mass., from which he was graduated with high honor. He was also a student at the Highland Military Academy, at Worcester, in the same State. Then he entered upon the study of law, with Hon. Charles E. Searls, of Putnam, and was admitted to the Windham county bar, May 15, 1879. He immediately began practice in Putnam, successfully continuing in the profession until 1889 when he retired from active work.

Mr. Chandler has very acceptably filled several town offices and for three terms—1879, 1880 and 1891, was elected by his townsmen to represent them in the State Assembly. In 1895 he ably represented the 16th district in the State Senate, and was the efficient chairman of the committee on Humane Institutions. During the session that he was in the Senate he made several eloquent speeches, the one on the proposed amendment to the State Constitution, in particular, creating wide-spread interest. He was the champion of the small towns and the masterly manner in which he presented his side of the question, "carried the House by storm." This speech received more notice from the press of Connecticut and other States than any speech of the session. Mr. Chandler has had ample advantages to serve the people well and has rendered valuable service to the Senate and House in its deliberations over general legislation. In 1901 Mr. Chandler was chosen a member of the Constitutional convention, which convened Jan. 1, 1902. Fraternally Mr. Chandler is connected with Cornerstone Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Grosvenor Dale.

On Dec. 23, 1886, Mr. Chandler was united in marriage with Isadore E. Aldrich, of Woodstock, Conn., and an only son, Randolph Elsworth, was born March 27, 1890.

WILLIAM WILLFORD BURWELL (deceased) was born in Mansfield, Conn., Dec. 13, 1849, and died in Stafford Springs, Conn., May 14, 1899, having been one of the most respected and useful men of the community in which his active life was passed.

William Burwell, the father of William W., was born in King's Cliff, England, Aug. 20, 1816, and died in Stafford Springs, Conn., March 27, 1877, losing his life in the memorable flood of that year. Mr. Burwell was a machinist, and had a shop which he carried on as a member of the firm of Holt & Burwell at the time of his death. Very successful in his business, he was honest and industrious. In 1840 he came to this country, and made his home in Dalesville, Conn., in the town of Willington. For a number of years he was engaged in his trade in Mansfield, and removed to Stafford Springs in 1861. In the Stafford Hollow Baptist Church he was recognized as one of its most devoted members. In politics Mr. Burwell was a Republican, but had no desire for office. His marriage was contracted May 31, 1841, in Leicester, England, to Ada Willford, born July 23, 1819, who died in Stafford Hollow, Dec. 24, 1882. She was a daughter of Ada Willford, and the mother of the following children: (1) Thomas Edward, born Jan. 25, 1845, in Webster, Mass., died in Toledo, Ohio, where he had removed in 1890, March 1, 1900; he was a machinist. (2) Henry Enos, born Oct. 15, 1846, in Willington, died in 1867, in Chicopee Falls, Mass. (3) William W. (deceased). (4) John, born June 9, 1852, died July 10, the same year in Mansfield. (5) John A., born Dec. 23, 1853, at Mansfield, is in the jewelry business at La Junta, Col. (6) Frederick, born in 1856, at Hartford, died in 1893, in Stafford, where he was engaged as a machinist. (7) George Albert, born June 6, 1860, is living in Plattsburg, N. Y., where he is the manager of the Lozier Automobile & Naptha Launch plant, being the patentee of many of the improvements on the Cleveland wheel.

William W. Burwell was but ten years of age when his parents removed to Stafford Springs, and most of his schooling was had in the Mansfield and Stafford schools. When he was seventeen years old he left school to apply himself to the work of the world, and learned the watch maker's trade of Edward Willford, of Perth Amboy, N. J. For two years he was foreman of the adjusting room of a large factory in Marion, N. J., and in 1871, he came back to Stafford, and in company with his brother, John A., purchased the jewelry store of J. H. Goodell. This was conducted under the name of Burwell Brothers for about a year, when John A. sold out to William W., who continued the enterprise until his death. Since that time his son Henry E., has had charge of the business. During the twenty-eight years that Mr. Burwell was identified with the town his store was the leading establishment of the kind in his section of the State, and has continued to be such under the management of his son. This business is located on Main street, in the Warren block.

Mr. Burwell was a Republican, with no ambition for public honors, and exceedingly domestic in his habits. The Congregational Church found in him a steady attendant and liberal supporter, and he was a member of the Ecclesiastical Society. Mr. Burwell belonged to Ionic Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and was buried by that order.

Mr. Burwell was married Dec. 26, 1871, to Ada R. Willford, a daughter of Enos and Elizabeth (Hill) Willford, of Perth Amboy. Mr. Willford was a baker by trade. To this union were born:

(1) Henry Enos, born Nov. 25, 1872, is now running his father's business in Stafford, and has never married. From the Stafford high school he was a graduate in the class of 1890, and then entered his father's store, and in 1897 was made bookkeeper of the Excelsior Woolen Company, of Wales, Mass., where he remained until his father's death. Previous to his engagement at Wales he was bookkeeper for G. H. Baker & Company, and was secretary to the Appropriation Committee of the State Senate under J. Carl Converse. In Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M., Mr. Burwell's name appears as one of the reliable and useful members, and at the present time he is the treasurer of that organization. Mr. Burwell also belongs to the Maccabees, and is a member of the Congregational Church, to which he renders valuable service in its musical worship. (2) Frederick William, born May 9, 1875, is a tool maker, and has employment at Bayonne, N. J., in a large machine shop. He has never married.

William W. Burwell was one of the more prominent and enterprising business men of Stafford for many years, and the prosperity which came to him was well merited as he combined unbending integrity, perseverance, pluck and an unflagging industry. Public spirited in his relations to the world around him, he was quick to respond to every proposition that looked to the moral and material welfare of the town. As a friend he was true; as a husband and father all that the most exacting affection could demand. His genial presence was a joy to all, as with him came sunshine and no darkness to social life. It gave him delight to see those around him happy, his kind disposition won for him many friends, and he is remembered most pleasantly and gratefully by a host of friends.

EVERETT A. DODGE. No more expert authority on dairying has found a prolific field of activity in Windham county, than Everett A. Dodge, whose well stocked, well managed farm constitutes one of the fine properties on the old Church Road, Brooklyn.

That early disadvantages are by no means permanently discouraging to the stout of heart is demonstrated in the life of this agriculturist and dairyman. The necessity for hard work, and the absolute dependence upon his immature abilities at the age when childhood is supposed to be irresponsible, seemed to develop his resources, and strengthen an innate integrity of character.

Everett A. Dodge is the younger of the two sons of William and Mary Ann (Colton) Dodge, and was born Dec. 16, 1854. William Dodge, a native of Massachusetts, located when a young man at Plymouth, Chenango Co., N. Y., where he married and engaged in the hotel business. When the craze for gold swept over the land from the coast, he followed the numerous caravans that braved the dangers of the plains, and after two years spent in mining in California, died with his gold dreams unfulfilled at the age of fifty-four years. His wife was born Oct. 28, 1820, her native place being Butternuts, Otsego Co., N. Y. Her son, Marcus A., was born Nov. 21, 1847. For a second husband she married Daniel Skinner, of North Norwich, N. Y., in which town she lived until her death, March 1, 1866, several years after that of her second husband. There was no issue of the second marriage. Her son Marcus in no way profited by the support furnished by Mr. Skinner, for at the age of eight he was placed in the home of his uncle, Daniel Dodge, with whom he remained until the age of seventeen. As a means of future livelihood he learned to make butter and cheese with great skill, and devoted fifteen years of his life to this particular occupation. In 1884 he located in West Hartford, Conn., and for four years managed the Highland Creamery. The following season he had charge of a creamery in Pennsylvania, and on his return to West Hartford purchased the farm upon which he has successfully carried on a creamery business. While living in Chenango county, N. Y., he married Mrs. Celia Breed, who had two children by her former husband.

Everett A. Dodge was four years of age when his father started for the gold fields, and he remained with his widowed mother for six years longer. In August of 1864, four months before his tenth birthday, he was placed in the family of George Tinker, a farmer of Plymouth, the agreement being that he should remain there until of age, and at that time he was to receive $100. His wages in the meantime were to consist of board and clothing, and his privileges were to include the opportunity to attend the public schools during four months of each year. These stipulations were carried out with moderate fairness, although his clothes were few, his spending money scarce, his holidays few, and his working days long and full of hard labor. The school was held two Saturdays of each month, and the alternate Saturdays he had to work more than usual to make up for the loss of time the Saturday before. Upon attaining his majority he received the promised $100, and so highly was he valued by his long time employer that he was immediately hired for eight months longer and paid $200 for his services.

After leaving the farm of Mr. Tinker Mr. Dodge continued to work on farms for a time, and among other farms upon which he found employment was that of his prospective mother-in-law, with whom he remained until the spring following his marriage. For the next year he was employed in the village of Smyrna, and then became identified with the feed store and farm of E. W. Stokes, his remuneration being twenty-five dollars a month. After entering the employ of the dairying firm of White, Smith & Company at Sherburne, N. Y., he learned every phase of their business, and remained with them for eight years. The firm had twenty-seven butter and cheese factories in that section, and the first five years of his service Mr. Dodge was in a factory with a dozen people who managed to turn out 2,800 pounds of butter and 2,400 pounds of cheese a day. For a year he traveled on the road for the company as inspector of factories, visiting each factory about three times annually, and remaining there for several days or weeks as the requirements dictated. He became an expert in the business, and the firm eventually appointed him manager of their large creamery at Lebanon, N. Y. This place had about eight employes, and at the end of a year the manager returned to Sherburne for a year and then resigned to accept the more lucrative position as foreman of the creamery at East Granby, Hartford county, Conn. For the following eight years Mr. Dodge looked after the affairs of this creamery, and resigned from the responsibility in August of 1891, to return to Smyrna and rest for a time from his long and arduous labors. At the end of a year and a half he had entirely recovered from an attack of rheumatism, and in March, 1893, came to Pomfret Landing and managed the creamery there for a year. On a small scale Mr. Dodge also engaged in farming near the Landing for a year, and for the next three years was engaged in collecting cream for the Brooklyn Creamery. In the meantime he had managed to save some money, and was able to pay part down for his present farm of 298 acres, purchased from George Brown. The rest of the debt was met in an unusually short time, and Mr. Dodge has made many important improvements on his property. He is engaged in general farming and dairying; has about thirty head of cattle and each year cuts about 100 cords of fire wood.

In Smyrna, N. Y., Dec. 16, 1872, Mr. Dodge married Ella Maria Wilcox, born in that town April 20, 1852, a daughter of William S. and Ann Maria (Parker) Wilcox, and sister of William S. Wilcox, of Brooklyn, whose biography appears elsewhere in this work. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dodge: Anna Belle, born March 7, 1889; and William Everett, born May 13, 1892. Mr. Dodge is a Republican but not an office seeker, and he attends the Universalist Church. He is possessed of indefatigable industry, and is honored and esteemed by the community in which he lives.

FREDERICK D. GREEN. In introducing this honored name to our readers we do so with the conviction that no more highly esteemed citizen resides in Windham county than the gentleman who bears it. He is a farmer and landowner in the town of Thompson, where he and his family have for a number of years resided, and where they are universally esteemed by all. The decease of his wife, Ellen Chaffee Green, in 1899, was looked upon as a distinct public calamity to the community, she having been a lady of more than usual intelligence and executive ability, which caused her to be a social leader in Thompson and in Windham county.

Frederick D. Green was born in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., July 3, 1851. The grandfather, Richard Green, was a native of East Haddam, Middlesex Co., Conn., where he was a respected and worthy farmer and land owner, and where he passed his entire life-time. Sidney Green, the father of Frederick D., was also a native of Connecticut, having been born on the farm at East Haddam. He was given a good education, and at the age of twenty went to New York, where he became a clerk in the store of his brother William at Brooklyn. He later became engaged in the cotton business, and for twenty-five years was a large buyer of that staple at that point, carrying on a most successful and prosperous business. His career was creditable in the extreme as he started in life poor and unaided, and before his death had amassed quite a comfortable competency. He was not given to much interest in public life, but supported Republican principles by his vote. He was a member and one of the organizers of the Congregational Church presided over by that famous divine, Dr. Storrs, as was also his wife. He married in Brooklyn, Mary G. Deming, daughter of Frederick Deming, of Litchfield county, Conn., president of the Union Bank in New York City. Mrs. Green died in Brooklyn in 1892, and she and her husband are entombed in beautiful Greenwood cemetery. To them were born five children: Mary D., of Brooklyn; Clara L., deceased in infancy; Frederick D.; Ella C., who married Ferdinand Ward of Brooklyn; and Sidney, living in New York City.

Frederick Deming Green grew up in Brooklyn, where he was given an excellent elementary education in the private schools, which was later supplemented by a course in the Polytechnic Institute of the city. He then entered the employ, as clerk, of T. B. Coddington & Co., of New York City, with which firm he remained for eleven years. Mr. Green then became connected with the banking house of Grant & Ward in New York as clerk and bookkeeper, where he remained until he gave up his life in the city in 1886, and coming to Thompson, purchased a farm.

There he has since lived, and has become one of the town's most honored and respected citizens. He devotes his land to the raising of vegetables, and also makes a specialty of poultry. His home is a model of rural comfort and completeness. Mr. Green is a man of broad and liberal ideas, the result of his early cosmopolitan experience. He rides no hobbies, but does ride and drive a good horse, an animal of which he is very fond, and which will never be displaced in his affections by the latest contrivance seeking popular favor—the swift speeding automobile. Mr. Green was happily married in 1876 in Brooklyn to Ellen Chaffee, who died in 1899. She was the mother of two children, Helen and Florence.

The political affiliations of Mr. Green lie with the Republican party, though he has never sought public preferment. He takes a helpful and intelligent interest in local affairs, and he and his family have been most active workers in the Congregational Church, where Mr. Green has served as trustee, and is at present chairman of the building committee. He also served a period of six years as superintendent of the Sunday-school.

It is altogether fitting and proper in connection with this sketch to mention more fully the salient points in the life and character of Mrs. Green, whose untimely death cut short a career of helpfulness along social and religious lines seldom equalled. In doing this the authors will let those who were her intimates in life speak for her, quoting from a memorial lovingly compiled by them soon after her decease. Her pastor, Rev. Geo. H. Cummings, writes this loving tribute;

"Ellen Amanda Chaffee, born in Windsor Locks, June 28, 1857, was the daughter of the late Ralph T. Chaffee, M. D., for some years a practicing physician in Hartford. She was for a time a member of the Hartford high school, but was graduated from Maplewood Seminary of Music, at East Haddam. October, 1878, she was married to Frederick Deming Green of Brooklyn, N. Y. There are two children, Helen A. and Florence L. After a residence of some years in Hackensack, N. J., Mr. and Mrs. Green removed to Thompson in 1885. In 1889 they united with the Congregational Church, bringing letters from the Dutch Reformed Church in Hackensack, which they both joined after their marriage. From the home over which she presided with so much grace and efficiency, Mrs. Green's death removed a beloved wife, a much needed mother, a model housekeeper, a gracious hostess, and a kind neighbor. The very house, which had been gradually transformed to express her ideas of convenience and comfort, is eloquent in its emptiness. A husband, daughters and nephew, regular members of this household, together with her mother, who spent much of her time there, and the two brothers, will naturally feel most keenly this loss from their family circle. There are others, not all in the circle of kindred, to whom she had greatly endeared herself, by whom her death will be felt as an irreparable loss.

"The charm which fitted her to shine in wider circles, and gave such zest to her years of city life, was never lost. She owed even less to her brilliant repartee and nimble wit than to her ready sympathy and unerring tact. Appreciating the central place still held by the Church in the thought and life of a typical New England community, Mrs. Green identified herself with the Church more completely than at any earlier period of her life, and was an interested, active and efficient worker as long as strength permitted. She was to the last a constant attendant at all the Sabbath and mid-week meetings. Not least important were the services rendered her Sunday-school class of young ladies. These last years afforded opportunities for intellectual and spiritual growth which were seized with eagerness.

"Mrs. Green was a woman of unusual versatility and of great force of character. Her life had developed in unwonted measure resources that might otherwise have been latent. That her death comes with a sense of personal loss to so many people in this community and elsewhere, of widely differing circumstances, is due in no small degree to her gracious manner, which was felt by all to be the index of a genuine friendliness, which deservedly won and kept host of friends.

"The high esteem in which Mrs. Green was held and the widespread sympathy felt for Mr. Green and family has been shown in part by the gifts of choice flowers sent for the funeral service and comforting messages, which have been greatly appreciated."

The following choice blossom was tenderly laid on her casket by Miss Ellen D. Larned:

"And can it be that in a world so full and busy the loss of one weak creature makes a void in any heart so wide and deep that nothing but the height and depth of vast eternity can fill it up?"—Dickens.

"And can it be?" The world is full and busy,
Its thronging millions eagerly pursue
Their varying labors, pleasures and devices,
Doing with might whatever hand may find to do.
The good man dies; his place at once is taken;
His work, his projects others carry on;
Life's great procession hurries on unhalting,
As full, as eager, as if naught were gone.

And yet within his own domestic circle,
Within those hearts to his in love allied,
There is a void whose depths cannot be sounded,
A blank, a loss, that cannot be supplied.
Life's fresh unfoldings and renewed engrossments
That tender memory can ne'er efface;
Nor is there one amongst earth's living creatures
Who can the least that vanished one replace.

"It is seldom one leaves this world whose removal brings such sense of personal bereavement to so many hearts. The buoyancy, the exuberant vitality, the infinite variety of Mrs. Green, brought an atmosphere of freshness and life into every social and family relation. In the various circles in which her lot had been cast she exercised the same magnetic attraction, leaving many friends to mourn her loss; privileged in Thompson for thirteen years with intimate association with this bright spirit, the loss is proportionately heavy. With quick appreciative sympathy she entered into the life of church and neighborhood, and of all with whom she came in contact. While retaining all her characteristic, spontaneous vivacity, there was constant mental and spiritual growth, fitting her for wider and deeper influence. The sudden removal of one so gifted, so beloved, so useful, leaves indeed, a void in her much loved home and circle of attached friends, that human sympathy alone, however deep and tender, cannot greatly relieve.

"And naught can satisfy this restless longing,
Nothing this yearning, aching void can fill,
But the assurance of the blessed reunion
Of spirits perfected on Zion's Hill;
Where the 'great cloud of witnesses' immortal
In God's presence evermore abide;
And human ties, reft painfully asunder,
Are reunited—strengthened—glorified."

From the Putnam Patriot of February 3, 1899, the following is clipped:

The funeral of Mrs. F. D. Green was attended from her late residence in Thompson, Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, her pastor, Rev. George H. Cummings, officiating. The service was impressive. Mrs. Green was a most estimable lady, and was held in high regard by all who knew her. Her personal charms were enhanced by a mind of great versatility and a heart of sympathy and love. Into the sports of childhood could she enter with enthusiasm and delight, and to the mysteries of Divine Providence and grace had she given much thought. Cheerful and bright was her spirit, inspiring and beautiful her life. Much will she be missed in the church and in society, but most of all in her own pleasant, sunshiny home, where queenly rule was cheerfully accorded her. For the family—husband, two children, and a little nephew of Mr. Green, to whom she was as a mother—much sympathy is expressed. The storm which was on ceased at the hour of the service, the sun shining forth on the beautiful snow with dazzling brightness, and continuing through the interment, strikingly emblematical of the peace and rest and beauty succeeding the mortal conflict. Her age was forty-one years.

"Not now, but in the coming years,
It may be in the better land,
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And there, sometime, we'll understand.
* * * * *

"We'll know why clouds instead of sun
Were over many a cherished plan;
Why song has ceased when scarce begun;
'Tis there, sometime, we'll understand."

CHARLES M. ADAMS, a very successful blacksmith of Danielson, Windham Co., Conn., has a reputation as a horse-shoer not equalled in eastern Connecticut.

John Adams was a native of Killingly, and was born near Sterling, where he owned two large farms. His life work was that of a Christian Baptist preacher, and he labored at South Parish, and preached often in the neighboring churches and homes. Jerusha Slater, his wife, was a native of Killingly, Conn. Mr. Adams lived to middle life, and was buried in a private yard on the farm now owned by Chauncey Right. John Adams and his wife had the following children: (1) Seba, who had two wives, Roxy Baker, and Oshey Goodspeed, lived in Killingly, where he followed farming; his death occurred at Cumberland, R. I. (2) Rev. Ira, lived in Bradford county, Pa., where he died; his wife was Sophia Mason. (3) Zebina, grandfather of Charles M., was born in 1794, and died Dec. 11, 1859; he was married Oct. 18, 1821, to Rhoda Day, who died Dec. 11, 1879, at the age of seventy-nine years and eleven months. (4) Enos, married a Miss Arnold, and after her death married a second time. He located in Bradford county, Pa.; where he died. (5) Arba, married Rachel Vaughn; he was a shoemaker, and had his home in Killingly. (6) Rachel, married Hiram Hill, and lived in Norwich, Conn., where both died. (7) Percy, married Harris Arnold, and lived in South Killingly, Conn. Alad, their oldest boy, moved to Ohio, and Edward, their other child, is dead. (8) Emily married Charles Westcott, and lives in Tolland, Connecticut.

Zebina Adams, grandfather of Charles M., moved to Bradford county, Pa., directly after his marriage. There he taught school, and presently established himself on a farm. In 1833 he came back to Killingly, and make his home on a part of his father's farm. After some years he left the farm and came to Danielson, where he continued farming for a time, and then entered the employ of the Danielson Company. In politics he was a Whig, and both he and his wife were members of the Congregational Church. Their children were:

(1) Mary M., born March 9, 1824, married Lorenzo Lillibridge, and lives in Brooklyn, Conn.; (2) Emily A., born Dec. 25, 1826, is unmarried and lives in Danielson; (3) Lyman D., the father of Charles M., born Feb. 9, 1828, died April 2, 1882. He married Eliza Martin, of Hampton, Conn., a daughter of Alonzo and Sally (Lincoln) Martin, both of whom belonged to old and prominent families. (4) Clarissa A., born Oct. 21, 1831, is unmarried, and lives in Danielson; (5) Olive D., born May 20, 1833, lives unmarried in Danielson; (6) Fred A., born Dec. 9, 1837, lives at Hartford, Conn.; he married Mary Day, and has four children, Louis, Alice, Mabel, Maud; (7) Merinda R., born Sept. 20, 1839, lives unmarried in Danielson; (8) Phoebe N., born May 13, 1844, died April 2, 1859.

Lyman D. Adams was born in Smithfield, Bradford Co., Pa., and accompanied his parents to South Killingly, when he was only five years old. His schooling was acquired at Danielson, where his parents made their home during the greater part of his boyhood days. When he was a young man he entered the blacksmith shop of Louis Williams, of Danielson. There he learned the trade, and became an expert horseshoer. In 1862 he started a shop in Westfield, just north of the borough, where he remained two years and then took up quarters near the dam, and continued there until 1871. That year he removed to Dayville, where he spent the ensuing eleven years, being in almost constant activity until shortly before his death.

Mr. Adams was a Democrat, and was one of the leading men of his town. He was the father of two children, Charles M., and Frances Ella, who was born June 3, 1854, and is unmarried.

Charles M. Adams was born March 24, 1852, in Danielson, where he attended school. When he was fourteen years of age he entered his father's blacksmith shop, and learned the horseshoer's trade, working at the forge by his father's side until the death of that gentleman, when he took charge of the business. For twelve years Mr. Adams continued in Dayville, and May 4, 1894, he came back to Danielson, where he built his present convenient shop, and has enjoyed a most flattering business, drawing trade from all the surrounding towns. His ability as a horse shoer is known and confessed by the community, and the year around he keeps four men hard at work.

Mr. Adams is a charter member of Aetna Lodge, No. 21, A. O. U. W., and of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 24, I. O. F. He belongs to Orient Lodge, No. 37, K. P.

Mr. Adams was married to Ellen M. Burlingame, Dec. 18, 1870. Mrs. Adams is a daughter of Benjamin Burlingame. To this union were born two children, Clarence L., born July 23, 1873, graduated from the American Veterinary College in New York, and is now following his profession in Danielson; Adah L., born June 25, 1875, married Burton G. Spencer, May 28, 1902 and lives in Danielson.

JOHN ASH, superintendent of the Clark estate in Pomfret, was born Jan. 12, 1863, in Walters-houses, Staffordshire, England, and is a son of William and Mary (Ayre) Ash. The latter was a descendant of Sir Samuel Ayre, who was knighted on the battlefield of Hastings, in 1066.

William and Mary Ash were the parents of four children. The eldest, Frederick, is a minister of the Methodist Church at Scarborough, England. Annie, the second, is the wife of George Tomlinson, of Leek, England. John, is the third. Ellen M., married George Plant, a box manufacturer of Leek. The father was identified with the Established Church of England, while the mother was a member of the Methodist Church. Both are now deceased, and their remains were deposited respectively at Snelsters and Cauldon, England.

John Ash was educated in the national schools of his native town. Having a taste for outdoor work, he served an apprenticeship in landscape gardening with Mr. A. Godwin, at Ashburne. At the end of four years he became a journeyman, and worked at the business in different sections of England. In 1884 he became gardener at the seat of the Earl of Derby, in Lancashire, where he spent three years. While there he was married, in 1888, to Catherine Annie Kenyon, a native of Knowlsey Hall, Lancashire. With his bride Mr. Ash set out for America, sailing from Liverpool, Jan. 30, 1888, arriving in Boston the following month. For the ensuing two years he was assistant gardener on the estate of H. H. Hunnewell, of Wellesley, Mass. He next accepted the position of landscape gardener for James Bowditch, of Boston, Mass., and remained with him one year, after which he became superintendent of the J. W. Clark estate, in Pomfret, where he has remained twelve years. The estate covers a tract of eighty acres, a dozen men are employed in assisting Mr. Ash, and the grounds afford a model of beauty and taste in rural landscape.

Mr. Ash and family are identified with the Episcopal Church of Pomfret. Being thoroughly in accord with the ideas of his adopted country, Mr. Ash lost no time in becoming a citizen, and acts the part of a patriot in voting for his principles. He votes with the Republican party, but does not seek preferment for himself. In his native land he was associated with the Manchester Unity, and he is now a member of the I. O. O. F., his membership being with the Lodge at Wellesley, Mass. Of the seven children of Mr. Ash, six are now living, the youngest—Agnes, having died at the age of three years. The others are: Annie, John Frederick, Elizabeth, William Kenyon, Eleanor and Gladys.

A man of intelligence and genial manner, Mr. Ash enjoys the respect of the community. An honest upright citizen, he sets an example worthy of the emulation of youth. His taste is superior, and the grounds under his care testify to his industry, as well as to his skill and good judgment.

WILLIAM C. PEASE, the owner of the saw and grist mill at Somers, Tolland county, is one of the bright and capable young business men of the town, and comes of old and honored ancestry in that part of the State.

(III) John Pease, the eldest son of John Pease, Sr., and grandson of the emigrant ancestor of the family, Robert Pease, was born in Salem, Mass., May 30, 1654. He was apprenticed in Salem to John Symonds, a carpenter and joiner, but the death of his employer soon followed and left John Pease to make his way as best he could.

John and Robert Pease removed from Salem in 1679 to Enfield, Conn., where two years later they brought their families. Many were the hardships they endured in making their homes in that wilderness, living the first winter in a cave in the side of a hill, about forty rods from the site of the first meeting house. In 1685 they received an extra grant of land because they were the first comers. John Pease was one of the commissioners who made the first purchase of a large portion of Enfield, in March, 1681. His record is that of a foremost citizen of Enfield, one earnest in his efforts to advance the interests of the town in an early day. When the town was incorporated Mr. Pease was made land measurer. He was captain of the first militia company of Enfield. In 1734 he died. Margaret Adams, his wife, was born in Ipswich, became his wife Jan. 31, 1677, and was the mother of the following family: (1) John, born at Salem in 1678; (2) James born at Salem, in 1679; (3) Margaret, born at Enfield, in 1683, married Josiah Colton, and died in 1773; (4) Jonathan, born in 1687, died in infancy; (5) Ann, born in 1688, married Jeremiah Lord, of East Windsor; (6) Mary, born in 1688, married Thomas Abbey, and died in 1746; (7) Sarah, born in 1689, married Timothy Root, of Somers; (8) Joseph, born in 1692.

(IV) James Pease was one of the first settlers of Somers, and began operations there as early as 1713, and is said to have spent his summers in Somers, and winters in Enfield until 1717, when he brought his family to Somers. In 1710 he married Mary, the daughter of Thomas Abbey, and by her had the following family: Mary, born in 1711; James, born in 1713; Margaret, born in 1715; Richard, who is an ancestor of W. C. Pease; Hannah, born in 1722; John, born in 1725, died when a lad of five years of age.

(V) Richard Pease was born in Enfield, in 1717, and married Elizabeth Parsons, Nov. 1, 1753, by whom he had the following family: Keturah, born in 1754; Samuel, born in 1756, married Sarah R. Root, a daughter of Timothy Root, in 1786. He lived with the Rev. Seth Parsons, whose farm he inherited, and died July 20, 1842; Richard, the grandfather of William C. Pease.

(VI) Capt. Richard Pease was born at Somers, Conn., Oct. 28, 1758. Enlisting in 1775, he was one of the seventy men who rallied at Somers on the first alarm of hostilities, and marched to Boston under Capt. Emory Pease. For six years he was in the service, and was in the battle of Bunker Hill. Returning home he settled in what is now the ninth district of Somers, where he devoted himself to farming all his life. He became a land owner, and won a reputation for strict integrity and sound judgment. Several terms he represented Somers in the General Assembly, and was captain of the local militia. Capt. Richard married Sovier Parsons, by whom he had the following family: (1) Richard, born Sept. 30, 1780, married Philena Jones, was a farmer and died in Somers; (2) Luke, born in 1793, died in 1823 unmarried; (3) Walter, born in 1795, married Lois Spencer, and died Nov. 8, 1864. He was a farmer; (4) Orrin E., born in 1797, married Delina Sexton, lived in Somers, where he died June 2, 1852; (5) Alpheus, born July 18, 1799, married Clarissa Jones, was a shoemaker, and died in Somers, Oct. 16, 1849; (6) Sovier, born in 1801, married Joseph Montague, and lived in Granby, Mass.; (7) Austin, the father of W. C. Pease; (8) Azariah, born May 22, 1806, married Abigail Spencer, and died July 26, 1844; (9) Abigail, born Aug. 21, 1808, died June 7, 1810.

(VII) Austin Pease was born March 8, 1804, in Somers, where he was reared as a farmer boy until he reached the age of sixteen years, when he began the trade of a carpenter which he thoroughly mastered. He was also a veterinary surgeon and followed that calling in connection with farming in mature life. In later years he devoted himself exclusively to his veterinary business, becoming very popular and successful in that line. He died in Somers Dec. 25, 1884. He was a Republican, and was known as a good citizen.

Mr. Pease was married to Olive Waters, of New York State, Aug. 3, 1825, by whom he became the father of the following: Olive N., born in 1831, married Samuel Slater, and died at Enfield, Dec. 30, 1865; Abigail S., born in 1835, died in infancy; Austin C., born May 16, 1838, died Oct. 20, 1858. On the death of Mrs. Olive Pease, Mr. Pease married Mary Russell, of Vernon, who died leaving no issue. Mr. Pease married for his third wife, Sarah C. Silcox, who was born in 1815, in Paterson, N. J., but lived at the time of her marriage in Long Meadow, Mass. She was a daughter of William C. and Lois (Colton) Silcox, and granddaughter of Robert Silcox, a British soldier, who came to America during the Revolutionary war, was taken prisoner, and decided to remain here. He married Sarah Stebbins, and died when forty-nine years old. Mrs. Sarah Pease died Dec. 28, 1887, leaving one child, William C. Pease.

William C. Pease was born May 3, 1853, in the ninth district of Somers, where he attended the district school until sixteen years of age. Three years later the management of the farm fell upon him, and he worked in the woods during the winter and farmed in the summer. When he was twenty-seven he purchased the saw and grist mill which was erected by Austin Fuller and E. T. Collins. To this plant Mr. Pease made extensive improvements, and has since been engaged in the sawing of lumber, grinding of grists, and dealing in feed and similar goods. Until a few years ago the home farm belonged to Mr. Pease. He then disposed of it, and in 1900 bought a large farm on Somers street. On this place he has also made extensive improvements; he raises fine bred Jersey stock, and his creamery specialties are not surpassed.

Mr. Pease is a Republican, and was elected to the board of selectmen in 1898, where he served two terms, being chairman of the board in 1898 and again in 1900. As town auditor and justice of the peace he has also served his community. Mr. Pease belongs to Council No. 10, O. U. A. M., of Somers. He attends the Congregational Church at Somers of which Mrs. Pease is a member.

William C. Pease and Elizabeth Pease were married Dec. 19, 1875. She is a daughter of Daniel and Mary (Cook) Pease. They have had two sons: Richard, who died in infancy; Lewis, who also died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Pease have many friends in their community, and their home is widely known for its gracious hospitality.

Daniel Pease, the father of Mrs. Elizabeth Pease, was born in Enfield, Conn., Feb. 26, 1825, where he married Mary A. Cook, of Long Meadow, June 14, 1847. He was the second son and fourth child of Enos and Lucy (Adams) Pease, and the grandson of Rufus and Ruth (Cooley) Pease, mentioned in the sketch of S. F. Pease, of Somers, to be found on another page.

Daniel Pease was a blacksmith and a carpenter and builder, and located in Somers when a young man, where he died in 1882. His wife, Mary, was born in 1836, in New York, and is now residing in Springfield, Mass. They had the following children: (1) Daniel, who married Catherine James, and is living in Highwood, near Chicago. He is superintendent of the flannel department of Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., of Chicago, and is the father of nine children, one of whom is Samuel, who is professor of languages in Hamline University, at St. Paul, Minn.; (2) Lewis, also employed in the store of Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., has also extensive mining interests in the West; (3) Solomon, who married Mabel Skinner, is a farmer in South Dakota. He is a prominent man at Plankinton, S. D., and has been member of the State Senate two terms; (4) Angie, married Albert A. Bond, of Somers; (5) Elizabeth, is Mrs. Pease; (6) Oliver A., who is the president of various Mining Companies, and lives in Denver, Col., married Nellie D. Sotelle. (7) Emma, a highly accomplished woman, was educated at Vassar, studied music in Paris, France, was engaged in the public schools of Springfield, Mass., and at present is a teacher of music and French in the Roger Williams University at Nashville, Tennessee.

WILLIAM SMITH JOHNSON, a leading manufacturer and prominent citizen of Putnam, Windham Co., Conn., was born April 20, 1854, in Thompson, same county.

George Cundall Johnson, father of William S., was born in Pomfret, (now Putnam), Conn., Feb. 23, 1822. He followed spinning in his early manhood, running spinning mules in Wilkinson's mill in Putnam, and at Masonville (now Grosvenor Dale) for several years. He bought a farm in Thompson in 1844, and cultivated it for six years, and next followed shoe-making for Webster and Oxford firms for twenty years. In 1850 he settled on a farm in West Thompson and bought the place in 1852. George C. Johnson was a trustee in the Methodist Church for over forty years, and of this church his wife was also a member. The latter died Aug. 4, and the former Sept. 4, 1902. Mr. Johnson was in politics, a Republican, but would never accept office. He served three years during the Civil war as a member of Co. D, 18th C. V. I., and was wounded by a bullet in the left thigh at Snicker's Ford, Virginia.

George C. Johnson was married Sept. 1, 1850, to Jane Wilkes, a native of England, a daughter of William Wilkes, a weaver by trade. William S. Johnson is the only child of this union.

William Johnson, father of George C., was born in Killingly, Conn., and was also a spinner by trade. He lived in Pomfret and in Grosvenor Dale and was married to Betsey Cundall. He died in October, 1824, when about twenty-eight years old. His wife lived to be sixty-one, and died March 15, 1862, in West Thompson. These parents had born to them two children—George C. and Harriet, the latter of whom died in infancy.

William Johnson, father of William, married a Miss Whipple, and had born to him seven children. He was a son of Smith Johnson.

William S. Johnson was a pupil in the schools of Thompson, and went into the shoe factory of W. R. Case, of that place, at an early age. He gravitated into a business of this nature because that was his father's calling, and the lad showed such an aptitude, after he had gained a knowledge of his work, that he decided to make the manufacture of shoes his life work. He acquired his experience in the business at a time when it was customary for the operative to perfect himself in every department of shoe making, cutting, stitching, bottoming and finishing, quite in distinction from the modern method, where one man does but one thing connected with the manufacture, and the complete shoe passes through possibly twenty-five hands before it is ready for the market. In such a school did Mr. Johnson receive his education and the general knowledge gained there has been of incalculable benefit to him in his career as a manufacturer. After leaving the Case manufactory, Mr. Johnson came to Putnam, entering the C. M. Fisher factory, and later working for E. T. Whitmore in a similar capacity, remaining in Putnam three years. After leaving Putnam he went to Worcester, where he was engaged with Davenport & Long for about a year. He then went to North Brookfield to work for E. & A. H. Batchelder, resigning that position in 1876 to go to South Brookfield to take charge of Twitchell & Co.'s large manufactory, remaining there until the business was closed two years later. He then went to work for Greene & Twitchell of East Brookfield, acting as superintendent of their factory for about a year and a half. Succeeding this he came to Putnam, in 1879, and entered into a partnership with E. T. Whitmore, the manufactory being situated on Elm street, in the building so long occupied by Mr. Whitmore. With the growing demand for the product it was decided to remove to more commodious quarters, and in 1881 a part of the large building belonging to H. Newton Brown was secured, just east of the railroad station. With the burning of this building a few years later, in 1885, the firm was compelled to seek new accommodations, and the old silk mill was taken for a period of five years. At the expiration of the contract Mr. Johnson decided to erect a building exactly suited to the needs of the establishment, and in 1890 the new building was completed. It is two and one-half stories in height, fitted throughout with modern machines for shoe manufacturing, so as to enable the producer to place a shoe upon the market at the lowest possible price. As a protection against fire the Electric Heat Alarm Company has introduced 160 of its thermostats throughout the building, these giving immediate alarm upon the breaking out of fire anywhere in the establishment.

In the natural course of the business, the output has been steadily increasing and Mr. Johnson is already contemplating the erection of an addition which will enable him to double the present product. The shoes manufactured here are of a medium grade of men's, boys' and youths', particular attention being paid to the original stock and care in manufacturing. These two facts have given the product of this establishment a deserved and highly gratifying standing among shoe dealers of this grade, a fact which speaks well for the care and good judgment which Mr. Johnson has exercised since he became identified with the business. In July, 1891, he purchased Mr. Whitmore's interest, since that time conducting the business alone. While there is a very gratifying demand for the goods the year round, Mr. Johnson has considered it wise to have commercial agents upon the road, at present having two with a prospect of increasing the number shortly. One of the factors in the success which Mr. Johnson has attained, has been that from earliest boyhood he has devoted himself to nothing else except the manufacture of shoes, and he watches the demands of the public closely to anticipate their desires in the matter of serviceable, enduring and shapely footwear. Mr. Johnson sells his product direct to the trade, not through commission houses, and mostly in New England.

Mr. Johnson was married Dec. 31, 1883, to Lilian E. Taylor, of Winchendon, Mass. One child has been born to them, Ethel May, May 5, 1891. Until recently Mr. Johnson has made his home in West Thompson, but the demands of his business now render a residence in Putnam a practical necessity. He is a member of the F. & A. M., the Royal Arcanum and the Odd Fellows. In politics Mr. Johnson is a Republican. Quite naturally a man of Mr. Johnson's capabilities would be in demand in the shoe manufacturing world, and he has had a number of very flattering offers to accept the management of some of the largest shoe manufactories in the country, and a number of towns have signified their willingness to build him an establishment as large as he desired and give him the rental free, with exemption from taxes, if he would locate with them. These offers he has thought best to decline thus far. The town needs enterprising, practical and successful business men and finds that need well met in William S. Johnson.

PHILIP WOISARD. One of the most successful merchants and largest tax payers in Thompson, Windham county, is Philip Woisard, a leading business man of North Grosvenor Dale, and a typical French Canadian. His early life was spent in his native town of St. Guillaume, in the Province of Quebec, where he was born Nov. 12, 1854.

Joseph Woisard, father of Philip, was also a native of Quebec, and when a young man removed to the vicinity of Troy, N. Y., where he engaged in farming, and where he married Clotilda Maillot. Eventually, however, he returned to Quebec and located in St. Guillaume, where he spent the remainder of his days in farming and stock-raising. The parents were members of the Catholic Church, and they reared to years of usefulness ten children.

The education of Philip Woisard was such as could be acquired in the schools of St. Guillaume, his tuition being all in French. Even this somewhat limited opportunity was cut short during his fourteenth year, for at that time he decided to step out into a world fashioned after his own inclinations, in pursuit of which he journeyed alone to the United States, locating at Baltic, New London Co., Conn. He there became a clerk in a store owned and conducted by his brother, Joseph H. Woisard, and was thus employed until 1886, when he spent a short time in Rhode Island. His association with North Grosvenor Dale began in 1888, in which year he started in business for himself as a baker and general merchant, making a specialty of shoes and gentlemen's furnishings. Through untiring industry and economy, he has built up a large and lucrative trade, and is regarded as one of the shrewdest and most practical business men of the place. Mr. Woisard has assured his permanent interest in the town by erecting two fine business blocks in North Grosvenor Dale, and he also owns his dwelling and bakery, his taxes amounting to as much as any other resident of the town.

In political affiliation Mr. Woisard is a staunch Democrat, and has held among other positions that of grand juror. He is associated with the Independent Order of Foresters, Grosvenor Dale, and he and his family are members of the Catholic Church in Thompson. In Baltic, in 1876, Mr. Woisard was united in marriage with Louise Dupont, a native of Quebec, Canada, a daughter of John B. Dupont. Of this union there were four children: Joseph, who died when very young; Noelia; Nellida; and Camilda. The children were educated at convents in Canada and Grosvenor Dale, and all are accomplished and interesting. Mr. Woisard is deserving of great credit for the all-around success which has attended his single handed efforts, and it is doubtful if any man in the town has more nearly realized his expectations, by sheer force of will and unrelaxed application to business. Of him it may be said that the early necessity for struggle developed the latent forces of his nature, and instead of discouraging effort built up a strong and vigorous character.

REV. PATRICK J. O'LEARY, pastor of St. Mary's Church, South Coventry, Tolland county, is one of the well known priests in the Hartford Diocese of the Church of Rome. His life in early years was cast along lines that brought him in close touch with the real life of the multitude, and the broad charity for the faults and foibles of mankind, taught him in those days of contact with the world, has given him infinite patience and gentleness in guiding his fellowmen along the path of light.

Patrick O'Leary, grandfather of Patrick J., was a native of County Kerry, Ireland, and there passed his life in agricultural pursuits. He died in 1841, when in middle age, leaving his widow with six small children. The mother, whose maiden name was Eliza Daly, passed away three years after the death of her husband, and the following children were left to the tender mercies of the world: Mary, who died young; Cornelius, father of Rev. Patrick J.; John, who resides at Woonsocket, R. I.; Kate, widow of Michael Murphy, residing in Putnam, Conn.; Eliza, who died in Thorndike, Mass., at the age of sixteen; and Patrick, mention of whom will be made later.

Cornelius O'Leary was born in County Kerry, Ireland, Sept. 29, 1827. He received but a limited education in the national schools of his native land, but in the school of experience, and by reading and observation, he acquired a learning of far more practical value than that obtained by many who pass years on the recitation bench. In 1847 he went to England, and at Chatham enlisted in the East India Co., for civil and military service in India, where he spent five years. In 1852 he left Calcutta for New York on the "Elizabeth Ellen," Capt. Uphire, and after a six months voyage landed at his destination. He then went to Massachusetts, and at Palmer found employment in the cotton mill, later going to Rhode Island, where he was also employed at mill work. Cornelius O'Leary's next location was at Woonsocket, and in 1864 he located in Mechanicsville, Conn., where for upwards of forty years he was employed in the mills, during twenty-eight of which he held the position of overseer. During this time, however, he made his home in Putnam with his family. He is now living a retired life, making his home at South Coventry with his son, Rev. Patrick J. Like all his family he is an earnest believer in the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church. In his political faith he is an outspoken Republican, and has been active in party work. While in Massachusetts Mr. O'Leary married Mary Ann Byrne, who was born in County Carroll, Ireland, a daughter of Daniel Byrne. She passed away in Putnam in 1897, a devoted Christian wife and mother. Five children were born to Cornelius O'Leary and wife, three of whom died in infancy. Those living are: Mary Elizabeth, who is now Sister Leontine, of the Sisters of Mercy of the Hartford Community, and is stationed at Danbury, Conn., and Rev. Patrick J. O'Leary.

Rev. Patrick J. O'Leary was born in Woonsocket, R. I., June 22, 1858, and removed to the town of Thompson, Windham Co., Conn., with his parents in 1865. He attended school in Thompson and later was a pupil in the Webster, Mass., high school. After acquiring a common school education he worked in a mill at Mechanicsville, but on account of ill health was obliged to seek a change of climate. He went to the Pacific coast, making the journey by the Panama route, and visited many parts of California and other sections of the West, remaining a year, during which time he obtained no little familiarity with the Spanish language. After returning to Connecticut, he learned telegraphy and on account of his knowledge of Spanish was tendered a position in Texas as operator, which he accepted and spent a year there. Mr. O'Leary's health again failed and he was obliged to resign. Returning to the East he went to Liverpool, England, and after visiting many of the old European cities, went to the Madeira Islands, thence to Cape St. Vincent, South Africa, and after a short stay there went to Montevideo and Buenos Ayres, in South America. While in the latter place he entered the service of the United States as telegrapher on the U. S. S. "Hartford," which was the flagship of Admiral Farragut, and which was engaged in surveying and sounding. Later Mr. O'Leary was transferred to the "Guard." After one year in the Navy he was discharged at Norfolk, Va., and he then returned to his old home in Putnam. From his youth he had had a desire to enter professional life, and although some years had passed since he left the school room, he still, in spite of ill health and other adversities, cherished a desire to continue his studies. He entered the law office of the late Hon. S. H. Seward, of Putnam, with whom he read law, was admitted to practice at the Windham County Bar, Dec. 22, 1881, and practiced in Putnam with the Hon. S. H. Seward until March, 1883, when he abandoned the law with the determination of entering the priesthood. Mr. O'Leary then went to Rome and there entered the North American College to pursue his theological course. At the end of two years the condition of his health forced him to leave the Eternal City, and he returned home. He then entered St. John's Seminary, Brighton district, Boston, and after many years of study, constantly retarded in his progress by poor health, he was ordained June 30, 1891, and said his first public mass in the church of the Sacred Heart, at Mechanicsville. For a short time he was stationed at Willimantic under Father De Bruycker and later at Grosvenor Dale under Father Thomas Cooney. In 1892 Mr. O'Leary was appointed curate at Plainville, whence after two years he was appointed to a similar position at St. Joseph's in Bristol. At the latter place he passed six years conscientiously devoted to the good of his people, and it was to their sincere regret that he was obliged to give up his work on account of ill health, going to Norfolk, Va., to recuperate. In October of 1899 he was sent to Waterbury, Conn., where he was for three months. On July 13, 1900, he went to St. Mary's home, Hartford, where he remained until he came to South Coventry. In September, 1901, he became pastor of St. Mary's Church in South Coventry, where his parish covers a wide territory and embraces two missions—Eagleville and Hop River. Although Father O'Leary has been there but a comparatively short time he has accomplished much good, has won a high place in the estimation of his parishioners, and commands the respect of the non-Catholic residents. He is simple and unassuming in his manners, and one of those rare men who go about seeking to do good. Father O'Leary is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and of the Ancient Order of Hibernians.

Patrick O'Leary, brother of Cornelius, and uncle of Rev. Patrick J., was born in County Kerry, Ireland, March 17, 1841, one month after the death of his father. When he was three years old his mother died, and for the next few years there was little of brightness in the life of the young orphan. At the age of eight he came to the United States with his brother, and settled at Norfolk, Conn. He had attended the national schools in Ireland, and after coming to Connecticut studied under his cousin, with whom he lived. At the age of fifteen he began clerking for Michael Feeley of Woonsocket, where he remained for three years. In 1859 he went to New York, and was there employed in the dry goods store of Lord & Taylor. After a year the decline of business and his own ill health induced him to go South, and he stayed at Charleston, S. C., until July, 1860. The war cloud became threatening and Mr. O'Leary returned to the North, going to Cleveland, Ohio, where the first call for troops found him. He enlisted April 18, 1861, as a private in the 8th O. V. I., a regiment that later acquired fame for efficient service under Gen. S. S. Carroll, a brother-in-law of Gen. Hancock. Mr. O'Leary has the honorable distinction of active participation in every battle, march and skirmish in which his regiment engaged—in all seventy-six battles and skirmishes, including McClellan's West Virginia campaign, the operations of the Army of the Potomac, Antietam (where he was wounded in the left arm), Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg, Romney, and Gettysburg. He was mustered out of service July 13, 1864, and at once joined the Marine Corps and was stationed at Philadelphia. From September, 1864, to May, 1865, he was on detached service of the special commissioners of the War and Navy Departments, and then accompanied Admiral Goldsboro's fleet to Europe, spending three years on the flag ship in the Mediterranean and foreign waters. Among the noted officers on the fleet at the time were Admiral Dewey, Watson and Sampson, and the fleet was sent abroad for the express purpose of convincing European powers that in spite of four years of internecine war the United States government was by no means crippled. For a part of the time Mr. O'Leary served as marine orderly to Commodore Stedman. The fleet returned late in 1867 and was ordered to Philadelphia, where Mr. O'Leary was when his enlistment expired Sept.

2, 1868. He then entered the employ of the Mechanicsville Co., where for two years he was inspector and shipper after which he was a clerk for two years in Judge Almon D. Paine's store. In 1873 he located in Putnam, starting the grocery of P. O'Leary & Co., his brother-in-law, Edward Mullen, being his partner. At the end of a year his health failed and he sold out to William Mullen & Son. With his wife he then went to California, Mexico, Jamaica and the West Indies, and in those milder climates regained his health. Upon his return he went to work for Mr. Mullen, and two years later opened a store for himself, which he owned until the fall of 1889, when he sold it. On Feb. 12, 1890, he received his commission as postmaster and he served in that office with great acceptance for nearly five years.

Politically, as may be inferred, Mr. O'Leary is a staunch Republican. His first vote was cast in 1863 while in the army. He has always been active in party work, and has been looked upon as a leader. He was the first city clerk, holding the office from 1896 to 1900, and he served on the board of relief five successive terms. Fraternally he belongs to A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R., of which he was the second commander and is now adjutant.

On May 8, 1870, by the Rev. Father Vygen, Patrick O'Leary was united in marriage with Kate Mullen, who entered into rest May 4, 1891. On Jan. 22, 1896, Mr. O'Leary married his present wife, Margaret Brett, of Brooklyn, N. Y. In his religious connection, Mr. O'Leary clings to the faith of his fathers, and is a faithful member of the Roman Catholic Church, of which he has been collector for twenty-eight years. His reputation for integrity, and his popularity as a man are best attested by his career, and the record of his official life is without spot or blemish.

ARTHUR LUCIUS FITTS. The finely developed farm of 129 acres belonging to Arthur L. Fitts, is one of the most desirable properties in Pomfret, Windham county, and possesses additional interest in the mind of its owner because its fertile and resourceful acres were once tilled by his father a man of means, enterprise and unquestioned integrity. The immediate ancestry of Mr. Fitts may be found in the record of Charles H. Fitts, of Woodstock, printed elsewhere in this work. Directly speaking, he is a son of Lyman and Harriet A. (Richards) Fitts, and was born in Pomfret, Jan. 11, 1856.

The youth of Mr. Fitts did not differ materially from that of other farm-reared boys in his neighborhood, and he experienced the early rising, hard work, and little leisure associated with the care of a large and profitable farm. His education at the district schools was supplemented by attendance at Woodstock Academy, where he improved his chances, and gained a fair knowledge in several directions. At the age of seventeen he began work ing out, at intervals, for the surrounding farmers, and after his marriage he was employed on the farm of John A. Carpenter, with whom he remained for a year. After a few months with Mr. Daniels he returned to the home farm, which he rented from his father, and continued thereon until after the death of the elder man. Mr. Fitts then bought out the interests of the other heirs, and up to the present time this farm has been his prized possession. His way has not been without its discouragements and drawbacks, chief among which was a disastrous fire in January, 1901, which demolished the house built by his grandfather. In the place of this time-honored residence has since been erected a modern rural home, after the advanced ideas of the present owner, with an adjoining cottage. Mr. Fitts is a public spirited, broad minded man, a successful farmer, and honored citizen. Although a Republican, and devoted to the best interests of his party, he has never sought official recognition.

On Nov. 15, 1881, Mr. Fitts married Emma Richmond, born May 12, 1857, a daughter of James Richmond. Four children have been born of this union: Harriet M., born Oct. 20, 1882, attended the Woodstock Academy, and is a young woman of many accomplishments: Reuben Slade, born July 19, 1883, graduated from the Woodstock Academy in 1902; Olive Louise, born Dec. 13, 1890; and Lyman Richmond, born May 8, 1892.

James Richmond, father of Mrs. Fitts, was born in Hilperton, Wiltshire, England, April 8, 1821, a son of John and Ann (Marshman) Richmond. John Richmond was a farmer and laborer, and lived in Hilperton, where both he and his wife died. His children were as follows: Elizabeth, the deceased wife of Thomas Hogan, a soldier in the English army, and a resident of Hilperton, England; Sarah, the deceased wife of James Thompson, of Hilperton; John, a sea faring man, who married Maria Matthews, and died in Hilperton; Ann, the widow of John Ball, and a resident of Hilperton; James; and Thomas, who was a twin, and died at the age of twenty-one.

James Richmond was reared to the hard and unsatisfactory work of farming on a small scale, and his youth afforded scant opportunity for educational training. Nevertheless, he possessed a keen desire for knowledge, and improved such chances as came his way, by observation and reading. His first intimacy with books was acquired at the Sunday-school, and his alphabet was learned from a copy made by a friend. At the present time he is an unusually well informed and intelligent man, no opportunity having escaped him to add to his store of useful and interesting information. As a young man he found employment for a short time in Cardiff, Wales, but barring this limited experience, he lived on the home farm until his marriage. For the first ten years thereafter he kept house in Hilperton, and from his wages as a laborer managed to save. In 1855 he boarded a sailing vessel at Liverpool, and upon arriving in New York went directly to his destination in Pascoag, R. I., where he had friends to welcome him. He was accompanied by his wife's brother, Samuel Rich, and they landed in New York Oct. 21, 1855, after a month's voyage. Mr. Richmond had very little money in his pocket, but his hopes were high, and he soon found work in a woolen mill in Pascoag, where he saved his wages, and made considerable headway. On Nov. 12, 1856, he was joined in his new home by his wife and five children, they having been on the ocean for six weeks and two days.

For about ten years Mr. Richmond was employed in Burrillville, and in March, 1866, he began work in the woolen mill of Michael Moriarity, at Putnam, Conn., where he remained until 1870 as manager of the engine. The La Fayette Reynolds woolen mills at Windsor, Conn., employed his services as engineer until the destruction of the plant, and the following year he returned to Putnam, where he soon purchased his present farm from Nathaniel Battey. He is engaged in general farming, in which he has achieved success. Mr. Richmond is respected by all who know him, and he is regarded as a substantial member of the agricultural community of Putnam.

While living in his native town of Hilperton, England, Mr. Richmond married, Sept. 7, 1845, Hannah Rich, born April 14, 1825, a daughter of John and Rebecca (Hill) Rich. Of this union there have been born nine children, viz.: Thomas, a boss carder of Elmville, Conn., who married Juliette White; James, boss designer in the woolen mill at Stroudsburg, Pa., who married Sarah Bigwood; Ann, deceased in infancy; Louise, unmarried and living with her father; Elizabeth Ann, the wife of Abram Sykes of Putnam; Emma, now Mrs. Fitts; Hannah Rebecca, married first to Frank N. Smith, and afterward to Edmund A. Hoyle, but now a widow residing at Worcester, Mass.; John Henry, who married Mary Ann Ramsey, is a farmer managing his father's farm; and Charles Edward, an expert mechanic of Hartford, who married Lavinia Gurten. James Richmond, above mentioned, is an expert in his line, as is evidenced by the fact that he had charge of the famous feat of making a suit of clothes in six hours and four minutes. In the hands of a tailor supplied with materials this might not seem an impossible undertaking, but in this instance the wool was taken from the back of the sheep and placed on the back of the wearer in the shape of a finished suit, within the specified time of six hours and four minutes.

CHARLES HENRY STERRY was born in Tolland in the same house in which he is now living, Dec. 23, 1852. He is a son of Samuel Sterry, who was born in 1828, and was a shoemaker, working at the same place for twenty years. The father came to Tolland, where he engaged in farming on the farm which is now occupied by Charles H., near Tolland Centre. There he lived to be an old man, dying Jan. 27, 1882. In politics he was a Republican, and his interest in public affairs was purely from patriotic considerations.

Samuel Sterry was married Oct. 21, 1846, to Harriet Hulett, of Willington, Conn., a daughter of John Hulett, who served in the war of 1812, and whose father was a veteran of the Revolutionary struggle. Charles Henry was the only child of this marriage. Mr. Sterry married for his second wife, Harriet Staples. To this marriage was born one child, George Nelson, who is now living in the town of Mansfield, where he is a very successful farmer.

Charles Henry Sterry was born in Tolland, Conn., and received his education in the public schools of Tolland and Hartford. At the age of sixteen he began learning the trade of ornamental painting with Holt Brothers, remaining four years with that house. Mr. Sterry then accompanied his father to Verbank, N. Y., where they started in business under the name of Samuel Sterry & Son, engaging in the retailing of coal and lumber. For some five years they remained in this village, and then sold out. The elder Sterry remained two years alone in Verbank, where he had a farming business of considerable importance.

Charles H. Sterry came back to Tolland in 1877 to settle on the old homestead, which has since remained his home. The place contains 100 acres, and there Mr. Sterry raises garden vegetables to a very considerable degree. For some twelve years he ran the stage between Rockville and Tolland, carrying the mail and doing any other business that fitted this enterprise. Mr. Sterry started a harness-making business in 1894 on Tolland street, in the building of J. P. Root, where he does a general harness-making business, together with harness and boot and shoe repairing. Some fine harness sets, which were completely made in this shop have gone out to establish the reputation of Mr. Sterry as a first class workman.

Mr. Sterry is a staunch Republican and in 1890 was appointed by the county commissioners county fish warden, a position he still holds. Mr. Sterry and his wife attend the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Sterry is a member, and has been the vice-president of the missionary society for a number of years.

Mr. Sterry was married June 11, 1873, to Elizabeth McComb Graham, of Hartford, a daughter of Donald and Rebecca McKenzie (Shirrell) Graham. Mr. Graham was a weaver and a machinist, in Hartford. His widow makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Sterry.

Mr. Sterry enjoys out-of-door recreations, and is especially expert as a marksman with the rifle and shot gun. At the shooting tournament held in 1889 at Meriden in connection with the State Fair, he took the first prize. Mr. Sterry belongs to the Colt Gun Club of Hartford, of which he was captain a number of years.

EDWARD E. SANDERSON, the leading dairyman in Putnam, Windham county, who resides on a farm in the eastern part of the town of Pomfret, was born in Eaton, Madison Co., N. Y., where his family had been for years successful farming people. His grandfather, Luther Sanderson, a farmer of Eaton, died there at a good old age. He had two children: Edward, who is mentioned below; and Harriet, who never married.

Edward Sanderson, father of Edward E., was born in Eaton, where he was reared to farm work and later made a home for himself. In connection with farming he for many years made a specialty of hop culture, carrying on an extensive and profitable business in that line. He was married to Lucretia Kingsbury, who was born in Rhode Island, and who now resides with her son, Edward E. By her Mr. Sanderson had three children, who became farmers: Percy, who married Eliza Frink, died in Eaton, N. Y. Edward E., is mentioned below. Elmer, who married Nellie Pettis, died at Pomfret Landing, Dec. 25, 1900. Mr. Sanderson spent his last years in Eaton, where he died and is buried. As a forceful, intelligent man, who exerted an influence on the side of morality he was well-known in his community, and was an esteemed member of the Baptist Church. A firm advocate of Republican principles, he voted that ticket. What he accomplished in life he owed to his conscientious following of one main business.

Edward Elias Sanderson early evinced an alert and resolute mind, which has characterized him through life. By attending the common schools of Eaton, and for one term the Morrisville high school, he had acquired at the early age of fourteen a thorough rudimentary education: and at the same time he had been well-trained in farm work. So ambitious was he that at the age of fifteen he started out to work for neighboring farmers. That he was unusually capable was shown by the fact that he at once commanded nearly a man's wages—ten dollars a month besides his board. On Nov. 1, 1881, he came to Pomfret, where his force of character readily secured him a position on the farm of I. W. Trowbridge, who was conducting a milk route through the city of Putnam. By driving the wagon Mr. Sanderson became perfectly familiar with the line, and at the end of three years, in company with Mr. William R. May, he purchased the route and carried on the business from the May farm. For nine years the partnership continued. Then Mr. Sanderson bought out Mr. May, and has since conducted the business by himself. On March 10, 1885, he married, in Pomfret, Cora Adelia Kent, who was born Feb. 14, 1867, in Putnam, daughter of Bela M. and Adelia D. (Bliss) Kent. They have had three children: The first died in infancy (two and one-half weeks old). Mildred L., was born Aug. 16, 1889; and Merton K., Feb. 22, 1895.

After severing his partnership with Mr. May, in 1894, Mr. Sanderson purchased of Mrs. John Wilson the Methuel Parkhurst place, a seventy-five acre tract in the eastern part of the town of Pomfret, near the Putnam town line, a most excellent location for the development of his milk trade. There Mr. Sanderson has since resided, showing special ability as a manager of two lines of business—farming and dairying. When he purchased the place it was "badly run down," but he has made extensive improvements, including a large barn erected in 1901, so that the property is now valuable. From a nucleus of six cows taken from the May farm his stock has increased to twenty-five, among them many thoroughbred Jerseys; and his milk custom far exceeds that of any other dairyman in the city of Putnam.

Mr. Sanderson deservedly commands the highest respect of all who know him. Putnam Commandery No. 348, United Order of Golden Cross, and the A. O. U. W. count him among their esteemed members. He attends the Advent Church; and in politics is a Republican, but not an office seeker. Having an unlimited capacity for work he has won his place in life without the slightest assistance from others.

GEORGE M. PILLING, the leading painter and paper hanger in Danielson, Windham county, does the high class work in his line, and by his strict honesty and fair dealing has built up a good business and won for himself a high standing in the community.

James Pilling, grandfather of George M., was a stone cutter and mason all his life. His home was in Royton, Lancashire, England, where he died when over sixty years of age. Mary Miller, his wife, was a daughter of Simon Miller, and she survived her husband. She came to this country in 1847, and died in Cumberland, R. I., in her seventy-fifth year. To James Pilling and his wife were born: (1) Ruth, who married Joseph Clegg, and died in Oldham, England. (2) John, became a molder, and died in Jersey City, N. J.; he married Ellen Smith. (3) Hannah, married Robert Marshall, and died in England. (4) Sarah, married Matthew Bamblin, and died in England. (5) Susanna, married Abraham Taylor, and died in Oldham, England. (6) David, married Ann Mills, and died in Providence, R. I. At different periods in his life he was a mill hand, a farmer, and a carpenter. (7) Ralph, married Joanna McGirty, and died in Oldham, England. (8) Reuben.

Reuben Pilling, the father of George M., was born Feb. 24, 1824, in Royton, England, and grew up without schooling, saying he never went to school a week in his life. At the age of ten years he was put to work in a cotton factory, in his native town, doing such work as a boy of his tender years could do, and becoming a weaver. His hours in the mill were long, and his wages very small. When he was twenty-one he left the mill. He acquired a knowledge of reading, writing and mathematics as best he could, and gradually became a splendid mathematician, a fine penman, and well informed on all the issues and questions of the day. When Reuben Pilling came to the United States in 1845 he crossed the ocean in the brig "George Gardner" (500 tons) and was a little over seven weeks on the voyage. He landed in New York April 30, 1845, with no particular destination, but with hopes of finding his brother John, who had come over ten years before. His wife accompanied him, and they found the brother in Jersey City. Reuben Pilling soon found work with a market gardener near Jersey City, receiving four dollars and fifty cents a week and boarding himself. At the close of the season he went to Paterson, N. J., where he secured a position in a foundry, which he held for five months, and then began hand-loom weaving in a Paterson mill. For some months he remained with that mill, and for about two years was employed in the weave shop of a factory at Albion, R. I. After being employed in several other factories in that State Mr. Pilling began the making of cotton table cloths at Cumberland Hill. There he ran three looms, and had a partner who peddled their output through Rhode Island and eastern Connecticut. Mr. Pilling continued this business quite successfully for several years, when he disposed of his interest and became a dresser tender in the factory at Albion, where he remained about two years. In September, 1865, he came to East Brooklyn, Conn., to enter the employ of the Quinebaug Company. As a ready and dexterous workman he was assigned to different departments where he might be needed. Finally he took up painting, and bought the painting business of A. G. Scranton, of Danielson. During his active years Mr. Pilling continued this work, and finally transferred it to his son, George M. He is now living retired on School street in Danielson.

Reuben Pilling was married Dec. 25, 1843, in Roachdale, England, to Ann Worthington, who was born March 11, 1825, in Royton, a daughter of James and Fanny (Fielding) Worthington. She died in Danielson, in November, 1899, and her remains were buried at Danielson. To this union were born the following children: (1) James, born in England, died young; (2) Thomas W. W., was a machinist and was killed by falling from a staging in Danielson in 1880, while he was engaged in shingling. He was thirty-four years of age, and died unmarried. (3) Christopher C., had two wives, Ellen Wheaton and Emily Ballou. He was a contractor and builder, and died in Brockton, Mass., in May, 1900, at the age of fifty-two years. His daughter Maude, by his first wife, is a school teacher. (4) Ralph, and (5) David, both died in infancy. (6) George M.; (7) Reuben, who married Ida Gardner, is a machinist, and resides at Providence, R. I. They have the following children, Grace, Clara, Elmer, Frank (deceased) and Leroy. (8) Emanuel, who married Etta Wheeler, is engaged in the insurance business at Providence, and has these children: a son who is dead; and Miriam. (9) Luther, who is unmarried, is a traveling salesman and makes his home with his father. (10) Emma F., who is unmarried, was educated in the Danielson high school, and at Wellesley College, and has become a very successful school teacher. (11) Simon O., married Katherine Beal, and is a physician of Newburyport, Mass. He has one child, Elizabeth.

Reuben Pilling is a staunch Democrat, and has held some minor official positions in his town. In his religious views he is an Adventist, and is a well informed man.

George M. Pilling was born June 4, 1854, in Cumberland, R. I., and was eleven years of age when his parents came to Danielson, locating on the Brooklyn side of the river. When he was ten years old he began work in a cotton factory at Albion, R. I., working for very small wages, and after the removal of his parents to East Brooklyn he entered the Quinebaug mill, where he remained until he was nearly seventeen years of age. During these years he received all his schooling, which consisted of one half term in East Brooklyn, and two terms in the old factory school house in Danielson. For some years he was employed in the spinning room, and when about sixteen years of age began to assist his father in the work of painting. When his father established himself in business George M. continued with him, presently becoming a partner, the firm being known as R. Pilling & Son. For several years father and son worked together at painting, paper hanging, etc., until the father retired and the entire business passed into the hands of the son. George M. Pilling carries on at the present time on a large and successful scale the business in which he has participated from the first, and employs at times more than a dozen men, using four or five the year around. Mr. Pilling is himself an expert workman, and his judgment is invariably good in any matter concerning his trade.

Mr. Pilling married (first) Emma J. Potter, of Danielson, who died leaving no issue. His second marriage was to Hattie Pierce, Feb. 22, 1882. She was born Jan. 20, 1860, in Sterling, a daughter of Robert H. and Lois (Kettle) Pierce. Mr. Pierce is a farmer in Sterling. To this union have come: Earle Wellington, who was born Dec. 11, 1887, and Ethel Louise, who was born June 1, 1890.

Mr. Pilling is a staunch Democrat, and was elected to the board of selectmen in 1896, on which he served five years, and then declined further reelection. For the past twelve years he has served as constable, and for several terms has served on the board of assessors. He belongs to Aetna Lodge, No. 21, A. O. U. W., and was one of the charter members and is a trustee of B. A. Bailey Lodge,

No. 297, N. E. O. P. Both Mr. and Mrs. Pilling belong to the Methodist Church, and they have a neat home and pleasant property at Danielson.

F. F. BEBBINGTON, a successful farmer and representative citizen of Ashford, Windham Co., Conn., was born Dec. 26, 1852, in Mansfield, Conn., son of John and Eunice (Gurley) Bebbington, the latter a native of Mansfield.

John Bebbington, the father of F. F., was born about 1824, in Cheshire, England, and came to the United States when a boy in his 'teens. The trip was made in a sailing vessel, and when it reached the harbor of New York City Mr. Bebbington landed with an almost empty pocket. His destination was Mansfield, Conn., where his sister Mary Jane, the wife of Thomas Turner, was located. Soon after reaching there he found employment as a farm hand, and followed this work until his marriage. Providently saving his money, Mr. Bebbington invested in land in the north part of Mansfield, being able to pay for but a portion of it. However, the balance was soon cleared off, his industry and thrift bringing gratifying results. Other land was purchased and at one time he owned two valuable farms in the vicinity of Mansfield. About 1857 he disposed of his property there and came to Ashford, locating on the Boutwell farm, on Pumpkin Hill, where he remained two years. He then purchased the farm which F. F. Bebbington now owns, which was then the property of Erastus Gallup. This farm originally comprised 214 acres and Mr. Bebbington added other land, erected the present comfortable residence and made many substantial improvements. In the meantime he had bought the Boutwell farm and when his son, F. F., purchased the Gallup place, he removed to the former and lived there until his death, which occurred in his sixty-eighth year, Sept. 5, 1892.

Mr. Bebbington was entirely a self-made man, his success depending upon his own thrift and energy. His ample means were honestly accumulated, and he bore a reputation for sterling integrity. Endowed with health and strength, his physical proportions being six feet in height with 200 pounds in weight, he was able to work hard, while a careful and temperate life preserved his vigor until within a year of his decease. In politics he was a Republican, but he never sought or desired office. For many years he was a consistent member and generous supporter of the Warrenville Baptist Church, of which his wife was also a member.

The marriage of John Bebbington was to Eunice Gurley in Mansfield, Conn., who died April 8, 1876. The children of this union were: John Gurley, who married Mrs. Ellen Abbott Wayland, is a carpenter by trade, and lives in Willimantic, their children being Mabel and Burt; Robert W., who is an extensive farmer, resides with his family in Shaw, Kansas; Frederick Fields, of this sketch; and Albert T., a farmer, who died May 15, 1895, aged thirty-two years.

Frederick Fields Bebbington was born Dec. 26, 1852, in Mansfield, Conn., and was three years old when the family removed to Ashford. Until the age of seventeen he attended the district schools during the winter seasons, his summers being occupied at farm work in the neighborhood. Later, in association with his eldest brother, Mr. Bebbington purchased the farm from his father and they operated it in partnership for a couple of years, at the end of which period Frederick bought his brother's interest and since that time has been sole owner. A general line of farming is carried on, special attention is given to dairying, and Mr. Bebbington also deals in cattle with good results. This home farm comprises 214 acres, but the total area owned by Mr. Bebbington includes fully 500 acres.

On March 27, 1882, Frederick Fields Bebbington was united in marriage with Lydia Estella Burdick, born Aug. 14, 1857, in Smithfield, R. I., daughter of Asa and Sarah (Mowry) Burdick. Two sons have been born to this union, namely: Frank, born April 1, 1883; and Thomas E., born Aug. 27, 1885.

In politics Mr. Bebbington is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and has served acceptably on the board of selectmen, on the board of relief and has been a grand juror. The religious connection of the family is with the Baptist Church. In his community Mr. Bebbington is highly respected as a reliable business man, an excellent farmer, a man devoted to his home and family and a substantial, enterprising and representative citizen.

WILLIAM ELLIOT ROBBINS. Numbered among the prosperous and influential residents of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., is William Elliot Robbins, who was born Feb. 13, 1854, in Springfield, Mass., a son of Brinton Payne and Caroline Dorothy (Jones) Robbins.

The father of William E. Robbins was born in 1813, in Hebron, Conn., and died in 1896 in Springfield, Mass. By calling, he was a farmer and continued in that line all his life, going to Springfield, Mass., when a young man. In 1838 he married, his wife being a daughter of Elijah Jones, of Wilbraham, Mass., and she died in Springfield, Mass., in 1899, aged about eighty-two years. To these parents were born: Henry Lee, a farmer of Wilbraham; James Edward, a railroad man living in Springfield, Mass.; Sarah Emily, married Ira B. Kibbe, of Somers; Francis Eugene, a carpenter of Springfield, Mass.; Austin Monroe, a farmer of Springfield, Mass.; William E., our subject; Mary Jones, married Leoline Kendall, and they now live in Chicopee Falls, Massachusetts.

Joel Robbins, the paternal grandfather of William E., was born at North Bolton, Conn., Aug. 25, 1766; he was the only son of Miner and Dimis Payne Robbins. He was a very worthy man, a miller by trade, who was a very successful citizen of Hebron, Conn., and died deeply mourned by all.

The education of William Elliot Robbins was obtained at Chicopee Falls, Mass., and when he was sixteen he returned to the farm and remained with his father until he removed to Stafford in 1879, at which time he began to learn the trade of carpenter with his father-in-law, Mr. William Robinson Davis. Since then Mr. Robbins has divided his time between his trade and farming, now owning sixty acres of land in Orcuttville, which formerly was in the possession of Mr. Davis. On July 31, 1898, Mr. Robbins was given the position of carpenter for the Stafford Worsted Co., which he still retains, although he also directs the management of his farm and keeps a few cows. All of the butter used by the family is made on the place, and is of most excellent quality.

The marriage of Mr. Robbins occurred Dec. 28, 1880, to Madelia Augusta Davis, the daughter of William Robinson and Clarissa (Howe) Davis, of Stafford. Mr. Davis was a carpenter and cabinet-maker by trade, and his family is one of the oldest and most highly respected in Stafford. To Mr. and Mrs. Robbins have been born: Grace May, born May 5, 1882; Blanche Eveline, Aug. 13, 1885; Marcia Leona, Aug. 18, 1887; Hazel Davis, Nov. 30, 1890.

Mr. Robbins is a member of Waseon Lodge No. 32, I. O. O. F., of which he has been secretary, and which he has served in other capacities, and he is also associated with the A. O. U. W. In religious matters he is an active member of the Methodist Church of Stafford Springs and is one of its firm supporters, serving upon the Sunday-school board and always giving liberally of his means to its support. While in national matters Mr. Robbins is a Democrat, in local affairs he believes in voting for the man best suited for the position, but he is conservative and has never been a seeker of official distinction. Honorable in all his dealings, attending to his own affairs, Mr. Robbins is a respected citizen of Stafford.

JOHN C. TABER, a retired manufacturer of Cincinnati, residing in Scotland, Windham county, descends from an English family who several generations ago came to America and settled in Rhode Island.

Grandfather Constant Taber served in the Revolutionary war as a volunteer from Rhode Island. The family also lived for a time in Plainfield. The grandmother, Mercy, died at the age of ninety-six years, and their children were: Lizzie, Abigail and Constant.

Constant Taber, father of John C., married Phoebe Esther Chapman, daughter of John and Esther (Crary) Chapman, and to them came: James

M., born Sept. 20, 1839, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Sarah E., born Feb. 28, 1841, wife of Clinton Smith, a farmer of Scotland (they have two children—Marcus, born Feb. 24, 1866, and Mary, born June 16, 1877); John C., born Sept. 21, 1843; and Fred J., born April 13, 1847, of South Windham, Conn. Constant Taber engaged in farming. He resided in Plainfield and also for a time in Danielsonville. He died June 19, 1884, aged eighty-four.

On the maternal side John C. Taber is a great-grandson of Amos Chapman, who lived and died in Voluntown, Conn., and was a farmer. He married Abigail Burdick, and they had the following children: Amos, John, Abel, Adam, Campbell, Betsy, Hannah, Sally and Lucy. John Chapman, son of Amos, was a native of Voluntown, Conn., where he died at the age of forty-four years. He married Esther Cray (daughter of George Cray, who married a Brown), who died at the age of eighty-six. Their children were as follows: John, who died at the age of eighty-seven, in 1901, was a farmer of Westboro, Ohio; Phoebe Esther, the mother of Mr. Taber, deceased; Amos S., a farmer of Scotland, Conn.; Josiah Fuller, who died in 1897, aged seventy-seven; and Mary Abbie, unmarried, who resides in Scotland, Connecticut.

John C. Taber was born in Voluntown, Conn., and when four and one-half years of age went to live with an uncle in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he remained until the age of sixteen, receiving his education in the city schools. Returning East, he lived in Scotland, and just about the time he was entering manhood enlisted in Co. G, 26th C. V. I. He served nearly a year, seeing some hard service, and participating in the attack on Port Hudson, where many of the regiment lost their lives. At the close of the war, after a course at the Eastman Business College in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Mr. Taber returned to Cincinnati and embarked in the manufacture of ladies' straw hats and bonnets, continuing successfully in that line for twenty-seven years, when he disposed of his business interests and retired to Scotland, Conn., where he now resides.

Mr. Taber has been twice married, but had no children by his first wife. On June 3, 1896, he was married to L. Flora Gager, the accomplished daughter of John P. Gager, and two daughters have come to bless this union: Esther B., born April 8, 1898, and Susan I., born March 13, 1901.

In politics Mr. Taber is strongly Republican, taking an active interest in the workings of the party. While a resident of Cincinnati he was a member of the G. A. R. in that city. Public-spirited, genial and prosperous, Mr. Taber is justly regarded as one of the leading men of Scotland, as well as a kind neighbor and an excellent friend.

Mrs. Taber is a representative of an old English family. The first ancestor in America was Dr. William Gager, who, in 1630, came over with Gov. Winthrop. He, with many others of the company, died the same year from a disease contracted at sea on account of being forced to eat unwholesome food. From prints still preserved we find him spoken of as a "skillful surgeon; a right Godly man, and one of the deacons of the congregation."

John Gager, son of Dr. William, was one of the company that settled at New London with John Winthrop, the younger, and his name is there recorded on the list of the first inhabitants. He had a grant of 200 acres from the town of New London, east of the river, near the straits (now in Ledyard, Conn.), where he located soon after 1650, remaining there until he joined in the settlement of Norwich. His house lot in the new town bears the date of the earliest surveys, November, 1659. During 1674 and 1688 he was constable of Norwich. He died Dec. 10, 1703, at an advanced age. His family consisted of two sons and one daughter.

Samuel Gager, son of John, married, in 1695, Mrs. Rebecca (Lay) Raymond. He was a large landowner, and resided in the parish of New Concord (now Bozrah) Conn., but at his request was buried in the old neglected graveyard at New London. His children were: Elizabeth, John, Saul, William (who graduated from Yale in 1721, and was pastor at Lebanon, Conn., until his death, in 1739), Sarah, Simon and Rebecca.

John Gager, son of Samuel, located in Franklin, Conn., where he engaged in farming. He married Jerusha Barstow, and they had the following family: Jerusha, John, Jason, Samuel, Daniel, Simon, Aaron and Levi.

Jason Gager, son of John, located in Scotland, Conn., where he farmed extensively, and where he died. His first wife was Zerviah Roberts, by whom he had two children, Samuel R. and Cynthia. His second marriage was to Lucy Peck, and his children by this union were Lucy, Andrew, Lucy (2), Aaron, Jason, John P. (grandfather of Mrs. Taber), David, Rebecca and Harriet.

John P. Gager was a lifetime resident of Scotland, Conn., where he owned considerable land. He married Chloe Baker, and they had children as follows: Charles (unmarried), died at Sailor's Snug Harbor, Staten Island, at an advanced age. Lewis, married Harriet Jennings, of Willimantic, and their children are: Judge E. B. Gager, of Derby, Conn., and Mrs. E. S. Jillson, of Guilford, Conn. Samuel, died when a young man, leaving no children. John P., was the father of Mrs. Taber. Sarah, married George Perry, who left three children, of whom Mrs. C. H. Pendleton, of Scotland, Conn., is the only one now living. Sophronia, married Uriah Tracy, and went to live in Pennsylvania, where many descendants still survive her.

John P. Gager, the father of Mrs. Taber, was born in the town of Scotland May 20, 1819, and died there May 6, 1900. Like his father, he was a lifetime resident of the town, where he engaged largely and successfully in farming, and at one time was the largest land owner in Scotland. In politics he was a Republican. He was always actively interested in all measures calculated to advance the welfare of the town and in addition to holding a number of the local offices he represented the town in the State Legislature. In religious belief he was a Universalist, and he was a man highly respected by all who knew him. Mr. Gager married Lucy Ann Brumley, who was born July 18, 1818, and died Dec. 26, 1880. To this marriage were born: Nancy B. (deceased), who married Lucian Bass. Chauncey, died in infancy. Ella M., married J. T. Chesbrough, of Columbia, Conn., and died leaving one son, Edward G., who is now living in New York City. Arthur F. (deceased) married Louise daughter of Egbert Fuller, of Scotland, and had one child, Chauncey F., who lives in Scotland; Chauncey F. married Miss Annie H. Perry, of Scotland, and has two children, Charles P. and Arthur F. Susie A., widow of Dr. J. D. Brumley, of Newark, N. J., has one daughter, Flora G. L. Flora is the wife of John C. Taber.

HENRY M. BRADFORD, a prominent citizen of Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., bears a name which has long been familiar in the annals of New England, being associated with great courage, successful endeavor, public usefulness and intellectual attainment.

(I) Gov. William Bradford, son of William and Alice (Hanson) Bradford, of Austerfield, Yorkshire, England, baptized March 19, 1589, went to Holland in 1609, was a citizen of Leyden in 1612, and there on Dec. 9, 1613, was married to Dorothea May, probably a daughter of John and Cornelia (Bowes) May. Mr. Bradford and wife came to New England in the "Mayflower." The latter fell overboard and was drowned Dec. 7, 1620, in Cape Cod Harbor, before the boat landed. Gov. Bradford was married (second) Aug. 14, 1623, to Alice, widow of Constant Southworth. He was one of the foremost men in all the undertakings of the new (Plymouth) settlement. On the death of Gov. John Carver in 1621, Mr. Bradford succeeded him, and was governor of Plymouth Colony from that time until his death, in 1657, excepting five years when he declined the honor. Alice, his wife, died in 1670.

(II) Major William Bradford, son of Gov. Bradford, was born June 17, 1624, in Plymouth, and married (first) Alice, daughter of Thomas and Wealthen Richards, of Weymouth, who died Dec. 12, 1671, aged forty-four years. Major Bradford was twice married afterward, and by his three wives had fifteen children. Like his distinguished father, he became one of the most prominent men in the Colony. His house was the one so long the home of his father at Jones' river, and there he reared his large family. He was deputy from Plymouth in 1656-57; was assistant in 1658, and for twenty-four consecutive years thereafter; and for the remaining ten years of the Colony's existence, with the exception of three years, filled the new office of deputy-governor, and also held a number of important public trusts. He died March 1, 1704, aged eighty years.

(III) Lieut. Samuel Bradford, son of Major William, born in 1668, married in July, 1689, Hannah Rogers, daughter of John and Elizabeth Rogers, and was of record as early as 1700, in Duxbury, Mass., residing near Island Creek. Lieut. Samuel was also a man of prominence, and held a number of public trusts; was constable in 1701, and selectman in 1710. He died April 11, 1714.

(IV) Perez Bradford, son of Lieut. Samuel, was born Dec. 28, 1694, married Abigail Belch, and was a resident of Attleboro, dying there June 19, 1746. Mr. Bradford was of the class of 1713, Harvard College, and was a member of the Council of Massachusetts.

(V) George Bradford, son of Perez, was born in 1732. He married and settled in Cazenovia, Madison Co., N. Y. While visiting his son Carpenter at Woodstock, he was taken ill and died in 1795, at the age of sixty-three years, and he was buried in the old cemetery west of West Woodstock village. His children were: George, born in 1757, married Susannah Hopkins, settled in Providence, R. I.; Sarah, born in 1759; Carpenter; Perez, born in 1764; Hannah, born in 1766; Eseck, born in 1769; Betsy, born in 1771; Matilda, born in 1774; and Sylvester, born in 1780. Of these all except Carpenter and Matilda settled in the State of New York; Matilda married Moses Lyon, and lived and died in Woodstock.

(VI) Carpenter Bradford, son of George and grandfather of H. M. Bradford, was born in 1762 in the sixth generation from Gov. Bradford. He passed his entire life in Woodstock, where he was a farmer. He married Rebecca Marcy, and they had the following children: (1) Stephen, who married Polly Works, and had three children, Martha, Burgess and Emma. (2) George, who married Phebe Phillips, of Woodstock, and had four children, Byron, Mary, Rebecca and Burgess; Byron is married and has a son, Burgess, born in 1877. (3) Maria, who married Samuel Wilkinson, of Woodstock. (4) Milton, who became a noted physician.

(VII) Dr. Milton Bradford, son of Carpenter, was born Jan. 12, 1808, in Woodstock and there his death occurred Oct. 1, 1878, lamented by the whole community. A few years of his professional life were passed in other localities, but in the main his services were given and his influence felt in the place of his birth, for which he ever cherished the warmest affection, and in which he encouraged every beneficial enterprise. Dr. Bradford received an excellent common school education, a foundation upon which was built a structure of classical and medical attainment of an unusually high order. At Nichols Academy he was fitted for college and after leaving the academic shades of this well-known school, at Dudley, Mass., he entered Brown University at Providence, R. I., graduating Sept.

3, 1828, with high honors. Entering Harvard Medical College he graduated from there Aug. 31, 1831, with great credit and was immediately taken into the office of Dr. Parsons, one of the most noted physicians of Providence.

Dr. Bradford remained for a considerable period with Dr. Parsons and then became associated with Dr. Turner, post surgeon at Newport, R. I., with whom he remained several years, making a special study of surgery. When ready to locate permanently, Dr. Bradford turned his attention to the old home, and finally settled in West Woodstock and began practice. Perhaps no man in his locality was ever better equipped by nature and education for the successful practice of medicine than was Dr. Milton Bradford. A close student, a thorough investigator, a man of calm, judicial mind, supplemented by thorough training and a kind sympathetic nature, it was but natural that he should become not only a noted practitioner, but also a beloved and trusted family friend. In appearance Dr. Bradford was a man of fine physique, dignified in bearing, yet so kindly that no one, however poor, felt afraid to call for his services. Even in the bleakest or most inclement weather he always responded, often at the risk of his own health. Dr. Bradford always attended the Baptist Church, although he was also a liberal contributor to the Congregational Church, of which his wife was a member. With his brother physicians he was on the most friendly terms and belonged to the Windham County Medical Society.

On Jan. 4, 1841, Dr. Bradford was united in marriage with Lydia Anna daughter of Dr. Thomas Morse, of Woodstock, Conn., and a family of four children was born to this union, namely: Henry Milton and Sarah Rebecca, twins, born July 4, 1842, the former of whom died April 23, 1843, and the latter Feb. 11, 1874; Henry Milton (2); Cary Carpenter, born Feb. 8, 1855, in Woodstock, who has followed his father's profession and attained eminence in it. His education was acquired under tutors and in Woodstock Academy, and later he entered Phillips Academy, Andover, and following his father's example then became a student at Brown University. Dr. Bradford then took a four-year course at Harvard Medical College, graduating in 1881, supplementing this with a post graduate course in the General Hospital at Boston. After a short period in Woodstock, he opened an office at Southbridge, Mass., where he has built up a large and increasing practice.

Henry Milton Bradford, son of Dr. Milton Bradford, was born Nov. 7, 1846, in the house which is still his home. His educational advantages were most excellent, his indulgent father giving him private tutors and a three years' course at Phillips Academy, from which he returned to assist his father in the management of the farm, when he was about nineteen years of age. Dr. Bradford owned four farms but his professional duties were too great to allow his management of them, and they were placed under the care of his son. As opportunity offered Mr. Bradford sold three of these farms, retaining the old homestead, and then removed to Southbridge, Mass., in order to enter a business life. There in association with his cousin, E. M. Phillips, he engaged in an insurance and real estate business for several years. In 1878 his father's serious illness recalled him home and there he has remained, tenderly caring for both his parents in their last days.

Mr. Bradford manages a small farm, and lives a bachelor in his old home, and in the enjoyment of the best of the social life of his community. His religious connection is with the Baptist Church. In public affairs he has taken a very deep interest, and is an ardent supporter of the Republican party, and he has most efficiently filled numerous responsible offices.

FRED E. MAYNARD, the well-known baker of West Wauregan, of the town of Brooklyn, Windham county, is a son of Morris and Annie Maynard, of whom more extended mention is made in another part of this volume.

Mr. Maynard was born Oct. 14, 1856, in St. Mary, Quebec, and he was eleven years of age when his parents moved to Connecticut. What educational advantages he had were those afforded by his native town previous to this age. When the family located at Wauregan Fred E. began work in the "mule room" in the Wauregan mill with the intention of learning the trade of mule spinner. Although at the beginning his wages were small they were needed by the family, and as he was very apt he was soon promoted and became one of the best workmen. He remained in the Wauregan mill until his health broke down, in 1891. For the two following years Mr. Maynard operated his brother's fine farm, the one belonging to Frank X. Maynard, in Plainfield, but in 1893 he purchased his present business from the above named brother. The business was in excellent shape at that time but Mr. Maynard has increased the trade and although he has had competitors still holds the balance. The business warrants the employing of three assistants and two wagons, the latter visiting the towns of Plainfield, Griswold and all through Brooklyn. In addition to his bakery business which is a valuable plant, Mr. Maynard owns two tenement houses in Moosup. His life and management of business have given him the confidence of his patrons and both in commercial and social circles he is held in high regard as one of the most honest and industrious citizens of the town.

The marriage of Mr. Maynard was Dec. 28, 1878, in Wauregan, to Lydia Jodoin, a native of Sorrel, Quebec. The children born to this union were: Sarah, at home; Frederick, who attended the Farnham Holy Cross College, at Farnham, Quebec, is employed by his father and is one of the popular young men of Wauregan; Armand, who died at the age of nine years; Antonia; Alpherie, who died at the age of one year; Ida; Izola; Leo and Irene—all the survivors at home, bright and intelligent young students.

Mr. Maynard does not attach any importance to party lines in politics, voting for the man he considers best for the position. Socially he is a valued member of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 22, A. O. U. W. of Central Village, and he and family are all members of the Sacred Heart Catholic Church at Wauregan. Mr. Maynard is a successful self-made man and has gained his present substantial position through his own honest industry and perseverance. His pleasant and accommodating manner has made him well known and popular, while his goods are continually in greater demand.

JOHN FOGIL, one of the successful farmers of Gilead, town of Hebron, Tolland county, was born Dec. 15, 1847, in Germany, but has made his home in the United States since infancy, having been brought to this country when but a few years old by his family.

Andrew Fogil, father of John, was a native of Germany, and came to America about 1850. A poor farmer in his native land, and hearing of the advantages offered across the ocean, Andrew Fogil decided to try his fortune in the new world. Being a widower he left his motherless children in the care of the good woman who had promised to marry him as soon as a home could be made for her and the little ones, and came to New York. Upon landing he started out to find employment, as he had little money and no particular destination. His earnest endeavor was rewarded with a position at driving a one-horse wagon, and although the pay was small he kept at the work until other offered in a marble shop where he was engaged as a polisher. Working hard and saving every penny he soon had enough to bring over his children and the lady in whose charge they were, who became his wife upon arrival in this country.

About this time Andrew Fogil decided to leave New York and was employed in a marble shop in Hartford by a Mr. Adams, but after seven months went to work for a Mr. Sickie in Bloomfield, Conn. After a year he had saved enough to make a payment on a small farm in Buckingham in the town of Glastonbury. Still working hard and carefully saving his money he soon cleared off the debt upon his farm and at the time of his death was in comfortable circumstances. He died at the Hartford hospital, of a complication of diseases, in 1885, when he was sixty-eight, having been a very hard worker all his life.

Andrew Fogil was married three times; by his first wife he had one child, Polly, who married and now resides in Ohio. By his second marriage, which also occurred in Germany, he had: Andrew, place of residence unknown; Louisa, who resides in Germany; Martha, who was married and died in Hartford; Susan, who married and resides in Hartford; John; George, who married and resides in Hartford. His third wife was the lady who accompanied his children to America and reared them as her own.

John Fogil attended the district school of Buckingham until he was fifteen, the summer months being spent upon the farm and in burning charcoal for his father and the neighbors. When he reached the age of twenty-one he was employed by A. Roswell Strickland, of Gilead, who owned the farm now occupied by Mr. Fogil. In 1872 Mr. Fogil purchased this farm from Mr. Strickland, going heavily in debt for it, but this he soon cleared off by his hard labor, and he now owns a property of 130 acres, upon which he successfully carries on general farming and charcoal burning. So successful has he become in this latter line that he now buys and sells a large amount of this commodity annually. Before engaging in farming for himself Mr. Fogil at times sold tinware for Smith & Mayo of Springfield, Mass., travelling through parts of Tolland and Windham counties with a team, and meeting with much success.

Mr. Fogil was married in Gilead to Mrs. Cornelia (Lockwood) Moulton, born in Gilead, daughter of Timothy Lockwood, a farmer of Gilead, and widow of Lyman Moulton, who died in Hebron Sept. 7, 1864. Mrs. Fogil died Aug. 27, 1899, after a painful illness of three years. By her first marriage Mrs. Fogil had three children: William F., born Feb. 15, 1856, died Nov. 14, 1875, unmarried; Mary Frances, born May 7, 1858, wife of Frederick Goss of East Hartford; Newton H., born Aug. 20, 1861, now residing in East Hartford. By her marriage with Mr. Fogil she had three children: Georgia, born Dec. 14, 1869, wife of James Coughlin, of Hartford, who has three children—Florus Mary, born in 1887; Tamdest, 1889; Vernon, 1891. Clarence J., born Jan. 29, 1872, married Minnie Parks, of Hebron, and they now reside in Hartford; they have two children, Leon, born in 1889 and Florence in 1890. Florence, born July 15, 1874, died June 10, 1877.

Mr. Fogil is a Republican in politics, and supports the candidates of his party, although his private affairs are so numerous as to prevent his taking a very active part in civic matters. During a life of endeavor he has worked hard to support his family and has built himself up entirely by his own efforts.

FRANK ZENAS FAIRFIELD. One of the most enterprising citizens of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., is Frank Zenas Fairfield, who was born Jan. 11, 1858, in West Stafford, Conn., and traces his ancestry back to his great-grandfather.

Zenas Fairfield, the great-grandfather of Frank Z. married Arelia Washburn, but died soon after his marriage, leaving an only child: Samuel E. His widow, returned to Stafford, Conn., where she died many years later.

Grandfather Samuel Ellithrope Fairfield, was born in November, 1802, and was brought to Stafford, after the death of his father, when not a year old. By occupation he was a farmer, and in politics a Democrat. Although of delicate constitution he lived to be sixty-six years of age, and died in West Stafford, Conn., in 1868. His wife was Mariah (Moulton) Fairfield; she was born in 1802, and died in 1891, aged eighty-nine, her death occurring also in West Stafford, Conn. To the grandfather and his good wife were born: Zenas, the father of Frank Z.; Franklin, who died in infancy; Samuel, who died in infancy; Gardner, who married Jane Leonard; Samuel (2), who married Ellen Scripture; Franklin (who died in infancy) and Francis (whose wife's first name was Josephine), twins; Electa Mariah, who married Horton Elisha Dwight; Sumner, who married Frances Carew.

Zenas Fairfield (2), was born Sept. 23, 1825, in West Stafford, Conn., and died April 10, 1899, in West Stafford, Conn. On Oct. 14, 1852, he was married to Anjenette Fairman, who was born March 22, 1824, and died Dec. 16, 1902, a daughter of John Warner and Betsy (Nelson) Fairman, of Stafford, Conn. The only child of this marriage was Frank Zenas. All of his life Zenas Fairfield was a farmer, although he also conducted the well known West Stafford hotel for a number of years, together with a livery establishment. He continued in this line until 1874 when he devoted his entire attention to farming, and remained upon his property until his death. In early life Zenas Fairfield was a Democrat, but as he grew older he became disgusted with some of the measures adopted by politicians, and for many years could not be induced to take any interest in politics. In religion he was an Adventist and a very devout man, living up to his standards and never willingly harming anyone. In business affairs he was the soul of honor and conducted his enterprises by the rules of his religion. No man was more highly respected in his community, and his name is still mentioned among those who had been his friends and acquaintances as a type of what is best and highest.

Frank Zenas Fairfield received his education in the schools of his native place, which he continued to attend until he reached the age of seven-teen. At that time he engaged in farm work for his father, remaining at home until he was twenty. He then entered the employ of J. R. Washburn, in his machine shops, where he remained three years. His next employment was in the machine shops of D. E. Whiton, where he worked for four years, thoroughly mastering the trade of machinist. Concluding, however, that he was better fitted for farm life he returned to agricultural pursuits.

At the expiration of three years he embarked in the business of improving the roads, and has since continued in that line in addition to farming his ninety acres. On this property Mr. Fairfield carries on general farming, and keeps ten head of cattle, selling the cream to the Somers creamery. His farm is well cultivated, and all the buildings, including the house, are in excellent condition. Few farmers have better machinery and tools than he, and the results of his work are such as to justify his output.

The marriage of Mr. Fairfield occurred Oct. 16, 1877, to Rosie Mariah Holmes, a young lady of Stafford, the daughter of Franklin and Julia (Bowe) Holmes. To this happy union one child has come: Lottie Mariah, born Sept. 24, 1878, a most accomplished and charming young lady, who is the light of her father's house.

In politics, Mr. Fairfield is a Democrat and has always taken an active part in all local affairs, giving the party the benefit of his experience and naturally becoming one of the local leaders. For the past two years he has reflected credit upon his constituents by the manner in which he has discharged the duties of his position as selectman. Taking a deep interest in all educational matters he has served on the school board, and his desire to help the unfortunate has induced him to give his time and services on the board of relief. Although several times elected constable and appointed justice of the peace, he has declined to serve in these capacities.

Mrs. Fairfield and her daughter are members of the Congregational Church, and Mr. Fairfield also attends that church and gives liberally towards its support. A true man in every sense, upright in all his dealings, a kind neighbor and loving father and husband, Mr. Fairfield has won the respect and esteem of his fellow-citizens and is a person of importance in Stafford.

GEORGE H. GALLUP, youngest of the children of Daniel A. and Barbara P. (Gordon) Gallup, farmer and dairyman, agricultural implement dealer, lumberman and government employe for many years, was born in Sterling, Windham county, Nov. 5, 1860. Mr. Gallup is a member of the time honored family whose descent is authentically traced in the record of Ezra Allen Gallup, and in that of Avery Amos Stanton.

Until his twelfth year George H. Gallup lived among the familiar surroundings of the paternal farm in Sterling, and then entered the employ of his brother-in-law, James J. Williamson, an enterprising meat dealer. After a year and a half in the meat business he removed to Brooklyn, Conn., and when eighteen years of age engaged in the livery business, in which he continued for about ten years. He returned to Sterling in the fall of 1888, and, locating on the old homestead, bought out the other heirs. His farm consists in all of 200 acres of well tilled and productive land. A model dairy is maintained with eighteen cows, the farm containing twenty-nine head of cattle in all, as well as seven horses. Besides leading in the community as far as practical and scientific farming is concerned, Mr. Gallup is extensively engaged in lumbering, and with his family of fine strong and helpful boys can accomplish a surprising amount of work. He is also agent for farming implements and for a popular fertilizer.

Although a Republican in national politics, Mr. Gallup entertains independent tendencies in local affairs, and has been repeatedly before the public as an office holder. His government service began when he was eighteen, when, while in the livery business in Brooklyn, he carried the mail, continuing for ten years. On Jan. 15, 1890, he was appointed post master of Ekonk, and has since served in that capacity. For the past seven years he has been constable, for three years he was a member of the board of relief, and tax collector for two years. Mr. Gallup and his wife joined first the Brooklyn Grange, but when Ekonk Grange No. 89, was formed, they took a dismissal from the other grange, and became charter members of the new organization. Mr. Gallup is also a member of the James Pike Council, American Mechanics, of Sterling Center, and he is a member, and on the executive committee, of the Windham County Fair Association. Mr. Gallup is a broad minded, wisely conservative, and forceful business man, and his services to the community of his adoption are of the stable and lasting kind. His integrity is unquestioned, and he bears an enviable reputation among all appreciators of reliable and strong New England manhood.

In Brooklyn, Conn., Oct. 20, 1880, Mr. Gallup married Mary E. Gallup, daughter of Nathaniel and Mary Ellen (Mathewson) Gallup. Of this union there have been born the following children: George Howard, born Oct. 8, 1882; Earl Nathaniel and Carl Daniel, born Sept. 5, 1884; Mary Ethel, born May 2, 1886; Avis Belle, born Sept. 28, 1889, died Oct. 10, 1889; Harry Gordon, born Jan. 3, 1896, and died Nov. 26, 1897; and Gladys Gordon, born Aug. 22, 1900.

In their ancestral relations the history of the families of Mr. and Mrs. Gallup are identical so far as the children of the third John Gallup, born in 1646, and his wife, Elizabeth (Harris) Gallup. Among the children of this couple were Nathaniel and John, and Mr. Gallup is descended from the former, while his wife's family comes from the latter.

Isaac Gallup, son of the fourth John, was born in Voluntown, now Sterling, Feb. 24, 1712, married March 29, 1749, Margaret, daughter of Nathaniel and Margaret Gallup, of Stonington, Conn., born Oct 12, 1730. Isaac lived in the homestead of his father, and took an important part in the affairs of the town and church. He was representative to the General Court in 1768-'73, and died Aug. 3, 1799, at the age of eighty-eight, his wife surviving him until Dec. 9, 1817, also aged eighty-eight.

Benadam Gallup, born in Voluntown, Nov. 17, 1761, married, March 31, 1785, Elizabeth Dorrance, and died March 30, 1850, his wife's death having occurred Sept. 28, 1810. His second wife, whom he married Sept. 22, 1811, was Mary Wilson, who died March 28, 1858. To Benadam Gallup were born the following children: George, born Dec. 21, 1786; James, born Feb. 22, 1788; Margaret, born Jan. 11, 1790; Betsey, born Nov. 19, 1792; John, born April 6, 1795; Nathaniel, grandfather of Mrs. Gallup, born Aug. 17, 1798; Chester, born April 10, 1801; and Cynthia, born March 23, 1812.

Nathaniel Gallup, son of Benadam, born in Sterling, Aug. 17, 1798, married May 14, 1817, Sally Barber, and lived on the paternal homestead, where he died, May, 2, 1856, his wife surviving him until Nov. 11, 1885. Their children were: Benadam, born Aug. 14, 1818; Margaret, born Dec. 8, 1819; Sally Maria, born March 18, 1821; Lucy Ann, born June 15, 1823; James, born Nov. 13, 1825; Joseph, born Sept. 4, 1827; Elizabeth, born April 22, 1831; Hannah Jane, born March 13, 1833; Nathaniel, father of Mrs. Gallup, born Oct. 18, 1835; Chauncey, born Oct. 4, 1839; and Martha Ann, born March 2, 1842.

Nathaniel Gallup, son of Nathaniel, father of Mrs. George H. Gallup, was born in Sterling, Oct. 18, 1835, married Oct. 11, 1858, Mary E. Mathewson, and farmed on the paternal homestead in the southern part of the town of Sterling, where he died, June 27, 1900. To himself and wife were born the following children: Janette, born Aug. 25, 1859; Mary E., born Oct. 12, 1861, wife of George H. Gallup; Julia A., born Dec. 2, 1863, wife of John A. Baton of Plainfield, Conn.; Avis I., born April 10, 1872, wife of George Frink of Woodstock; and George S., born March 26, 1874, who married Sadie Dailey, and lives in Providence, Rhode Island.

NATHAN WALDO KENNEDY, the well known editor and proprietor of the Windham County Observer, published at Putnam, Conn., is the sixth son of Lorenzo M. and Jane M. (Kies) Kennedy, and was born at Griswold, Conn., July 5, 1860. He was named respectively after Deacon Nathan Prentice, of Griswold, and Deacon John Waldo, a prominent merchant of Danielson.

Originally the Kennedys came from the North of Ireland, and were of Scotch-Irish birth. They emigrated to this country in the early days and settled at Voluntown, near Norwich. Alexander Kennedy, great-grandfather of Nathan W. Kennedy, was born in Voluntown. He took an active part in the Revolutionary war, during which he was shipwrecked on the Island of Cuba. He bought what is known as the old Kennedy homestead. The deed was recorded Feb. 28, 1773, and duly signed by William Brattle, of Cambridge, and Andrew Oliver, of Salem. Foster was then a part of Scituate, Rhode Island. On April 12, 1775, Mr. Kennedy bought additional land of Benjamin Christopher and William Ellery, the latter being one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. The lot was No. 13, of the Westquenaug Purchase. Mr. Kennedy was about eighty-seven when he died. He raised a family of twelve children, six boys and six girls, and is described as a very careful and shrewd business man. His wife, Mary Ann Kennedy, died in June, 1820, aged eighty-four, and was buried at the "Line Store." She was an Edmunds and lived in Griswold.

Capt. George Kennedy, son of Alexander, was born at the old homestead. He married Celinda Parker, of English birth, being the daughter of Col. Thomas Parker, a military character of renown. His wife was Rosanna Tyler. A noted relative of the latter Judge William Tyler, was born on the George W. Kennedy place at Moosup Valley, Rhode Island. Capt. Parker died July 25, 1868, in his seventy-ninth year, and his wife passed away Dec. 8, 1866, aged seventy-nine years, two months and five days. Rev. George W. Kennedy, uncle to the subject of this sketch, a well known divine throughout this section, was born Jan. 21, 1824, and died April 5, 1901, on a farm bequeathed him by his maternal aunt, Jane Parker, who died May 16, 1856, aged seventy-three. Alexander (2d) was a private in the war of the Rebellion, and after suffering greatly with rheumatism died at Rockland, Rhode Island.

Lorenzo M. Kennedy, the seventh son of Capt. George and Celinda (Parker) Kennedy, was born at Foster, R. I., June 26, 1827, and died at Putnam, Aug. 13, 1896. From 1846 he was well known in business and political circles throughout western Rhode Island and eastern Connecticut. He married Jane M. Kies, daughter of Prentice and Lucretia (Colvin) Kies, the latter of Scotch descent and a woman of remarkable character and intellectuality. The original name of Kies was Mackee, and afterward Keyes. The exact genealogy, principally Scotch, is being traced by the Pike family of Danielson, who are near relatives. Mrs. Jane M. (Kies) Kennedy attended the old West Killingly academy. She has one brother, Leonard Kies, and an older sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Vaughn, both now living at South Killingly, while her twin sister, Mrs. Jeannette Short, of Dayville, was buried beside her husband, John Short, in South Killingly, several years ago. Their daughter, Emma J., now deceased, married F. Wardell LaRue, living at Sharon Springs, N. Y. One of Mrs. Kennedy's ancestors, Mrs. Mary Kies, of South Killingly, invented a "new and useful improvement in weaving straw with silk or thread," for which she obtained in May, 1809, the first patent ever issued to any woman in the United States. The late Marietta Kies, Ph. D., was another relative.

When a mere boy Nathan W. Kennedy moved with his parents from Griswold to Danielson, then to Pomfret, and afterward to Dayville. It was Principal C. A. Young, now of Danielson, who instilled into his youthful mind the thoughts of self-reliance and personal endeavor, and under whose encouragement he wrote a lecture on "How to Succeed," which has since been delivered in Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York State, Missouri and Kansas. A little later Master Kennedy served an apprenticeship from printer's "devil" up at the Sentinel office, Danielson. Subsequently he was correspondent of the Woonsocket Daily Patriot, and also contributed to the Yonkers (N. Y.) Gazette, New York Daily News, Waterloo (N. Y.) Observer, Gowanda (N. Y.) Enterprise and the Meriden Recorder.

On Nov. 7, 1879, he became assistant editor of the Naugatuck Enterprise, and was next connected with the New York Lecture bureau as "the youngest writer, paragrapher, journalist, political speaker and platform lecturer known." At the close of the season, early in 1881, he was for a time reporter and paragrapher of the Providence Evening Telegram, and afterward proofreader, exchange editor, telegraph editor and paragrapher of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Morning Standard. The night work, however, was so wearing that after a lapse of five months the ambitious young journalist went to the Thousand Islands, by advice of a physician, to recuperate. At this popular health-giving resort on the St. Lawrence river, a most profitable acquaintance was formed with the late John G. Holland, editor, author and lecturer, and with Sir John Robert Mowbray, of England. The ensuing March, 1882, he accepted the associate editorship of the Glens Falls (N. Y.) Republican. Owing to ill health, however, he was obliged to return home in May to regain strength, on the 30th of which month he started for pastime the Dayville Sunbeam, which later assumed the more pretentious title of Windham County Standard, later changed to Observer.

During the summer of 1885 Editor Kennedy noticed in an exchange an article anent the disgraceful condition of Maj.-Gen. Israel Putnam's grave in the old cemetery at Brooklyn, and, through his indefatigable efforts, succeeded in arousing what was considered an utter impossibility—popular public enthusiasm. The Putnam Monument Association was formed Sept. 18th following, and petitions for signatures were circulated and presented to the State Legislature, which appropriated $10,000 for a suitable monument. Hon. T. S. Marlor also donated a site at Brooklyn, and on Bunker Hill day, June 17, 1888, the magnificent equestrian statue of the Revolutionary hero was unveiled with civic and military pageantry.

On March 3, 1886, Mr. Kennedy was married to Miss Ida May, only daughter of Rev. George W. Greenslitt, of Killingly. Their union has been blesed with two sons: Raymond G., born at Putnam, June 20, 1891, and Norman Lorenzo, born at Putnam, Sept. 18, 1895. He has three brothers living: Charles P., of Providence; Frank S., of Dayville; and William L., of Putnam.

Mr. Kennedy is a member of the First Baptist Church of Putnam, with which both Mrs. Kennedy and he united July 3, 1887. He has been collector, clerk, member of the Society committee, and served in various other capacities. In 1889 he personally raised over $2,500 by subscription, thus liquidating the entire church debt. In May, 1889, he attended as delegate the National Baptist Anniversaries at Washington, D. C. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Knights of Pythias, Golden Cross, Foresters of America, and the Grange.

Editor Kennedy was the first of two delegates to represent Connecticut at the annual meeting of the National Editorial Association, held at Chicago in May, 1893, when he read a paper on "Provincial Journalism," before the World's Fair congress of newspaper men. The essay has since been copied in various parts of the United States, and flatteringly commented upon for its practical suggestions and literary merit. His Memorial Day address at Uxbridge, Mass., in 1891, was voted the finest production ever delivered before Post No. 25, G. A. R. In 1894 he was president of the Connecticut Editorial Association. He has also acted as special representative of the New York World and the New England Associated Press.

The Windham County Observer, of which Mr. Kennedy is editor and proprietor, is published every Wednesday afternoon, and covers the field from Webster, Mass., to Putnam, Danielson and Norwich, Conn., on the Norwich & Worcester railroad, and from Blackstone, Mass., to Putnam and Willimantic, Conn., on the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad. It measures 35½x48 inches, and comprises eight pages or fifty-six columns. It is recognized by local professional and business men, and advertising agents throughout the United States, as one of the newsiest, cheapest and most largely circulated weekly papers in Connecticut.

EDMUND W. ELLISON, a prominent farmer and dairyman, residing in the town of Mansfield, Tolland county, near the city of Willimantic, is a worthy descendant of a line of ancestors, whose names are found inscribed upon the records of the early history of the various New England towns and cities.

Joseph William Ellison, the grandfather of Edmund W., was a teamster, and resided in Uxbridge, Mass., where he died, when the father of our subject was but seven years old.

George W. Ellison, the father of Edmund W., was the youngest in a family of twelve children, of whom ten grew to maturity, and he was born on Oct. 7, 1820, in Uxbridge, Mass., where he grew to manhood, working upon the farm, and at his trade of shoemaker, which he had learned from a brother. About 1854, he located at Putnam, Conn., purchased a small farm and engaged in cultivating it for five years, when he engaged in traveling through New Hampshire, Vermont and Massachusetts, selling books for Henry Bill, a publisher of Norwich, Conn. Being very successful in this line, he followed it for several years, and later was employed as a wholesale dealer in hemp dusters, having the general agency for the New England States, continuing this for thirty-five years, or until his health began to fail. For five years prior to his death he lived with his son, Edmund W., being totally blind during the last two years of his life. While engaged on the road he removed from Putnam to Killingly, Conn., and resided there for sixteen years; thence he removed to Brooklyn, Conn., remaining there for three years, or until 1879, when he located in Mansfield and purchased the Chapin farm, now occupied by his son, Edmund W., where he died on May 19, 1897, and he is buried in Brooklyn, Conn. Although never seeking office, he was a member of the Republican party from the time it was started, and in addition to being an earnest member of the Congregational Church of Putnam, was active in its work. During his life he was successful in his business ventures, and gained many friends by his honorable business methods, his kindly manner and genial way of talking. His first marriage occurred on May 26, 1847, to Julia Ann Cunningham, of Uxbridge, Mass., who died a few years later, leaving no issue. On Sept. 3, 1851, Mr. George W. Ellison was married to Mrs. Harriett Parkhurst Warren, of Brooklyn, Conn., widow of J. Cleveland Warren, whom she had married on March 29, 1842, and by whom she had no family. Mrs. Harriett Parkhurst Warren was born Aug. 9, 1816, a daughter of Jonathan and Lois (Pierce) Parkhurst, and died Nov. 8, 1899, being buried in Brooklyn, Conn., by the side of her husband. To Mr. and Mrs. George W. Ellison were born the following children: Miss Julia Ann, born July 3, 1852, resides with her brother, Edmund W.; George W., born Dec. 20, 1853, died Aug. 2, 1854; Edmund W., is our subject; Miss Judith P., born Dec. 29, 1856, resides with her brother, Edmund W.; and Lorena C., born June 15, 1859, married George A. Wood, a bookkeeper and office manager in a business establishment in Worcester, Mass., and they have one child, a son, Frank E.

Edmund W. Ellison was born in Putnam, Conn., and was eight or nine years old when his parents removed to Danielson, in the town of Killingly, Conn. Here he attended the district schools as well as the Danielson high school, and also learned to work upon the farm. After completing his school life, the young man became a teacher, and taught two winters in the graded schools of Killingly. So brilliant was he in his studies, that he was but seventeen when he stopped teaching for a time, and went to the Howes Business College at Worcester, Mass. After graduating from that institution, Mr. Ellison again turned his attention to teaching, and for many years followed that calling, meeting with great success, for he possesses the qualities which go toward the making of an excellent professor. Among other places where he taught were Plainfield, Windham and Mansfield, Conn., and in the latter place he taught five years. During all this time his summer months were devoted to farm work, for which he always had a great liking.

In 1890 Mr. Ellison purchased a milk route, and as it demanded the greater portion of his time, he abandoned his calling of teaching, and has since followed the dairy business. His route is an excellent one, and he has a large list of patrons in Willimantic. The productive farm of 120 acres, on which he resides, is one of the best in the county, and since it came into his possession, he has made many substantial improvements upon it.

On Nov. 15, 1899, Mr. Ellison was married in Plainfield, Conn., to Callie E. Hopkins, a native of Plainfield, a daughter of Oscar F. and Emily (Browning) Hopkins, and one child has been born to them, Harriett Browning, born Dec. 13, 1900. In politics Mr. Ellison is a Republican, and has served for many years as justice of the peace. In addition he has also been assessor, a member of the board of relief, and school visitor for ten years prior to 1900, when his numerous duties forced him to resign. Socially he is a member of the Willimantic Council, No. 720, Royal Arcanum. Mr. and Mrs. Ellison are members of the Baptist Church, of Willimantic, of which he has been a deacon since 1887. During the declining years of his parents' lives, this good son made a home for his father and mother, and his kind consideration of their wants but demonstrates his generous and honorable disposition. Hard-working, intelligent, well-read, Mr. Ellison is a man who commands the respect of his fellow-townsmen, and he is numbered among the representatives of the best class of New England's sons.

MINER FENTON FAIRMAN. No name in the State of Connecticut has been so indelibly connected with valuable inventions as that of Fairman. While the ingenuity of the Connecticut Yankee has been a subject for satire, it is undoubtedly true that to that same ingenuity the world owes a debt of gratitude. Whether it is soil, climate or heredity, it remains true, that the reports of the patent office at Washington show that the proportion of patents granted to the State of Connecticut is in excess of any other State, there being one to every 829 inhabitants. Among the names appears that of Elijah Fairman in 1837, in connection with an appliance for a loom.

The great-grandfather of Miner Fenton Fair-man, was Jonathan Fairman, who married Elizabeth Cady, and their children were: Jonathan C., Joseph, John, Chester and Simon.

Simon Fairman, son of Jonathan, was born in 1766, and died Sept. 19, 1841, in Stafford, Conn. His marriage was to Eleanor Washburn, who was born March 17, 1766, in Stafford, Conn., a daughter of Solomon Washburn, a soldier of the Revolutionary war. She died April 2, 1852. Their children were: (1) Cyprian, born in 1795, married Sally Fobes at Cohoes Falls, N. Y., and their children were, Ethan, Cyprian, Daniel Forbes, Olive, Mary, Marcia and Sarah Eleanor. In 1826 he went west and as he never returned it was supposed that he was drowned. (2) John W., born Oct. 13, 1797, was a farmer and hotel keeper and lived and died in West Stafford. His marriage was to Betsey Nelson, and their children were, Ephraim, John Lafayette and Jane Lauraette (twins), and Angenette. John W., married as a second wife, the widow of Jasper Hyde and he died Jan. 4, 1857. (3) Simon, born March 4, 1792, became a noted inventor, one of his successful inventions having been a road wagon. His home was in the West, and he died Feb. 25, 1857. On Nov. 26, 1814, in Troy, N. Y., he wedded Harriet Wright, who was a daughter of John and Ruth Wright, born June 21, 1796; she died Aug. 1, 1863. Their children were, Marcia, Ophelia, Ethlinda, Emily, Gibson W., Adelaide, Harriet, Simon and Eleanor, twins, George B., and Rebecca. Simon Fairman, the father of this family, was one of the most successful inventors of his time. One of his notable inventions perfected at Lansingburg, in 1833, was the oscillating steam engine, this making possible the automobile of the present. His steam coach was put in use between Nassau and Albany. Another invention was a machine for boring and turning car wheels; a machine for cutting nails and ship spikes, and another for embossing woolen goods. On July 18, 1840, Mr. Fairman received a patent for chucks, which patent was extended in 1857. Their place of manufacture was in West Stafford, Conn., in the Diamondville Machine works, the value of this invention now being shown in the business of D. E. Whiton, at New London, Conn., and also in that of E. M. Horton, at Windsor Locks, as well as in the A. F. Cushman chuck works in Hartford, as well as other places. (4) Eleanor, born July 9, 1799, married Silas P. Babcock, Dec. 8, 1828, and their children were—Jane Lauraette, Marciaette (who died at the age of twelve years): Emeline F., Angeline C., Lucius F., Eleanor F., and Chester, who died at the age of six months. (5) Elijah is mentioned below. (6) Emeline, born 1811, married Marcus Alden, of Stafford, and their children were, Adin, and Byron.

Elijah Fairman, the father of our subject, was born Sept. 3, 1801, in Stafford, Conn. His educational advantages were limited to those in his native place, and there he laid the foundations of a later very useful life. Having mechanical tastes and no little ability, he learned the machinist's trade and became a thorough workman. For a number of years he followed this occupation in various localities, becoming well known in Monson, Ludlow and Brimfield, Mass. Later he returned to Stafford, and in connection with Harvey Waters, M. B. Harvey and Lincoln Bardwell, bought an old water privilege, and this firm was engaged in the manufacture of various kinds of machinery; after that Fairman, Harvey & Fenton formed a company and built a shop and manufactured looms and various other kinds of machinery. In 1837 the shop was burned but soon rebuilt. Mr. Fairman possessed an inventive mind, like his distinguished brother, and in the course of time patented a satinnet loom which proved to be a very successful invention. Mr. Fairman continued to manufacture this loom until a more extended field opened up before him; in 18— the company sold the loom business to William C. and Alonzo Alden, and it was moved to Stafford Hollow. Then Messrs. Fairman, Harvey and Fenton formed a company for the manufacture of cotton warps, known as the Valley Company, using the upper floor of the old shop, Mr. Harvey using the lower floor for a machine shop. Mr. Fairman was chosen agent of the Valley Company, and continued so for a number of years. When he resigned his agency of the Valley Company he became agent for the Hydeville Manufacturing Company at a salary of $700 per year. Jasper Hyde was the main owner of this mill, and Mr. Fairman built much of the machinery and took stock in the business for pay, as he did in a number of other mills (this business being known as the Phoenix Woolen mill), and he acted as agent for this mill until 1868. After the war, in the disturbed condition of the country, all stocks went down, and he retired from business activity, to the peaceful enjoyments of his country home, having always longed for an agricultural life.

At one time Mr. Fairman owned 500 acres of land, kept from forty to fifty head of cattle and cut 100 tons of hay, always enjoying the rewards of a busy farming life, although his talents were so unmistakably in another direction. In his political affinities, he was a staunch upholder of Jeffersonian Democracy, and although his life was filled with varied interests, he yielded enough to the solicitations of his friends to serve at times as selectman and justice of the peace. In religious belief, he was a Universalist, and served many years as deacon of the Church at Stafford Hollow, and he was liberal in his benefactions, and the upholder of varied schemes of charity. For very many years he was an active member of both Masonic and Odd Fellow organizations, and was well known in both.

Mr. Fairman was married on July 21, 1825, to Cynthia Benjamin Harvey, a daughter of Amos and Esther (Benjamin) Harvey, of Stafford. She was born Feb. 8, 1806, and died Dec. 10, 1887, in Stafford. The children of this marriage were: Mary, born Oct. 25, 1826, married Giddings H. Pinney, of Stafford, and they now reside at No. 181 Lafayette avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Julia, born Feb. 26, 1829, married July 22, 1850, Charles Holt, of Stafford, and died May 10, 1862; Miner Fenton, of this sketch. The father passed out of life March 13, 1883, in his home, in Stafford.

Miner Fenton Fairman was born Oct. 21, 1833, in Stafford Hollow, Conn., and he received his boyhood education in the district schools. Later he took an academic course at the Monson Academy, and later attended select schools in Stafford. At the age of eighteen years he went to work on his father's farm, where he continued employed until 1869. In 1870 he took charge of the beautiful home of Julius Converse, and had entire charge of the improvements which have made "Woodlawn" one of the most beautiful places in the Connecticut Valley. For six years he remained there, then for a short time was connected with railroad work, but in 1876, he came to Hydeville, and took the Holt homestead of his father, and since that time he has been busily engaged in improving this property. He has about seventy acres of land in his farm.

Since 1870 Mr. Fairman has not been active in politics, although he has always voted with the Democratic party, and has been on the school committee and has served as assessor. Among his business interests, he is a director in the First National Bank of Stafford Springs, and was one of the incorporators and directors in the Phoenix Woolen Co., and is financially interested in other enterprises.

On Nov. 1, 1854, Mr. Fairman was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Ann Young, who was born June 1, 1836, a daughter of John L. and Mary (Niles) Young, of Stafford, and the children of this marriage were: (1) Mary, born Nov. 16, 1855, married first Charles S. Sprague, by whom she had a daughter, Elizabeth, who married Holcomb R. Howard, and second, Milton H. Soule, and by whom she had a daughter, Blanche Esther; (2) Julia born Dec. 15, 1857, died July 31, 1858. (3) Ettie, born May 5, 1859, died Oct. 28, 1863. (4) Nellie, born Jan. 24, 1866, married Ralph Squier, of Monson, Mass., and their son is named, Miner Leroy. (5) Lottie, born June 3, 1870, died May 2, 1872. In religious belief Mr. Fairman finds congeniality in the Universalist Church.

REV. THOMAS COONEY, pastor of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Grosvenor Dale, Windham county, one of the best and most highly respected gentlemen in the Hartford diocese, was born Nov. 20, 1853, in County Armagh, Ireland.

Thomas Cooney, his father, also a native of Ar-magh, married Rose Rafferty, and they had seven children: Henry, Mary, John, Elizabeth, James, Margaret and Thomas. Mr. Cooney followed the occupation of farming. His strong love of the Roman Catholic faith, and of Catholic instruction found an echo in the hearts of his children. He lived to the advanced age of one hundred years, and had the happiness to see his fondest hopes realized. His son John became a priest, and is now pastor of St. Rose's Parish, Meriden, Conn.; Mary, his oldest daughter, married a Mr. McParland, and her son, Rev. Thomas McParland, is curate at Middletown, Ireland; Elizabeth married Arthur Toner, and her son, Rev. Patrick Toner, is professor of theology in St. Paul's Catholic Seminary, Minnesota, and his brother Arthur is now preparing for the priesthood in Maynooth College, Ireland.

After finishing the course of studies in the national school, Rev. Thomas Cooney entered St. Patrick's College, Armagh, where he graduated in 1875. He then entered the American College, Catholic University of Louvain, Belgium. He was ordained to the priesthood at Mechlin, June 7, 1879. Shortly after he was sent to Hartford, Conn., as assistant to Rev. Michael Tierney, at that time pastor of St. Peter's Church. In 1880 he was appointed assistant to Rev. Father Vygan, Putnam, Conn., and on Feb. 14, 1883, Bishop McMahon named him pastor of St. Joseph's Church, Grosvenor Dale, Connecticut.

During the past twenty years, Rev. Father Cooney has devoted himself to the spiritual and temporal welfare of his parishioners, doing his duty faithfully and well. Since his appointment as pastor of Grosvenor Dale, many improvements have been made: St. Joseph's Church has been enlarged and beautified at a cost of $40,000; it was dedicated in 1894. The school, which at first contained but four class-rooms, now numbers eight, wherein 500 children receive instruction in English and French, under the direction of the Sisters of the Holy Cross, whose number also he increased from five to eleven. Many church societies have been formed, and are all in a flourishing condition. Father Cooney also takes special interest in his mission at Quinebaug, and has built there St. Stephen's Church at a cost of $3,000. He possesses great influence with the young, winning their respect and affection, and thus accomplishes great good in their moral and religious training. He served for many years as a member of the school board of Thompson. In 1886 he was appointed by Bishop McMann a member of the diocesan School Commissioners, and takes an active part in all that concerns progress. His parish is in an excellent financial condition.

HOMER ERNEST REMINGTON, one of the foremost and representative merchants of Willimantic, Windham county, is secretary, treasurer and manager of the corporation of the H. E. Remington Co., one of the most substantial retail houses of the city. Mr. Remington has risen from most modest and humble beginnings to his present enviable standing by the sole force of his personality. Though devoted to business, he has yielded to his friends and has filled positions of honor and trust, with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents, who are not confined to any one party or organization. Mr. Remington descends from old and honorable New England stock, through both maternal and paternal ancestry.

Homer E. Remington was born Feb. 7, 1853, in Waterbury, Vt., son of Joel and Armina (Hall) Remington. His father was a son of Jonathan Remington, and his mother a daughter of Lyman Hall. Both families have been long established there, the Halls coming from Wallingford, Conn., to Vermont in an early day, and making their home at Waterbury. Jonathan Remington, who is mentioned above, was a farmer, and all his family have now passed away. Joel Remington, the father of Homer E., was born at Huntington, Vt., where he was reared to farming life, in which he was successful. He died at the age of seventy-two, and was buried at Waterbury, where the greater part of his life was spent. He married Mrs. Armina (Hall) Bowen, who died at the age of fifty-four, and was buried at Waterbury. Homer Ernest Remington was the only child of his parents. He had a half brother, Azariah, born to his mother's first marriage, who took the name of Remington, but who is now deceased. Joel Remington and his wife were excellent Christian people, of the highest character and the strictest integrity.

Homer Ernest Remington spent his boyhood on the farm, and was raised to a full knowledge of hard work. His education was obtained in the public schools, and a seminary at Montpelier, Vt. His schooling was over at the age of sixteen years, when he took a position as clerk in a general store at Waterbury, Vt. After spending some three years there, the young clerk went to St. Albans to take a place in a wholesale flour and feed store, where he was mainly employed in bookkeeping. In the course of a few months he was induced to give up this work and take a clerkship at Norwich, Conn., in a clothing store, owned by John R. Foster and F. A. Wells, Mr. Foster having established a chain of stores under the name of the Foster Syndicate. Mr. Wells was a brother-in-law of Mr. Foster, and lived at one time at Waterbury, and where both had known Mr. Remington. After about a year in Norwich Mr. Remington came to Willimantic to clerk for W. L. Harrington & Co., Mr. Wells being associated with Mr. Harrington. In 1875 Mr. Remington became the manager of their Willimantic store, and in 1876 the firm of H. E. Remington & Co. was formed, Mr. Remington being the practical head of the establishment. This firm was succeeded by the incorporated company known as The H. E. Remington Co., of which Mr. Remington is secretary, treasurer and manager, which responsible position he fills with satisfaction to the other members of the corporation, and to the material prosperity of the business.

Mr. Remington was married Aug. 20, 1878, to Miss S. Gertrude Babcock, of Coventry, Conn., daughter of Norman L. and Sarah (Spencer) Babcock, and a descendant of Jonathan Babcock, who was the common ancestor of both the Coventry and Mansfield Babcocks, and is supposed to have been the second permanent settler in that part of Windham, now included in Willimantic. He bought land in that part of the town in 1709. He is supposed to have been a descendant of Robert Babcock, of Dorchester, Mass. Mary, the first wife of Jonathan Babcock, died in 1719, and he was married in the same year to Mary Hebard. Mr. Babcock died in 1731, in Coventry, where several of his children had settled.

Ebenezer Babcock, son of the foregoing Jonathan, was born about 1699, and married Mary Burgess, of Yarmouth, for his first wife. She died in Windham about 1723, and he was married in 1725 to Mehitable Burt. His last years were passed in Coventry, where he died in 1773, leaving many descendants.

Robert Babcock, son of Ebenezer, was born in 1732, was married in 1753 to Jedidah Turner, and lived in Coventry, where their son, Gideon Babcock, who was born in 1754, married Tryphena, daughter of Elisha Babcock. They made their home in Coventry.

Elijah Babcock, son of Gideon, was born Dec. 14, 1798, and was married March 26, 1822, to Mary Ann Strong. They resided in Coventry. Their children were: (1) Norman Leander, born April 27, 1823, died March 29, 1890. He was twice married, first to Sarah Spencer, of Mansfield, Conn., and second to Maria Bliven, of Willimantic, Conn. (2) Charles, born March 13, 1826, married Eliza Lathrop, and went to Pikes Peak. (3) Julia, born Feb. 10, 1828, died April 1, 1899. She married Henrie Crandall and lived in Providence, R. I. (4) Austania, born Oct. 13, 1833, was a teacher in Providence, R. I., and died in August, 1865. (5) Alonzo, born Feb. 20, 1838, died Jan. 31, 1903. He went to Pikes Peak when quite young and married. (6) Francis Leroy, born July 29, 1845, was a soldier in the 21st Conn. V. I.

Norman Leander Babcock, son of Elijah, was born in Coventry. He was twice married, as stated above. His children by his first wife were: (1) Walter Spencer, born May 28, 1853, died Oct. 11, 1888. He married in the West. (2) S. Gertrude, born Dec. 6, 1855, married Homer E. Remington, and resides in Willimantic, Conn. By the second wife was born, Fannie Maria, born July 8, 1860, who married John L. Leonard, and resides in Willimantic, Connecticut.

To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Remington have been born the following family: Ada, a graduate of the Willimantic high school; Maud, a graduate of the Willimantic high school, 1901, and now a student at the Normal School; and Gertrude, who died at the age of six years.

Mr. Remington first voted in Willimantic, and is a staunch Republican. In 1893 he represented Willimantic in the General Assembly, where he served on the committee on Insurance. For several years he was treasurer of the Water Fund of Willimantic. He has been admitted to the various Masonic bodies of Willimantic, and has taken the Templar's degree, belonging to St. John's Commandery. He was a charter member of Obwebetuck Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F., at Willimantic. As one of the safe and careful business men of Willimantic, Mr. Remington has a most enviable standing, and his family is as prominent in the social as he is in the commercial circles of the place.

JOHN WESLEY DOANE, late of New York, merchant and banker, whose death occurred March 23, 1901, was through a long period one of the active and leading men of the great western metropolis of Chicago, and to the development of that city he contributed largely.

Mr. Doane was born March 23, 1833, in the town of Thompson, Windham Co., Conn., in which place he maintained a summer home, being ever loyal to the place of his birth, and where he was greatly respected for not only his business achievements, but for his lofty traits of character. His parents were Joel and Olivia (Primrose, nee Hascall) Doane, plain sturdy New England people.

Doane is a name early prominent in New England Colonial History. Deacon John Doane came to Plymouth soon after the landing of the Pilgrim fathers, in one of the three ships to that point, the time of his arrival being given in "American Ancestry" as between 1620 and 1623. He was chosen as one of the assistants to the governor in 1633, and in 1636 was one of the body of men chosen to revise the laws of the Colony, the first revision that was made. He was the second time offered the position as assistant to the governor, which tender he declined. He was a deacon in the Plymouth Church, was one of the founders of Eastham, Mass., in 1644, and a deacon in the church there. At an advanced age he died in 1707. From this source came the Doanes of those and other localities in New England and Maine. [See Maine Historical and Genealogical Record, Vol. IV.]

The early years of John Wesley Doane were passed in his native town, where he had only such educational advantages as the district schools afforded. When quite young he went to Boston, where he secured an apprenticeship in the printing establishment of Rand, Avery & Co. At the age of twenty-two, having borrowed a small sum of money from a relative, he went to Chicago, where he immediately made the beginning of his wonderful career by renting a small place and starting a fruit store. By hard work and strict attention to the smallest details, he was soon enabled to enlarge his business, and the ambitious fruit seller soon became so successful that he was enabled to add a grocery department, which quickly took his entire attention. His success in this venture was so great that the time soon came when he had not only the largest establishment, but did a volume of business far beyond that of any other firm in the great Northwest. In the great fire of 1871 his place of business was destroyed. This misfortune only aroused his ambition, and with some assistance, he was soon re-established in business, and quickly retrieved his losses.

In 1872 Mr. Doane was the first direct tea and coffee importer in Chicago, and built the Atlas and Grocers' Block. The first cargo of coffee from Rio de Janeiro came that year by way of Mobile, Ala. The expansion spirit entered his business, and he finally opened offices in New York City, London and Santos and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in which business he was actively interested, in association with his two sons, at the time of his death. During these years he became interested in various enterprises of a financial nature, and became president of the Merchants Loan & Trust Co., holding the position for fourteen years, retiring in 1898. After resigning the presidency he continued on the directory of the bank, and was practically the only eastern director of the corporation. He gradually became a director in other corporations, and was recognized as an authority on monetary questions. About this time, on account of his interests in the East becoming so great, he removed to New York City, and passed his time thereafter in that city, and in his native town of Thompson, Connecticut.

Mr. Doane was one of the original directors of the Pullman Palace Car Co., and contributed largely to the success of that great institution. He was also a director of the N. Y. & N. E. Railway Co.; a director of the Union Pacific Railway Co., and was appointed government director, and later receiver of this corporation, by President Grover Cleveland. After the re-organization of the Union Pacific he was elected one of its directors. He also occupied a like relation in the new Chicago & Alton, the Illinois Central, and the Lake Erie & Western Railway Cos.; the U. S. Guarantee Co.; the London Guarantee Co.; the Gramercy Sugar Co., of New Orleans; and was one of the organizers of the Gramercy Finance Company.

Mr. Doane was one of the founders of the Chicago Commercial Club, and was twice its president, being at the head of the organization in 1879, when Gen. Grant visited that city on the return from his trip around the world. The club gave the General a banquet at the "Grand Pacific Hotel," at which Mr. Doane presided. The Boston Commercial Club was a guest of the Chicago organization at that banquet. Mr. Doane was a member of the Calumet Club from its organization, and in 1885 was its president. During the preliminary discussion concerning the World's Fair, he contributed valuable assistance to the committee in procuring the location in Chicago, and in the passage of legislation in Washington, and was one of the three men who made the $3,000,000 guarantee which was necessary in order to get the government appropriation.

Mr. Doane accumulated a large portion of his wealth by promoting and organizing the Rockford Glucose Co., which corporation he finally sold to the Glucose Sugar Refining Co., of Chicago. To him may be attributed the success of this corporation.

The business friends and influential men with whom Mr. Doane had intimate relations, included distinguished names like the following: Walter Q. Gresham, late Secretary of State; Grover Cleveland, ex-president of the United States; Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller, of Washington; the late Gen. Sheridan; Gen. Merritt, Gen. Schofield, and many other army and navy officers; Stuyvesant Fish; Marshall Field; the late George M. Pullman; Norman B. Ream; J. Pierpont Morgan; James Stillman; Henry R. Reed, of Boston; E. H. Harriman; Horace G. Burt, of Omaha; Henry Sanford; John J. White; and Jacob Schiff.

During his busy career Mr. Doane always bore with him the memory of his native town. For many years he made up the deficiency of the West Thompson M. E. Church, and was ever ready to assist the parish in any way called upon. As a filial memorial he left the church a bequest of $2,500. In Chicago Mr. Doane was for many years a warden of Trinity Church, and this parish in his death lost a devoted friend and willing helper. His acquaintance among the clergy of the country was very wide, he numbering among his friends the late Bishop Beckwith, of Georgia; the late Bishop Sullivan of Algoma; Philip Dumoulin, Bishop of Niagara; Bishop Gailor, of Tennessee; and Canon Farrar, late Dean of Westminster Abbey, who was his guest when he made his visit to the United States.

Mr. Doane's political affiliations throughout life were with the Democratic party, but only once did he consent to be a candidate for office, and that only a few days previous to the election. He made the race for Congress in the Fifth district, and cut down the Republican majority from 6,500 to 500.

On Nov. 10, 1857, Mr. Doane was married to Julia A. Moulton, of Laconia, N. H., and to them came five children, namely: Julia W.; John Edwin, who was married Dec. 12, 1894, at Burlington, Iowa, to Anna Parsis Schramm, and whose children are Julius, Marian and Olivia Primrose; Fannie D., Mrs. Rumsey; Lilly D., who married F. S. Wicks, a prominent lawyer in New York, and has three children, Stanton D., Bartlett and John D.; and John Wesley, Jr.

The death of Mr. Doane brought to his surviving family expressions of condolence, regret and sympathy from hosts of friends, while the newspapers of both New York and Chicago, and the local press, gave eulogistic tributes in memory of this remarkable man and esteemed citizen. To quote:

"There is nothing in this world that succeeds and dominates and triumphs so much as character—character built up of the great qualities of honor, industry, temperance and perseverance. Such a strong and virtuous character our departed friend developed. Not alone did progress and success and extension attend his own particular business. As time gave opportunity, his business personality was recognized, his influence became great and wide. He was consequently identified with some of the foremost mercantile, banking, railway and manufacturing corporations in the United States. In such institutions he was president, director, manager, receiver."

Among the numerous telegrams received by the family at the time of Mr. Doane's death may be mentioned those from Grover Cleveland, Robert Lincoln, Melville W. Fuller, and many other prominent men.

Mrs. Julia Moulton Doane, the widow of the late John Wesley Doane, passed away in 1902. We append the following selection from a local journal, giving as it does extended mention of this most estimable woman, beloved mother and tender and helpful wife:

"It is not many months since the sudden death of Mr. J. W. Doane brought grief to many hearts, and now the wife and mother has been taken. That pleasant hospitable home, so long the meeting place of children, relatives and hosts of friends, is indeed desolate. Those who were so long so active in the community, whose hearts and means were ever open to the call of need or sympathy, are gone forever.

"It is not for the world at large to fathom the loss to the stricken household, but many here and elsewhere will cherish the memory of Mr. and Mrs. Doane and sympathize in the grief of those most deeply affected by it.

"Mrs. Julia Moulton Doane was, in every respect, a fitting helpmeet to her husband, one who could share in his business projects; enable him to exercise that bountiful hospitality in which he so delighted and make his home all that could be desired. Her warm and generous heart delighted in acts of private beneficence, and she was ready to bear a part in works of public usefulness. Her gracious tact and kindness as a hostess, made her home very enjoyable to guests. Many in varied walks of life can testify to its attractions. The tribute paid by Bishop Gailor, in his commemorative address, was felt by all to be most appropriate and truthful.

"The funeral services in the Congregational Church edifice, January 10th, were of much interest. The beautiful array of flowers were those she had herself loved and cherished. The service was conducted by Bishop Gailor, an intimate friend and frequent visitant, assisted by Rev. Mr. Hardy, rector of Christ Church, Pomfret.

"The musical service, conducted by a nephew of Mr. Doane, was exceedingly fine. The admirable organ, so lately given by Mrs. Doane and her family, seemed to share in the general sorrow. Gems of song were exquisitely rendered by trained voices.

"A large audience filled the church. Friends from Boston, Providence and New York, and many from adjoining towns were present, all uniting in affection and respect for Mrs. Doane and sympathy for the bereaved family. We give herewith the beautiful tribute paid to his deceased friend by Bishop Gailor:

"It is impossible, dear friends, that I should conclude this service this morning without one word of tender and grateful commemoration of the strong and useful and generous life that has now closed its career on earth. Coming as I did, from my distant home, glad of the privilege to do her honor, I feel that I represent quite an army of men and women who have loved and known Mrs. Doane, and whose hearts are sad this morning.

"It is characteristic of the noblest womanhood that it does not often reveal itself to strangers; it has to be known and appreciated and understood in the common duties of daily life, in the privacy and sacredness of home; and this was especially true of her, whose husband's large and conspicuous influence in the affairs of men tended to obscure and overshadow the depth and power of her life and influence as wife and mother and good friend. And is this not the sweet mystery? Is it not the consecrated duty of womanhood? Aye, is it not the divinest opportunity of the unselfish life whose shining through the world hath blessed and inspired the thoughts and works of men like us from generation to generation, upon which God Almighty himself set his seal in the Motherhood of one Woman who bore and nourished the Savior of Mankind? Of such a type of womanhood this, our dear friend, was a representative, whom we shall love to remember, for her strength was gentle and her gentleness was strong, and her heart was generous in every throb of it.

"God gave her an intelligence that was quick, keen and penetrating in its insight, and a will that was firm and resolute in its decisions. Hers was a striking personality, rich in kindness, strong in its convictions, loyal in its friendships, lavish in its generosity, a lover of kindness, of order and of truth and of influence, a power for righteousness, for God. These are strong words, but they belong to her. She has gone from us, her place cannot be filled, her home we know, in which for so many years she was the beneficent presence, can never be the same again, but we shall not weep for her, but for ourselves. We are in the presence of the age-long mystery. We stand as it were bewildered and bereft, by the shore of the great sea that never gives back its treasures, and we hear the song of the sea-bird and the throb of its waves as they boom over all forever.

But she hath entered into the secret of the Greater Presence, into the nearer light of God, and into the presence of the Lamb, who leadeth her to fountain after fountain of living waters, to new life and new powers, and wipes away all tears from her eyes; and we shall meet her some day bye and bye when for us the struggle and storms of life are ended, when for us the evening comes and the busy world is hushed, and the fever of our life is over and our work is done; and then we shall speak with her of this warfare as we dwell together in God's eternal peace.

"My friends, this is not defeat, it is victory; this is not death, it is the entrance into Life. One hath said unto us: I am he that liveth and was dead; as I live ye shall live also, and he that liveth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whoso believeth in me shall never die. If we believe in the Life, if we trust in the Life, if we hope for that Life and its inevitable victory, hating sin, which is after all, the only peril of death, holding out our hands to him who is ready to break the bonds of every prison house and to set our captive spirits free, this is not death, it is the entrance into Life.

"It is to have every hope fulfilled, to have every faculty increased, to have our natures enriched, deepened, enlarged with the vision and presence of Him who said, As I live ye shall live also, and I am alive forevermore. Amen."

LYMAN MOORE. The origin of the old and honorable family of Moore was in Scotland, from which country they fled, in early days to escape religious persecution, to Ireland, and there for many years they flourished in numbers and estate. In that country was born James Moore, the great-great-grandfather of Lyman Moore, of Union, Tolland county, and this was the ancestor who crossed the Atlantic and made his home in the hospitable State of Connecticut, locating first in Grafton, Mass., but buying land in Union Dec. 19, 1739.

From this emigrant settler have descended all the Moores or Mores of this locality. His land was situated in the west part of the town, known as Content, and there his descendants have since lived to do him honor. He passed away Oct. 20, 1777, in the eighty-third year of his age, and his widow died Jan. 22, 1785, at the age of ninety-eight. Their children were: John, born in 1717; William, who first married Sept. 30, 1762, Sarah Rosebrooks, of Brimfield, Mass. (who died Sept. 27, 1771), and for his second wife he married, March 16, 1773, Hannah Morse, of Woodstock; Thomas, who first married Melitable Bliss, of Brimfield; Anna, who married James McNall; and Jane, who married Dr. McClure. All lived worthy lives.

John Moore, the eldest son of James, was born in 1717, on the passage to America. The early records tell of his buying land of his father on Dec. 15, 1744, and he was then living in Dorchester, Mass. His death occurred May 22, 1787. He married

Sarah Bliss, of Brimfield, who died Aug. 2, 1818, at the age of eighty-four years. John Moore was an extensive farmer and cleared up many acres of fine land, which he cultivated in Union. His children were Ichabod, who was born Oct. 9, 1759, married Phoebe Loomis, a daughter of Abner Loomis; James, born Nov. 17, 1760, died young; John is mentioned below; Janet, born Dec. 20, 1763, married Abner Perry, and died Sept. 3, 1823, his death taking place Dec. 11, 1820 (they lived in Wales); Sarah, born Oct. 18, 1765, married Major David Lawson, of Union; Noah, who was baptized March 30, 1769, married June 15, 1794, Polly Curtiss, a native of Ashford, Conn., where they lived; Eunice, baptized Dec. 13, 1769, married a Mr. Loomis; Samuel, baptized July 14, 1771, was married Jan. 30, 1798, to Amy Whiton, of Ashford, Conn.; Timothy, baptized May 8, 1773, was a tanner by trade, left Connecticut, and went to the State of New York, and later to London, Canada, where he grew wealthy, and died there; Stephen, baptized Oct. 9, 1774, married Polly Laffin, and later moved to New York; Margaret, baptized May 24, 1778, married David Lawson; Mable married a member of the Hatch family.

John Moore (2), son of John, was born July 21, 1762, in Union, Conn., and was married March 29, 1787, to Martha Lawson, daughter of Capt. Thomas Lawson, of Union. Mrs. Moore was born March 14, 1765, and died Dec. 8, 1844. In 1790 Mr. Moore bought the property which is now owned and occupied by Lyman Moore, and which was owned by Samuel and Thomas Taylor. John Moore not only became an excellent farmer, cultivating one of the finest farms in his locality, consisting of 150 acres, but he was much more. During the Revolutionary war he gallantly served from March 3, 1777, until his honorable discharge, Jan. 5, 1780, participating in the Ledyard affair, and later became one of the prominent and leading men of his community, filling almost all of the town offices and leaving his impress upon the local history of the time. Grandfather Moore is represented as a type of manly strength, standing fully six feet in height, and weighing 300 pounds. Both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Church, and took an active part in the work and advancement of that religious body. The children of John and Martha Moore were: (1) Margaret, born May 16, 1788, died in 1857; on May 13, 1813, she married Eli Fisk, of Wales, Mass., formerly of Stafford, and later he removed to Wheeling, W. Va., by team, and there engaged in the business of making water wheels, while she was a teacher. Previous to 1834 they removed to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he followed the same business, but lost all he had by fire; at the time of their death they were in Havana, Ill. (2) Esther, born April 4, 1790, died May 3, 1861. She was married Feb. 11, 1819, to Stephen Bugbee, of Woodstock, Conn., who was a well-known farmer, and a noted Anti-Mason man, a strong Whig, and an ardent supporter of the Baptist Church. His death occurred June 24, 1839, in Worcester, Mass. Their children were Thomas, Lawson and Ann M. (3) Mehitabel, born Feb. 27, 1794, married, Sept. 4, 1817, Theophilus Brooks, of Ashford, Conn., and they later removed to Pennsylvania, thence to the State of New York, where she died. (4) John Wesley, born Dec. 21, 1802, was first married to Tryphena Back, on June 12, 1826. She was a native of Holland, Mass., and died Nov. 10, 1832. His second marriage, on Aug. 6, 1837, was to Lucy Ann Chase, of Southbridge. His occupation took in farming, carpentering and the wheelwright trade, and his death occurred in Holland. (5) Thomas is mentioned below.

Thomas Moore, the father of Lyman Moore, and the youngest son of John Moore (2), was born Feb. 5, 1806, and on March 21, 1832, was married to Lucy Lyon, who was born Dec. 2, 1805, and died Sept. 4, 1882. His death occurred June 8, 1885. Thomas Moore was the most extensive farmer in Union, and he was also the largest raiser and shipper of cattle in the town. His lumber interests also surpassed those of any other, while his prominence in all public matters made him a man of influence and weight. In his earlier years he sustained a shock which impaired his memory somewhat, but in other ways, Mr. Moore surpassed almost every other man of his years in strength, weighing two hundred pounds, and was in vigorous health. His industry was remarkable, and the results made him a man of wealth.

Until 1860 Mr. Moore was a Democrat in his political sympathy, but he was a War Democrat, and the issues which arose in the party at that time made him a Republican, and so he continued. As selectman, and as an incumbent of the other local offices, Mr. Moore performed every duty most efficiently, until 1866, when ill health caused him to resign all public cares. Twice he represented his town in the Legislature, and was upon one of the leading committees, and he was a man respected by his fellow citizens as long as he was able to mingle with them. His children were: Lyman is the subject proper of this sketch. Martha, born Jan. 21, 1837, died March 26, 1843. Alvan, born Oct. 22, 1838, in Union, Conn., was killed by a kick from a horse when he was a small boy. Thomas, born June 14, 1840, died June 23, 1842. George, born Feb. 11, 1842, died June 16, 1842. Lucy, born June 13, 1844, was married June 26, 1887, to Oliver Marcy, of Woodstock, and there they reside, Mr. Marcy engaging in farming and lumbering and conducting a saw-mill. Esther, born March 20, 1848, died Jan. 16, 1857. One died in infancy.

Lyman Moore was born Nov. 24, 1834, in Union, Conn., and until he was nineteen years of age continued in attendance at school. Then he assisted his father in farming and lumbering. After 1865 he took charge of his father's business, illness having fallen upon his parent, and this necessitated a great deal of industry upon his part, as his father had many interests. The sawmill at Mashapaug gave employment to a number of men, and this business was continued until the general use of steam superseded that of water power, and the mill was closed down in 1894. During the past few years Mr. Moore has sold a great deal of lumber, having owned a great amount of timber land, and is still the possessor of some 2,000 acres in Massachusetts and in Connecticut. His home farm, which is under cultivation, comprises about 100 acres and is one of the finest farms in that part of Tolland county. Mr. Moore owns the whole of the east side of Lake Mashapaug, and a portion of the northern and southern ends, having given away a small strip on the eastern shore.

Mr. Moore has been identified with the Republican party since 1860, and has been honored by his fellow citizens with many offices of trust and responsibility. He has served as selectman, assessor, constable, tax collector, justice of the peace, and on the board of relief, and in 1886 was sent to the Legislature to represent his town, and was made chairman of the committee on Agriculture. All of these offices have been filled with an eye single to the public welfare, and show the high esteem in which Mr. Moore is held by those who have known him longest and best.

Lyman Moore was married July 1, 1872, to Miss Emma Blodgett, who was born May 6, 1852, daughter of Edward and Delia (Humes) Blodgett, of Holland, Mass., the former a shoemaker by trade. The children of this union are: Fred Alvin, born Jan. 21, 1874, was educated at Mashapaug and Brimfield Academy; Lizzie Martha, born June 22, 1875, Belle Frances, born July 22, 1877, and Bessie Gertrude, born July 15, 1883, all graduated from the Hitchcock Free high school, of Brimfield, Mass., and of these, Lizzie and Bessie are now (1902-03) teaching school in Coamo, Porto Rico.

GEORGE KINGSLEY NASON, one of the leading business men of Willimantic, Windham county, whose rise in the world is the result of his own efforts, is one of the most substantial citizens of that noted Connecticut center. He was born in Wickford, R. I., May 29, 1845, the youngest member of a family of seven children born to Bradford C. and Ruth G. (Hendrick) Nason.

Benjamin Nason, his grandfather, was the son of a Revolutionary soldier. He and his brother located on a farm near Wickford, R. I., coming from the vicinity of Newport, in that State. Benjamin Nason married a Cole, and they had ten children. Mr. Nason's maternal grandparents, James and Patience (Greene) Hendrick, prosperous farming people, also had a family of ten children. The father of Patience Greene was a cousin of Gen. Nathaniel Greene, the Revolutionary hero.

Bradford C. Nason spent the greater part of his life at Wickford, R. I., where he was a contractor and builder for many years. There his wife was born. She passed away at the age of seventy-eight, and Mr. Nason lived to the advanced age of eighty-five years. They were the parents of seven children, five of whom are yet living, as follows: William T. A., a resident of Providence, R. I.; Lizzie, now Mrs. A. F. Arnold, of Fall River, Mass.; Lucinda B., of Beverly, Mass.; Caroline, wife of Charles E. Tanner, of East Greenwich, R. I.; and George K.

George K. Nason was but a boy when his parents located in Phoenix, R. I., where he obtained his schooling in the public schools. His opportunities, however, were limited, as he had to go to work very early in life. His work in the cotton mill at Phoenix was the beginning of an active and busy career. When the Civil war broke out he went to Westerly, R. I., where he worked in the machine shops some six months, and then removed to Providence. While there he changed his trade, through the influence of the superintendent of the Sabbath-school which he regularly attended, becoming a maker of tools—the instruments used in pistol and gun making. The conclusion of the war rendered this trade less profitable, and Mr. Nason applied for a position on the police force of Providence. Though there were several hundred applications ahead of his, the reputation he had won for integrity and manliness was such that he was at once appointed. For four years, from June 10, 1865, he filled that position, with credit to himself and satisfaction to the city. During those years he took a course in Schofield's Business College, at Providence, as he wished to be prepared for other work if occasion required. While on the police force he was also deputy sheriff for a time, doing duty at what was then called Cedar Grove Wharf.

In 1869 Mr. Nason took a position in the office of the Black River Woolen Company, at Cavendish, Vt., where his work was mostly clerical, although it afforded him good opportunity to familiarize himself with the mechanical workings of that industry. After spending some four years at Cavendish, he went to Glendale, R. I., where he was employed some two years by the Glendale Woolen Company, and subsequently, for about the same period, he was engaged as a bookkeeper in the office of the Westerly Woolen Company, at Westerly, R. I. After this he formed a partnership with a former associate and leased a mill at Holden, Mass. That venture proving quite successful, he retired from it on very advantageous terms before the expiration of the lease. After a brief stay at Greenville, R. I., he was sent by Horace Kimball, of Providence, R. I., to South Coventry, Conn., to begin the operation of what was then the Millbrook Woolen Mill, of which he was later the principal owner. This was in 1879, and in 1882 he came to Willimantic to buy the lumber business of Hyde Kingsley, the oldest business of the kind in the city, it having been established as early as 1861. Mr. Nason handles at the present time all kinds of lumber, and all building material in demand in the city, as well as coal and fuel, and under his able management the business has become the leader of the kind in the eastern part of the State.

Mr. Nason was married, May 10, 1868, in Providence, R. I., to Miss Adelaide, daughter of Jeremiah Matthewson. She is a native of Rhode Island, a lady of fine character, and enjoys marked social prominence. Their excellent home on North street was built by Mr. Nason in 1896.

Mr. Nason has been a Republican from early life, and has been chairman of the board of relief and first selectman in the town of Windham. Though not a politician, he takes a keen interest in public and political affairs. Socially he is connected with various organizations, being a Knight Templar Mason, a member of the Knights of Pythias, and of the I. O. O. F. At various times he has been trustee or assignee of very important business interests in Willimantic. In 1895 he was made receiver of the Natchaug Silk Company, and closed up its affairs in January, 1902. At the same time he was trustee of several bankrupt estates. Since its organization Mr. Nason has been a member of the Board of Trade, and was the first chairman of its committee on Trade and Manufactures. Mr. Nason is universally known as a clean and straightforward business man, who has risen from lowly conditions to a most creditable place in the commercial circles of the State.

PORTER. The Porter family, numerously represented in Windham county, and more especially in Thompson, is authentically traced to John Porter, a farmer, who was born in 1596, and who was made a freeman of Roxbury, Nov. 5, 1633. He in time removed to Hingham, where he was a landed proprietor in 1635, and where he was a deputy and town officer. About 1644 he settled in Salem, where he was a town officer many times, and he finally removed to Wenham, where his death occurred, Sept. 6, 1676. His wife, Margaret, was formerly the widow Odding, and both were members of the Roxbury Church. His second wife, Mary, became the mother of the following children: John; Samuel; Joseph, baptized Sept. 9, 1638; Benjamin, baptized in November, 1639; Israel, baptized Feb. 12, 1642; Mary, baptized Dec. 8, 1645; Jonathan, baptized Dec. 1, 1648; and Sarah, baptized March 4, 1649.

Joseph Porter, son of John, was baptized Sept. 9, 1638, and was a soldier in King Philip's war. On Jan. 27, 1664, he married Anne Hathorn, daughter of Major William Hathorn.

Samuel Porter, son of Joseph and Anne (Hathorn) Porter, was born Aug. 4, 1669, and died in Salem, Mass., March 26, 1749. On Jan. 14, 1696, he married Judith Dorman, daughter of Thomas and Judith (Wood) Dorman.

Samuel Porter (2), son of Samuel and Judith (Dorman) Porter, was born in Salem, Mass., Feb. 14, 1708, and was baptized in April, 1709. He bought land in Thompson, Conn., June 28, 1738.

In 1752 he was a member of a committee appointed to see about better school accommodations, and he also served as tax collector and as sheriff. On April 19, 1757, he entered the army for service in the French and Indian war, and on Aug. 2, following, he died of fever at Fort Edward, N. Y. On Sept. 1, 1737, he was married to Hannah Flint, who was born May 5, 1719, and was baptized Oct. 21, 1722, daughter of Jonathan and Hannah (Swinnerton) Flint, of Salem, who, in December, 1738, joined their son-in-law in Thompson, and there the father died in 1775, at the age of eighty-three. In 1757 the records show that Widow Hannah Porter was allowed to teach school at her house. To Samuel and Hannah Porter came children as follows: Jonathan, born Sept. 27, 1738, is mentioned below; Sarah, born July 4, 1740, married Comfort Starr, of Thompson, and died Nov. 27, 1769; Eunice, born May 12, 1743, married David Prince, of Killingly, and died Nov. 6, 1796; Samuel, born May 11, 1745, died Dec. 1, 1767; Flint, born July 10, 1747, died July 22, 1747; Flint (2), born Sept. 1, 1748, married Mollie Carroll; Hannah, born March 1, 1750, married Benjamin Converse, and died July 25, 1785; Eleanor, born May 19, 1753, married Calvin Skinner; and Ruth, born Oct. 9, 1755, married Lovell Pulsifer, of Douglass, Mass. In 1771 Mrs. Hannah Porter wedded Samuel Bloss, of Killingly, who died Oct. 19, 1778, and she then made her home with her son Jonathan until her death, Aug. 4, 1806. Her remains lie in East Thompson cemetery.

Jonathan Porter, son of Samuel and Hannah (Flint) Porter, born Sept. 27, 1738, removed with his parents in December, 1738, from Salem to what is now Porter Plains, Thompson. After the death of his father he engaged in farming. Nature had endowed him with skill in healing, and his services as a doctor were often sought. In his religious belief he was a Quaker, as was also his wife. On Nov. 23, 1762, he wedded Sarah, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Herrick) Brown, and the children of this union were as follows: Eunice, born Nov. 10, 1763, died May 17, 1806; Samuel, born May 29, 1765, married Feb. 23, 1791, Mary Plummer, and died April 27, 1848; Lucy, born May 4, 1767, married Ezekiel Fowler, of Leicester, Mass., and died June 3, 1819; Hannah, born May 6, 1769, married Israel Aldrich, of Douglass, Mass., and died March 5, 1837; Sarah, born March 19, 1771, married Jesse Lapham, of Pennsylvania, and died Oct. 12, 1852; Mollie, born Feb. 14, 1773, married Zebedee Mitchell, of Maine, and died Aug. 1, 1845; Jonathan, born July 4, 1775, married Levina Kimball, and died April 21, 1827; Joseph, born April 25, 1777, died Feb. 19, 1778; Rachel, born Nov. 2, 1778, married Amos Hemingway, and died April 4, 1855; Eleanor, born Feb. 11, 1782, married Willard Perrin, and died June 19, 1852; David was born May 25, 1784; and Rufus, born Jan. 10, 1788, married in 1825 Annie Copelin, and died May 17, 1868. Jonathan Porter, the father, died May 2, 1799.

David Porter, son of Jonathan and Sarah, was born on the old Porter homestead, May 25, 1784, and during his active life was engaged in general farming and stock raising. He died Dec. 26, 1836, and is buried in the Porter family cemetery on the homestead. He also was a Quaker, and a man of fearless convictions, and was prominent in his neighborhood. On Dec. 17, 1818, he married Hannah Plummer, daughter of John and Sarah (Joslin) Plummer, born Sept. 12, 1787, and died on the homestead June 4, 1885, tenderly cared for in her last years by her two sons, Jonathan and Samuel. She was a woman of fine Christian character. Samuel, the younger of the sons, was born Jan. 20, 1826, was a soldier during the Civil war in Co. B, 6th Conn. V. I., and died Feb. 13, 1892.

Jonathan Porter, son of David and Hannah, is an honored and worthy citizen of Thompson, now leading a retired life. He was born April 14, 1820, and received his education in his district school. After the death of his father, he and his brother managed the farm, and in 1848 he replaced the old house that had stood for 107 years with a new one. Besides farming he also engaged somewhat in lumbering. He became one of the important factors in the life of the community, and in 1857 was a representative from Thompson to the House of Representatives at Hartford; he also served on the board of relief and as a jurymen. Other local offices came under his care, and through all his political services he stanchly upheld the Republican party. He is a man of temperate habits, kindly disposition, and much energy. He unites with the Methodist Episcopal Church, was one of the trustees and stewards, and is regarded with esteem by all who know him. On March 28, 1849, he married Lucinda Bates, born in Webster, Mass., July 4, 1825, a daughter of Nelson and Lucia (Jacobs) Bates; she died Jan. 28, 1895. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Porter: Sarah J., born Feb. 12, 1850, married May 6, 1874, Abram K. Gould, of Worcester, and has two children, Mary M. and Jay; David Nelson was born June 14, 1851; J. Herbert, born Sept. 12, 1854, died at Bement, Ill., March 17, 1894; Ira A., was born Nov. 30, 1856.

DAVID NELSON PORTER, son of Jonathan and Lucinda (Bates) Porter, was educated in the public schools of Thompson, Nichols Academy, Dudley, Mass., and East Greenwich (R. I.) Academy. Thus equipped for the future he started out on his own responsibility in 1871, and at Auburn, Mass., secured work on a farm. Later he became superintendent of a farm at Paxton, Mass., whence he removed to Madison, Wis. In the latter city he worked on the State experimental farm, having charge of stock department for several years. He was also employed as a herdsman at the State Insane Asylum, Mendota, Wis. After that he went to Minnesota, and was there employed as manager of the cattle department at the State experimental station, spending in all twenty years remote from his native home in Connecticut. During this time he visited twenty-seven States of the Union, and some portions of Canada. Upon returning to Thompson, Mr. Porter engaged in farming and dairying. In all of his active employment he has achieved success. During 1895-98 he was one of the three selectmen of Thompson, also a member of the House of Representatives at Hartford in 1903. He is a Republican, but is not bound by narrow political creed, believing that the best man should win.

In Providence, R. I., May 24, 1899, Mr. Porter married Lydia A. Jacobs, who was born in East Thompson, daughter of Cyrill and Betsey (Towne) Jacobs, and was the widow of Stephen Lockwood, by whom she had one son, George F. Mr. Porter and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which they hold important office.

IRA A. PORTER, son of Jonathan and Lucinda (Bates) Porter, was educated in the schools of Thompson and at Worcester (Mass.) Academy, and remained on the farm with his father until starting out for himself, when eighteen years old, at Rutland, Mass. He worked for a time on a farm, later removed to Madison, Wis., and was engaged upon a stock and dairy farm. But after five years, on account of sickness, he was obliged to return East. After two years, regaining a fair degree of health, he assumed charge of the old homestead, where he has since lived. He is particularly interested in his family history, and is proud of his forefathers, who have wrought so exceedingly well. Of modest and unassuming manner, temperate in all his ways, he is a good citizen, and public-spirited member of the community. In the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is a member, he is also steward and trustee. He is also a charter member of Quinmattisset Grange, Thompson.

On May 12, 1887, in Eastford, Conn., Mr. Porter married Lucy J. Trowbridge, daughter of David and Georganna (Turner) Trowbridge, and who died Feb. 10, 1892. Of this union there was one daughter, Lucy Trowbridge Porter, born Feb. 4, 1892.

NICHOLAS WENDHISER is one of the prominent German citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, who well represents that city in the mercantile line, his rise from a position of limited circumstances to the substantial one he now enjoys being an example showing what industry and honesty can compass, when yoked together. He was born in the town of Trier, near the city of Cologne, Germany, in February, 1844, a son of Nicholas and Maria Wendhiser, who came to the United States, in 1846, settling in Pittsfield, Mass., where his father followed farming for some years, his death occurring in Rockville, Conn., in 1866. The mother survived until she had reached her eighty-first year.

From childhood Nicholas Wendhiser displayed mechanical genius, when but a boy making baskets which he had no trouble in selling, his schooling being rather a secondary matter, as his earnings were required in the family. When thirteen years old, he entered the card room in the woolen mill near Pittsfield, and in those days wages were poor and hours long, he being required to work from 5 A. M. to 7 P. M. for $10 per month, as was the custom then. This was the beginning of a long season in mill work. Accompanying his parents to Rockville, in 1860, he began then to learn the trade of weaver in the Rock mill, progressing rapidly on account of his natural mechanical ability, and later his skill was tested in the position of loom fixer.

In 1863, the mill was idle for some little time as the result of a new flume being put in, and Mr. Wendhiser took this opportunity to make a three-year contract with Mr. O'Neil to learn the blacksmith trade, everything going well, until the mill started up again, and he was wanted by Mr. George Kellogg in the weave room. Through the latter's intervention the contract was dissolved, and Mr. Wendhiser returned to the Rock mill, remaining until 1865, when he returned to Pittsfield and accepted a position in the Russell mill, until the death of his father, when he returned to Rockville. He later went to South Coventry, where he started the weave room in the Kingsbury mill, and later was recalled to Rockville to start the weave room in the Florence mill. Being an expert, his business was very thoroughly established and his services required in this capacity in many mills, at the New England mill, in Rockville, at the Glenville mill, in Greenwich, Conn., and other places. In 1867 he began the painting business in this city, his natural ability enabling him to take up almost any line of mechanics, without much instruction, and very often after a day's work at painting he would employ the evening in papering a room, hard and constant work being his delight. In 1874, he bought out a grocery store, and disposed of the stock, his idea being to make at that location a first class wall-paper, shade and paint store, and he did a prosperous business until 1888, when occurred the disastrous fire which ruined many and paralyzed business for some time, but Mr. Wendhiser soon recovered, and he is enjoying a prosperous business at the present time.

On April 1, 1869, in Rockville, Mr. Wendhiser was married to Miss Honorah Forest, a native of Portland, Conn., and to this union were born: Thomas, a resident of Manchester, Conn.; Minnie; Katharine F.; Frank; and Frederick. The family residence is on Mountain street, where in 1883 many improvements were made, and it ranks among the pleasant homes of the city.

A staunch Democrat Mr. Wendhiser has been called upon to frequently serve in the local offices, for two years being the efficient tax collector. In 1876 he was made chief engineer of the Volunteer Fire Company, and has served as fire commissioner, and is a member of the Sick Society, No. 1. He has many friends in the Fire department, his kindness and generosity having often been tested, while his bravery was admired and imitated. Mr. Wendhiser still loves to puzzle himself with some intricate machinery, although nothing remains much of a puzzle to him for any length of time, his natural ability enabling him to discover what would remain forever hidden to the majority of the community. Mr. Wendhiser is well and favorably known in Rockville, and his knowledge of different languages makes him very efficient in courts, at times, as an interpreter, while his interesting stories make him a genial, pleasant companion at all times. With his family, he belongs to the St. Bernard Catholic Church.

HON. WILLIAM SMITH SCARBOROUGH, whose death occurred at his home in New York City, Nov. 27, 1900, when he was at the advanced age of eighty-six years, was for many years, during his active professional career, a prominent lawyer and useful citizen of the Queen City of the West—Cincinnati, Ohio—whither he went in the full vigor of young manhood from his picturesque New England home in the town of Thompson, Connecticut.

Mr. Scarborough was born Aug. 2, 1814, in the town of Brooklyn, Conn., a son of Joel and Lucretia (Smith) Scarborough, and descends from John Scarborough, of Roxbury, Mass., through Samuel, Samuel (2), Jeremiah, Joseph and Joel Scarborough.

(I) John Scarborough, or Scarbarrow, of Roxbury, 1639, was admitted a freeman May 13, 1640, and had by his wife, Mary, probably a sister of Robert Smith, of Boston; John, born July 10, 1642; Hannah, born Dec. 3, 1643; and Samuel, born Jan. 20, 1646. The father was accidentally killed June 9, 1646, while charging a great gun; his widow married, in 1647, Philip Torrey. It is stated in "American Ancestry" that the family name appears early in Yorkshire. A Joseph Scarborough was ensign in Lord St. John's regiment of the Parliamentary Army at the battle of Edge Hill in 1642. The ancestors of the early New England family came from Yorkshire, England.

Of the American ancestor of the Roxbury branch of the family the author of a work on the town says: "Among the early Roxbury names, now (1878) extinct here, is that of Scarborough. It is, however, kept in remembrance, as the name given to the street leading from the corner of the avenue, where the estate originally was, to Morton street. John Scarbarrow, admitted a freeman in 1640, 'was slain in the 4th of the 9th month, 1646, charging a great gunne.' Samuel, the last of the Scarboroughs, died here in 1789. South and southwest of the Scarborough estate, which contained eighty-two acres, lay the common land of the town, the last of which was sold in 1812, to Samuel Waitt. Upon the Scarborough homestead there was a majestic tree, beneath whose spreading branches the tired minute men from Lexington were fed, by one who, when an ancient dame, loved to recall the past."

(II) Samuel Scarborough, of Roxbury, born Jan. 20, 1646, probably had no children by his first wife, who died in 1679; by his second wife, Bertha, he had, probably: Samuel, born in 1680; Joseph, born in February, 1683; Jeremiah, born July 31, 1685; and Deborah, born July 16, 1687. The father died March 18, 1715, and his widow died Sept. 10, 1728, aged seventy-five years. Samuel Scarborough was one of the first planters of the town of New Roxbury (now Woodstock), Conn., in 1686. In speaking of the men who settled the latter town, Miss Larned, in her work on Windham county, says: "These Colonists were all men of good position and character, connected with the best families of Roxbury. Edward Morris, Samuel Scarborough, Samuel Craft, John Chandler, and William Lyon, senior, Jonathan Peake and Henry Bowen were men advanced in years, going out with grown-up sons to the new settlement, leaving estates behind them."

(III) Samuel Scarborough (2), born Oct. 12, 1680, married Feb. 5, 1706, Theoda Williams, and their children were: Mary, born in 1710; Jeremiah, born Nov. 12, 1713; Joseph, born Aug. 8, 1716; and Bertha, born April 7, 1718.

(IV) Jeremiah Scarborough, born Nov. 12, 1713, married a Miss Holbrook, of Abington, Conn., and their children were: Nehemiah, born in 1739; Samuel, born Aug. 3, 1740; Ebenezer, born in 1742; Mary, born in October, 1744; and Joseph, born June 17, 1746; and Mehitabel.

(V) Joseph Scarborough, born June 17, 1746, married Feb. 24, 1780, Deliverance Kingsbury, and their children were: Jared, born Jan. 26, 1781; Deborah, born May 10, 1782; Joel, born Sept. 28, 1784; Luther, born May 12, 1787; Jeremiah, born Nov. 12, 1788; Joseph Kingsbury, born Jan. 18, 1792; Emily, born Aug. 12, 1793, died March 6, 1796; and Abigail, born April 1, 1796. The father died Aug. 27, 1827, and the mother Aug. 25, 1823.

(VI) Joel Scarborough, born Sept. 28, 1784, married April 17, 1808, Lucretia Smith, and their children were: Lucretia Miner, born in September, 1810, died Aug. 25, 1813; Esther Delia, born Aug. 10, 1812, married Rev. Mason Grosvenor; William Smith, born Aug. 2, 1814; Mary Ann, born March 2, 1817, married Rev. Mr. Leach; and Joel Kingsbury, born Nov. 12, 1824.

William Smith Scarborough, son of Joel, is the subject proper of this article; while in Yale College, with his classmate, William M. Evarts, he was one of the first board of editors of the Yale Literary Magazine. The year following graduation, 1837, he entered the law school of Transylvania University, at Lexington, Ky. In 1840 he was in Western Missouri, and in Havana, Cuba, and the next year began the practice of his profession in Thompson, Conn. He was State Senator from his district in 1846. In 1847 he removed to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he continued in practice for thirty years, and was treasurer of the Law Library Association for twenty years, and a member of the school board for twenty-two years. During his residence in Cincinnati, he was engaged in almost every important insurance case in the city, whether fire, life or marine. He was also one of the counsel for the celebrated tax case brought to test the right of the State of Kentucky to tax the bridge over the Ohio, at Cincinnati. He was a deacon of the First Congregational Church, and was a friend and neighbor of Dr. Lyman Beecher. He was offered a mission to the Sandwich Islands by President Hayes. About 1878 he returned to Thompson, and resided there until the death of his wife in 1894, after which he made his home in New York City. He wrote many magazine articles, and a number of poems which have not been published.

On Sept. 10, 1845, Mr. Scarborough was married to Eliza Mitchell Coe, of Worcester, Mass., daughter of John and Hannah (Hodgkins) Coe, and had six sons and one daughter, of whom five sons survive. The second son, named after his classmate, Evarts, died in early childhood.

The following notice of the life and death of Mr. Scarborough appeared in one of the local papers at the time of his death:

An honored son of Windham county has passed onward. Friends still living in Brooklyn will recall the promise of his boyhood. Yale College will enstar his name among those whose light will shine forever. Windham County Bar will remember his brief but effective service. The archives of Cincinnati will preserve the record of successful labor in many lines of public benefit. But in Thompson, the home of his old age and final resting place, he will be most deeply mourned and tenderly remembered. Those who have known him only in this beautiful old age cannot realize what he was to those who knew him at his first coming. It is nearly sixty years since this promising young lawyer entered upon law practice in this village. He brought with him not only a high grade of collegiate and legal culture, but an experience of foreign travel and polished society rarely found in those days in a country lawyer. To the bright circle of young folks then coming upon the stage he seemed a being of superior order, the embodiment of highest ideals in romance and history, and his influence over them was very great and salutary. He identified himself at once with the interests of the town, was on the best terms with the old lawyers, and a successful competitor with the younger. He was a great admirer of Dr. Dow and his preaching, and a constant attendant at all religious services. He was greatly interested in the religious revival of 1842, laboring for its promotion both in public and private. In the temperance movement then in progress he was equally active, accompanying John B. Gough on that famous crusade throughout the town, which did so much in establishing its temperance status. As he became known in the county, he was recognized as one fitted for the highest honors; was sent as State Senator in 1845, and had his health permitted continuance in this section would have ranked among its political leaders. Returning to Thompson in failing health, after his busy years in Cincinnati, he easily adapted himself to changed conditions, retaining his interest in national and public affairs, and entering into the life around him as far as he was able. His mental resources and strong Christian faith sustained him through increasing infirmities and heavy domestic affliction. His voice was often heard in the evening conference, and his genial visits cheered many a household. Preeminently he will abide in memory as the model of a Christian gentleman—a rare combination of mental strength and spiritual attainment. In these closing years his thoughts often found expression in verse of a religious character. The subjoined poem was his parting gift to the writer.

TRUST.

Up to the hills, my God, My King,
I raise my feeble, darkened eyes;
Thy Spirit can true visions bring,
And bid these blinding mists to rise.

To rise and flee as downward shines
The light that floods Thy work and ways;
Until renewed my spirit climbs
Toward Thee in rev'rent, heartfelt praise.

True grateful praise for mercies past,
For hopes through Thee of joys to come;
With keen desire for things that last,
Less for this transitory home.

Up to the hills I turn to Thee,
My Light, my Life, my Hope, my Joy;
Redeemed by grace, Thy face I'll see,
And triumph in divine employ.

WILLIAM S. SCARBOROUGH.

Thompson, Sept. 15, 1898.

COE. Mrs. Eliza Mitchell (Coe) Scarborough is descended from Matthew Coe through John, John (2), William and John Coe.

(I) Matthew Coe, the American ancestor of this branch of the family, came from Suffolk, England. He was engaged at the fishing trade at Portsmouth in 1645, and removed to Gloucester before 1647. He married June 15, of the latter year, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Wakley, and their children were: John, born June 30, 1649; Sarah, born March 24, 1651; Mary, born in 1653; Abigail, born June 5, 1658; Matthew, born in 1660; and probably others.

(II) John Coe, of Duxbury, born June 30, 1649, married Nov. 10, 1681, Sarah, daughter of William Pabodie, and their children were: Lydia, born Feb. 26, 1683; Sarah, born Feb. 25, 1686; Samuel, born Dec. 12, 1692; Elizabeth, born March 28, 1694; Hannah, born Dec. 29, 1696; John, born Feb. 1, 1699; Joseph, born March 24, 1700; and perhaps some born earlier. The father removed, probably between 1686 and 1692, to Little Compton, R. I.

(III) John Coe (2), born Feb. 1, 1699, married Rebecca Taylor, of Little Compton.

(IV) William Coe, born in 1748, married Sarah Ellis, of Little Compton, a daughter of Rev. Jonathan and Patience Ellis, and their children were: Isaac, born in 1772; Pamela and John, born Oct. 8, 1780; Rebecca, born in 1783, married Samuel Hubbard, and their daughter, Frances C., married Erastus Knight, of Thompson, Conn.; Lucy, born in 1785; and Deborah, born in 1795.

(V) John Coe, born Oct. 8, 1780, married March 31, 1803, Hannah Hodgkins, of Ipswich, and resided in Worcester, Mass. Their children were: John, born at Portland in 1804, died Aug. 14, 1833; William, born May 16, 1807, died in Worcester, Aug. 23, 1858; Hannah, born in 1809, resides in California; Sophia Tolcomb, born July 18, 1811, died at Bridgewater in 1889; Edward Baxton, born in 1812, was lost at sea; Stephen Thayer, born in 1814, died at Worcester Aug. 25, 1840; Mary Dodge, born in 1816, died at Worcester in 1863; Nathaniel Dana, born in 1819, died at Worcester Feb. 14, 1831; Caroline Robinson, born in 1820, died in Worcester, March 14, 1835; Louisa Willis, born in 1822, resides in Boston; and Eliza Matilda, born in 1825, died at Thompson, in April, 1894. She married William Smith Scarborough.

CHARLES E. WALDO. The ancestors of this highly respected and prosperous farmer of the town of Canterbury have for generations been energetic, influential citizens of that place.

Cornelius Waldo, the ancestor of the Windham county Waldos, was born in 1624, probably in England. He is of record in Salem, Conn., as early as 1647, and probably first settled in Ipswich. He married Hannah, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Thompson) Cogswell, of Ipswich. Later he was at Chelmsford, being a large owner of real estate there and at Dunstable, and in the latter town was chosen a deacon of Mr. Weld's Church. He died at Chelmsford Jan. 3, 1700, and his widow passed away Dec. 25, 1704.

(II) John Waldo, son of Cornelius, the settler, is called one of the first settlers of Dunstable. He served under Capt. Wheeler in King Philip's war, and was wounded at the fight at Quaboag. He afterward served at Groton garrison, and, in 1682, was, with his brother Daniel, employed as a mounted guard in the town of Dunstable, of which he was an inhabitant, and for which town he was representative in 1689. In 1695 he was an inhabitant of Boston. He owned a gristmill at Dunstable; and in 1697 is referred to as John Waldo, of Boston, miller. Soon after this he removed to Windham, Conn., where he was admitted an inhabitant Jan. 20, 1697-98, and where he died April 14, 1700. In Windham also he owned a gristmill. He married in 1676-77, Rebecca, daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Graves) Adams, of Charlestown.

(III) Edward Waldo, son of John, born April 23, 1684, married June 28, 1706, at Windham, Thankful Dimock, who was born in November, 1684, at Barnstable, Mass., daughter of Shubael and Joanna (Bursley) Dimock, of Mansfield, Conn. Mr. Waldo was an extensive farmer in that part of Windham, now known as Scotland. He was commissioned lieutenant in October, 1722, was deacon of the Scotland Society, and a representative in October, 1722, 1725, and 1730. He died Aug. 3, 1767, at Windham, and his wife died Dec. 13, 1757.

(IV) Edward Waldo (2), son of Edward, born July 27, 1709, married (first) about 1733 Abigail Elderkin, who was born Sept. 29, 1715, at Norwich, daughter of John and Susannah (Baker) Elderkin, of Norwich. His second wife, Ruth, died Oct. 14, 1824, aged ninety-seven years. Mr. Waldo was one of the first members of the Third, or Scotland

Society in Windham, Conn. He lived for a while in Windham, but in 1734-35 purchased a farm in Canterbury, and probably lived there the rest of his life, though in a deed given in 1744 he is called of Norwich. He died Sept. 4, 1807, at Canterbury. His children by Abigail, all recorded at Canterbury (all save the eldest named, baptized in Scotland), were: (1) Zachariah, born Feb. 1, 1734-35, married (first) Elizabeth Wright, and (second) Cynthia Park. (2) Ann, born Sept. 5, 17—, married Col. Elisha Paine. (3) Nathan, born June 23, 1740, married Zervia Paine. (4) Abigail, born July 15, 1744, married a Mr. Johnson.

(V) John E. Waldo, son of Edward, and great-grandfather of Charles E., married Beulah Forster, and they had several children, among whom were Seth, Enoch and Rufus. Mr. Waldo and family first lived in Hampton, but later moved to the Waldo District, in the northwestern part of Canterbury, where he owned a farm. Besides agriculture, he followed the trades of currier and tanner. He died in 1849, at the age of eighty-seven, and his wife passed away in her eighty-ninth year.

(VI) Rufus Waldo, seventh son of John E., and grandfather of Charles E., was born in Hampton, Conn., Feb. 16, 1797, and later moved with his parents to Canterbury. Equipped with a thorough education, he for a number of years engaged in teaching. He married Harriet Shepard, of Canterbury, daughter of Simon and Clarissa (Moore) Shepard, and after her death married Fanny Farnham. By the first union there were nine children: Elderkin, mentioned below; John, president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank; Simon Shepard, of the Waldo Bros. firm; Harriet, who married William Gleason, and resides in Danielson, Conn.; Sarah, who married Waldo Wales, and lived in Woonsocket, R. I.; Edwin, who was drowned in Lake Michigan, Sept. 1, 1860, in his twenty-seventh year; Clarissa, who married Rodney Cook, lived in Woonsocket, R. I., and died in September, 1900; George, who died at the age of one and one-half years; and Mary, who married Joel Witter, and resides in Worcester, Massachusetts.

For some time after his marriage Mr. Waldo resided on the place now owned by Thomas J. Brown, and in 1856 he purchased of Col. Eaton, of Plainfield, the farm now owned by Charles E. He died in Danielson, Conn., Jan. 8, 1862. As a prominent Whig he exerted a wide influence in local politics, served on the grand jury, and acted as justice of the peace. He also prosecuted criminal cases, to which fact a writ preserved by one of his family, and dated 1857, bears evidence. Religiously he belonged to the Congregational Church.

(VII) Elderkin Waldo won for himself solid prosperity by excellent management, and by honest industry in several fields of labor. Born near Packerville, in the town of Canterbury, Feb. 16, 1824, he acquired in the schools of his neighborhood a sufficiently thorough education to enable him to teach.

As a young man he taught school for some time, and then began farming on the Stone Barn place, in Lisbon. On Nov. 24, 1847, he married Harriet Lyon, who was born in Lisbon, daughter of John and Louisa (Rathburn) Lyon, and granddaughter of Joseph and Susannah (Kingsley) Lyon. Mr. and Mrs. Waldo had two children: Charles Edward, who is mentioned below; and Harriet Louisa, born Sept. 23, 1860, who married Byron W. Peck, of Norwich, Conn., and has had one son, Walter Arthur.

At the end of two years Mr. Waldo moved from the Stone Barn place to Norwich, where he opened a general store, and for nine years conducted a flourishing business. The indoor confinement, however, disagreed with his health; so he finally disposed of his business and resumed farming, this time on a place in the southern part of the town of Canterbury. Later, April 1, 1863, he purchased of his father what is now the Charles E. Waldo farm, which he afterward managed with great success.

Mr. Waldo possessed the breadth of intellect and the forceful character which eminently fitted him for holding offices of trust and responsibility. At first a Whig, later a Republican, he served his town as grand juror, registrar of voters, town registrar, and on the board of relief. For some time he also acted as justice of the peace. Of a company of the State militia he held the honor of sergeant. His winning traits of character and high moral standards brought him to the front in religious and social affairs, and as a member of the Congregational Church he served on the Society committee.

Charles E. Waldo, a prosperous agriculturist, near Packerville, in the town of Canterbury, has broadened his views and enlarged his powers by experience in various lines of business. Born in Lisbon Dec. 24, 1851, he attended the local schools. After a varied career, including an engagement for one winter in the station at Plainville Junction, he finally returned to the Canterbury homestead, where he has since resided. On March 30, 1890, he married Addie S. Peck, daughter of John H. and Susan P. (Ray) Peck, and granddaughter of Walter and Sophronia Peck.

Mr. Waldo's farm consists of the splendid area of 170 acres, and here for the past twelve years he has carried on two profitable industries, general farming and dairying. A forceful man, of strong mental fibre, Mr. Waldo has been especially prominent in public affairs, filling with marked ability the offices of constable and tax collector. Though in religious belief a Second Adventist, he with his wife attends the Packerville Baptist Church.

EDWARD JOEL BENTON was born Sept. 25, 1868, in the same house in which he is now living near Snipsic Lake, in the town of Tolland, Tolland county.

Azariah Lathrop Benton, his father, was born April 24, 1816, in the town of Tolland, and grew up with the intention of becoming a Congregational missionary. His parents were in such circumstances, however, that his more immediate duty seemed to be at home, and he thought it wise to give up such plans and devote himself to the help of his people. William A. Benton, his brother, took up the work, and was a missionary in Syria for twenty-two years. Azariah L. Benton attended the public schools, and spent three years in college at Amherst, Mass., when he was compelled to give up his course on account of sickness. His life was devoted to farming, and he gave valuable assistance to his brother William in the work of preparation for the career dear to both. Mr. Benton was a very successful farmer and a leading citizen in the community in which he lived. He filled many local offices, and was a member of the school board for many years. He was a school visitor and long a member of the board of relief. In early life he was a Whig, but became a Republican on the formation of the party. When he died, June 9, 1896, he was acting school visitor. Very active in church affairs, he was a deacon in the Congregational Church, and served as its clerk during a long period of years. A close student, an attentive reader, and a keen observer, he was well informed on all subjects of interest. Mr. Benton was first married, April 24, 1844, to Miss Louise, born March 20, 1820, a daughter of Joseph Alden, of Stafford, Conn. She died Nov. 22, 1858, leaving one son, George Alden, born May 7, 1848, who is now surrogate judge of Monroe county, N. Y., and a very prominent and popular man, regarded as one of the leading lawyers in his section. Mr. Benton was married (second) March 29, 1860, to Miss Mary, born Jan. 4, 1834, a daughter of John and Anna (Darby) Smith, of Somers. She died July 14, 1876, the mother of the following children: Mary Alzina, born Aug. 24, 1864, is living at home. William Lathrop, born March 21, 1866, lives in Torrington, Conn., where he is yardmaster in the lumber yards of the George Hotchkiss Co.; he married Lucy Tiffany, and is the father of three children, Maude Alice, Earl Brainard, and Roland Edward. Edward Joel is the next in the order of birth. Ellen Josephine, born Sept. 25, 1868, married Hibbard West, of Tolland, who is associated in farming and dairying with our subject; they have three children, Edith Mary, Rupert Benton, and Hazel Grace.

Azariah L. Benton married (third), May 2, 1877, Mary Parker Christopher, of Nova Scotia; she died Jan. 11, 1900. Mr. Benton was a devoted Christian gentleman, and highly esteemed by all who knew him. His charities were broadcast, but always done in a modest and unpretentious way.

Azariah Benton, father of Azariah L., was born in Tolland, June 8, 1790, and married Precendia Ladd, of Tolland. His life was spent in the blacksmith trade and in farming. He was a deacon in the Congregational Church, and a prominent man in the town. His children were: Azariah L.; William A., born in 1817, died in 1874; Charles died when eighteen years old; and George Chester died at the age of four years.

Jacob Benton, father of Azariah, was born in 1754 in Tolland, where he married Sarah Newton, of Willington, in 1782. They had two children, Anna, born in 1783; and William, born in 1785. Mr. Benton was again married in 1789 to Sarah Ladd, of Tolland, a daughter of Jonathan Ladd, Jr., by whom he had the following family: Azariah, born in 1790; Ruth; Daniel; Susalla; Chester; and Jacob. Jacob Benton was a soldier in the Revolutionary army, and served as a dragoon when only seventeen years of age. He was in the army that captured General Burgoyne, and died in 1843. Among the heirlooms of the Benton family is the canteen he carried at the surrender of Burgoyne.

Daniel Benton, father of Jacob, was born in Tolland in 1723, and married Mary Wheeler in 1747. They were the parents of seven sons: Elisha, born in 1747; Daniel; Azariah, born in 1752, died on a prison ship in 1776; Jacob; William; Nathan; and Silas, born in 1766.

Daniel Benton, Sr., father of Daniel, was born in Hartford, and was married in 1722, to Mary Skinner, by whom he had three sons: Daniel; William, who served in the French and Indian wars; and Elijah.

Samuel Benton, Sr., father of Daniel, Sr., was one of the original grantees in the deed of the committee to the first proprietors of Tolland. In this document appear the names of four Bentons as grantees: Samuel, Sr., Samuel, Jr., Joseph, Sr. and Joseph, Jr. Samuel Benton, Sr., who described himself as of Hartford, gave a deed of land in Tolland, Feb. 20, 1719, to his son, Daniel. This land is said to contain forty acres. Subsequent deeds set over land containing seventy acres, and twenty-seven acres. William and Azariah Benton died in the French and Indian war. The Benton family first settled in Guilford in 1650, coming in that year from England. The family is one of the oldest in Tolland, and the present generation are proud to recall the names and deeds of their distinguished ancestors.

Edward Joel Benton had his education in the common schools of Tolland, and was personally instructed by his father, a brilliant and scholarly man. Since the death of that gentleman Mr. Benton, in company with his brother-in-law, C. Hibbard West, has conducted the home farm, which is in a good state of cultivation. It is located on Snipsic Lake, and was purchased by the father of Joel B., in 1850, when it was known as the Nathaniel B. Kingsbury farm. It consists of 125 acres, and is very largely used for general farming and dairy purposes. They keep about fifteen cows and sell the product to the Vernon Creamery. Mr. Benton is a member of the Tolland Grange, and belongs to the Congregational Church, with which his family has been connected for generations. He is a staunch Republican, and takes an interest in political affairs, but has never sought office, preferring to give his undivided attention to his farm work. Mr. Benton has never married.

VINE ROBINSON FRANKLIN, senior member of the firm of Franklin & Crosby, florists, is a prominent factor in the business life of Brooklyn, and is a worthy representative of an old Windham county family.

William Franklin, the grandfather of Vine R. Franklin, was a resident of Ashford, Conn., for many years, where he was occupied in work at the carpenter trade. The later years of his life were spent at Phoenixville, Conn., where he died and his remains lie in the cemetery in Ashford. His marriage was to Mary Boutelle, who survived him, dying a number of years later, in Ashford, Conn. Their children were eight in number: John, father of Vine R. Franklin, of Brooklyn; Thomas, who married Margaret Najack, and was a meat dealer in Providence, R. I., where his life was passed; Edwin, who died young; Henry, who was in the meat trade, and later was connected with the great business of Armour & Co., at Providence, R. I., and became very wealthy; Maria, who married Gilbert Greene, and resided in Texas for many years, where her husband, who was an engineer, died, after which she went to New York City, and died there, both being buried by the side of the father, at Phoenixville; Emeline, married, second, Albert Clark, and died in Phoenixville (her first husband was also a Clark); Cynthia, who died young; and Julia, who died young.

John Franklin was born Jan. 13, 1819, in the town of Ashford, Conn., and there he grew to manhood, being brought up to hard work on the farm, under the strict discipline of an upright but stern father. His educational advantages were those of the youths of the time, in the rural districts, and as soon as he reached his legal age, he left home to carve out a career for himself. His services were in demand through the neighborhood, and he found a home with various farmers of the locality, finally securing employment on the farm of Col. Asahel Hammond, of Hampton. Here his industry and thorough knowledge of husbandry, as well as his personal attributes, so gained him the esteem and confidence of his employer, that in the course of time, he was accepted as a son-in-law, marrying Miss Laura P. Hammond.

After his marriage, Mr. Franklin rented the estate known as the Dennison farm, which adjoined the property of Col. Hammond, and which is now owned by Henry Kenyon, and for nearly a year he remained in its management, conducting it on shares. Then he moved to Brooklyn, where he lived for a few months on a rented farm, afterward purchasing the "Pierce farm," a valuable piece of property which had been neglected, and which needed some live, energetic and progressive man like Mr. Franklin to renovate and improve it. The original tract was forty acres, which Mr. Franklin increased to 115, its present acreage, and here he entered into a systematic and practical course which resulted in making this farm one of the best in the neighborhood. Mr. Franklin was a successful farmer, because he applied common sense to its management, making a study of the properties of his soil, and cultivating those grains and vegetable growths which it was capable of producing, using in its management modern methods of drainage and fertilizing. The results proved that he thoroughly understood the science of farming and knew how to apply his knowledge. Mr. Franklin was also interested in cattle dealing, and it was his custom to go several times a year to Northern Vermont to buy cattle which were there raised, of sturdy stock, and bring them to Brooklyn, where, as he was an excellent man of business, he easily disposed of them, much to his advantage.

Until his death, on Aug. 27, 1880, Mr. Franklin continued in the management of his farm, and yet also found time to take an active part in public matters, serving with faithfulness in almost all of the town offices, and during one term was the honorable representative of Brooklyn in the State Legislature. In the Congregational Church he was long a valued member, and he lies buried in the beautiful cemetery in Brooklyn, still affectionately remembered by his bereaved widow, his three children and a large circle of personal friends and business associates.

On March 28, 1842, John Franklin was married to Laura P. Hammond, who was born Nov. 15, 1819, a native of Hampton, a daughter of Col. Asahel and Betsey (Robinson) Hammond. (Elsewhere will be found extended mention of the Hammond family.) Mrs. Franklin resides with her son, Vine R. Franklin, of this town. The family born to Mr. and Mrs. Franklin numbered three children: Vine R., of Brooklyn; William H., born July 19, 1849, who married Nellie Streater, by whom he has a son, Irving, is now a successful hardware dealer in Montrose, Col.; and Anna L., born Dec. 28, 1854, married Daniel Holmes, engaged in the plumbing business in Providence, R. I., and they have one son, Daniel, who married Mattie Morton, and assists his father.

Vine Robinson Franklin was born in Hampton, Conn., on the Dennison farm, and was one and one-half years old when his parents moved to Brooklyn. There he received a good, common school education, and had taken up farm work with the intention of following the lines laid down by his successful father, when the outbreak of the Civil war first unsettled his plans, and finally changed them entirely. On Aug. 11, 1862, he enlisted for service at the age of nineteen years, in Co. K, 21st Conn. V. I., for a term of three years, and with his regiment took part in many of the most serious battles of the war. Fredericksburg, Siege of Suffolk, Drury's Bluff, three days of fighting at Cold Harbor, and the fighting around Petersburg, proved the mettle of the soldier lad, and changed the careless, happy, country boy into the serious man, all the romance, though not all the patriotism, being taken out of the great game of War. Mr. Franklin had the dreadful experience of witnessing the mine explosion at Petersburg, on June 30, 1864, when human beings, cannon and tons of dirt were thrown high in the air. From Petersburg the regiment was ordered to Cedar Point, where it crossed the James river, fought the enemy at Fort Harrison, and then passed the winter of 1864-65 in camp, on Chapin's farm. Its next move was a raid toward Fredericksburg, it was thought in pursuit of the Confederate chief, Mosby, who had captured twenty-six car loads of tobacco at that point. However, it withdrew from this pursuit and spent a few days at Deep Bottom, near the Wilderness, and was one of the first regiments to enter the capital city of Richmond. After the taking of Fort Harrison Mr. Franklin, for bravery, was promoted to the office of second sergeant, filling this office until he was mustered out of the service on June 18, 1865, at Richmond, Va., having never lost a day through sickness or wound.

Upon his return to Brooklyn, Mr. Franklin did not resume farming, but entered into the employ of the watch case factory of Enos Preston for a few months, and from there went to New York, where he followed watch case making in the factory of the American Watch Company, remaining until business depression all over the country affected this firm also. Then Mr. Franklin severed his connection with it, and went to Thamesville, Conn., and began to learn the machinist trade, later coming to Brooklyn to take charge of the engine of the Atwood & Richmond Silk works, continuing here for three years. Going then to New Haven, he was employed for the next three years by C. Coles & Co., as a machinist, and then entered the employ of the Henry Killam Co., where he continued until 1881, a year after the death of his father. Returning to Brooklyn he assumed the management of the farm, and was engaged in agriculture and dairying for a number of years. It was not until 1897 that Mr. Franklin became engaged in the business for which it is very evident Nature fitted him, that of florist, market gardening and the raising of nursery stock, the results of his efforts, in this direction having been so unusually successful. In association with his son-in-law, Henry D. Crosby, he embarked in this business, and they erected greenhouses of large capacity, with every known modern convenience and appliance, and they have built up an immense trade in nursery stock, seeds, market garden supplies and all of the products of a florist business.

On Nov. 21, 1866, Mr. Franklin was married in Brooklyn to Josephine H. Main, who was born May 9, 1848, in Hampton, and who came when quite young, to Brooklyn. One child was born to this marriage, Lucy H., born Dec. 12, 1867, who was married Dec. 20, 1893, to Henry D. Crosby, and had one child, Hope Dexter, born Feb. 1, 1895, and accidentally drowned April 21, 1898.

A life-long and active Republican, Mr. Franklin has been identified with public affairs for many years. As early as 1887 he was a member of the Legislature, serving on the committee on Finance, has also served as first selectman through one year and several years on the board. During the period covering the erection of the iron bridge over the Quinebaug river, in East Brooklyn, he was the only Republican member of the board. Although his life has been one of more than usual movement, he has taken always a deep interest in the development of the agricultural interests of this section, and was one of the organizers and charter members of Brooklyn Grange, No. 43, and also is a member of the Windham County Pomona, and the State and National Grange. Ever since its organization, Mr. Franklin has served as the treasurer of the Pomona. His accomplished wife is also an interested member of these social organizations. While a resident of New Haven, Mr. Franklin joined Washington Council, O. U. A. M., and later transferred to Lockwood Council, of Danielson, and was instrumental in organizing Mortlake Council, of Brooklyn, in which he has acceptably held all of the important offices. While a resident of the above named city, he became a member of Admiral Foote Post, No. 17, G. A. R., and has held many of the official positions in that organization, later transferring to McGregor Post, No. 27, of Danielson, also filling official chairs in the latter place. Mr. Franklin has a worthy war record and is admired and esteemed by his fellow comrades. Both Mr. and Mrs. Franklin attend the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Franklin is a valued member.

HENRY D. CROSBY. The second member of the firm of Franklin & Crosby, Henry D. Crosby, was born in Brooklyn, Conn., and was a son of Deacon Martin W. and Abby (Dexter) Crosby. His education was acquired in the public schools of this town, and he began his business career as a clerk in the employ of R. H. White & Co., of Boston, Mass., remaining with them until he was advanced to the position of traveling salesman, continuing in that capacity for that and other firms until 1897, when he became associated with his father-in-law, Mr. Franklin, in the florist business. Endowed with energy and business ability, and having an extended acquaintance, he is well fitted to manage a business that is yearly growing to larger and larger proportions, the sale of their products extending far beyond the local trade. They deal in all kinds of nursery stock and seeds, while their florist business is conducted on lines to meet a most exacting patronage.

MAIN. The Main family of which Mrs. Franklin is a member, is an old and honored one in the State of Connecticut. Her grandfather, Job Main, was born in 1781, in Stonington, Conn., and in that locality many of the name still reside, among the most respected and highly esteemed citizens. While still in the vigor of young manhood, Mr. Main came to Brooklyn to make his own way in the world, grew into a sturdy farmer of remarkable force of character, and by an industrious and frugal life, accumulated a fortune and became the owner of extensive tracts of land. His death occurred on Oct. 22, 1861. He married Comfort Billings, who died March 29, 1852, at the age of seventy years. Their children were Betsey Elizabeth, who married Joshua Webb, a farmer of Brooklyn, and died Dec. 28, 1852, at the age of forty-four years; Mary Ann, who died unmarried Aug. 3, 1850, at the age of thirty-one years and eight months; Palmer, who died unmarried Aug. 10, 1882, at the age of seventy-three years; Daniel, the father of Mrs. Franklin; Charles, who married Frances Hewitt, and who in early life was a peddler of Yankee notions, later becoming a farmer of Brooklyn, where he died; and William W., who married Mary L. Hewitt, and who in early life was engaged in peddling Yankee notions, but later became a meat dealer and passed his last days in Brooklyn.

Daniel Main, the father of Mrs. Franklin, was born May 11, 1817, in Brooklyn, and during his early married life resided in Hampton, but later returned to Brooklyn, where he died July 13, 1888. His marriage was to Lucy E. Hutchins, who was born Feb. 24, 1821. Their children were: Helen, who died at the age of sixteen years; Elizabeth Ann, who married John Bard, and died at the age of twenty-three years; Mrs. Franklin; John D., an engineer, in Putnam, Conn., who married Lucy Greenman, and had five children, Flora, who married John Lane, and has three children, Helen, who married Albert Cutler, of Putnam, and has one child, Grace, who married Frank Bannister, of Webster, Mass., Frank and Ann; Ida H., who died at the age of nine years; Sarah M., who died at the age of nineteen years; and Ina W., who is the wife of Frank Schofield, of Worcester, Massachusetts.

EZRA CHILD MAY, one of the best known citizens of Woodstock, was born Oct. 13, 1825, in East Woodstock, Windham county, and comes of an old New England family, full mention of which will be found in the sketch of Charles H. May.

Mr. May received his early education in the select schools of his day, later attending Nichols Academy, at Dudley, Mass., for several years. He continued his studies until he was seventeen years of age, and two years later, Sept. 15, 1845, he became a clerk for Amos Carpenter, at North Woodstock remaining with him until 1849. At that time, in company with Elizur Richmond, Ezra C. May purchased the store, and the firm of Richmond & May continued the business until 1851, when Mr. May engaged with the Protective Union Store, of which he acted as manager until 1861. At that time he became sole proprietor, and conducted the store until 1880, when, owing to reverses, his business was closed, and from 1881 to 1887 he traveled for George Tyler & Co., the prominent agricultural implement house, acting as general agent for all of New England. Since 1887, however, Mr. May has been engaged in farming in North Woodstock, on a small scale, although, as agent, he is still interested in road machines and other articles.

In politics Mr. May is a staunch Republican, and he served as town clerk and treasurer from 1851 to 1876; he has also been a notary public since 1861. He also served as post office clerk and postmaster for twenty-four years, receiving his first appointment in 1862, and remaining in office until 1880, when he tendered his resignation. In 1893 he represented his town in the State Legislature and served on the Humane committee.

JOSEPH B. HOPKINS, a highly respected citizen of Brooklyn, Windham county, residing one and one-half miles west of Danielson, on the turnpike road, between the villages of Danielson and Brooklyn, belongs to one of the oldest and most numerous families of the State of Rhode Island.

Joseph B. Hopkins, the grandfather of the present Joseph B., of Danielson, was born in Foster, R. I., where he spent his active life, engaged in the coopering business. His death occurred in Foster, at an advanced age, and there he was interred. His marriage was to Rosilla Tucker, who survived him to an old age, dying there at the beginning of her ninetieth year. Their children were: Welcome, who for many years was a farmer in Foster, but his last years were spent with a son, in Scituate; George, a farmer, who died in Foster, R. I.; Joseph B. (2), the father of our subject; Alfred, a farmer who died in Foster; Asabel, a farmer of Foster; Chauncy, also a farmer in Foster; Daniel, a mechanic, in Scituate; Horatio, who after a residence of thirty years in Illinois, moved to Brooklyn, where he died; Emery, who became a peddler of "Yankee Notions," but died in Brooklyn; and Ruby, who married a Mr. McDonald, died in Foster.

Joseph B. Hopkins (2) was born in Foster, R. I., and grew to maturity on the home farm, where he remained until after his marriage, but later located on a small farm in the vicinity of Foster, where his life was spent. His death occurred at the age of seventy-three years, after a life of prominence in his town, where he held many local offices and was a staunch Whig. Mr. Hopkins was a captain in the militia during the time of Dorr's rebellion, serving efficiently in that capacity and gaining at all times the high esteem of his locality. His marriage was to Susan A. Blackmore, a native of Foster, R. I., and a daughter of Enos Blackmore, a farmer of that neighborhood, and there she died in her sixty-third year. Their children were: Albert H., who married Mary Cook, enlisted for service, during the Civil war, but was not accepted, on account of physical disability, and he died on his farm in Foster; Joseph B., of Danielson; John E., who married Catherine Cole, enlisted as a private in the 7th R. I. V. I., and died at Memphis, Tenn.; Adoniram J., who married Melissa Cole, was a farmer and trader and resided in Washington, R. I.; Pasha is the widow of Henry Cole, and resides in Foster; Susan, who married Horace Burrows, died in Killingly, Conn.; Servilla, died in young womanhood; Mary died at the age of thirteen years; Caroline married Morey P. Arnold, a farmer residing in Foster; and Catherine married Frank Howland and resides in Washington, Rhode Island.

Joseph B. Hopkins, the third to bear the name, was born April 16, 1835, in Scituate, R. I., and was four months old when his parents removed to Foster. As an older child in a large family, he was early forced to face hardships which no farmer lad of the present time, in the same locality, can easily imagine. Although eager to obtain an education, he found few opportunities to attend school, his advantages being limited to but a few weeks, at irregular intervals, until his fifteenth year. Though but a lad in years, he was forced to do a man's work, as his father's circumstances were poor, and at the age of eighteen he left his home and began work for others. The hard discipline he had received, and probably the plain fare and out-door exercise, had given him a robust constitution, and Richard Barden, a farmer of Scituate, R. I., made an excellent bargain when he engaged his services at $14 a month, that being considered good wages for an eighteen-year-old youth, and more than was usually given. For ten months young Joseph remained in this situation, earning his money in various kinds of farm work, and then became a teamster for the same employer, doing all kinds of heavy hauling for the mills, over the roads between Providence and Scituate. For some three years he continued at this work, and then married and moved to Foster.

After leaving Mr. Barden, Mr. Hopkins was engaged as a teamster by a Mr. Payne, for a few days of hauling of lumber, between Providence and Foster, with a four-horse team, but the few days of work stretched out into three years, both employer and employee being pleased with each other. It was in 1862 that Mr. Hopkins came to Killingly, Conn., and rented the Dav farm, in the eastern part of the town, for one year, removing then to Pomfret Landing, where he worked for eight months on the farm of George Feater. Returning to his native State he was there employed by Mr. Harris, of Woonsocket, the builder of large mills at that place. Mr. Hopkins then engaged to haul the lumber, with a four-ox team, for the construction of a woollen mill, filling this contract with the industry and honesty which have characterized all his labors. He next returned to Killingly, and located at Williamsville, where for one year he drove a four-ox team for the Williamsville company.

In the next year, Mr. Hopkins found himself employed at Johnston, R. I., in the responsible position of boss farmer for Major Pierce, and he remained operating his large estate for eight months, moving, at the end of that period, back among his good old neighbors in Killingly, where he rented the Sprague farm and remained upon it for one year. Moving to Providence, R. I., he opened a meat market on High street, which now is Westminster, and remained for one year at this location and then sold out. A short time was spent in Foster, but finally Mr. Hopkins came back to Killingly, and rented a large farm of John Spaulding, where he remained for five years, renting then the Shubael Hutchins farm, on which he remained a year, when he returned for two years more on the Spaulding tract.

From Killingly Mr. Hopkins came to Brooklyn, and for two years operated the John Allerton farm, going then to the William Johnson place, but later remaining for four additional years on the Hutchins farm. In 1886 Mr. Hopkins was hired as superintendent of the town farm of Killingly, which position he admirably filled to the satisfaction of all, it being generally conceded that that place was never under a better management.

On April 1, 1900, Mr. Hopkins resigned his office and retired from the management of the poor farm, coming then to Brooklyn and purchasing his present most comfortable home of Charles Potter. His land comprises some forty acres, and here he is engaged in general farming. While still employed at the town farm, Mr. Hopkins also had charge of the construction of the macadam roads between Dayville and Attawaugan, and the main road through Danielson. At one time he had a force of forty men under him and held the position of boss, paymaster and time keeper, attending to these multifarious duties with correctness, and in a satisfactory manner to all concerned. Since coming to Brooklyn, he has been foreman of the forces engaged in the building of the roads in this town, taking a deep interest in the work, as a public measure, aside from any prominence or reward accruing to himself. Mr. Hopkins has so improved and remodeled his home as to make it one of the most attractive in the town. Mr. Hopkins is a self-made man entirely, and has spent an energetic and industrious life, all of his efforts having been ably seconded by his estimable and helpful wife. Although he has always been an ardent Republican, he has never sought office, his private interests taking his whole time and attention. Socially he and wife are both connected with Brooklyn Grange, No. 43, in which they are highly valued.

On Feb. 24, 1856, in Foster, R. I., Joseph B. Hopkins was married to Susan R. Cook, who was born April 11, 1839, in Foster, a daughter of Henry and Thankful (Blackmore) Cook. The children born of this union were: (1) Adver E., born on April 11, 1861, married Georgianna Tarbox, and they have one child, Elroy J., born Sept. 30, 1889; he is a teamster and resides in Ashland, R. I. (2) Elmer J., born April 10, 1866, married Miss Lucy Young, and died Nov. 14, 1887. By trade he was a skilled carpenter and was continually kept employed. Since the lamented death of her husband, his widow has made her home with Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins, and there she proved of the greatest assistance in the management of the poor farm. Both ladies are noted through the community for their many excellent qualities and well uphold the reputation of the New England housekeeper. The younger Mrs. Hopkins is also connected with the Grange, and both ladies are welcomed into the best social circles in the locality. Few men have better exemplified in their lives, the value of perseverance and pluck, in the face of adverse circumstances, than Mr. Hopkins, and he is justly considered one of the most respected citizens and representative men of Brooklyn.

ORREN W. BATES. By training and early inclination a lawyer, by force of circumstances a scientific embalmer and funeral director, Orren W. Bates is also town clerk of Sterling, in which community he fills a place commensurate with his exceptional educational advantages, his practical capabilities, and his well known public spiritedness. Descended from patriot sires and model matrons, his forefathers are enrolled among the tillers of the soil who promoted the present prosperity of New England, and some of them there were who shouldered their muskets, and followed the martial fortunes of Washington during the Revolutionary war.

William Bates, the paternal grandfather of Orren W., was born in Coventry, R. I., Aug. 31, 1799, and died in his native town, Nov. 11, 1874. His entire life was spent in the surroundings of his youth, with the exception of ten or twelve years, when he lived with his children in Michigan. Eleven children were born to himself and wife: Ezra D., born March 9, 1824, married Miss Searles, and died at his home in Blackstone, Mass., July 25, 1881; Sally, born March 12, 1826, became the wife of Wilbur Matteson, and died at her home in Coventry, R. I., Oct. 6, 1874; William, born March 26, 1828, lived in Putnam, Conn.; Jeremiah H., born April 27, 1830, is a prosperous manufacturer of the Bates Well Curb, at Providence, R. I.; Ambrose H., born Feb. 21, 1832, became the father of Orren W.; Aaron W., born Feb. 22, 1834, lives in Southern Michigan; Mary Ann, born Nov. 17, 1835, died May 28, 1854; James B., born Oct. 9, 1837, lives in Michigan; Mehitable A., born Oct. 28, 1839, died Sept. 11, 1843; Sarah H., born May 10, 1843, died July 10, 1844; and Mehitable S., born July 17, 1845, died while young.

Ambrose H. Bates, born in Coventry, R. I.,

Feb. 21, 1832, lived on the paternal homestead until eighteen years of age, and as opportunity permitted attended the public schools. He seems to have been an adventurous youth, with strong inclination seaward, for upon leaving home he went to New Bedford and shipped as a hand before the mast, on a whaling vessel. For twenty years he shared the uncertain and dangerous fortunes of the deep, and during that time experienced hair breadth escapes and thrilling adventures. Step by step his promotion aboard ship had been secured, and at last he was given command of a vessel of which he was part owner, in which capacity he served for a number of years before his retirement from nautical life. His craft were seen in both the northern and southern seas, and he touched at Greenland in the North, and the Sandwich Islands in the middle Pacific, his last voyage as a mariner being along the west coast of Africa. While traversing the dreary wastes of water, which he came to love for its danger and possibility, he accumulated a comfortable fortune from the giant fish of the deep, and in 1870 he abandoned his association with reefs and compasses and harpoons, and purchased land in the town of Sterling, Conn., the same comprising a part of the village of Oneco. Here he erected a modern and commodious residence, fitted with up-to-date conveniences, and for five years conducted a general store in the town. Thereafter he turned his attention to the undertaking business, and was thus employed up to the time of his death, Feb. 20, 1885. Captain Bates possessed a strong and forceful personality, and aboard his ship had that stern air of command necessary to the successful maintenance of order upon the high seas. As it was he was a forceful talker, and convincing arguer, and had he been favored with a college education would have been an important factor in any community in which he might locate. He was a rabid Democrat in politics, and during his residence in Sterling he took an important part in local politics. However the only office that he could be induced to accept, was that of representative, and during his term in 1877, he served on the committee on Banking. He was a member of the Masonic order, having joined that fraternity while in Scotland, and upon one of his whaling expeditions. He is survived by his widow, who lives on the old home place in Sterling.

Orren W. Bates was born at Coventry, R. I., Aug. 17, 1862, and is the only son in his father's family. Through his mother he is related to the Kenyon family, of which Orren and David S. Kenyon are representatives, the former being her father. Mr. Bates was educated primarily at the Friends school in Providence, and graduated from Haverford College, Philadelphia, one of the reliable and thorough institutions of the East, in 1884, receiving the degree of B. A. Having determined to devote his future energies to the science of law, he entered the Yale Law School, from which he was graduated in 1891, with the degree of LL. B. His prospects, however, were frustrated by the death of his father in 1885, for the large business of the latter necessitated the management of some one familiar with its details, and the home farm also had no one to care for its various responsibilities. Mr. Bates took a course at Clark's School of Embalming in Boston, and is considered one of the most expert in his line in the county. Though a Democrat in politics, he is yet inclined to independence, believing that the man best qualified for public trust should be elected regardless of party. He has been a member of the school board since 1890, and since 1896 has served as town clerk, his administration being characterized by broad-minded devotion to the best interests of the people. In 1897 he was a representative, and served on the committee on Federal Relations. On Sept. 16, 1887, Mr. Bates married Julia H. Seeley, of Providence, Rhode Island.

JOHN MARTIN GOMPPER, an old and highly esteemed citizen of Stafford Springs, Conn., was born Nov. 23, 1834, in Laufen, Wittenberg, Germany, a son of Christian Gompper, born and bred in Germany to a farming life, and the proprietor of extensive landed property. The father married Margaret Shick, and died when his son, John M., was only about ten years old, his widow dying in her native German home about 1870. They had the following children: Christina; Anna; Ludwig, who was drowned in a flood in Germany; Jonas, who died in Germany; George; Christian; and John M. All these children remained in Germany, except the youngest.

John Martin Gompper was born in Germany, as noted above, and had his education in the schools of his native community. When he was about fourteen he was employed by scientists in securing the petrified remains peculiar to certain sections of Germany. In this work he was very successful, and was employed in it until he reached the age of twenty years, when rather than join the German army, he came to this country, sailing from Harve, France, Aug. 30, 1854. The voyage, which was made on the sailing vessel, "Emma," lasted about thirty-five days, and was very rough and stormy from start to finish. On his arrival in New York city, Mr. Gompper immediately made his way to Glastonbury, Conn., where he had secured a position as a die sinker in that place. For a year and a half he was employed by Supt. Dart, and then going to New Britain, he worked in the stockinet factory in that city for several years. There he learned the spinning trade. At Rockville he worked in the American Mill for a year, and was employed in Hilliard's satinnet factory at Manchester several years. At Thompsonville he was working in the carpet factory when it was closed down; and in 1858 he came to Stafford to work for Charles Fox & Co., remaining a year or more, and for the same length of time was employed by the New England Mill, at Rockville. In the Hockanum mill he was employed for two years. In 1861 Mr. Gompper entered the Stafford Hollow Mill, and was in charge of the dye room for some four years, and at Wilbraham, Mass., he was engaged in the Ellis mill for some five years. After the expiration of that period Mr. Gompper came back to Stafford, and has maintained his residence here to the present time, living a retired life, and looking after his real estate and building investments. Several very pretty and convenient houses have been built by him, and they yield good rentals. Mr. Gompper attends the Congregational Church, and votes for the best men at election time, having at one time been a Democrat, but now taking an independent stand.

Mr. Gompper was married July 4, 1859, to Catherina Betz, a daughter of Joseph and Mary Ann (Nagle) Betz, of Stafford, and a native of the same German town with her husband. To them have come two children: Louisa, born June 24, 1860, in Rockville, died in Stafford Hollow, Nov. 7, 1863; and Otto, born Oct. 29, 1864, in Stafford, was drowned Aug. 13, 1879, in a pond at Wilbraham, Mass. Mr. Gompper has always been a hard working man, never neglecting opportunity to acquire information, and is now remarkably well posted on all subjects of current interest.

ELISHA J. MARTIN (deceased), founder of what is now the E. J. Martin's Sons Co., at Rockville, Tolland county, was in his lifetime one of that city's representative business men and citizens, one who left a good name, and enjoyed the respect and esteem of all. Mr. Martin came of an old and prominent New England family, allied by marriage with other honorable families, and many of its descendants, direct and indirect, have been distinguished persons in different States of the Union, one of the number being no less a personage than Martin Van Buren, who became President of the United States.

Mr. Martin was born Oct. 12, 1845, in the town of Tolland, son of Elisha and Lydia Minerva (Ladd) Martin. A complete history of the family will be found elsewhere, under the biography of W. B. Martin, the only surviving male representative of Elisha Martin's family, and only brother of Elisha J. Martin, whose name introduces these lines. In the town of Tolland, Elisha J. Martin received his education attending the district schools. Reared a farmer boy, he was occupied with agricultural duties until he enlisted for the Civil war, from the town of Tolland, in Co. K, 22d Conn. V. I., Aug. 23, 1862; he was mustered into the service Sept. 20, 1862, was mustered out June 7, 1863, re-enlisting June 27, 1864, in Co. B, 1st Conn. V. C., and was discharged Aug. 2, 1865, making an excellent record as a brave and courageous soldier.

Returning from the war, Mr. Martin at first engaged in various occupations, for a time being in the carding room at the Rock Mill, and later accepting a position as night watchman at the silk mill of Belding Bros., in Rockville, going from there to Portland, Conn., where he filled a similar position in a tinware factory. In 1872 he went to Rahway, N. J., remaining one year, and then spent two years at Westfield, that State, where he was engaged in concrete paving, and the drilling and driving of wells. In the summer of 1875 he went to Warehouse Point, Conn., and accepted a position in Simonds' silk mill. While there he invented a machine for the clearing of silk, by means of which much labor and material could be saved. Mr. Martin suffered in this case as many an inventor has suffered before and since. The Simonds Company claimed the invention, and Mr. Martin, not having the means to fight for his rights in the courts, laid the case before A. N. Belding, of Rockville, with the result that Belding Bros. took up the suit and pushed it; the patent right was divided with the Simonds Co., and the machine is still in use.

Leaving Warehouse Point, in the spring of 1877, Mr. Martin came to Rockville, and entered into the employ of the Belding Bros., where he remained for a number of years. His was an active and inventive mind, and about this time he began to make braided eye-glass cords, as a pleasant occupation, and finally began making braided fish lines for some of his friends, procuring a braider for this purpose. Soon after, on account of the popularity of these lines, he decided to try if a business in that direction would pay, so he rented a room in the Belding Bros. mill, with power and entered extensively into this line. Fifteen years later the business had grown to such proportions that he found it advisable to have more room, and built the factory on Mountain street, in 1894. Since that time the development of this business has been most wonderful, the product of this factory being known all over the United States, the fish lines being known as the "Kingfisher," a feature of it being a secret process of enameling which adds to its durability, while not in the least detracting from its flexibility and preventing any knotting or kinking of the line.

Mr. Martin was an active and prominent member of Burpee Post, G. A. R., and Rising Star Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Rockville, and was known to be a man whose character was above reproach, a liberal and progressive citizen. His death occurred June 12, 1899, a trip through the South failing to benefit him.

On Nov. 2, 1866, Mr. Martin wedded Elizabeth, daughter of John and Sarah Lightfoot. She was born in Nottingham, England, and was eight years old when she came to the United States, the settlement of her parents first being at Windsor Locks, Conn. The family born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin numbered five: Albert-Leroy; Ella May, born in 1869, in 1892 married Walter T. Cornell, of Waterbury, Conn., and they reside in Boston, having spent much time abroad; Charles E., born in 1870, married in 1892 Miss Lilla Haling, of Rockville, and has three children, Ruth, Edith and Lucille, and is a member of the firm of E. J. Martin's Sons Co.; Ida E., born in 1874, in Westfield, N. J., is an accomplished young lady, a musician, who is a teacher in the Baptist Female Seminary at Raleigh, N. C.; and John L., born in 1878, who, in 1900 married Miss Eliza Wylie, a native of Campbelltown, N. B., is a member of E. J. Martin's Sons Company.

Early in life Mr. Martin was a Democrat, but later became a Republican, and in State and national affairs voted with that party, but in local politics, he chose the man he thought best fitted for the position. Mr. Martin built the residence on the corner of Webster and Mountain streets. After his death his sons took charge of the business and have been its efficient managers ever since.

ALBERT LEROY MARTIN was born Sept. 23, 1867, in Rockville, where the major part of his schooling was received, and while still a lad he entered upon work at the silk mill. At the age of nine he was in the mill with his father at Warehouse Point, and when his parents removed to Rockville he entered the mill of Belding Bros., remaining with them some years, following which he took up the lathing trade. He then went to Colorado, and at Timnath, that State, was for a short time employed as a cow boy, but his father's increasing business induced him to return to New England, and in 1891 he entered the factory where he has been so actively engaged ever since. He was married to Miss Bessie Cogswell, of Ellington, Conn., a daughter of William Cogswell. Mrs. Martin is a consistent member of the Congregational Church, and Mr. Martin is a member of the I. O. O. F., of Rockville. He is one of the reliable young men of brains and energy which this generation has produced, and, with his brothers, has proved that youth is no drawback to success, if backed by practical experience. The business of the E. J. Martin's Sons Co., has had a steady and substantial growth, and today is one of the thriving industries of that city.

GEORGE A. KEACH represents that pushing, enterprising class of business men who have more often found their greatest field of activity in the West, but who, preferring to remain among their native surroundings, have added vitality and enthusiasm to the conservatism and solidity of the East. As proprietor of the temperance hotel known as the "Allen Stand," his success has been no less marked than his efforts as a lumber merchant, and owner of a flourishing saw-mill. Other interests also have been benefited by his progressiveness and thrift, and thus has North Ashford been the gainer by the presence in its midst of so energetic and well-balanced a citizen. Mr. Keach was born in Thompson, Conn., Aug. 9, 1844, son of Joseph Keach and grandson of Joseph Keach, Sr., both of whom were men of affairs and prominence in their respective localities.

Joseph Keach, Sr., was a farmer and cooper at Glocester, R. I., in which town his death occurred, although his remains were afterward removed to East Putnam, Conn. He was the father of the following children: Amy, deceased wife of Mr. Hill, of Sekonk, R. I.; Abigail, who married a Stanley, and died in Providence; Ruth, deceased wife of Rufus Alton, of Glocester; Nancy, the deceased wife of William Tolbert, of Norwich; Joseph; and Horace W., deceased in Glocester, where he was a successful grocer.

Joseph Keach, the father of George A., was born in Glocester, R. I., in 1808, and reared in the vicinity of his birth. After his marriage he left the home farm and purchased what was then known as the Daggett farm, on the line which divides what is now Putnam, Conn., and the State of Rhode Island. After a few years on the State line he purchased a farm in the eastern part of Thompson, known as the Parker farm, on which possession was located also a toll-gate and a store, the latter owned by his brother Horace. The toll-gate was managed by Mr. Keach for many years, and the store was one of the responsibilities to which he devoted his commercial energies. Success crowned his efforts far in excess of his expectations, and at one time he was the owner of a tract of land comprising nineteen hundred acres, situated in the adjoining towns. About six years before his death, Jan. 21, 1886, he removed to Quadic, in the town of Thompson, having disposed of his farm to a son. He was very active in general affairs during his lifetime, and accomplished much in many directions. For many years he was engaged in the lumber business, and contracted for the repairing of roads, being especially interested in keeping in repair seven miles of the turnpike between Chepachet and the Connecticut line. He attended the Baptist church, and in political preference was a Democrat. Beginning life with nothing but unbounded energy and determination to succeed, he acquired much, lost much, and in the end left a large estate. His first wife, formerly a Miss Bowen, left him four children, viz.: Lucy, the wife of Charles P. Sheffield, who lives at West Woodstock; Nancy, the wife of Elias Sprague, of Worcester, Mass.; Jason, who married Nellie Brown, was for many years engaged in educational work, and is now in the insurance business in Valley Falls, R. I.; and Horace W., a school teacher of Valley Falls, and who married Mary Burgess. Through his marriage with Sophronia S. Converse, Aug. 13, 1843, Mr. Keach became allied with the family of Augustus and Sybil (Smith) Converse. Mrs. Keach, who was born March 22, 1822, and died in September, 1901, at the home of her son, Ischah C., in Putnam, was the mother of four children, of whom George A., is the oldest; Sophia A., was born March 22, 1847, and is the wife of Cyrus Place, an expert pattern maker now residing in Olneyville; Joseph Henry, born Feb. 14, 1850, married Dency Joslyn, and lives in Malden, Mass.; and Isah C., married Angie Law, and is conducting a successful grocery and real estate business in Putnam.

The boyhood of George A. Keach knew little leisure after he became old enough to assist with the family maintenance. He attended the district schools and one term at the Academy of Dudley, Mass., but after his tenth year his studies were confined entirely to the winter terms. When twenty-two years old he removed from the surroundings of his birth to Cranston, R. I., and after a few months employment went to live in Glocester, of the same State, where for two years he was engaged in the lumber business. At Chepachet he hauled milk to Providence for about a year, and in 1872 located on a farm in Thompson, Conn., and again engaged in the lumber business. He later erected a home in Quadic, where he lived until 1887, going then to North Ashford, on the J. Stone farm, where he resumed the lumber business. Two years later he exchanged his Quadic property for his present place, called the "Allen Stand," which is operated as a temperance hotel, in connection with which he conducts a large and lucrative lumber enterprise.

In Georgiaville, R. I., Mr. Keach married Alice E. Luther, born May 24, 1845, in Glocester, R. I., a daughter of Calvin and Emily (Sanders) Luther, the former of whom was a farmer and lumber dealer. Of this union there have been born three children, George L., Emily Alice and Evelyn Almira. George L. was born July 25, 1868, and married, April 19, 1890, Anna F. Arnold, who was born Jan. 24, 1870, and they have had two children: Hazel E., born Feb. 26, 1891; and Morton A., born Aug. 3, 1892, died Sept. 20, 1892. Mr. Keach is engaged in the saw milling and lumber business with his father. Emily Alice and Evelyn Almira were born April 12, 1870, and both attended the Woodstock Academy, subsequently engaging in teaching for several years. Emily Alice married Charles Miron, of Putnam, Jan. 16, 1901; and Evelyn Almira married Everett Reynolds, of Southbridge, Mass., June 28, 1898. Mr. Keach is a Republican in political affiliation, and although not an office seeker, has nevertheless served on the board of selectmen. He is one of the substantial and reliable business men of the town, receives a large commercial patronage, and has valuable real-estate possessions not only in North Ashford, but in Putnam.

Mrs. Sophronia S. (Converse) Keach, the mother of George A., was a daughter of Augustus and Sybil (Smith) Converse, the former a member of a family authentically traced back eight generations through Augustus, Deacon Jonathan, Jonathan, Edward, Samuel, and Samuel, to Deacon Edward Converse, who was born in England, Jan. 30, 1590, and died in Woburn, Mass., Aug. 10, 1663, at the age of seventy-three years. He married first Jane Charles, second his wife Sarah, and third Joanna Sprague. He was a courageous and enterprising man who realized the limitations by which he was surrounded in England, and emigrated to America with his wife, Sarah, and his children, Josiah, James and Mary, in the same craft that in 1630 brought to more tolerant shores, Governor Winthrop. Deacon Edward Converse was a man of great strength of character, considerable wealth, and undoubted influence among the stern and unrelenting Puritans, of whom he was one of the strongest and most God fearing. He is mentioned on nearly every page of the Colonial and town history of his time, and for the thirty years after his arrival in this country. He settled at Charlestown, where he became active in public affairs, and where he was early admitted to the First Church, Boston. From 1635 until 1640 he was a member of the Woburn Church, of which he was a deacon from the beginning, as well as one of the earliest settlers of the town. He was selectman of the town from 1644 until his death in 1663. The maternal great-grandfather of George A. Keach, Deacon Jonathan Converse, served during the Revolutionary war in the regiment commanded by Colonel Comfort Sage, Company 5, Stephen Crosby captain, and participated in the various struggles of the disastrous campaign in New York, which lost the company its captain, as well as many of the brave soldiers from Thompson. In 1795 he was chosen deacon of the Thompson church, to which town he had removed in 1788, and he was very active in the religious and secular affairs of the community, where he was regarded as a substantial and reliable citizen.

LORING WINCHESTER, in his lifetime one of the noted residents of South Coventry, Tolland county, Conn., was both a shrewd and successful business man. He was born Oct. 16, 1799, in Canterbury, Conn., a son of Joel and Mary (Gifford) Winchester.

Joel Winchester was born May 3, 1767, and became a successful farmer in Canterbury, where he was highly esteemed as a good citizen. He was married June 6, 1794, to Mary Gifford. She was born Sept. 19, 1773. Their children, all born in Canterbury, were: (1) Joanna, born March 19, 1795, lived on the old Canterbury homestead, where she died Jan. 6, 1878. (2) John, born July 17, 1796, was three times married, and had children by each marriage. He was station agent at several towns on the New London & Northern, and on the old Providence & Fishkill railroads. His death occurred March 20, 1878, at Vernon, Conn., where he was station agent at the time. (3) James, born Dec. 16, 1797, never married and accumulated a handsome property, dying Feb. 13, 1875, at the home of his brother John, in North Manchester, Conn. (4) Loring, born Oct. 16, 1799, is further mentioned below. (5) Harvey, born Aug. 23, 1801, was the original Winchester, of the firm of Smith & Winchester, at South Coventry, Conn., where he died Dec. 7, 1884. (6) Asa, born Oct. 29, 1803, never married, was a good farmer in Canterbury, where his death occurred July 17, 1875. (7) Susan, born Dec. 16, 1805, lived and died on the old Canterbury homestead, surviving her brothers and sisters. (8) Abel, born Aug. 15, 1809, lived in Kingston, N. Y., where he was very successful, and where he died Sept. 24, 1868, leaving a large property. His children were: Helen (Mrs. Hermance), Theresa (Mrs. Smith), and Austin, all residing at Kingston. (9) Mary, born May 28, 1811, died unmarried on the home farm, July 11, 1882. Joel Winchester died Oct. 3, 1847, and his widow passed away Sept. 30, 1861.

Loring Winchester was born and reared in Canterbury, where he received a very good education, and while still a young man taught school successfully, being regarded as well advanced for his years. When but a young man he manifested marked ability as dealer and trader, and his work in life was early marked out for him. After spending a short time in the West he came back to his native State, where he followed the trade of a machinist at South Windham and Willimantic. After his marriage he located in South Coventry, where he made his home until his death, March 6, 1886. His remains rest in the cemetery there.

On Aug. 30, 1838, Mr. Winchester was married in South Coventry to Amelia C. Bidwell, a native of that place, where she was born Sept. 12, 1810, the daughter of Solomon and Caroline (Lyman) Bidwell. Among the brothers and sisters of Caroline (Lyman) Bidwell were Nathan Lyman, the founder of the celebrated Lyman type house at Buffalo, N. Y.; Diantha Lyman, a fine looking woman, who was a successful tailoress, residing at Manchester, Conn., where she accumulated considerable property; and Martin Lyman, a farmer in South street, South Coventry. Mrs. Bidwell reached the advanced age of ninety-nine years, nine months and eleven days. Solomon Bidwell built the hotel at South Coventry in 1822, and personally conducted it for twenty years. This property passed to his son Lyman, and in succession to his grandson, Charles P. Solomon Bidwell's family was as follows: Lyman; Caroline, who married Newton Fitch, and had four children, of whom two grew to maturity. James (a successful dentist at Danbury, Conn., and the father of Charles Newton Fitch, of Hartford,) and Diantha Lyman (a successful teacher who died in Willimantic); Mary, who died unmarried; and Amelia, the wife of Loring Winchester. Solomon Bidwell died Oct. 31, 1858, and his widow Feb. 15, 1866. Both are buried in South Coventry. Mr. Bidwell was a prominent and influential man in his own community.

Mrs. Amelia C. (Bidwell) Winchester died July 31, 1886, and was buried in the old cemetery in South Coventry, beside her husband. Their children were as follows: A son that died in infancy; Mary Bidwell; Harriet Lyman; and Jane Amelia. Of these Mary B., now Mrs. Clark, of Willimantic, is the only one now living. Loring Winchester was a Democrat, and represented Coventry in the General Assembly. While not a church member, he attended the Congregational Church, and was a great reader of the Bible, quoting Scripture quite readily. In general reading he was also well versed, and was posted on a great variety of thought and discussion. His mind had a legal turn, and he read law for his own amusement and instruction; his opinion on all controverted points was often sought and invariably found sound when the decision of the courts was invoked. In financial matters it is said that his opinion carried great weight, perhaps more so than any other man of his time. Successful in his business enterprises, he accumulated a large property, and while he was willing to take an interest in speculative business, yet he moved slowly, and would not be hurried until he had weighed and measured all chances. A plain-going man of common sense, he had a profound contempt for the arrogant and haughty.

Mr. Winchester was a skilled penman, and as early as his fourteenth year his handwriting attracted general attention. Evidences of this gift in this line are found in his writing still in the possession of Mrs. Clark.

HENRY FRIEND STANDISH¹ (deceased) was long a prominent and representative farmer in Andover, Conn., and came from the Colonial family to which Miles Standish belonged.

Amasa Standish, the grandfather of Henry F., was a native of Preston, Conn., and was married to Lydia Geer, who was born either in Leedyard or Groton. Mr. Standish had his home after his marriage at Pecatonic, but later removed to Fitchville, in both places being engaged in the milling trade. His death occurred at Bozrahville, Sept. 25th 1846. He was the father of a numerous family.

Edwin M. Standish, the father of Henry F., was born in Preston, Conn., Oct. 31, 1817, and was married to Eliza L. Humphrey Nov. 24, 1841. His death occurred Nov. 23, 1851. The earlier years of Mr. Standish's life were passed in Preston, and when a young man he came to Bozrahville where he was engaged in his trade of a carpenter. He also spent nine years in Canton, Conn. In politics he was a Whig. Mr. and Mrs. Standish were the parents of three children: Henry Friend, Hattie G., and Edward M., all of whom are now deceased. The mother was a member of the Baptist church.

Henry Friend Standish was born July 10, 1843, in Canton, Conn., where he remained until he was eight years old, when he was forced by family misfortunes to care for himself. For a number of years he worked on farms in Bozrahville, Colchester, and Lebanon, at first being glad to earn his board and clothes and attend school in the winter term. In the winter of 1860, he attended Bacon Academy at Colchester.

On Jan. 1, 1866, Mr. Standish married Ella R. Strickland, who was born Dec. 22, 1845, only child of Andrew and Harriet (Blackman) Strickland, and a granddaughter of Jonathan Strickland, who married a Miss Tryon. To Mr. and Mrs. Standish came one son, Edwin A., born July 21, 1867, and married May 1, 1890, to Minnie Cook, of Andover, by whom he has two sons: Miles Henry, born June 21, 1894, and another son not yet named.

Henry F. Standish enlisted in the Union army, Sept. 29, 1861, becoming a member of Company B, 10th Conn. V. I. and he was mustered out Oct. 7, 1864, with a most honorable record as a soldier and a loyal citizen of the Republic. The captains of the Company were John L. Otis, and George W. Atherton, and the colonels of the regiment were Charles L. Russell, Drake, Ira Pettibone, and John L. Otis. Mr. Standish participated in the battle of Roanoke Island, in the campaigns in North and South Carolina that followed, in the siege of Morris Island, and he lay six weeks in the trenches and creeks, and heard the "Swamp Angel" at work. After serving in Florida, he went to Virginia in the spring of 1864, where he was under the command of Gen. Butler at Bermuda Hundred and at Petersburg.

Mr. Standish was married at Hebron, and after his marriage began farming for himself. For many years he was very successfully engaged in general and dairy farming, and became well known in the community in which his useful life was passed. As a Republican, he took an active part in local politics and was a registrar of voters about eighteen years. With the exception of but one term from 1884 until his death, he filled the office of assessor. For twenty-six years he was a member of the school board, on which he was serving at the time of his last illness. In 1900 he was elected to the General Assembly from Andover, and served on the committee on Constitutional Amendments. He entered into rest May 5, 1901, in Andover, Connecticut.

MRS. ANNIE E. (WEBB) DAWSON, is descended from two prominent Colonial families, the Webbs and the Pelletts. The Webb family is mentioned more fully under the sketch of Albert B. Webb, found in this volume.

Rufus Pellett, son of Rufus, and maternal grandfather of Mrs. Dawson, was born in Canterbury, Nov. 20, 1782 and passed the greater part of his life in that place. As a young man he taught school for some time including several terms in New London Academy and in Canterbury, Lisbon, and Brooklyn. Later he engaged in farming in Canterbury, where he remained for the rest of his life, dying there March 4, 1857, and his wife Jan. 24, 1864. He exerted a wide influence in his community, was a Republican in politics and true to his convictions. By his wife, Mindwell (Stone) of Ware, Mass., he had the following children: John Nelson, born Aug. 2, 1818, died Nov. 16, 1890, married Ann Jackson and lived in Canterbury. John Nelson Pellett and Ann Jackson had one daughter Minnie Pellett who is married to Earnest Lamb and lives in Groton Center, Conn. Maria Hesebah, born July 11, 1822, married Thomas W. Webb and is the mother of Mrs. Dawson. Luther, born Jan. 10, 1814, died March 20, 1817. Maranda, born Jan. 29, 1816, never married and died Oct. 23, 1843. Frances, born Dec. 21, 1827, died Nov. 6, 1842.

Mrs. Annie Elizabeth Dawson, born Nov. 20, 1848, daughter of Thomas W. and Maria Hesebah (Pellett) Webb, is a woman of rare business ability, who now resides in Canterbury, Conn., where she owns property which she bought of her uncle John N. Pellett. She married James Dawson and to them have been born the following children: (1) James Rufus, born July 8, 1870, a well educated young man, who is now a mounted policeman of Brooklyn, N. Y., married March 25, 1894, Hattie Krooscher and they have had three children: Charles James, Annie Elizabeth (deceased), and Herbert. James R. graduated from the New York Nautical School when sixteen years old, and sailed for six years on deep water, making trips nearly all over the world. At nineteen years of age he was first mate of a large sailing vessel. When only seventeen years and nine months old he passed a first class examination for Captain before the board of underwriters, but being ineligible to a captaincy until he was of age he took the position of first mate. (2) Charles Louis, born in Manhattan, N. Y., Aug. 20, 1872, had a three year course in Wrights Business College at Brooklyn, N. Y., and is now employed in Jersey City, in a responsible position in Borden's Condensed Milk Company. He married Solma Heimah and they have had two children: Liberty L. M. and James. Charles L. was elected as representative of his ward when twenty-one years old, but declined the position. He is the inventor of several useful machines. (3) William Nelson, and (4) Samuel William, both born in Brooklyn, N. Y.—the former born Jan. 15, 1875, died July 27, 1875, and the latter born May 10, 1876, died Aug. 10, 1877, at the age of fifteen months.

JAMES DAWSON, the husband of Mrs. Annie Elizabeth Dawson, is an inventor and a man of rare business ability. By birth and parentage he is a thorough Englishman. His father, William Dawson, was born at Kersley, England, where he grew to manhood. For a business he engaged in the coloring of cotton yarns, linings and silk, at which he was very successful. He died in England at the age of fifty-two. By his wife, Sarah (Macon) he had fifteen children, the oldest of whom was James. Mrs. Sarah (Macon) Dawson died April 5, 1850, aged thirty-six years.

James Dawson was born near Kersley, Bolton, England, Nov. 3, 1832. He had but little chance to go to school, and at the age of eleven went to work in the coal mines. Later he entered his father's dye shop, and there learned a useful business, which he followed for many years. At the age of twenty-six he came to America aboard the sailing vessel "Constellation" and was seven weeks at sea, landing at New York. Though he had but $5 his knowledge of dyeing and chemicals kept him from any financial embarrassment, for he readily secured remunerative positions; first for a silk, linen and cotton dyeing firm in New York, and later for another New York company engaged in dyeing cotton goods, remaining at each place for only a short period. Mr. Dawson finally settled at steady work in a dye house at Wickford, R. I., where he remained ten or eleven years, overseeing most of the time about sixteen men. After his marriage he went to coloring gingham in the Bell Factory, near Huntsville, Ala.; afterward he went to Brooklyn, N. Y., and began manufacturing pulp, coloring; but as the necessary chemicals disagreed with his health, gave it up and sold out; took a partner and started dyeing yarns and making Buckram in 17th street, New York. He later sold out to his partner and started the Crinoline business in March, 1878, which he managed with success for twenty-eight years. On June 18, 1882, his plant was destroyed by fire, but he rebuilt and continued his business for nineteen years and then moved to Canterbury. There he erected a large building and began the manufacture of a substitute for rubber. The process was first discovered in France, but Mr. Dawson, by his years of experience with chemicals, was enabled to make a superior article. At first he met with rare success, but unfortunately at the end of eighteen months a rise in the price of raw materials obliged him to close his business—at least for the present.

Mr. Dawson has done remarkably well with his business ventures, and, having attained his success entirely through his own efforts, commands the highest esteem from all who know him.

SIDNEY S. STONE, the leading contractor and builder at Danielson, Windham county, is a man who has built up a prosperous and profitable business by strictly honorable methods and reliable work. He descends from an old family, of whom the first to come to America was (1) Hugh Stone, who arrived in this country, unmarried, between 1655 and 1665. In the year 1665 his name appears in the records of the town of Warwick, R. I., and he is supposed to have resided there previously, for in that year he married Abigail Busecot, a daughter of Peter Busecot, of Warwick. Hugh Stone remained in Warwick until 1723, when he sold his farm and the most of his property, and removed to Cranston, then Providence, where he soon after died at the age of ninety years. The farm on which he lived is known as the Dotero Aldrich farm, and there is located the "old Stone burying ground." The children of Hugh Stone were as follows: Abigail, born in 1667; Hugh, born in 1669, who married Mary Potter; Peter; John, born in 1674, who had two wives, a Miss Barnes, and Abigail Foster; Anne, born in 1679, married to William Potter; George, born in 1681.

(II) Peter Stone was born Jan. 20, 1671, and was married June 16, 1696, to Elizabeth Shaw. Eight days later he bought twenty-five acres of land, of E. Ralph, in what is now Cranston, where he put up a house in which he lived until his death, Dec. 26, 1725. These were his children: Elizabeth, born in 1697; Peter; Sarah, born in 1699; Abigail, born in 1700; Pressilah, born in 1702; John, born in 1704.

(III) Peter Stone, Jr., was born in 1698, in what is now Cranston, and when he was twenty-five years of age married Patience Printing. His father's death occurred the year of his marriage, and he removed to the house where his father had lived, and made his home there until his death. He survived his wife some years, and when quite aged, married a widow Burlingame, of nearly his own age. They lived but two or three years after their marriage, when both died, nearly eighty. The children of Peter Stone, Jr., and his first wife, were: Betsy, born in 1727, who married Jeremiah Angell; Peter, born in 1727, who married Mary Hammond, and after her death, Patience Hudson; Samuel, born in 1733; Patience, born in 1735, married to Thomas Hammond.

(IV) Samuel Stone was born in Cranston on the family homestead where his father and grandfather had lived, and became a carpenter in the town of Warwick, where he married Mary Blanchard in 1756. Some ten years later he bought a home in Warwick, and unusual energy and economy marked the course of this worthy couple. Twenty years from the time of their marriage Mr. Stone was able to purchase and pay for a valuable estate on Sockonossett Hill, one of the most inviting locations in the State, commanding a view of Narragansett Bay for more than twenty miles, with all its cities and villages. On this farm he spent the rest of his days, dying in 1810, much beloved and respected. He was a man of industry, moral worth and prudence, and left an estate valued at $20,000. His widow survived him some three years, and both sleep together on Sockonossett Hill, on the farm where they lived so long. His five sons were all co-partners with him in his various enterprises. His children were: Almy, born in 1756, married Peter Potter; Nathaniel, born in 1759, married Mercy

Gorton; Rufus, born in 1760, married Sarah Lewis; Almy (2) married Olney King; Betsy married David Stone; Keziah married George Vickery.

(V) Nathaniel Stone bought a large and valuable farm in Foster, R. I., before reaching middle life, and there spent his remaining years. He was a man of vigor and energy and took a very active part in all the affairs of the community in which his lot was cast. In the Rhode Island militia he held a position as colonel, and for a number of years represented his town in the General Assembly of the State. He was strongly attached to the old Federal party of his day, and was one of its leaders in opposition to the French and Jeffersonian Democracy. In his old age he deeply interested himself in the movement to secure to the State the advantages of common schools, and gave that noble but too long neglected measure his hearty support. In finance he was especially strong, and aided in the establishment of the Mount Vernon Bank, in his own town, serving as its first president, a position he held until very close to the time of his death. His wife was a worthy woman, a good mother, and a devoted wife, and died when nearly eighty years old, beloved and respected by all who knew her. They left a good competency to their children, who were as follows: Mercy, born in 1783, married George Phillips; William G., born in 1785, who died in infancy; Samuel, born in 1787, who married Lydia Angell; Nathaniel, grandfather of Sidney S. Stone; Sally, born in 1791, married to Nathaniel Phillips; William G., born in 1793, who married Elcy Hopkins; Lydia, born in 1795, who married Samuel H. Hopkins; Charles, born in 1797, deceased in infancy; Polly, born in 1799, who married Alpheus Bowen; Charles, born in 1800, married to Jerusha Hill; Daniel, born in 1803, married to Elenor Eddy; Eliza, born in 1808, who married Barton Randall.

(VI) Deacon Nathaniel Stone, grandfather of Sidney S., was born in Cranston, R. I., in 1789, and was an infant when his parents moved to Foster, where his active life was spent. By occupation he was a farmer. Industry and integrity marked his continuous course, and no man was more respected and beloved. Appointed justice of the peace, he so performed the duties of that office that no complaint was heard against him, and for a time he was chosen a member of the town council. He was elected to the State Legislature, and commanded an independent company of cadets. For many years he was a deacon of the Baptist Church. His death occurred in 1861. Miss Lucy Rounds became his first wife. She died, having become the mother of the following children: Maria, born in 1810, who died young; Clarissa, born in 1813, who died unmarried; Lucy, who died young; Roxana, who married Henry Anthony, an ingenious mechanic, and resided in Foster, where they died. For his second wife Mr. Stone married Zilpha Rounds, a sister of his first wife, and her children were: Charlotte, born in 1827, who died unmarried in 1860; and Hiram, born Aug. 5, 1830, father to Sidney S.

(VII) Hiram Stone was born in Foster, R. I., where he was reared a farmer. His education, which was very good, was secured largely in the public schools, and when a young man he began teaching school which he successfully followed for many years, devoting the time not occupied by his school work to the carrying on of a farm. For several years he made his home on a farm in Foster, which was owned by his father. At a later period he returned to the home farm, and that place he cultivated for four years. In 1871 he located on a farm in East Killingly, developed from land which he had bought, and on which he erected all the buildings. At times he has done considerable carpenter work. A Republican in political affairs, he was for several years a member of the town council of Foster. He belongs to the Freewill Baptist Church at East Killingly. Mr. Stone married Susan S., a daughter of Esek Simmons, and a native of Foster, R. I. The children born to this marriage were: Sidney S.; Minnie M., born in 1863, the wife of Joseph Shekelton, a carpenter of Cranston, R. I., whose children are, Frank S., Ralph W., Ruth E., deceased, and Ruby G.

(VIII) Sidney S. Stone was born Aug. 22, 1856, in Foster, R. I., where he attended the local schools until 1871, when his parents removed to East Killingly, at which place he attended the district school for three winters. In Foster he attended his father's school for two terms. Remaining on the home farm until he was twenty-seven, he then began carpenter work under William Burgess, a contractor of Killingly. In 1886 he began work for Christopher C. Pilling, a contractor and builder at Danielson, with whom he remained some eight years. For six of these years he was employed in Jewett City, and three years of that time he was foreman for Mr. Pilling. In 1894 he began contracting and building for himself, and quickly became the leading man in his line in the town, sometimes employing as many as sixteen men in his trade during the busy season. Among the buildings of his erection may be mentioned the new Methodist Church at Danielson, which was completed in 1902, the Episcopal Rectory, and the fine residences of Arthur Scott and George H. Call, on Broad street in Danielson.

Sidney S. Stone was married July 1, 1876, to Etta E. Aldrich, who was born May 28, 1856, a native of Killingly and a daughter of Eden and Fanny (Corey) Aldrich. Her father was a farmer in East Killingly.

Mr. Stone is a Republican on national issues, sinking political questions in local issues. He belongs to Aetna Lodge, No. 21, A. O. U. W., and B. A. Baily Lodge, No. 297, N. E. O. P., of which he was a charter member, and is now district deputy. Mr. Stone united with the Freewill Baptist Church, at East Killingly, and later transferred himself to the Methodist Church at Danielson, of which his wife is also a member. He is president of the board of trustees of the church. The present beautiful home of Mr. Stone, on River View, was erected by himself in 1898.

ALVARADO HOWARD. Perhaps no family in the State of Connecticut owns a clearer or more direct ancestry than does that of Howard, and certainly no family has been more prominent in the various walks of life, its present representative, Alvarado Howard, an honorable citizen of Stafford, Tolland county, being one of the leading members of both public and social circles in his county.

The Howard family traces its line of descent from Thomas Howard, of the ducal house of Norfolk, England, Earl of Arundel and Surrey. At his death in 1646 his personal estate was divided between his eldest son, Sir Henry, and his second son, who was Sir William, Viscount of Stafford, the younger son receiving but a small amount of property. This was Thomas Howard (2), and in 1660 he, with other sons of ducal houses, started for the New World, in search perhaps of adventure and the fortunes supposed to be awaiting all across the Atlantic. They reached Saybrook from Norwich, England, and soon after their arrival joined a party consisting of Rev. Jonas Fitch, Thomas Bingham, Robert Allyn, John Mason and others, and accompanied them from Saybrook to a tract of land which was located twenty-five miles to the northeast. In the previous year this same party had visited the desired tract, purchased and surveyed it, taking in a body nine miles square, and then they had returned to Saybrook, leaving several members on the new territory to remain until their arrangements could be perfected for their final settlement there. These settlers warmly welcomed the immigrants and they located permanently upon the nine mile tract, now the city of Norwich, Connecticut.

In January, 1666, (I) Thomas Howard (2), the great-great-great-great grandfather of Alvarado Howard, was united in wedlock to Mary Hollman, and their children were: Mary, Sarah, Martha, Thomas and Benjamin.

(II) Benjamin Howard, son of Thomas (2), was born in June, 1675, and to his marriage two sons were born,—Thomas (3), and Benjamin.

(III) Thomas Howard (3), was born in July, 1702, and married in Mansfield, Conn., his wife's name being Sarah. The children born to them were: Benjamin, Thomas, Joseph, Eunice, Martha, Mary, Eleazer, Nathan and William.

(IV) Thomas Howard (4), was born in January, 1729, in Saybrook, Conn., and died in May, 1810, in Windsor, which now is Ellington. From Saybrook Mr. Howard moved to Mansfield, Conn., and there became a large landowner, at one time having a single tract which contained 700 acres.

Later he invested largely in land in Sturbridge, Mass., having made the discovery that lead mines could be profitably worked there, and finally absorbed almost all of the land in that locality. Later he sold his interests and realized £7,200 from this valuable mineral land. He then retired to Windsor, now Ellington, to pass the remainder of his life, free from business care. April 11, 1757, he was married to Mary Pember, and their children were: Irene, Phebe, Lydia, Joseph, Joseph (2), Lucy, Andrew, Pember, Thomas, Eleazer and Eleazer (2).

(V) Pember Howard, son of Thomas (4), was born Sept. 8, 1767, in Windsor, Conn., and died Feb. 3, 1841, in Westfield, Mass. Mr. Howard inherited a part of his father's business capacity and became an extensive farmer and large cattle dealer, buying his herds in the West and bringing them for sale to the East. He was married Jan. 8, 1795, to Betsey Orcutt, and then settled in West Springfield, Mass., where he engaged in agricultural pursuits and became a prominent citizen. Their children were: Betsey, born Dec. 11, 1795, deceased Dec. 23, 1878; Pember, Jr., born Jan. 10, 1798, deceased Nov. 14, 1878; Prosper, born Jan. 3, 1800; Lucy, born March 24, 1802, deceased March 24, 1878; Nathan, born July 4, 1804, deceased May 23, 1883; Mary, born July 10, 1806, deceased Dec. 5, 1870; Asa, born Oct. 4, 1808, deceased Jan. 4, 1875; Eleazer, born Sept. 13, 1810, deceased Oct. 4, 1890; Lydia, born March 5, 1814; and Amasa, born July 21, 1816, deceased Oct. 23, 1847.

(VI) Nathan Howard, the father of Alvarado, was born July 4, 1804, in West Springfield, Mass., and early in life learned the trade of wheelwright and architect. His natural ability as a mathematician particularly fitted him for this work, and he engaged in building and contracting for a number of years. The last twenty-five years of his useful and busy life were spent as designer and general supervisor of construction for the Thorndike Company, the large cotton manufacturers of Palmer, Mass., who employed at that time over 1,000 hands in their mills. His death occurred at Palmer, May 23, 1883, after a short illness, his life having been a remarkably healthy one. For some years prior to his decease, he had lived retired from activity. During this time, however, he kept his active mind employed in the settling up of estates and in appraising property.

Nathan Howard was always a man who was intelligently interested in public affairs, and was an active politician, although never a seeker for office. In his earlier years he was a Whig, later joined the Know-Nothing party, and in 1854 identified himself with the Republican party. He served in Palmer as selectman during the Civil war, and was on the school board for a number of years, declining almost all of the other local offices. From West Springfield he went to Belchertown when he was but a small boy, in 1811, and remained employed on the home farm until 1821, at which time he removed to Bondville and took charge of the lumber interests of the Bond & Merrick Co., where he remained until the panic of 1837, when he removed to his farm in Palmer, which he had purchased a few years previously. There he built a modern house and introduced into it a "Franklin stove," this being an innovation, and the first one in that locality.

In 1840, Mr. Howard exchanged his farm for one in the south part of the town, and in 1843 he removed to Monson, in order to take charge of the re-modeling of the O. W. Porter factory there; in 1845 he again changed his residence, to Thorndike, in the town of Palmer, where he was placed in charge of the building of the company's new mill and tenement houses, and there he remained, as above stated, for twenty-five years, in charge of important departments. He was fond of recalling his old instructor, Capt. Braman, of Belchertown, a master workman who had a wide reputation in his day.

In his early years Mr. Howard became connected with the Congregational Church, but later attended the Methodist Church, that being the religious body to which his wife belonged. Mr. Howard was a man of great physical strength and manly development, and in his younger days was known as an athlete.

As to the respect and esteem in which he was held by his fellow-citizens, we can do no better than to quote from a timely and sympathetic article in the Springfield Republican, in its issue following his death: "Mr. Howard was a rare specimen of sturdy, New England manhood. Thirty-eight years of his life were identified with the growth and interests of Thorndike, and fully fifty years with the town at large. His brains and hands shaped much of the village development. Since 1845, every resident manager of the great interests of the Thorndike Manufacturing Company, has looked to him for advice in many matters, and found rare wisdom and judgment. Town-wise, he was well known, as his name often appears on the town records in an official relation. He never sought office, but when once a trust was placed in his hands, it was wisely handled and faithfully carried out. A man of strong convictions and few words, what he did was done from the highest motives and with strongest purpose."

On April 5, 1827, Nathan Howard was united in matrimony to Miss Amanda Ruby, who was born Oct. 24, 1802, a daughter of Thomas and Betsy (Fuller) Ruby, of Union, Conn. Her death took place in Thorndike, Mass., April 28, 1873. The children born to Nathan Howard and his wife were nine in number: (1) Sanford, who was born March 21, 1828, in Belchertown, died Dec. 1, 1859. He was married Oct. 24, 1848, to Charlotte Tupper, of Monson, Mass., and he started in life as a machinist and weaver, and was later given charge of the cotton mills in Plymouth, Conn., as superintendent. Still later he returned to Monson, Mass., studied medicine and became a successful physician in Thorndike, Mass. James Erigene, his son, is an authority on testing the strength of metals and munitions of war, and has charge of the Government testing grounds at Watertown, Mass., being a practical mechanical and civil engineer, obtaining a part of his education and experience in Europe, and he is also author of several valuable works in his line. (2) Emily, born Aug. 8, 1829, died July 27, 1831. (3) Emily (2), born July 3, 1831, was married April 29, 1852, to George Waterman Fuller, of Palmer, Mass., a successful farmer and large tobacco grower. She died in Deerfield, Mass., in July, 1901, leaving these children, George W., Sadie A., Andrew W. and Emelie H. (4) Annis Ursula, born Aug. 6, 1833, was married to Anson A. Dorman, of Belchertown, Mass., and their daughter is Cora A. (5) Emerancy, who was born Nov. 13, 1835, married Nathaniel P. Braman, Jr., who is now retired and a resident of South Florida. Formerly he had charge of the "stocking" department of the Winchester Rifle works, in New Haven. (6) Eliza Rubie, who was born June 23, 1837, was married May 29, 1859, to William D. Heald, of Stafford, and their children are,—Anna S., Charles H., William H., and Bertha L. (7) James Gilbert, who was born March 8, 1840, died May 23, 1851. (8) Betsey Ann, who was born Sept. 10, 1842, died Sept. 1, 1843. (9) Alvarado, was born Feb. 2, 1845, in Monson, Massachusetts.

Although born in Monson, Mr. Howard's early education was obtained in Palmer, Mass., whither his parents had removed when he was but two months old. Finishing the public school course in Palmer he began preparation for entrance into the Rensselaer Polytechnic School, but ill health and impaired hearing compelled him to resign his cherished plans, when about eighteen years of age. He had hoped to study civil and mechanical engineering, his tastes being very pronounced in that direction.

Mr. Howard then entered the repair department of the Thorndike Company, giving up all hope of preferment in other lines on account of his continued delicate health; he remained under his father for the next four years, before deciding to prepare himself as a cotton superintendent. With this end in view, he returned to his books and took a business and commercial course in Burnham's Business College, graduating with honors. Soon several positions were at his disposal, which he declined and in the fall of 1866 he came to Stafford, still looking for the right place.

Mr. Howard was not idle by any means, for he comes from stock that has been noted for activity, and during his first winter there he taught school in "Village Hill," passing the two following years assisting his brother-in-law, William D. Heald, in his drug business. In the fall of 1867, with Mr.

George M. Ives, he engaged in the Granite Mill Company, assisting in the work of getting the books and accounts of the company arranged to date. This was not entirely new business, as his work in assisting the Internal Revenue collector, G. H. Baker, with his books and later in the local savings bank, had been highly commended. Before three days had passed, Mr. Ives offered Mr. Howard the position of bookkeeper, paymaster and superintendent. This most flattering offer was accepted, and in this association he remained for the succeeding seven years. During that time he was frequently promoted, his interests were considered, and his work appreciated, and although other mills offered him various positions he remained with Mr. Ives until ill health compelled him to resign his pleasant and profitable connection. During these years the business increased in volume, the plant engaging in the manufacture of all kinds of cotton fabrics, and when Mr. Howard was compelled to resign, in 1875, it was on as sound a basis as any plant in New England.

Mr. Howard then became treasurer of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs, and in 1891 was made one of the directors. His sound financial methods made him a desirable assistant in the organizing of the First National Bank, of Stafford Springs, and he was one of its first directors. During 1881-82-83 he had charge of the financial department in the Mineral Springs Manufacturing Company, all of these trusts having been administered with dispatch, judgment and efficiency.

A staunch Republican, Mr. Howard has filled most acceptably many of the local offices and with distinction represented the town in the Legislature, on several important committees, in 1874. For several terms he has served as burgess and was warden for several years, notably during the time of the memorable floods of 1877. For several years his time was given to the duties of the assessor's office and for a number of terms he has been justice of the peace. During a long period he has been acting school visitor, has served as collector of town and school taxes, was active in the consolidation of the school system of the town, was also instrumental in the incorporation of the borough, was its first clerk and treasurer, for two years, and has been identified with its growth and the growth of its institutions, as an officer, and also as an adviser. His interest has always been active, and he has contributed liberally of his time and means. He was very much interested and most active in the formation and organization of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association.

Another project of public benefit to which Mr. Howard has lent interest, was the formation of the Stafford Springs Library and Reading Room Association, the first business meeting being held in his home in 1873, when he was elected the first president. In 1876 the association was re-organized, under the laws of the State, as "The Stafford Library Association," and Mr. Howard continued to act as its president, taking a deep interest in its improvement and scope. He also has consented for several years to act as its secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Howard was married Oct. 9, 1869, to Miss Julia Huldah Holcomb, who was a daughter of Charles and Mary (Byrne) Holcomb, a native of New Hartford, Litchfield Co., Conn. To this union have been born these children: Elizabeth R., who was born June 11, 1871, and died Dec. 17, 1878; Mary, who was born May 19, 1881, and died April 19, 1889; and Holcomb R., born July 19, 1877. The last named became a pupil in the public schools of Stafford, finishing the course there with great credit. Then he became well and favorably known in athletic circles, notably as a long distance bicycle rider. He entered his father's office, but in August, 1899, went to Appleton City, Mo., as local manager for the Trustee's Land Company, and there he had a hotel, opera house, a number of stores and residences and several farms under his management. In 1901 he was made an alderman in that city, and was prominently identified with the interests of that locality. He resigned his position to enter the employ of the American Car and Foundry Co., at Madison, Ill. On Aug. 23, 1899, Mr. Holcomb Howard was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Fairman Sprague, of Stafford, who was a daughter of Dr. and Mary (Fairman) Sprague.

In I. O. O. F. circles Mr. Howard has long been prominent and is well known in this connection over the State. He was a charter member of Waseon Lodge, No. 32, I. O. O. F., and he was the first Noble Grand of the Lodge, for two terms, and has served as trustee ever since its organization. Mr. Howard was also Deputy-Grand of the district during two terms. Also he is prominently connected with the order of Daughters of Rebekah, which is an auxiliary to the I. O. O. F. organization, of Rockville, Connecticut.

From his youth Mr. Howard has been connected with the Methodist Church and has been liberal and generous in his contributions for the support of its charities and mission work. For a long period he has been one of the trustees of the Stafford Springs Church, and is most highly valued in this office.

Scarcely any public enterprise or educational movement in his locality has been developed or brought to completion without the active assistance of Alvarado Howard, and the citizens feel their indebtedness and are not slow in testifying their appreciation. One of the movements which Mr. Howard favored, was that of providing two voting districts, this being a most desirable arrangement for public convenience. In every relation of life he has stood before his fellow citizens as a man of care and thoughtfulness for others, and has exhibited those qualities which the world likes to attribute to descendants of noble blood.

NOEL OSCAR BALLARD, a farmer and carpenter of Pomfret, is a well known and highly respected citizen of that section, and was born in the town of Webster, Mass., July 1, 1854, a representative of an old and prominent family of Windham county.

Zaccheus Ballard, the first of that name in Connecticut, born in 1730, was a descendant of William Ballard, who settled in Lynn, Mass., in 1630. Zaccheus Ballard married Elizabeth Valentine, daughter of Thomas Valentine, and granddaughter of John and Mary (Lynde) Valentine, and the latter was a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Ballard) Lynde, and Mary Ballard Lynde was a daughter of Jairus Ballard. Zaccheus Ballard died in Oxford, Mass., and was buried in Thompson. He and his wife had children as follows: William, Lynde, Elizabeth, Polly, Pattie, Mehatable, Sarah, Nancy and Alice.

Lynde Ballard, the second child, was born at Oxford, Mass., May 15, 1774, and settled in Thompson with his brother William, where he died June 7, 1825, and was buried in Thompson. Dec. 4, 1794, he married Polly Bates, and seven children were born to their union: John Bates, deceased in Colchester, Conn.; Nancy, married to John George of Thompson; Polly, married to Jacob Tourtellotte; Winthrop Hilson; Valentine; Hamilton; Martha, married to Frederick Miles of Thompson. Lynde Ballard was married a second time, and the maiden name of his wife was Amey Greene, who bore him four children: Sarah Rebecca, who married Samuel Spaulding of Putnam; Salem Lynde; Zaccheus; and Elizabeth, who married Albertus Bruce, of Pomfret.

Zaccheus Ballard, father of Noel Oscar Ballard, was born at Thompson, and reared upon a farm. When he grew to manhood, he resided with his brother, Valentine upon the latter's farm, but later engaged in the livery business, bought and sold horses, and owned and operated a hotel, first residing at Thompson, then at Webster, and finally locating at Putnam. At the later city, he engaged in butchering, but still bought and sold horses. From Putnam he removed to West Thompson, where he was engaged in farming. His death occurred at West Thompson, but he was buried in Putnam. In politics, he was a Republican, and was selectman for a number of years, and also held other local offices. At Danielsonville, Conn., now Danielson, he married Mary E. Whitney, and three children were born to this union: Frank H., who married Maria Johnson, of Putnam; Amy E., who married Hezekiah F. Ransdell, of West Thompson, Conn.; Noel Oscar. The mother died in 1900 and was buried in the Putnam cemetery by the side of her husband. During her life, she was a faithful member of the Baptist Church.

Noel Oscar Ballard was educated in the schools of Putnam and Woodstock. At the age of eighteen he began to learn the trade of carpenter in Putnam, and for thirty years he has been engaged in this branch of activity, being employed by the leading contractors of Putnam. In 1883 Mr. Ballard purchased the Winthrop Green farm in Pomfret, and there he is also engaged in farming and dairying, in addition to pursuing his regular occupation of carpenter, and he is successful in all.

On May 1, 1879, Mr. Ballard was married to Miss Abby H. Chandler, born Sept. 9, 1859, a daughter of Joseph and Mary Storrs (Williams) Chandler, the marriage taking place at Pomfret. Four children have been born to this happy marriage: Lillian A., Olive C., Louise F., and Ruth E. Ballard. Joseph Chandler, the father of Mrs. Ballard, is one of the leading farmers of Pomfret, and is a member of the Republican party. All of the members of the Chandler family, as well as Mr. and Mrs. Ballard and their children, attend the Congregational Church, in which they take an active part. Mr. Ballard is one of the leading Republicans of Pomfret; he has been called upon to represent the interests of his town as tax collector, and discharged his duties as a public official with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the general public. Mr. Ballard is a member of the Wolf Den Grange of Pomfret, and is a man well known and very highly respected not only in Pomfret, but throughout the county, where he is known and recognized as an excellent representative of the substantial citizens of Windham county.

CHARLES DANIEL SALISBURY, an energetic young grocer of Moosup, Windham Co., Conn., who is engaged very successfully in business, is a descendant of an old New England family, and well sustains a good old name.

Abraham Salisbury, the grandfather, was a resident of Rhode Island, where he was an honored farmer. He came to Moosup, where he died in 1860, at the age of fifty-six years. His first wife, Harriet Phillips, whom he married in Rhode Island, bore him the following children: Ora, married Charles Hopkins, who was killed while in the discharge of his duties as a policeman. Theron Robinson, the father of Charles D., is mentioned later.

Theron R. Salisbury, the father of Charles D., was born March 19, 1839, at Foster, R. I. He learned the trade of shoemaker, but did not long follow it, and he was engaged in the hotel business for many years in different towns in Connecticut. Thirty years of his active life were spent in this way, though the greater part of that time was passed in Plainfield. He died at Moosup, Dec. 6, 1899, and there his widow still has her home. Mr. Salisbury married Ellen L. Graves, and to them were born six children, three of whom died in infancy. Those still living are: Everett Eugene, born July 22, 1859; Charles Daniel, born in South Killingly, Conn., Nov. 20, 1864; Linwood Elmer, born June 7, 1874, who married July 6, 1899, Clara Potvin, of Moosup, and is engaged in the grocery store with his brother, Charles D. Mrs. Salisbury was a daughter of Lowell and Martha M. (Youngs) Graves, and belongs to one of the old families in the town of Killingly, Conn. The history of the Graves family runs back to Whitney Graves, who was the first of the name to come to North America. He was of Scotch nativity, and his wife, Esther Youngs, came of English parentage. They had a family of eleven children, of whom the oldest, Willis, married Lizzie Moore, and lived to the age of a hundred years. Lowell Graves, the grandfather of Charles D. Salisbury, was born in 1804, and died in 1897. Martha Maria Youngs, his wife, was a daughter of Hezekiah Youngs, of one of the old Killingly families. She was born in 1807, and died in 1896. Lowell Graves was a man of consequence, and was in turn a farmer, a tavern-keeper, a merchant and a teacher of winter schools for many years. He filled the position of justice of the peace and was also a mill man in Rhode Island.

Charles D. Salisbury acquired his education in the schools of South Killingly and Moosup. When he was twenty-one he assisted his father in the management of the hotel, and in 1886, in company with his brother, Everett E., he established a grocery business in Moosup. Entering the store as an assistant, three years later he became a partner with his brother, under the firm name of Salisbury Brothers. This business was continued until 1898, with the exception of one year, when Charles D., ran the grocery department solely on his own account. In 1898 the brothers dissolved partnership, Charles D., taking over for himself the grocery and hardware departments. In these lines he has been very successful, and has built up a very creditable trade. His many qualities and upright character, together with his ability as a salesman, and his intimate knowledge of the needs of the community, have won him many patrons and given him a wide circle of friends.

Charles D. Salisbury and Agnes Matthews were married June 20, 1889. She was a native of England, and a daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Matthews, both of whom are now residents of the town of Plainfield. To this union were born: Lester Theron, April 23, 1900; Lowell Matthews, July 27, 1901; and Dorothy Ellen, Sept. 12, 1902.

In political matters Mr. Salisbury is a Republican in national questions, but takes a very independent attitude in local matters. His close application to business prevents his taking any very active part in local politics. In 1894, however, he was a delegate to the Republican senatorial convention. His liking for out of door sports and recreations is very marked, and is undoubtedly an inheritance from his grandfather, who was a noted fox-hunter in his day. Hunting and fishing are his delight.

Mr. Salisbury belongs to Moosup Lodge, No. 113, F. & A. M., in which he has held various official positions, and where he is highly respected. He is a member of the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias and was a charter member of Hope Council, No. 78, O. U. A. M., which was organized Dec. 28, 1892, and in which he has filled all the chairs. He is secretary of the Methodist Church of Moosup.

LESTER HOLT BURNHAM. Since pioneer days the town of Hampton, Windham county, has had its Burnham family. The original American Burnham was (I) Deacon John, born in 1618, who with two brothers came and settled at Chebacco, now Ipswich, Mass., in 1635. In 1637 he joined the Pequod expedition sent against the Indians, and two years later was granted land in payment for this service. He owned an extensive farm on the east side of the stream now known as Haskill's creek. By his wife, Mary, he had four children: John; Josiah, who continued the line of descent now under consideration; Anna, who married Samuel Low; and Elizabeth, who married Thomas Kinsman.

(II) Josiah Burnham, born May 9, 1662, died Oct. 25, 1692. July 12, 1687 he married Abigail, the daughter of Thomas Varney, who died Oct. 31, 1692. Three children came of this union: Josiah, born April 16, 1688, who married Elizabeth Butler; Jacob, born June 7, 1690; and Ebenezer.

(III) Ebenezer Burnham, born Dec. 23, 1691, moved from Ipswich, Mass., to Hampton, Conn., some time before Oct. 20, 1734, the date the record gives when he and his wife joined the Hampton Church "in full communion." He died March 10, 1746, at the age of fifty-four. He was married to Dorothy Collins, who was born in 1697, and who died June 26, 1760. The children of this union grew to maturity, and were married as follows: Joshua, born in 1720, to Abigail Maynard; Ebenezer's marriage is mentioned later; Joseph, born in 1723, who died Nov. 5, 1792, to Lucy Bennett; Andrew, born May 28, 1726, to Jane Bennett; Isaac, born in 1730, to Eunice Holt; and Dorothy, born in 1732, to Capt. William Hebbard.

(IV) Ebenezer Burnham (1722-Nov. 1, 1788) was a resident of Hampton. On Jan. 1, 1745, he married Martha Hebbard, who was born in 1721, and who died April 10, 1783. He afterward married Elizabeth Hunt. His children, all by his first wife, were: Hannah, born Nov. 27, 1746, married Nathaniel Colburn; Ebenezer, born Feb. 17, 1748, married Sibbil Greenslit, and died in 1785; John was the great-grandfather of the citizen whose name heads this sketch; Josiah, born March 21, 1751, married Sally Hovey, and died July 5, 1838; Daniel, born March 21, 1753, married Martha Smith, and died Aug. 16, 1823; Mary, born Sept. 14, 1755, married Elijah Greenslit; Eleazer, born Aug. 2, 1757, died May 12, 1780; James, born Aug. 21, 1759, married Tamma Holt, and died May 5, 1836; Jedediah, born Dec. 12, 1761, married Phoebe Martin, and died June 4, 1828; Eliphaiz, born March 17, 1764, married Lydia Smith.

(V) John Burnham, born Dec. 20, 1749, was a successful farmer at Howard Valley, in the town of Hampton. He died Jan. 8, 1833, and is buried in that town. For a short time he worked at the blacksmith's trade, and when the Revolutionary war broke out he enlisted. Oct. 23, 1777, he married Tryphena Robinson, who was born July 20, 1755; she died Nov. 9, 1835. Of this union there were nine children: John, born Aug. 9, 1778, who married Jerusha Hebbard, died Feb. 20, 1864; Ebenezer, born June 4, 1780, who married Eunice Holt, died July 9, 1857. The next four children died young: Permelia, born Nov. 9, 1782, Nov. 25, 1782; Permelia (2), born Nov. 22, 1783, July 12, 1788; Ralph (1), born Sept. 6, 1786, Nov. 24, 1787; and Ralph (2), born Jan. 26, 1789, in 1799. Charles, born Aug. 11, 1791, died Jan. 14, 1814; and Nancy, born Nov. 26, 1794, who married Ira Marshall, died April 11, 1863. Jesse was the youngest.

(VI) Jesse Burnham, the grandfather of Lester Holt, born in Hampton July 12, 1797, was an energetic and prosperous farmer of that town, and was also exceedingly prominent in public and religious affairs. To his efforts was largely due the erection of the present Christian Church at Howard Valley. He was an ardent Republican, and a strong, outspoken Abolitionist. In 1864 he very efficiently represented Hampton in the State Legislature, and for many years he was justice of the peace. He died in Hampton at the age of seventy-eight, and was buried in that town. His wife, Olivia, daughter of James and Tamma (Holt) Burnham, was born in Hampton, Jan. 23, 1801. She survived her husband and died in Scotland, Conn., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Henry H. Cary. Of the five children of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Burnham, the first two died young: Olive Maria, born Nov. 23, 1823, Sept. 8, 1824; and Emily (1), born Aug. 23, 1825, Aug. 31, 1826. The others are: Emily Maria (2), born Oct. 26, 1827, who is now the widow of Henry H. Cary and resides in Scotland, Conn.; James A., father of Lester Holt, whose name heads this sketch; and Lester Holt, born March 23, 1838, the youngest son of Jesse Burnham, who died March 14, 1839.

(VII) James A. Burnham, who was a thrifty farmer and able speculator, also prominent in public affairs, was born April 20, 1832, in Howard Valley, in the town of Hampton. He was reared to farm-work and educated in the common schools of his neighborhood. Early manifesting a forceful character, at the age of eighteen he went to Hartford and engaged in teaming and trucking. So successful was he that he continued the business ten years. The year following his withdrawal, he assisted his father on the farm. About this time, May 8, 1861, he married Mary E. Starkweather, who was born in Hampton, Feb. 13, 1839, daughter of Ezra and Eliza (Flint) Starkweather. Mrs. Burnham, who survived her husband, still resides in Hampton.

To Mr. and Mrs. James Burnham were born six children. The two girls are not married: Mary Estella, born May 14, 1862, is now a nurse; Lester Holt, is mentioned later; Olive Eliza was born May 9, 1866; Frank James, born Feb. 20, 1870, and Frederick Augustus, born Dec. 23, 1871, are farmers in Hampton; Charles Edward, the youngest, born Nov. 7, 1874, who married Angie L. Marshall, is a meat dealer in Hampton. Frederick A., noted above, married June 9, 1895, Mary E. Copeland, and they have had five children: Helen M., born Jan. 13, 1896; Marjorie, Nov. 8, 1897; Bernice L., July 29, 1899; Dorothy W., June 10, 1901, and Beatrice Eve.

About the time of his marriage Mr. James Burnham purchased a small farm near the home-stead, where he subsequently made many improvements. He also bought additional tracts, till by the year 1875, about the time his father died, the farm embraced over 200 acres, and was thoroughly well-stocked and largely under cultivation. His agricultural successes enabled him to engage in another very profitable business—cattle-speculation—which he carried on in addition to his farming. For a number of years he went regularly to Vermont and bought stock, which he disposed of in Hampton. Though in poor health for the last few years of his life, he carried on farming to the end. He died Feb. 16, 1895, and was buried in the South cemetery, at Hampton.

Mr. Burnham was a life-long, active Republican. He very ably filled various town offices, among them that of selectman for several years, presiding for a considerable time as chairman of the board. In 1883 he was chosen to the State Legislature, and very creditably served one term. He made a thorough success in life, due, mainly, to his possession of a goodly share of the family traits—persistence, energy, and thrift; and as a highly esteemed citizen he holds a warm place in the memory of his townsmen.

(VIII) Lester Holt Burnham, an energetic agriculturist of Hampton, was born in that town, April 1, 1865. By attending the district school at Howard Valley and working on the farm in the summer until he was about nineteen, he acquired a good practical education, which two additional years at home only cemented. Then at the age of twenty he left home, worked on a farm one summer and then spent most of the time for the next three or four years in the woods, cutting timber. Next, he purchased a span of horses and began teaming for himself, hauling timber and tie poles and doing any work that came his way. This he continued till he settled on the old William Bennett farm, on Hampton Hill, now owned by Judge Bennett, of Hartford. He kept up teaming with his farming and sometimes had as many as fifteen horses. He engaged in lumbering, too, in a small way, for himself. Another enterprise of his is the selling of farm implements and fertilizers. He has bought several tracts of land and now owns several hundred acres.

Mr. Burnham was married Feb. 16, 1890, to Nina Woodward, born in Brooklyn, Conn., Feb. 24, 1871, daughter of Elisha A. and Julia B. (Millard) Woodward. Mr. and Mrs. Burnham have three children, born as follows: Jesse Lester, Jan. 16, 1891; Harold Woodward, June 15, 1894; and Mildred, May 18, 1899.

Mr. Burnham is an ardent Republican, though he never seeks office himself. He has served one term as second selectman, and filled the office of assessor for several years. His achievements are entirely the results of his own efforts, and since he has not passed the prime of life, would seem to predict a splendid future.

ASAHEL E. DARLING, M. D., a successful physician at Dayville, is largely a self-educated man, and owes his success to his unwearied effort to become thorough and masterful in his profession. He has built up a very large practice.

Ebenezer Darling, the great-grandfather of the Doctor, was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, enlisting from Killingly, while a resident of Gloucester, Rhode Island.

Andrew Darling, the grandfather of the Doctor, was born in Gloucester, R. I., and was a "boss" dyer in the woolen business. For many years he lived in Thompson and other places in Connecticut as well as in Massachusetts, where he was living at the time of his death. He married Zeruah Ross, a native of Thompson, and became the father of a large number of children, of whom only one survives. She is Mrs. Lydia Smith, and has her home in Bradford, Vermont.

Ebenezer Darling, the father of Dr. Asahel E., was born in 1818, and from boyhood was employed in the mill business. He became owner of a cotton mill at Holland, Mass. Later in life he had charge of a mill at Ware, Mass., and while employed there was forced by failing eyesight to give up his work. In 1850 he bought a farm in Killingly, where he lived for many years before his removal to Worcester, Mass., where he died in February, 1890. His ashes repose in the cemetery at Dayville.

Ebenezer Darling was married to Harriet A., a daughter of Asahel and Lucretia (Brown) Chase. She died in Killingly in December, 1879, at the age of fifty-six. They had the following family: Dr. Asahel E.; Adelbert and Frank, both of whom died young; Cassius H., now a physician in Worcester, Massachusetts.

Asahel E. Darling was born Dec. 4, 1844, in Killingly, and began his education in the local schools. It was continued in the West Killingly Academy, and in the Lapham Institute at North Scituate, R. I. Dr. Darling taught school, and spent his vacations in laborious work in order to advance his education. He took up the study of medicine under the direction of Dr. Justin Hammond, of Dayville, and later attended the Harvard Medical School, from which he was graduated in February, 1872. For a short time after his graduation he was an assistant of Dr. Charles Fisher, at North Scituate, R. I., and in July, 1873, he located at Dayville, Conn., where his courteous demeanor, professional ability and personal character have won a host of friends, until it is conceded that his is the largest practice of any physician in the place. The Doctor has made a specialty of surgery and has done more than most physicians in town.

Dr. Darling was married Dec. 8, 1874, in Dayville, to Charlotte A., who was born March 28, 1850, in Pascoag, R. I., a daughter of John and Phoebe (Gregory) Stokes. To this union came one child, Harriet P., born Oct. 28, 1875, who graduated from the Danielson high school, and took a musical course along with the study of language at Wellesley College, and at Andover Seminary; later she took a course at the Boston Conservatory of Music. A fine musician, she became a well known teacher of music, and sung in the Congregational Church choir at Dayville. She was married May 4, 1898, to Roy H. Spaulding, a book-keeper now residing at Ashland, N. H., and is the mother of one child, Phillip Darling, born Oct. 16, 1900.

Dr. Darling is a Republican, but has had no desire to hold public office of any kind. His own profession offers a field large enough for all his energy, though he has long felt it a duty to serve on the school board. For nineteen consecutive years he was a member of the board, and at his earnest request was passed by for two years, but has since been re-elected, making twenty-two years in all. During his early days he served on the board of assessors.

Dr. Darling has been a member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., since 1882. As an enlightened and progressive physician he well knows the value of professional associations, and is a member of the Windham County Medical Society, and of the State Medical Society. When a young man he united with the Freewill Baptist Church at East Killingly, though he is now an earnest supporter of the Congregational Church at Dayville, of which he is treasurer, and a hard worker for its prosperity. Mrs. Darling is a member of this church, and for many years sang in its choir.

Dr. Darling is known as an upright and honest man, straightforward in speech and manner, and is popular with all classes. He is a persistent student and devotes time to study every day. The success which he has obtained is well deserved.

John Stokes, the father of Mrs. Darling, was born Feb. 16, 1817, at Trowbridge, Wiltshire, England, a son of Stephen and Elizabeth (Fisher) Stokes. This family was well represented in that vicinity. John Stokes belonged to a large family, his father being twice married, and his mother, Elizabeth Fisher, being the second Mrs. Stokes. His father was an English soldier until retired on account of advanced age.

John Stokes had but a limited education as he began work for himself when only nine years of age, and from that time has made his own way in the world. Until 1848 he remained in the same mill, where he worked when he came to the United States. For many years before leaving the old country he had charge of the wet finishing of the cloth in the mill. Coming to this country in company with a younger brother, he found his way to Pascoag, R. I., where friends had preceded him. Crossing the ocean in a sailing vessel, they were seven weeks on the way; landing at New York they went to Pascoag, where John Stokes was employed for seventeen years, being an overseer in the mill of Albert Sayles during the last portion of this time. For fifteen years he was foreman of the "wet finishing" department of the Sabin Sayles mill, and then he retired on account of poor health. From that time until his death, Dec. 3, 1899, he lived retired. His death was preceded by a decline in health for several years, and during the last twelve months he was in a very perilous condition.

Mr. Stokes was staunch in both religion and in his temperance principles. In politics he was an active and zealous Republican. When he was twenty-one he united with the Rachabites, being a charter member of the lodge of that order in his native town, and proving himself a strenuous worker in the temperance cause, where, as was the case elsewhere, he received much abuse and persecution for his temperance views. In England he held all the high positions in the Rachabites. In England he joined the Methodist Church, and in Pascoag was an active worker in its behalf. At Dayville there was no Methodist Church established, so Mr. Stokes joined the Congregational Church, and in 1883 was chosen a deacon of that church, a position he held as long as he lived.

John Stokes was married in Trowbridge, England, Jan. 4, 1836, to Phoebe Gregory, who was born Sept. 1, 1817, a daughter of John and Ann (Shellwood) Gregory. She came to the United States in 1849, bringing with her five children. She was seven weeks on the way, and joining her husband at Pascoag, remained with him until his death. She is still living in Dayville, and is in very poor health. She was the mother of thirteen children, two of whom died in England: (1) Ann, who married Robert Kershaw, and died in Dayville; (2) John, who married Mary D. Shumway, and died in Pascoag, R. I., their only child, Charles A., residing in Bristol, Conn.; (3) Elizabeth, deceased in infancy; (4) Maria E., the widow of Ezra K. Spalding, who resides in Stafford Springs; (5) Sarah J., who married Henry Hanks, of Jersey City, N. J., and has one child, Charles H., who is now in business in Jersey City; (6) Fannie, the widow of Alexander Bennett, who resides in Dayville with her children, George W., Willard F., Edward A. and Robert K.; (7) Harriet Emeline, the wife of Irving L. Blanchard, who resides in Providence, R. I., and has one child, Raymond I.; (8) Charlotte A., the twin of Harriet Emeline, the wife of Dr. Darling as noted above; (9) El-nora, who died in infancy; (10) Mary E., who died in infancy; (11) Clara B., a bright and intelligent young woman, who has long taken a very active part in temperance work, is a member of the W. C. T. U., belongs to the Congregational Church, which she is serving as clerk, is active in church matters, and is a devoted attendant upon her invalid mother; (12) Lillian A. and (13) Lilla E., both died in infancy.

ALBERT PICHE, the night superintendent of the Cranska Mill, at Moosup, Windham county, employed there for the past eighteen years, had worked for Lucius Briggs at the Grosvenor Dale mill for twenty years prior to his coming to Moosup. Beginning life with no education to assist him, and no-favoring fortune to advance him, he has made his way in the world, and has attained to very complimentary station in the community in which his life is passing. Energy and ability, united with habits of industry and a high character, have been important factors in his success.

Peter Piche, the father of Albert, was born in Santos, Canada, and there married Marie Beason, who was also a native of Santos. In 1845 he came to Webster, Mass., where he remained three years, and then journeyed back to Canada. He remained in his native country but a short time, and then returned to Connecticut. Several times he revisited Canada, but each time he resumed his residence in the States, and died in Putnam, at the age of eighty-six years. His wife died in Moosup, at the age of eighty-five. To Peter Piche and his wife were born: Peter and Justin, who died in Putnam; Rosalie, who married N. Carter, of Worcester, Mass.; Edmonde, the widow of A. Machue; Sophia, who married Joe Geruard, and is dead; Albert, whose name introduces this sketch; Marie, married to Joseph Robedeau; Malee, married to John Variear; Levia.

Albert Piche was born in Santos, Canada, May 15, 1838, and when he was a child came with his parents to Worcester, Wass. There was no opportunity afforded him for school attendance, and when he was seven years old he entered the mill at the East Village of Worchester, and when he was ten years old, came to Putnam, Conn., where he worked as a back-boy, and later as mule piecer. For twenty-two years he worked in the mill at Grosvenor Dale, Conn., where for the last eighteen years he was engaged as overseer of the mule room. Nineteen years ago Thanksgiving Day, 1902, Mr. Piche made his home in Moosup, and became overseer of the spinning room of the Cranska mill, a position he filled for six years, and then was made night superintendent, in which he continues to the present time.

Mr. Piche is a Republican, and has proved himself an honest and patriotic citizen. His marriage occurred in Bozrahville, Conn., where he became the husband of Felicia Lanuette, a daughter of Albert and Felesta (St. Barnaby) Lanuette. To this union were born: Jerry, a barber of Moosup, Conn.; Emile, married to Alfonse Bossille, of Manville, R. I.; Joseph N., the day overseer in Cranska mill; Louise, the wife of U. Burke, a soldier in the Philippine Islands; Marie, the wife of Christopher R. Johnson, an officer of the town of Plainfield; Philista, the wife of Frank Bodo, Jr., of Moosup, Conn., whose sketch appears on another page.

JOHN WATERMAN GALLUP, senior member and founder of the firm of Gallup Brothers, at Danielson, Windham county, leading meat dealers and market men in that section of the State, belongs to a family that has been identified with New England from early colonial days.

(I) John Gallop came from the parish of Mosterne, Dorsetshire, England, in the ship "Mary and John," in 1630, his wife, Christobel, and their children following in 1633. Mr. Gallop went first to Dorchester, but soon afterward became a resident of Boston, where both he and his wife were admitted to the First Church, 1634. He was the owner of Gallop's Island, where he had a snug farm, with a meadow on Long Island, a sheep pasture on Nix Mate, and a house in Boston. He died in Boston in 1650 and his wife passed away in 1655.

(II) John Gallop (2), son of John the settler, born in England, came to America in 1633. He married in 1643, Hannah Lake, daughter of John and Margaret (Read) Lake, who came with her mother in the ship "Abigail" in 1635. Mr. Gallop with his brother served in the Pequot war, and was granted 100 acres of land for his services. In about 1650 he went to New London, Conn., and with his family removed thither in 1654, and was one of the early settlers in what is now Stonington. He represented the town in the General Court in 1665 and 1667. He served as captain in King Philip's war, and fell while gallantly leading his men in the Narragansett swamp fight, Dec. 19, 1675.

(III) John Gallup (3), son of John (2), born in 1646, married in 1675, Elizabeth, born in 1654, in Ipswich, daughter of Thomas and Martha (Lake) Harris, and they settled in Stonington, Conn., where his father had grants of land for services in the Indian wars. Mr. Gallup was deputy to the General Court in 1685, 1696, 1697 and 1698. He served with his brother in King Philip's war, and was probably with him in the Narragansett fight. He died in 1735.

(IV) John Gallup (4), son of John (3), born in 1676, in Stonington, Conn., married in 1709 Elizabeth Wheeler, of Stonington, born in 1683, daughter of Isaac and Martha (Park) Wheeler, and granddaughter of Thomas Wheeler, who came from England to America in 1630. Mr. Gallup removed, about 1710, to Voluntown, Conn., becoming an early settler of that town. He took up a large body of land, which to this day remains in the Gallup family. He was chosen one of the first selectmen of the town on its organization in 1721, and his name is mentioned in all the important transactions of the town in his time. He was chosen ruling elder of the first church of the town, which was Presbyterian in creed. He was chosen captain of the first military company, 1726. His wife died in 1735, and he passed away in 1755.

(V) John Gallup (5), son of John (4), born June 9, 1724, married April 9, 1747, Hannah Frink, and settled in Voluntown, where he died April 6, 1801. His wife died in 1773.

(VI) Nathan Gallup, son of John (5), born Feb. 11, 1763, married Jan. 19, 1786, Zerviah Gallup, daughter of Benjamin and Amy (Kinne) Gallup, and settled as a farmer in Voluntown (now Sterling), Conn. Mr. Gallup died June 1, 1829, and his wife died Oct. 31, 1838.

(VII) John Gallup, son of Nathan, born Feb. 25, 1787, in Voluntown, Conn., married May 9, 1816, Matilda Kinne, of Voluntown, and settled on a farm there. He was an active and influential member of the Baptist Church, giving liberally to its support. Mr. Gallup died April 10, 1864, and his wife died in December, 1885.

(VIII) Daniel A. Gallup, son of John, was born March 21, 1819, in Sterling, Conn., near the Voluntown line. He was an extensive and successful farmer, and followed that occupation all his life. His house was noted for its hospitality. Politically he was a stanch Democrat, and represented the town two terms in the Legislature. He attended the Congregational Church at Ekonk, and his wife was a very active member and worker in the same. His death occurred June 22, 1888. On Oct. 1, 1843, he was married to Barbara P. Gordon, of Voluntown, who died April 4, 1885. Their children were as follows: Ezra A., father of John Waterman; Lucy, who married James J. Williamson, a meat dealer in Hartford, later a butcher and farmer, residing in Woodstock; George H., who married Mary Gallup, and is living on the home farm in Sterling.

(IX) Ezra A. Gallup was born Sept. 23, 1844, in Sterling, and his education was received in the district schools. He was reared to farm work, and remained on the farm assisting his father until his marriage, with the exception of one year, when he was a clerk for his brother-in-law, who had a meat market in Hartford. For one year he resided in Griswold, Conn., and later he bought a large farm in Sterling, near the homestead, going heavily into debt for the same. He has made many extensive improvements, until now he has a farm of 200 acres, and is one of the most successful farmers of the town. He has bought and sold a great deal of cattle. In his political faith he is a Democrat, and has served several years on the board of selectmen. Both he and his wife attend the Ekonk Congregational Church, of which they are members.

On June 21, 1866, Ezra A. Gallup was married to Olive A. Knight, a native of Johnston, R. I., and a daughter of Benoni and Celia (Austin) Knight. Seven children were born of this union: (1) John Waterman was born July 2, 1867. (2) Arthur A., born June 24, 1869, is the junior member of the firm of Gallup Bros. He married Ethel Young, and has two children; Ruth Elizabeth, born in May, 1897; and Merrill Knight, born Feb. 13, 1901. (3) Frank E., born April 1, 1872, is a farmer in Sterling. He married Harriet Frink, and has one child, Frank. (4) Jennie A., born Oct. 21, 1873, married Dudley Williams, a blacksmith at Moosup, Conn., and has had four children, Harold, Jennie and another younger daughter, a son, Lester, having died Feb. 10, 1903. (5) Edwin E., born March 15, 1875, resides at Moosup. He married Lucinda Brown, and has one child, Madalain. (6) Lena G., born Sept. 8, 1876, is at home. (7) Daniel B. is at home.

(X) John Waterman Gallup was born July 2, 1867, and was but a few months old when his parents returned to Sterling. He attended the district schools, and enjoyed the advantages of two terms at Plainfield Academy. Until the age of eighteen years he lived at home, and then went to Woodstock, where he was employed by his uncle, James Williamson, who had a meat business. For a year he drove the meat wagon, and assisted his uncle, and then, in August, 1887, he went to Danielson, was employed as a clerk by Frank Medbury, who operated a meat market, and remained until December, 1888, when he bought out the business, going heavily into debt for it. He continued the business at the same location until 1895, when he fitted up the present rooms in the Phoenix Hall Block, and the business has had a steady growth in spite of considerable opposition. In 1899, his brother, Arthur A., became his partner, and the firm became known as Gallup Bros. That year (1899) being a dull season, Mr. Gallup was manager for one year of the Nelson Morris & Co. branch at Pittsfield, Mass. Gallup Bros. have a large trade in Killingly and surrounding towns in Connecticut and Rhode Island. They operate two wagons on the road. Mr. Gallup has shown ingenuity and tact in the arrangement of his business, and has striven zealously and intelligently to anticipate and fully provide for the wants of his many patrons. The firm is substantial and has a splendid reputation for integrity and square dealings.

On Oct. 1, 1889, John Waterman Gallup was married to Ida May Burton, a native of Ellenburg, N. Y., daughter of Henry and Josephine (Lemondé) Burton. Four children have brightened their home, as follows: Dorcas Burton, born Nov. 26, 1895; John Elmer, Sept. 20, 1897; Henry Ezra, June 25, 1899, in Pittsfield, Mass.; Linder Waterman, born March 25, 1902, at Danielson, Connecticut.

Mr. Gallup is independent in politics, votes for the best man on local issues, and endorses principles he regards as beneficial, regardless of party lines. In national affairs in past years he has been a Democrat. Socially he is a member of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 34, I. O. O. F. Both he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church, at Danielson, and he is assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school, and quite active in all the affairs of the church. Mr. Gallup has had no assistance in his life work, but is truly a self-made man. Honorable and upright in all his dealings, genial in manner, he is popular, and well deserves the success he has won.

WILLIAM EDWIN DEMOND, a coal and lumber merchant of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, was born March 6, 1855, in Springfield, Mass., the eldest son of Edwin Demond and Frances Taylor, of Rutland, Mass. His ancestry is to be traced back through five generations of sturdy New England millwrights and farmers to Daniel Demond, of Leicester, Mass. The date of the latter's birth and the time of his settlement in Leicester are unknown. From his son Elijah, born in Leicester, July 31, 1738, and known as Capt. Elijah Demond, are descended all of that name in this country. Capt. Elijah moved to Rutland where his grave can now be found. His second child was Daniel Demond (2), the great-grandfather of the subject of our sketch. Daniel's third son was Col. Miles Demond, who was prominent in local political circles. His fifth son was Edwin Demond. This makes five known generations and in every generation large families were the rule. The name Demond is probably of French origin and if certain clues or hints that are known could be followed it might be possible to trace it to Huguenot refugees who came to this country through England or Holland in the last years of the 17th century, and of whom there was a large settlement at Oxford, Massachusetts.

From the beginning the family has been identified with the Congregational Church.

Edwin Demond by his first wife had two sons, William E. and Charles Taylor, and by a second wife, five children. Charles Taylor Demond, after being educated in the Westfield high school and Boston University, entered the profession of journalism, working on the Springfield Republican, Boston Globe, Philadelphia Press, Chicago Herald, and New York World. He is now the western manager of the Associated Press, with an office at Denver. William Edwin was taken to his grandmother's in Rutland upon the death of his mother, where he remained for several years. At the end of this time, his father having married Mary Bemis, of Paxton, he came to West Springfield to live with them. There he was one of the first to enter the old West Springfield high school. At sixteen, however, he left school to take a place as clerk and book-keeper in the office of the Southworth Company. Two years later he went to North Adams as book-keeper and paymaster for the North Adams Manufacturing Company. He next entered the employ of Chas. Van Benthuyzen & Son, of Albany, N. Y., a firm in the printing and publishing business, as salesman. After he had held this place for about a year, he was invited back to his old home as paymaster by the Agawam Canal Company, and remained in their employ until 1886. In connection with the paymaster-ship of the mill he bought and carried on a coal and trucking business. This he consolidated in about two years with the trucking business of William F. Cook, under the firm name of Cook and Demond. The coal business was operated under the firm name of Demond, Edgerton & Co.

In 1886 Mr. Demond began a business in Springfield with Henry Newell, under the firm name of Demond and Newell, wholesale paper-dealers. After one year this business was closed out. Mr. Demond then returned to Mittineague, West Springfield, where he built his home. There he expected to spend his life but in November, 1888, in partnership with William F. Cook he purchased the coal and lumber business of Chester J. Holmes in Stafford Springs, Conn., and operated the same under the name of W. E. Demond and Company until 1891. At this time the partnership was dissolved, Mr. Demond taking the business in Stafford Springs, and Mr. Cook that in West Springfield. In 1891 Mr. Demond purchased the lumber yard of Mr. T. N. Austin in Greenfield, Mass., and incorporated the same under the laws of Massachusetts. He became the president of the company and Mr. W. B. Gaines, of Greenfield, treasurer and active manager. The business under the latter's management has grown and has been extended by the adding of a branch yard at Northampton. Since 1895 Mr. Demond has been running saw mills at Stafford and Norwich, Connecticut.

Mr. Demond has always been connected with the Congregational Church and Sunday-school. In politics he is independent. He belongs to the Temple of Honor, Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M., and Orient Chapter, No. 42, R. A. M.

Mr. Demond was married May 25, 1882, to Sarah Harrison, of North Adams, a daughter of Almon Bradford and Eliza (Marsh) Harrison. To this union were born: Charles Harrison, born Aug. 16, 1883, at Mittineague; Maurice, born Jan. 8, 1885, at Mittineague; Grace Eliza, born April 21, 1886, at the same place, who died Oct. 17, of the same year; William Malcolm, born Dec. 20, 1888, in Mittineague, who died July 11, 1889; Robert Norton, born Oct. 26, 1891, at Stafford Springs; Miles Elijah, born June 2, 1894, at Stafford Springs; Daniel Bradford, born in September, 1895, at the same place.

JOHN H. BUELL, one of the progressive and influential citizens of the town of Hebron, Tolland county, where he is widely known as an industrious and upright man, belongs to a family whose history begins with the arrival of William Buell in 1630, and his subsequent settlement at Windsor. It is supposed that he came from Wales, and the name is said to appear on the first distribution of lands in Windsor, in 1639. His death is recorded on the church rolls as having occurred Nov. 23, 1688. According to the church records he was married Nov. 18, 1640, his wife's given name being Mary. His sons were: Samuel, born in September, 1641; and Peter, born in 1644.

(II) Samuel Buell, noted above, was married Nov. 13, 1662, to Deborah, the daughter of Edward Griswold, and lived in Killingworth, Conn.

(III) William Buell, his son, born Oct. 13, 1676, was married in 1705 to Elizabeth Collins, a daughter of Joseph, and a granddaughter of William Collins, who came from England. Mr. Buell died April 7, 1763, in Lebanon, Conn., and his wife died Dec. 7, 1769, at the age of eighty-four.

(IV) William Buell, son of the William Buell noted in the preceding paragraph, was born Sept. 5, 1707, and married in Hebron, Conn., Jan. 2, 1737, Elizabeth, a daughter of Thomas Hollister, and a descendant in the fourth generation from John Hollister, who came from England, and was at Wethersfield, Conn., as early as 1642.

(V) William Buell was born April 17, 1746, and was married May 11, 1766, to Abigail Hosford, who was born in 1749, a daughter of Thomas Hosford, of Windsor. Mr. Buell died March 6, 1819; and his wife, the following April.

(VI) John W. Buell, the grandfather of John H., was born in the south part of the town of Hebron, June 10, 1783. He was a farmer and a large land holder, and spent the most of his life on the farm where he was born. In politics he was a Whig, and from time to time held important local positions. In his religion he was a member of the Congregational Church. His death occurred Oct. 5, 1833, carrying him away at the apparent prime of his powers.

Mr. Buell was married to Mary Porter, who was born June 20, 1785, a descendant of John Porter, and who died Oct. 6, 1855. To this union were born: Mary, who married Benjamin Sumner, a farmer, and died in Gilead; Elihu Porter, who married Lucy Kellogg, followed paper making and lived in Hebron, where his death took place; John Williams, the father of John H.; Josiah M., a farmer, who married Susan Burnham, and became a prominent man in Hebron, where he held many offices, and at one time was elected county commissioner for Tolland county; David M., who married Louisa Robertson, and was many years engaged in business as a merchant in South Coventry, from which point he removed to Hebron, where he died; Charles G., who was a merchant at Hebron, and died unmarried.

(VII) John Williams Buell, the father of John H., was born in Hebron in 1813. His home was with his parents until after his marriage, when he moved to a farm in Gilead, where he lived for a time, and then moved to the farm of his wife's parents, where the rest of his life was spent in the tillage of the soil, and where he died April 5, 1874. In early life he was a Whig, but became a Republican on the formation of that party. For one term he represented Hebron in the General Assembly, served on the board of selectmen several years, and was long a trial justice. His health was poor, and he was unable to do much hard work. In the Gilead Congregational Church he was known as one of its most faithful and active members.

Mr. Buell was married Sept. 21, 1836, to Mary Ann Post, who was born in Hebron in 1813, the only daughter of Diodate and Parmelia (Birge) Post. To this union were born: John H., whose name appears at the beginning of this article; Martha, born March 10, 1845, now living unmarried on the old homestead; Harley P., born Nov. 6, 1851, who was married June 7, 1877, to Loretta Tew, is a successful druggist, and is the present Judge of Probate; Hart E., born March 24, 1855, a farmer on the homestead, engaged with his brother, John H., in the lumbering business, who was married Jan. 5, 1897, to Mattie P. Winchenbaugh, of Hyde Park, Mass., has filled several town offices, and was a member of the State Legislature in 1896.

(VIII) John H. Buell was born Feb. 9, 1841, in the south part of Hebron, and was seven years old when his parents moved to Hebron, where he attended the district school. For two terms he was a student in Wilbraham Academy, in South Wilbraham, Mass. After leaving school he returned home and assisted at the farm work until he was twenty-seven, when in company with C. D. Way, of Gilead, he bought a steam saw mill, which they set up and operated under the name of Buell & Way. With this engine, first located a short distance east of the Gilead Church, they sawed the first lumber ever worked out by steam power in the town of Hebron, if not in Tolland county, theirs being the first steam engine of any description in the town. The firm did a large business, and much of their product was taken by the Cheneys of South Manchester, and used in their buildings. The Wasson Construction Company, at Brightwood, Mass., were also heavy patrons. Buell & Way continued in business for several years. When Mr. Way retired from the firm his place was taken by a brother of his partner, Hart E. Buell; the firm is still in business, and has bought and cleared many pieces of woodland in Hebron and the vicinity.

Mr. Buell bought his present farm in 1874, and has extensively increased as well as improved it, making his business both lumbering and farming.

Mr. Buell was married May 16, 1872, in Hebron, to Abbie E. Ellis, who was born Dec. 19, 1843, in Hebron, a daughter of William L. and Harriet N. (Sumner) Ellis.

This Ellis family, of which Mrs. Buell is a member, is one of the leading families of Hebron, and its history is more fully given on another page. William L. Ellis, the father of Mrs. Buell, was born May 11, 1819, at the Ellis homestead in Gilead, where he spent his life in farming and in stock dealing. He was accustomed to go to New York and Massachusetts and buy cattle to bring into Hebron, and was well and favorably known as a stock dealer. His death occurred Aug. 28, 1896. The house now occupied by his heirs was erected by him. His politics were Democratic, though he was no office seeker. He attended the Gilead Congregational Church. Harriet Sumner, his wife, whom he married Feb. 8, 1843, was a daughter of Henry P. and Polly (Geslee) Sumner. She was born Dec. 1, 1819, and died May 26, 1894. Their children were: Mrs. Buell; Mary S., born Aug. 29, 1848, unmarried; William S., born July 30, 185-, who married Maria W. Way, and is a lumber dealer and farmer in Gilead (he has one child, Mary Ida, born March 22, 1878, a teacher in the Brown School at Hartford); Hattie Maria, born Dec. 9, 1852, unmarried.

To the union of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Buell have come three children: (1) Elton W., born Jan. 6, 1874, was married Jan. 16, 1895, to Grace D. Lyman, of Marlborough, Conn., by whom he has Deems Hartwell, born Sept. 27, 1896, and Dorothy Isabelle, born June 9, 1898. Mr. Buell is engaged in the wood turning business near his father's home. This business, which he established in its present location in 1897, has had a steady growth, and gives employment to several hands in the making of wrapping paper roll plugs and in small wood turnings. He is the only wood turner of the kind in the State, and also corresponds for papers. (2) Edith M., born Aug. 7, 1875, married Oscar O. Bailey, and resides in Buckingham, Conn., where her husband is a farmer. Their children are: Bernard Oswald, born April 6, 1898; and Muriel Birge, born May 8, 1900. (3) Robert E., born May 3, 1882, attended the Storrs Agricultural College, and the Agricultural College at Madison, Wis., and is now employed on his father's farm.

Mr. Buell is a Republican, and at the age of twenty-one was elected constable, a position he held until 1866, when he became sheriff of Tolland county, a position he held for years and lost by a very small vote in what was decidedly an "off year." Prior to his election as sheriff he was appointed a deputy by Sheriff William M. Corbin, of Union. In 1875 he was in the State Legislature, and served on the committee on Agriculture. In 1895 he was elected county commissioner, and was re-elected to a second term in 1899.

Mr. Buell is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and when Lyons Lodge, No. 105, at Columbia, Conn., of which he was a valued factor, went out of existence, he united with Columbia Lodge at Glastonbury. Mrs. Buell and her daughter belong to the Gilead Congregational Church, and this church Mr. Buell attends and liberally supports.

EDGAR L. KENYON, postmaster at Oneco, Windham county, and chairman of the board of selectmen, is a worthy descendant of one of the earliest and most influential families of Rhode Island, from whom he inherits traits of character inseparably associated with typical New England citizenship.

The forerunners of the Kenyons of Rhode Island were John, James and Roger Kenyon, whom Austin, in his Genealogical Dictionary, assumes were brothers or sons of John Kenyon, and who were residents, respectively, of Kingston, Westerly, and Shoreham (Block Island). The birth and death of John are given as 1657 and 1732, and the names of his children as John, James, Enoch, Joseph, David, and Jonathan. James, brother of John, married Ruth Miller, who died in 1724. She bore him seven children, James, Thomas, Ebenezer, John, Peter, Sarah and Ruth. The children of Joseph Kenyon were: Martha, born May 8, 1725; John, born Dec. 24, 1727; Mary; Paine, born April 20, 1733; and Joseph, born Feb. 5, 1736. The early family appearing in the town records of Exeter, formerly a part of North Kingston, was that of John and Frelove (Reynolds) Kenyon, whose children were as follows: Gardner, John, Zebulon, Frelove, Freeman, Remington, Lewis, Amos, Job, Reynolds, Lydia, and Joseph G.

In "American Ancestry," in which is given the pedigree of Ralph Wood Kenyon, of Brooklyn, whose Rhode Island ancestry as given is through Paine, Joseph, and John, it is stated that Joseph Kenyon married Hannah Paine, and that he was a son of John and Ruth Kenyon, the former coming from England about 1695, his brother, James, having arrived previously at Portsmouth. Claim is made that the family of Kenyon is descended from Jordan de Lanton, Lord Kenyon, of the reign of Henry III.

Lewis Kenyon, grandfather of Edgar L., is no doubt the Lewis Kenyon referred to in the foregoing, and he was born July 20, 1744, a son of John and Frelove (Reynolds) Kenyon. Though a native of North Kingston the paternal grandfather lived in various parts of the State, probably for the longest time at Anthony. He married a Miss Austin, and among his sons were: Lewis, who located in Willimantic, Conn., and married a Miss Gardner; and Orren, the father of Edgar L. Kenyon.

native town of Anthony, R. I., and located in Sterling, Conn. There, Aug. 12, 1833, he was united in marriage with Asenath Cahoon, daughter of Robert and Phoebe (Greene) Cahoon.

Joseph Cahoon, the grandfather of Mrs. Kenyon, was a resident of Rhode Island, and his wife, Margaret, died in Sterling, Nov. 30, 1857, at the age of eighty-eight years. She is buried in the Oneco cemetery. Joseph had two sons, Warren, who died at sea, and Robert, who was born in Coventry, R. I., and died in Milford, Mass., at the age of forty-five years. His widow, Phoebe (Greene) Cahoon, died in Sterling, Conn., Oct. 17, 1860, at the age of seventy-four years, and is buried beside her husband.

In Sterling Mr. Kenyon purchased the property owned by George Kenyon, in connection with the improvement of which he was for many years engaged in milling, for a number of years being connected with the Oneco Mill as overseer of the mill room. He was active in promoting innumerable enterprises for the good of the community, was a man of liberal tendencies, and when he died at the age of seventy was regretted as are all worthy and helpful citizens. In early life a Republican, he later identified himself with the Democratic party, but never desired or sought public office. His wife, now living with her son, retains her faculties to a surprising degree, considering the fact that she was born July 11, 1813, and has therefore rounded out almost a cycle of years. She is the mother of the following children: Diana E., born April 29, 1835, is the widow of Capt. A. H. Bates; Albert B., born Nov. 6, 1837, married Abbie Carpenter, and lives in Moosup; Celia, born July 22, 1840, is the wife of Nathaniel Lewis, of Oneco; William H., born Sept. 24, 1844, married Sarah J. Vaughn, and died Jan. 24, 1898.

Edgar L. Kenyon, the youngest in his father's family, was born Jan. 6, 1850, and after completing his education in the district schools learned the trade of stone cutting. This occupation engaged his attention for a period of twenty-five years, and during that time he took an active interest in political and other affairs in his town, holding numerous responsible offices within the gift of his fellow citizens. Upon his election as chairman of the board of selectmen in 1896, his political duties became so arduous that he was obliged to give up his trade. On Nov. 1, 1893, Mr. Kenyon was appointed postmaster at Oneco, and his service, extending to the present time, has been received with approval by the community at large. Though a Democrat in a Republican town, his election to the office which he holds speaks well for the confidence which he has inspired as regards his general worth and reliability. Mr. Kenyon is variously identified with social and political societies, and since 1885 has been a member of Moosup Lodge, No. 113, F. & A. M.

Through his marriage with Mary E. Smith, of Providence, R. I., who died after six years of wedded life, Mr. Kenyon became the father of two children; Josie A., born Oct. 12, 1873, married (first), George Holt, and (second), Sanford S. Burdick, of Sterling; and Monroe S., born Oct. 26, 1879, married Bertha Briggs, and is in the employ of Clark D. Whitford, of Oneco. The second marriage of Mr. Kenyon was with Harriet E. Hill, daughter of Orrin A. Hill, of Moosup, Conn., and of this union there is one son, Orren E., born April 2, 1884.

Jonathan Hill, the grandfather of Mrs. Kenyon was born in Plainfield, Conn., and married Orra Tyler, the oldest of whose six children was Orrin A., the father of Mrs. Kenyon. He was born in Plainfield in 1836, and after attending the district schools became a pupil in Stephen Hall's private school, a small institution conducted in the little building still standing near the Baptist Church in Moosup. After leaving school he worked for a time with his father, who was a house carpenter and wheelwright, and who was then engaged in building houses in the village and doing the repair work in the Almy Mill. For fifteen years Mr. Hill engaged as a carpenter in different parts of the county, but of late years has devoted his time and attention to farming and stock raising. In 1871 he bought the old Union Company's farm of 106 acres, which he still owns, and from which he has reaped a fair remuneration.

In 1857 Orrin A. Hill married Nancy A., daughter of Aaron and Thankful (Shiffield) Belden, of Westerly, R. I. The Beldens were descendants of Lord Belden, of England, and the grandmother of Mrs. Hill was related to the famous Captain Cook. Three children were born to Orrin A. Hill and his wife: Harriet E., Mrs. Kenyon, born Aug. 31, 1863; Leroy Adelbert, born Sept. 15, 1868, lives in Moosup; and George Everett, born Oct. 12, 1873, who is living at home.

THOMAS HUTCHINSON, general merchant and postmaster of Grosvenor Dale, Windham county, is one of the best known men in that section of Thompson; his name, and that of his family, is associated with high moral purpose, and the culture and refinement made possible by his self earned success. Practically his entire life has been spent in this, his native county, where he was born in Plainfield, May 21, 1850.

Because of religious intolerance, the paternal grandfather of Thomas Hutchinson, removed from the home of his ancestors in Scotland, taking refuge with thousands of his persecuted countrymen in the North of Ireland. He settled in County Down, where he raised his family and spent the remainder of his life. Among his sons was Christopher, the father of Thomas, who was born in County Down, reared on the paternal farm, and educated in the district schools. While still in his native country he married Ann Whiteside, born in the same county, and the mother of six children, three of whom died before Christopher and his wife came to America: Andrew now lives in Norwalk, Conn.; John died in Branford, this State; Martha died young; William also died when a youth; Richard is deceased; and Thomas was born in the town of Plainfield. Christopher Hutchinson was ambitious of better things than he found in County Down, and brought his family to America in a sailing vessel in 1847, the voyage occupying several weeks' time, interspersed with storms and delaying calms. He settled in Plainfield, where he secured employment in the carding department of the woolen mills, and there his wife died, leaving him disconsolate. He thereupon sought consolation in Ireland, where terminated his worthy and industrious life in 1885. He was a Republican in America, but never desired to mingle with office seekers or avail himself of their political influence.

Thomas Hutchinson was the youngest of the children born to his parents, and his youth was spent in hard work for a short time in the mill, and in acquiring such education as his limited leisure permitted. At a very early age he found work in the woolen mill, but at the end of a year decided that this sort of occupation was uncongenial, and therefore applied for and obtained a clerkship with Sampson, Almy & Co., of Moosup, with whom he remained for a year. At Norwalk, Conn., he worked for a short time in a mill, and for six months clerked in a grocery store, a later experience being at Jewett City, where he was clerk in the grocery business for his brother, for seven years. After coming to Grosvenor Dale he clerked for the firm of H. G. Ransom, and at the end of eleven years, in 1887, he and Mr. John Elliott bought out the interest of Mr. Ransom, and continued the business for twelve years. The interest of Mr. Elliott was purchased by Mr. Hutchinson in April, 1899, since which time he has conducted the business on independent lines, and by virtue of honesty, enterprise, and desire to please his customers, has worked up a large and increasing trade among the best people in the town.

In June, 1872, Mr. Hutchinson married Sarah Bragg, born in Ware, Mass., in October, 1850, a daughter of Thomas and Catherine (Russell) Bragg, the former of whom was an Englishman, for a short time engaged in the tea, coffee and grocery business in Philadelphia, and previous to that time he was engaged in the mill business in Norwalk, Conn. Mrs. Hutchinson, a woman of culture and refinement, takes a deep interest in everything pertaining to her husband's business, and to her family in general. Her daughter, Ida Louise, has a beautiful soprano voice, the cultivation of which is being undertaken by J. Henry McKinley, of New York, the noted professor of voice culture. Miss Hutchinson also has decided talent as an instrumentalist, and is organist of the Penial Church of Grosvenor Dale. Albert Bragg Hutchinson was educated in the public schools and graduated from the high school at Putnam, is a deacon in the Penial Church, and is engaged in business with his father.

Under President Harrison's administration Mr. Hutchinson was appointed postmaster of Grosvenor Dale in 1889, served four years, and was again appointed in 1897, by President McKinley. His administrations have received public approval, and he has filled the position with credit to himself, and satisfaction to all concerned. The new religious movement undertaken by several of the leading citizens in 1899, has met with the hearty co-operation of all of the Hutchinson family, and all are active workers in the Penial Church. All are popular in the church and in society, where their graces of mind and heart are known and appreciated.

Mr. Hutchinson is one of the self-made men of the town of Thompson, and is well known for his honesty and uprightness. He is the typical merchant.

EDWIN H. WOODFORD, who for years was superintendent of White, Corbin & Co., is now the superintendent of the White Corbin division of the U. S. Envelope Company, at Rockville, Tolland county. A native of Avon, Conn., he is a son of Franklin and Cordelia (Hawley) Woodford, and a grandson of Asaph and Almira Woodford; the grandparents were farming people of Avon, where they died. The Woodford family has long been established in Avon and vicinity, and its representatives have been numerous for several generations.

Franklin Woodford was born in 1820, and died July 26, 1899, at the home of his son, Edwin H., in Ellington, where, with his wife, he had come in 1893. The father spent his time until his death with his son and at Naugatuck and Farmington, Conn.; the mother survives and lives with her son, Edwin H. She was born in 1825, and her marriage to Franklin Woodford took place in 1843. They had two children: Eleanor, who married George D. Buck, of the firm of John M. Page & Co., hardware and stove dealers, and lived in Naugatuck, where she died; Edwin H.

Edwin H. Woodford was born May 28, 1849, in Avon, Conn., and when quite young accompanied his parents to Farmington, where he attended the common schools for several years, and was a pupil for a short time at the Williston Academy at East Hampton, Mass. Shortly after leaving school he entered the employ of the Nonatuck Silk Company, at Florence, Mass., starting in to learn the silk business in a large factory, where several hundred people were at work. Beginning at the finishing department, he had been at work a year and a half when he was appointed assistant superintendent of the establishment. At the end of three years he resigned his position and returned to his home at Farmington to spend a little time. In 1870 Mr. Woodford came to Rockville and engaged with Belding Bros. & Co., silk manufacturers, as superintendent of the "Department of Finishing," where he remained about two years. He then severed his business relations with this company, returned to Farmington and remained at home about one year. In 1873 he came to Rockville again and entered the employ of White, Corbin & Co., thoroughly learning the business, and eventually became the superintendent of the plant. Through several changes of ownership and management he has continued in this position, and is now the superintendent of the White Corbin division of the United States Envelope Company. Mr. Woodford has seen the capacity increase from 400,000 envelopes daily to over 2,000,000 daily.

Mr. Woodford is a Republican; he belongs to Rockville Lodge, No. 18, A. O. U. W. June 12, 1871, he was married to Imogene Corbin, a daughter of Lewis J. and Mary A. (Upham) Corbin. A sketch of Mr. Corbin appears elsewhere. To this marriage was born one daughter, Grace, who is the wife of Thurston Wilcox, and the mother of two children, Margery and Thurston Woodford. Mr. Woodford was married July 1, 1891, to his second wife, Miss Carrie Sprague, daughter of John and Sophronia Sprague, of Hartford. Mr. Woodford resides in a very attractive home situated in Ellington, near the city limits of Rockville.

ANTHONY ADAMS, one of the prominent residents and business men of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, where he is a successful and popular plumber, also carrying hardware and house furnishing goods, was born in Baden, Germany, June 4, 1843, and is a son of George Adams, with whom he came to this country when but ten years old.

Anthony Adams was reared to manhood at Norwich, Conn., where his parents settled at the time of their arrival in the United States, and when he was sixteen years old he served an apprenticeship of three years at the tinner's trade.

Mr. Adams enlisted July 17, 1862, in Co. E, 18th C. V. I., and bore a gallant part in such fierce and bloody contests as those at Winchester, Snicker's Gap, Cedar Creek, New Market, Piedmont, Perryville, Hattown, and the second battle of Winchester. At the first battle of Winchester he was wounded in the head, June 15, 1863, and was finally mustered out at Hartford, Conn., July 7, 1865.

After the war Mr. Adams resumed his work as a tinner, and was employed at Baldwin, Md., Wilmington, Del., and in Pennsylvania, at both Philadelphia and Chester. In 1866 he came to Stafford Springs, and secured employment as a journeyman tinner until 1871. That year he embarked in business for himself, which he has since successfully conducted, taking on crockery, plumbing and stoves at different times. His career has been in every way creditable, and in the passing years he has accumulated a very comfortable competence.

Mr. Adams was married April 15, 1868, to Jennie H. Wardwell, of Palmer, Mass., by whom he has had three children, Wilhelmina, Carl C. and a son who died in childhood.

Mr. Adams is an attendant and supporter of the Congregational Church, and is connected with various secret and fraternal societies: Ionic Lodge, No. 110, F. & A. M.; Stafford Lodge, No. 26, A. O. U. W., and Winter Post, No. 44, G. A. R. For eighteen years he served as chief of the Stafford Springs fire department, with which he has been connected for twenty-five years. He is now serving his seventh term as warden. In politics Mr. Adams is a Democrat, and is one of the broad minded, progressive and public-spirited citizens of that old and historic community.

MYRON PEASE AVERY, a well-known farmer residing in West Stafford, Tolland county, on the town line between Stafford and Somers, is a descendant of (I) Christopher Avery, who came from Old to New England about 1631, and made his home at Salem, Mass. He served as selectman at Gloucester in 1646, and later at Boston and at New London, Conn., where he died.

(II) Capt. James Avery, only son of Christopher, was born in England in 1620, and accompanied his father to New England. In 1643 he married Joanna Greenslade, of Boston, and seven years later settled on a farm in New London, which he had bought, making his home on the site of what is now the town of Groton, about a mile and a half from the river Thames. Capt. Avery took an active part in military and public affairs, and was a useful and influential citizen. He is referred to in the colonial records as Ensign, Lieutenant and Captain Avery, and was a noted Indian fighter of the train-band. He commanded the Pequot allies in the memorable swamp fight, in 1673. In civil affairs he was quite as prominent, being called upon to fill many public positions. He was selectman for twenty years from 1660, and also served as commissioner. He died at his old home in 1700, his wife surviving him fourteen years.

(III) Thomas Avery, son of Capt. James, born in 1651, married in 1693, for his second wife, Mrs. Hannah Bulkeley, daughter of Joshua Raymond. Mr. Avery died in 1737, and his widow in 1742.

(IV) Isaac Avery, son of Thomas, born in 1702, married between 1735 and 1740 Elizabeth Fox, born in 1709, daughter of Samuel Fox. In 1769 he settled in West Stafford, near the Somers line, his barn being in the latter town. The farm has been cultivated by five generations of the family, it being now in the hands of Myron Pease Avery. Isaac Avery died in 1777, and his widow in 1803.

(V) Daniel Avery, son of Isaac, born in 1748, married in 1775 in Tolland, Thankful Benton, who was born in 1752. Mr. Avery died in 1831, and his wife in 1824.

(VI) Henry Avery, son of Daniel, born Aug. 25, 1777, on the farm now occupied by his grandson, married Lydia Hale, of Long Meadow, Mass.,

Jan. 31, 1811. Mrs. Avery was born in 1785. Mr. Avery died April 12, 1872, on the old farm which he had cultivated, and his widow died Oct. 25 of the same year. Their home was a meeting place for the preachers of the Free Will Baptist Church, of which Mr. Avery was a devoted member. Of their children, (1) Daniel is mentioned later. (2) Almira, born April 12, 1814, died in 1893, unmarried. (3) Lydia, born April 24, 1816, was married Nov. 8, 1842, to Asahel Adams, of Suffield, who was born in 1803, followed the work of a traveling peddler, and died in 1877. Mrs. Adams died Dec. 30, 1898. They had Asahel L., Henry E., Lucy J., Lydia E., Louisa C., Lucinda H. and Henry L. (4) Minerva, born April 17, 1818, was the second wife of Erastus Pease, of Ellington, where she died. (5) Charlotte, born March 31, 1821, died June 29, 1856; in 1840, she married Erastus P. Pease, who died in 1875. Their children were Charlotte E., Flavia A. and Julia C. (6) Flavia A., born Feb. 19, 1824, died Jan. 12, 1828.

(VII) Daniel Avery, father of Myron P., and eldest son of Henry Avery, was born on the old farm, April 18, 1812. He was married Jan. 3, 1843, in Ellington, to Polly Pease, who was born Feb. 3, 1824, daughter of Salmon and Polly (Parsons) Pease. Mrs. Polly Avery is now living with her son, Myron P. Daniel Avery attended the district school, and was reared a farmer boy. Remaining on the home place he cared for his parents in their old age, and when they died the farm became his. After the title passed to him he extensively re-modeled the house and made many improvements. He engaged in general farming, and was also a dealer in stock, making a specialty of sheep. He died on the farm Nov. 24, 1881, and was buried in the West cemetery at Somers. Mr. Avery was a Democrat, and held many local offices in the town of Stafford, also serving as representative in the General Assembly in 1868. A man of the highest character and the most absolute integrity, he was greatly respected in the community in which his honorable and honored career was passed.

Mr. and Mrs. Avery had six children: (1) Henry, born Jan. 13, 1844, died Feb. 2, 1844. (2) Erwin D., born Jan. 19, 1845, was married March 4, 1874, to Bertha J. Francis, daughter of William S. and Jane (Evetts) Francis, and is a farmer in Somers. They have had the following children: Daniel F., born Jan. 27, 1875, deceased the following year; Willie E., born March 18, 1876, deceased the same year; Mabel B., born Nov. 23, 1877; Ernest W., Dec. 9, 1879; Edith L., May 19, 1881, who died the following September; Ethel B., Sept. 22, 1882; Blanche U., March 12, 1884; Harold L., Feb. 24, 1887; Forest E., May 18, 1891. (3) Mary E., born Feb. 4, 1847, died in August of the same year. (4) Myra E., born Feb. 3, 1849, died in August of the same year. (5) Myron Pease was born July 1, 1850. (6) Mahlon E., born May 12, 1852, died Feb. 28, 1857.

Myron Pease Avery was born in the house where he is now living, attended the district school, the Ellington high school, and the Wesleyan Academy, at Wilbraham, Mass., and returned home after his schooling had ended, to work on the farm during the summer, and to teach school for several winters at Somers. At the death of his father he bought out the other heirs to the family estate, and he now owns a fine place of 330 acres, part of which lies in Stafford and part in Somers. He is engaged in general farming and dairying, and has also sold firewood and ties to a considerable extent.

Myron P. Avery and Laura E. Francis were married Dec. 25, 1878, in Somers, Conn.; she was born in West Sterling, Mass., Dec. 15, 1858, daughter of William S. and Jane B. (Evetts) Francis. William S. Francis was a needlemaker, and lived at Enfield, Conn. Five children have come to Myron P. Avery and his wife. (1) Daniel, born Nov. 3, 1879, is at home. He was educated in the district schools and the high school at Somers. Owing to the impaired health of his father, he became his assistant, and faithfully helped him on the farm. He has also engaged in cutting and placing on the market, trees, lumber and other wood, and has recently purchased a tract of 250 acres of wood land. He is enterprising, and a worthy son of a most industrious father. Politically he is a Democrat, and socially is a member of Grange No. 105. (2) Gertrude Laura, born Nov. 23, 1882, was educated in the district schools, and Stafford high school, at Stafford Springs, graduating with the class of 1901. She is now teaching her second term of school in Union, Conn. (3) Ruby Almira was educated in the Somers district schools and the Stafford high school, from which she graduated in the class of 1902, in her sixteenth year; she is now in the New Britain Normal School. (4) Llynola, born March 2, 1890, attended the district schools, and is now, in her thirteenth year, a Junior in the Somers high school. (5) Mahlon P. was born Oct. 18, 1897.

Following the footsteps of his father, Mr. Avery is a Democrat, and represented Stafford in the General Assembly of 1887, where he served on the committee on State Prisons, and in that of 1893, where he was on the committee on Humane Institutions. He has also held many of the minor offices in Stafford. He was one of the organizers of the Somers Creamery Association, and since 1893 has been the president of that body. Since he has taken charge of it, the creamery business has been largely increased. Mr. Avery is a successful farmer, and is blessed with a splendid wife and children that would do credit to any parentage.

Mrs. Avery began taking summer boarders in 1899, is energetic and a hard worker, and has contributed to the success which the family has won in the building up of the home and farm. Their place is known as the "Mountain View Farm," from the fact that from many points on this farm may be obtained visions of the surrounding country for miles in all directions.

JOHN CHRISTIANSEN MORTENSEN.
Among the prosperous citizens of Stafford town, Tolland Co., Conn., is John Christiansen Mortensen, who was born March 24, 1857, in Denmark, in the town of Aarre, and is the son of Morten Madsen, also a native of Denmark, a farmer. The father married Maren Hansen, and died in Denmark, although his wife is still living. The children born to these parents were: Ole, living in Denmark; Anders, living in Denmark; Hans, living in Hartford; Mari, who married Jens Jensen and lives in West Stafford; John C., our subject.

John Christiansen Mortensen received his education in his native land, which he left at the age of fourteen and engaged in farming until he embarked for America, with the exception of the time he spent in the Danish army, seventeen months in all. In May, 1882, he sailed from Hamburg on a steamer and arrived in New York June 3, 1882, from which city he went direct to Hartford. There for one year he worked on a farm in West Hartford, for Shepard and Converse, and then found employment in the axe factory at Collinsville, Conn., where he remained for six years. His next change was when he returned to Hartford and engaged with the Jewell Belting Company, for two years. At the expiration of that time he went to West Hartford and worked for Owen Goodwin for one year, and later worked for Deacon Ramsey for one year. After this, he worked for Austin Whiting for one year, and in 1889 came to Stafford town and in the spring purchased the J. W. Dean place, near Orcuttville, consisting of fifty-five acres of excellent land, to which he added in 1896 the Luman Orcutt place, of fifty acres, which was in the vicinity of his first farm. On this property he carries on general farming together with a milk business, running a milk wagon to Stafford Springs, where he has built up an excellent trade during the twelve years he has operated the route. At all times he keeps twelve cows to supply his customers, in addition to a number of calves and other stock, and is becoming very prosperous.

On Aug. 25, 1884, Mr. Mortensen was married to Hannah Christiansen, a daughter of Jens Christiansen, and they have three children, Mary, John and Lena, all at home, very bright, interesting children.

Socially, Mr. Mortensen is a member of the A. O. U. W. of Stafford, and in politics is a Republican, but not an office seeker, being too much occupied with his own affairs to find time to engage in political strife. In religious matters, he attends the Episcopal Church, although he was a member of the Lutheran Church in his native land. In the truest sense of the term, he is a self-made man, having come to this country without anything and in twenty years placed himself in his present excellent financial condition by his own, unaided hard work and constant habits of thrift. No man in the entire town deserves more credit for his success in life, than does Mr. Mortensen, and none stands higher in public esteem.

CHARLES H. PELLETT, one of the enterprising business men of Danielson, Windham County, descends from an old Canterbury family. His great grandfather, Jesse Pellett, was a native of that town, and there followed farming, west of Canterbury Green. He was also a school teacher. His wife was a Parks, and belonged to one of the old families of the place. He died at the age of forty-seven, leaving a widow, two sons and a daughter. His widow and son, Hezekiah, moved to Pennsylvania, where they died.

Amasa Pellett, the other son, the grandfather of Charles H., remained in Canterbury, and his home was located at the four corners west of Canterbury Green. There he followed farming. Born in 1789, he died Jan. 14, 1846. He was married in April, 1811, to Lydia Bingham, of Scotland, Conn., a daughter of Uriah and Eunice (Webb) Bingham, of Scotland, Conn. Mr. Bingham died in the Gay Head District, town of Canterbury, and his daughter, Lydia, died Nov. 1, 1859, at the age of seventy-one years. To Amasa Pellett and his wife were born: (1) Caroline C., born Dec. 26, 1811, who married Hira Smith, of Canterbury, moved to Vermont, making the journey with an ox team, and there died; (2) Nelson B., born June 26, 1814, who married Harriet Treat, of Portland, Conn., and was living at Middletown, at the time of his death, Jan. 16, 1896; (3) Edwin, born in April, 1817, who married Lydia Hall, of Plainfield, and lived at Whitinsville, Mass., where he died at the age of sixty-three years; (4) Lucinda, born Nov. 12, 1819, deceased June 8, 1858, who married Rowland Gardiner, and had her home in Griswold, Conn.; (5) Lydia M., born May 30, 1823, who married Francis S. Young, and had her home in Canterbury, Conn., where she died May 5, 1844; (6) Lucretia, born June 11, 1825, who married Henry H. Hiscox, of Jewett City, Conn., and died Sept. 8, 1847; (7) John D.

John D. Pellett, the youngest of the family, was born in Canterbury, Dec. 30, 1832, and was reared on the old home farm at the four corners, where he remained until he was fourteen years old, when he entered Slater's Mill at Jewett City. There he was employed for twelve years at weaving, cording and spinning, and at last as a section hand in the weave shop. About 1856 Mr. Pellett bought a small place in Griswold, which he occupied for nine years, and then sold it in 1865, returning to his native town where he bought a farm of forty acres a half mile east of Westminster church. To this he made subsequent additions until he now has some 135 acres. In the years that are past he was engaged quite extensively in farming and dairying, allowing the heavier work, however, in recent years to fall on the younger generation.

Mr. Pellett is a strong Republican, and for fifteen years past served his party as registrar of voters and has been selectman. He and his wife are both members of the Westminster Congregational Church, and for many years he has been a member of the society's committee.

Mr. Pellett was married Nov. 8, 1852, by the Rev. Daniel D. Lyon, in Jewett, to Harriet Robbins, a native of Plainfield, and a daughter of George and Julia (Tanner) Robbins. To this union were born: Charles Herbert, born June 28, 1855; Lydia A., born Aug. 31, 1857, who married Luman Bennett, of Canterbury, and has two sons, Byron A. and Howard L.; Ella L., born Jan. 31, 1859, who died July 21, of the same year; Bertha M., born Feb. 4, 1863, the wife of Elmer Bennett, of Canterbury, who has one son, Arthur C.; Willis A., born June 9, 1873, who died the second day of the following August; Albert H., born Nov. 15, 1874, who married Susie Hopkins, of Brooklyn, Conn., has had one son, Frank G., born Sept. 14, 1900, and remains on the old farm.

Charles H. Pellett was born in Jewett City, Conn., and received his education in the common schools of Griswold and Canterbury. After he reached the age of fifteen, he ceased attendance at school and devoted himself to farm work. For a few years he was employed by the month, but presently was able to buy a farm of a hundred acres in Canterbury, which he operated for about seven and a half years, and then sold, to buy another property. This was east of the church in Westminster Society, and there he resided for some eleven years, carrying on his farm, saw mill, and lumber business. In the fall of 1896 Mr. Pellett removed to Danielson, where he purchased the next year of Cyrus St. Peter, a lively stable on Furnace street. There he has continued to the present time, building up a good trade, and meeting with large success through his earnest efforts and determined spirit. He is also proprietor of a large blacksmith and wood working shop.

Mr. Pellett is a Republican, and belongs to the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. U. W., of Danielson. Both he and his wife are largely interested in Grange matters. Mr. Pellett was a member of Canterbury Grange, which he served as Master, and was later Overseer of Scotland Grange. Both husband and wife belong to Killingly Grange, of which he was Master for two years.

Mr. Pellett was married Jan. 30, 1877, to Flora Smith. Her branch of the Smith family is as follows: Her great-great-grandfather, Joseph Smith, was the first of her family in the town. His son, John, was born in Canterbury, where his entire life was passed. Walter Smith, the son of John, was also a lifetime resident of Canterbury. He married Lydia Mudge, and their son, Walter, the father of Mrs. Pellett, was born in Canterbury, Conn., Feb. 12, 1811. In 1835 he married Susannah Lyon, and to them were born: Henry, Helen, Columbus, Mellen W., Elbert, and Flora, who is Mrs. Pellett. Walter Smith died in August, 1893.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Pellett were the parents of the following children: Clinton Forrest, born Oct. 26, 1877; Ella May, Dec. 16, 1879; Ray Walter, July 18, 1882; Helen Susan, Nov. 21, 1886; Myrtice Alma, Aug. 31, 1890; and Everett Clayton, Aug. 6, 1896.

ARETAS F. KIBBE, a prominent merchant of Kibbe, otherwise known as North Somers, in the town of Somers, Tolland county, belongs to an old and honored family in that part of Connecticut, whose early history is presented elsewhere with the sketch of Horatio Kibbe.

Frederick Kibbe, grandfather of Aretas F., was born March 29, 1762, in North Somers, near the present residence of his grandson; he was the son of Daniel and Mary (Pratt) Kibbe. He was a farmer and a large land owner, and was extensively engaged in milling operations, operating a saw and grist mill. He also bought cattle, which he drove to Providence, R. I., and other large cities, where they were sold to local dealers. He died March, 1839, leaving a good name, and a reputation for fair and upright dealing with all. In politics he was a Democrat, with no aspirations for office holdings. He married Zelinda Pratt, and they had the following children: Silas, who married Sally Waterhouse and engaged in farming in Somers, where he died; Zelinda, married to Calvin Kibbe, a farmer of Somers; Caroline, who married Joseph Lathrop, and died in Long Meadow, Mass.; Betsy who married Shubael Pease, and resided in Hampden, Mass.; Jerusha, who married Emmons Arnold, and died in Somerville, Conn.; Frederick, the father of Aretas F.; Matilda, who married Walter Ainsworth, and lived in Somers, where they both died.

Frederick Kibbe, the father of Aretas F., was born in 1803 in North Somers. His early life was spent at work in the mill for his father and for a time he was owner and operator of the same. His later years were devoted to farming. He died March 4, 1850. April 11, 1831, Frederick Kibbe married Naomi E. Cooley, born Oct. 27, 1812, in Somers, daughter of Jonathan M. and Naomi (Hills) Cooley. Mrs. Kibbe died June 17, 1893, at the age of eighty years. To them came children as follows: Caroline, born Nov. 6, 1831, who first married Henry Endicott, after his death became the wife of Henry Champlin, and is now a resident of Long Meadow, Mass.; Elvira N., born March 21, 1834, who was drowned at the age of twenty-five years; Harriet, born June 28, 1836, who first married Earl Bugbee, subsequently George Norton, also deceased, and died in Long Meadow, Mass., March 1, 1884; Frederick A., born May 20, 1838, deceased, Jan. 21, 1849; Mary M., born Dec. 31, 1843, who married Comfort C. Hunt, and lived in North Somers, where she died Nov. 1, 1888; Aretas F.

Aretas F. Kibbe was born in North Somers, Sept. 6, 1850, and there secured his education in the common schools. His early life was spent in hard work on the farm, where he remained, caring for his mother, and at her death he bought out the other heirs. He has a farm of 150 acres, which received his entire attention until 1895, when he purchased his present store from William D. Harlow. Mr. Kibbe carries the stock of a general country store, and has built up a fine business.

Mr. Kibbe and Miss Ida L. Cooley were married Oct. 26, 1873. Mrs. Kibbe was born Nov. 7, 1854, daughter of Erasmus and Abbie C. (Hitchcock) Cooley. They have had nine children: (1) Luetta Marian, born Aug. 17, 1874, married William G. Griswold, Nov. 12, 1893, and is living in East Long Meadow, Mass. They have had five children; Leroy William, born May 18, 1894; Esther Ida, May 9, 1896; Mildred E., March 31, 1898; Maud Elinor, Jan. 21, 1900; Leila Luetta, Oct. 15, 1902. (2) Percy Aretas was born Sept. 20, 1875, and married Lina M. Hills, Oct. 15, 1902. (3) Florence A., born March 24, 1877, married Birney W. Kibbe, of Somers, Feb. 14, 1897, and they have four children: Franklin R., born Dec. 6, 1898; Alfred A., Aug. 12, 1900; Bernice Viola, Sept. 25, 1901; Lillian Ida, Dec. 9, 1902. (4) George Frederick was born Jan. 11, 1879. (5) Herbert Marshall was born June 20, 1882. (6) Harriet Edna was born Jan. 9, 1885. (7) Clarence Ernest was born Aug. 25, 1894. (8) Daniel was born July 14, 1896. (9) Frederick was born Feb. 19, 1901.

Mr. Kibbe is a Republican and has filled many town offices, having served on the board of selectmen and the school board, was assessor, is a justice of the peace, since 1895 has been postmaster, and in 1903 was a representative in the Legislature. Mr. and Mrs. Kibbe are members of the East Long Meadow Baptist Church.

Erasmus Cooley, father of Mrs. Kibbe, was born in 1817 in North Somers, and followed farming throughout life. He died in the house where he was born, Feb. 12, 1881. For his first wife he married Rachel Bartlett, and for his second wife, Feb. 16, 1857, Abbie C. Hitchcock, who died Sept. 8, 1872. To this marriage were born two children: Ida L., Mrs. Kibbe; and Emma Louise, born in 1858, who married Isaac Pease, and died April 11, 1897, in Springfield, Massachusetts.

SETH OSCAR COLLINS is a worthy representative of the farming interests of Coventry, Tolland Co., Conn., where he is well and favorably known, not only as an industrious tiller of the soil, but as an upright and thoroughly honorable man.

Jacob Hicks Collins, the father of Seth O., was born Jan. 16, 1813, and was married Feb. 15, 1837, to Julia E. Redding, a native of Cape Cod, Mass., who was born Aug. 10, 1820, and died May 4, 1893, the husband and father passing away Nov. 22, of the same year. To them were born: Carrie L., born March 26, 1838, who married S. E. Handy, of Cape Cod, Mass.; Henry D., born July 25, 1839, deceased Aug. 4, 1839; Julia N., born Oct. 28, 1840, deceased Nov. 2, 1890, whose first husband was Daniel Dimock, of West Suffield, and her second, Frank Granger, of East Granby; Calvin D., born May 15, 1842, deceased July 18, 1882, who lived in Windham, died in Coventry, and whose son Calvin D., is a resident of Willimantic; Edwin F., born March 28, 1847, who served in the 6th, C. V. I., was wounded in the battle of Richmond, and died in the hospital, Oct. 16, 1864; Lucy E., born July 5, 1849, who died Sept. 5, 1852; Laura I., born March 28, 1851, who died when but a year old; Seth Oscar, born Aug. 14, 1852.

Jacob Hicks Collins lived with his parents at Providence, R. I., where he became a machinist, and from being much employed in mills, became a millman himself, and was employed as a machinist in mills at Voluntown and Eagleville. In 1871 he came to Coventry and bought of Elijah Robertson a farm in the south part of the town, which he cultivated until his death. A Republican in politics he always made it a point to vote. His wife was a member of the Methodist Church.

Previous to the purchase of the Robertson property the family had made their home for a time in the town of Coventry, and there Seth O. Collins was born. He received his education in the district school, and was well rooted and grounded in those principles and facts that underlie a useful life. Jan. 1, 1873, he was married to Mary Alice Bogue, a daughter of John Corey and Lucy (Littlefield) Bogue, a granddaughter of John and Lucy (Latimer) Bogue, and a descendant of one of three Bogue Brothers who came over from Scotland, her remote progenitors settling in Saybrook at a very early day. Her father, John C. Bogue, was born in Lyme, Conn., Dec. 16, 1818, and with his wife is still living in Coventry. To them were born: Elizabeth, who died in 1880; Lovillow, born March 6, 1846; Mary A., who is Mrs. Collins, born Jan. 6, 1848; George L., a farmer in Andover.

Mr. and Mrs. S. O. Collins have three children: Bertha E., born Jan. 7, 1874, married George Gadbois, Feb. 17, 1893, by whom she has had the following children: George, born April 15, 1894; Helen, Oct. 6, 1896; Faith, Jan. 22, 1898; and John, June 7, 1900. Blanche G., born March 30, 1880, is at home. Oscar E. was born Oct. 6, 1885.

Seth Oscar Collins was reared to manhood in Coventry, and continued at school until he was sixteen years old. After his marriage he and his wife located on his father's farm, which in time came into his possession. Mr. Collins has grown up as a farmer and thoroughly understands his work, as his farm of one hundred acres by its tidy appearance and rich returns amply shows. In addition to his farming, he owns a steam grist mill and saw mill, in which he does custom work. Dairying at the present time is the chief business, and for this purpose he has on the farm about thirty-five head of cattle. For fifteen years he peddled milk in Willimantic, and for five years did not miss a single trip. Some four years ago he gave up his milk route.

Mr. Collins is one of the hardest workers in the town, and he says that five hours is all that he needs for sleep. His milk is sold in Providence, R. I., and he gives the closest personal attention to every part of his work. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion, Mr. and Mrs. Collins, as well as their daughter, Blanche, are members of the South Coventry Congregational Church.

GEORGE WASHINGTON CRAWFORD. One of the best known and highly respected citizens of Union, Tolland Co., Conn., is George Washington Crawford, who was born May 28, 1849, in Union, Conn., near the Centre, the son of Daniel Taft and Martha (Underwood) Crawford.

(I) Great-great-grandfather John Crawford, the ancestor of all the Crawfords who have recently lived in Union, was the brother of James Crawford, Sr., and emigrated from Scotland to the north of Ireland, where he lived until 1732, when he sailed from Belfast to Boston with his family, consisting of a wife and four sons. They were shipwrecked on Sable Island and his wife was drowned. After reaching Boston, he established himself as a merchant. The eldest son, also John, lived in Boston, with his father, and married, but had no children. One son settled in Townsend, Mass., and another went to Pennsylvania. Hugh, another son, who was nineteen years of age when he came to this country, was worthy of his good father. The name Crawford is Scotch in origin and all those bearing it trace their ancestry back to some native of Scotland. James Crawford, Sr., a brother of John, was also of Scotch Irish descent and first settled in Newton, Mass., but afterwards came to Union, where he was made an inhabitant in 1740, and land surveyor in 1743. In time he became a large holder of land, purchasing property of Samuel Wells, of Hartford, in January, 1742 and 1743.

(II) Great-great-grandfather Hugh Crawford was born in the Old World and came to America when nineteen years old. After living for a few years in Newton, Mass., he came to Union, buying land of James Eno in 1740, and was voted an inhabitant of Union, Dec. 13, 1743. Hugh Crawford married Margaret Campbell, who came from Ireland in 1731, and died Aug. 8, 1808. To this marriage were born: Elizabeth, born Dec. 21, 1739, at Newton, Mass., who married William Martin, of Woodstock, Conn.; Sarah, born Oct. 18, 1745, at Union, married to Daniel Loomis; Samuel, born July 22, 1748, in Union; John, born March 12, 1754, in Union, who married Dec. 14, 1775, Dorcas Ward, and died Oct. 13, 1776, of camp fever taken while nursing his brother, Samuel. His widow married Feb. 24, 1778, Noah Loomis, of Windham, Vt. Hugh Crawford was a large landholder and a weaver by trade, and he and his son, John, both died the same day, Oct. 13, 1776, of camp fever, and were buried at the same time in the Union cemetery. Hugh, his wife and all their children were noted for their large stature.

(III) Deacon Samuel Crawford was a very tall man, over six feet, and possessed great powers of endurance, as well as wonderful mental ability. He represented his native town (Union) in the State Legislature during the greater portion of the time from 1788 to 1809, and in this period there were two sessions yearly, in May and October. Deacon Crawford was a member of twenty-two of these sessions. From 1782 to 1804 he served most acceptably as selectman of Union.

For his time, Deacon Crawford was a man of wealth, at one time owning more than 1,000 acres of land, a large portion of it covered with the best pine timber. On the marriage of each of his children, he gave them a farm, and thus his property was divided among many. Deacon Crawford was positive in his religious belief and was a conscientious member of the Baptist Church at West Woodstock for many years. Baptist meetings were held at one time in Union, but there were not enough people in that belief to justify continuing them, so Deacon Crawford went to Woodstock, Conn., for his church services. At that time all property was taxed to support the church of the State, and Deacon Crawford once had three cows taken by the constables to assist in paying the salary of Rev. Horton. Although he was a firm man and had a strong will, Deacon Crawford had a kind disposition and no father did more for his children than he. For his day, opportunities and surroundings, he was a most remarkable man, and in his remote country town he labored for the good of his fellow creatures.

In addition to his services as a private citizen, Deacon Crawford was a soldier in the Revolution, during the dark and troublesome days of the summer of 1776, when nearly one-third of the army was sick with camp fever. Like many others, he was taken down with it, and as soon as possible, his brother John came for him and took the sick man home to Union. There he was tenderly nursed by father and brother, who gave up their lives to save him.

On April 18, 1771, Deacon Crawford married Sarah Work, a daughter of Ingoldsby Work, of Ashford, Conn.; she died May 25, 1793, aged forty-two, having had ten children. On Dec. 26, 1793, he married Olive Eddy, of Woodstock, Conn. By his first marriage, Deacon Crawford had the following family: Luther, born Feb. 25, 1772, who married June 14, 1792, Elizabeth Wilbur, of Woodstock, Conn., and died in Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 20, 1853, whither he had removed in 1835, and where his widow died March 30, 1855; Calvin, born Dec. 21, 1773, who died Aug. 13, 1776, having been scalded to death; Lavina, born Aug. 26, 1775, who married Joseph P. Corbin of Union, and died Feb. 4, 1796; John, born April 4, 1776, who married Susannah Hayward (or Howard), daughter of Jonathan Hayward, April 24, 1800, and was a natural inventor, making wooden plows with steel points and straps of iron on the sides, long before iron plows came into use, and who was also the undertaker and coffin maker of the town, besides holding many of the town offices and being a very prominent man in the community; Samuel, born July 4, 1779, who married Aug. 20, 1801, Lydia Howard, of Ashford, Conn., daughter of Jonathan Howard, and who was a wealthy man, deacon of the West Woodstock Baptist Church and very prominent in military affairs of the State, being called Lieut. Crawford; Benjamin, who was born Oct. 18, 1781, and died May 25, 1789; Walter, who was born Jan. 30, 1784, and died March 10, 1786; Ingoldsby W., grandfather of our subject; Sarah, born Sept. 15, 1788, who married Benjamin Chamberlain, of Woodstock, Conn.; Anna, who was born March 29, 1791, and married Wheeler Phillips.

By his second marriage, Deacon Crawford had three children: Polly, who was born Nov. 7, 1794, and married Nathan Preston, of Ashford, Conn.; Charles, born April 1, 1796, who married Polly Preston, of Ashford, Conn., and died at Rockford, Ill., Sept. 18, 1864, his widow dying in the same town, April 6, 1864; Chester, born in 1799, who died young. Deacon Samuel Crawford died May 11, 1824, at Sturbridge, Mass., where he had gone to look at a farm he proposed buying for his daughter, Polly. In his death, his family lost a devoted father and the community one of its best citizens.

(IV) Hon. Ingoldsby Work Crawford was born Aug. 7, 1786, in Union, Conn., and spent the greater portion of his life upon a farm given him by his father, in the eastern part of the town and part of it in the town of Woodstock. When young, he injured his back and consequently was unable to do any very hard work. Although he received but limited educational advantages, he was a well-read man and always was well posted on current events. During his lifetime, he held many offices of public trust, being collector of the port of New London, under the administration of Andrew Jackson, of whom he was a warm supporter, and was associate justice of Tolland county court and a member of the State convention, held in Hartford, in August, 1818, which framed the State constitution, one of the greatest blessings of the State.

Socially Hon. I. W. Crawford was a very prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, holding high offices in both the grand lodge and grand chapter, and he often attended meetings of the bodies in various parts of the country. Realizing the worth of a good education, he was much interested in the schools of his native town, but declined any public office connected with them, preferring to act as a frequent visitor and member of the examining committee to license teachers. At one time he prepared an arithmetic, but on account of the cost of publication declined to give it to the world. In 1816, 1817, 1818, 1819, 1820, 1822, 1824 and 1825, he was a member of the State Legislature, and took a very active part in the deliberations of that body, his name being associated with many excellent measures brought before the lawmakers of those times. Towards the end of his life, he sold his farm and resided on the Dr. Hammond place. In religion he was a strong Universalist and one of the most honorable of men. His death occurred Nov. 24, 1867, and he was buried in the East cemetery in Union.

On May 29, 1810, Mr. Crawford was married to Rhoda Taft, of Uxbridge, Mass. Mrs. Crawford died April 6, 1864, aged seventy-one years. To this marriage were born: Calista, born Aug. 1, 1811, who married (first) Nov. 21, 1832, Sanford Lyon, of Woodstock, Conn., and (second) Abijah Sessions, of Union, Conn.; Daniel Taft, father of our subject; Caroline, born Jan. 17, 1816, who married Nov. 29, 1835, David L. Newell, of Union; Sarah Ann, who was born March 9, 1819, and died April 25, 1838; Logan, who was born Jan. 13, 1822, married Sept. 22, 1851, Helen Marr Rising, of New York State, is a farmer in Iowa Valley, Iowa, and a fine scholar and a teacher for several years; Marcia, born Nov. 15, 1824, who married March 29, 1846, John Tyler Converse, of Ashford, and after his death, Alfred Lambertson, and lives in Iowa; Ossian, born Nov. 3, 1827, who married March 17, 1853, Lavina Shepard, daughter of Samuel Shepard of Sturbridge, Mass., and who taught school many winters in Connecticut, but is a carpenter and wheelwright by trade; Harriet, born March 19, 1831, who married Isaac Harbison, of Willington, Conn., a farmer and trader; Alonzo, born March 3, 1834, who married March 1, 1859, Caroline Mann, was divorced and married Nellie A. Burdick, in California, after her death, married, April 8, 1882, Addie A. Sanford, and is now a teacher in California.

(V) Daniel Taft Crawford, father of George W., was born Aug. 27, 1813, in Union, Conn., and died March 19, 1867, while on a visit in Kansas City, Mo., aged fifty-three years. He was married the first time March 24, 1835, to Minerva Howard, of Woodstock, Conn., a daughter of Johnathan Howard, who was born Feb. 10, 1818, and died Jan. 30, 1837, in Union, Conn. By this first marriage he had a daughter, Minerva, who was born Dec. 25, 1836, married, Aug. 22, 1861, Richard B. Stroud, of Stafford, and died, Jan. 20, 1875, at North Grosvenor Dale, Connecticut.

On Sept. 5, 1837, Mr. Crawford married Martha Underwood, a daughter of Uriah and Martha (Stanton) Underwood, of Wales, Mass., who was born Nov. 19, 1817, and died Sept. 14, 1900. Mrs. Crawford, wife of Daniel, was born in Monson, and died in Union, Conn. To the second marriage five children were born: (1) Luther, who was born Aug. 29, 1839, married, Nov. 20, 1861, Jane Crawford, a daughter of Laurens Crawford, a native of Staffordville, Conn.; he is a farmer in Stafford. (2) Oscar, who was born Dec. 14, 1840, married, Aug. 7, 1862, Sarah J. Marcy, daughter of Plimpton Marcy, of Sturbridge, Mass.; he was a mason and contractor by trade, and died in March, 1901, in San Antonio, Texas. (3) Sarah Ann, who was born March 4, 1843, married, May 1, 1863, Dwight Whittemore, of Sturbridge, Mass., and after his death, June 21, 1864, she married George W. Hunt, a Methodist minister, in January, 1876; by her first marriage she had one child, Dwight, who was born May 14, 1864, and graduated at East Greenwich Seminary and at the medical school of Boston University, and is now a practicing physician in Brockton, Mass. By her second marriage, she had three children: Mattie E., who was born Dec. 22, 1876; George L., July 23, 1878; and Ruth W., July 6, 1883. (4) George W., our subject. (5) Martha, who was born July 26, 1851, married, Feb. 10, 1874, George W. Hunt, and died Jan. 2, 1875. All of the children were a great comfort to their parents and reflected credit upon the wise and tender guidance given them in their youth.

Daniel Crawford was a leather cutter in the shoe shops of Union in his early life. Later he became county surveyor of Tolland county and held that office for a number of years, finally engaging in farming. Physically, he was a very large man, and early in life a healthy one, but he became afflicted with dyspepsia and suffered greatly from this disease. Politically, he was a very strong Republican, and always took a prominent part in town affairs, serving as selectman for a number of years, also as justice of the peace and in many of the minor town offices. In his younger days he was a successful school teacher, and always took an interest in school affairs. In religious matters he was in sympathy with the Universalist Church, but was not a member of any religious denomination. During his life, he proved himself an upright, honorable man, who was highly respected by everyone who knew him.

(VI) George Washington Crawford was a native of Union, where his ancestors bore an important part for many generations; he received his primary education in the schools of that place, but later was given the advantage of a year's course at Lewis Academy at Southington, Conn. When eighteen years of age, he left school and engaged with Manning, Bowman & Co., of Middletown, Conn., in the spinning and turning department of their silverware factory. There he remained for two years and then went to Springfield, Mass., and was engaged with J. G. Chase & Co., wholesale lumbermen, for three years. About this time, he engaged with the Bemis & Coll Tool Co., at Springfield, Mass., in the polishing department, continuing with them for one year. For the next five or six years, he was engaged in traveling through many states in various positions, and enjoyed his trips exceedingly.

In 1874 Mr. Crawford returned to Union and commenced working on the home farm on Mashapaug Lake, and has continued this calling ever since, being very successful. His farm consists of sixty-five acres of excellent farming land, adjoining the town of Sturbridge, Mass., and on Mashapaug Lake. Since coming into possession of this property, Mr. Crawford has greatly improved it, and rebuilt the house and other buildings. On this property he carries on general farming, and his crops testify to his good management.

On Aug. 11, 1875, Mr. Crawford was married to Ida Louisa Marcy, who was born Feb. 5, 1860, a daughter of Plimpton and Caroline (Young) Marcy, of Sturbridge, Mass. Mr. Marcy operated the lead mine at Sturbridge, Mass., and also was the inventor of a well known stove polish. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Crawford were born: Mattie Ida, who was born Oct. 1, 1876, and died May 4, 1880; Dwight Luther, who was born June 27, 1879, and resides in Boston, being connected with the Ellbridge, Baker & Bane wholesale grocery house of Boston; Minerva Calista, born June 9, 1881, who is still at home.

In politics, Mr. Crawford is a staunch Republican and has served most acceptably as selectman for two years; on the board of relief for two years; is constable; and many times was chosen as a member of the grand jury. Both Mr. and Mrs. Crawford attend the Methodist Church of Mashapaug. Few people can trace their ancestry back through an unbroken line to so honorable a founder, or count among the various representatives of the family name, so numerous a collection of illustrious men, as can Mr. Crawford. Generation after generation have Crawfords lived and left their mark upon the onward march of civilization and progress. No stain mars the fair page of their history, for they were all God-fearing men and women, living honorable lives and rearing their large families in accordance with their ideas of morality and Christian precepts. All professions have been represented by them, although the greater number seem to have turned towards tilling the soil as a preferred occupation. However, wherever found, the descendants of that good man, John Crawford, do him honor and uphold the prestige of the name, not only in Union, but throughout the State of Connecticut.

JOHN HENRY STEELE was born Jan. 1, 1856, in Tolland, Conn., on the farm which adjoins the one where he is now living.

Henry Emerson Steele, father of John H., was born Feb. 27, 1833, in West Hartford, Conn., and has spent the greater part of his life as a farmer. In 1858 he was appointed overseer of the House of Refuge in New York, a position which he held for seven years. When very young he came to Tolland, where he worked as a farmer, and after a time purchased the Ansel Barbour farm of ninety-six acres, which he sold on removing to New York. When he came from that city he bought the farm back, and made it his home until 1882. That year he removed to Stafford, where he purchased a bakery, which he conducted for two years, and then sold it in order to make his home in Wales, Mass. There he has since lived, practically retired. A Democrat in politics, he held the office of assessor in Tolland two terms, and was a representative from that town to the General Assembly of 1882, serving on the committee on Highways and Bridges. A Baptist in his religious faith, he is a devoted member of the church of that order in Wales.

Henry Emerson Steele was married to Matilda Holt, who was born in September, 1834, and was a daughter of John and Weighty (Moore) Holt, of Colchester. To this union came the following children: John H.; Charles, who died at the age of two years; George, who married Rosie Boskitt, and is a loom fixer at Wales, Mass.; Mary, who married Herbert E. Shaw, of Wales, a manufacturer.

Mason Steele, the grandfather of John Henry, was born in West Hartford, and died when quite a young man. His wife died two hours later, and both were buried in one grave in West Hartford. Their children were as follows: Mary, who married William Pellet, and is now dead; Frederick, who married and lived in the city of New York, where he died; Sarah, who married Daniel Richmond, and lives in New York; Henry Emerson; Lucy, who married Julius Gleason, of Southbridge, Mass., and is now dead.

John Henry Steele largely received his education in the Tolland schools, but for a time was a pupil in the city schools of New York, while his father lived in that city. Leaving school at the age of seventeen years, the young man became engaged in the teaming business in Tolland, which he followed for some four years, when he went to farming near Hartford, and for a year or more had a milk route in that city. In 1878 Mr. Steele came back to Tolland and settled on the Eaton farm of 118 acres, and devoted himself to general agriculture. Before 1893 he was an extensive grower of tobacco, which he abandoned that year. He owns some fourteen cows, and their milk is made into butter on the farm.

Mr. Steele is a Mason, and at one time belonged to the Tolland Grange, of which his wife was also a member. Mrs. Steele belongs to the Methodist Church, and her husband attends the services of that communion. Mr. Steele is a Democrat in his party faith, and has served as grand juror for two years. In 1900 he was elected representative to the General Assembly, where he serves on the committee on the School Fund.

Mr. Steele was married April 12, 1877, to Alice Maria Webster, a daughter of Gardner and Martha (Drake) Webster, of Tolland, and to him and his wife were born: Leila, born Oct. 17, 1880, at home, and engaged in teaching school in Ellington; Mason Raymond, born April 6, 1890.

Mrs. Steele is a great-granddaughter of Simeon Webster, who served in the Revolution, and for his gallant conduct received a pension of eight dollars a month. He died in 1841 at the age of eighty-four years. Minton Webster, her grandfather, was a prosperous farmer.

CHARLES CLINTON ANDERSON. The Anderson name is an old and highly respected one in Connecticut, and among its worthy representatives who during a long life became thoroughly esteemed and widely known, was Farmer Thomas Anderson, whose birth occurred in Willington, Tolland county, in this State. His death was caused by old age, and his remains lie in the old cemetery called Moose Meadow. This estimable man was the great-grandfather of Charles Clinton Anderson, who is one of the leading citizens of Stafford, Conn., and the subject of this biography.

Jacob Anderson, the son of Thomas, was born in Willington, also, and became a business man and manufacturer in that place, his specialty being "tin bakers," which he sold through the surrounding country, doing an extensive business. His life was not a long one, as he died at the age of thirty years. The name of the grandmother was Julia Rockwell, and their children were: Mary, who married a Mr. Smith; Clinton, who died young; Julius C.; and Francis, who was a prominent citizen of Minneapolis, Minn., president of the National Bank, of that city, deceased in September or October, 1902.

Julius Converse Anderson, the father of Charles Clinton, was born in Stafford, Conn., Oct. 27, 1830, and died Dec. 27, 1896, at the age of sixty-six years. His marriage took place in 1855 to Mary Jane Page, who was born Oct. 11, 1830, a daughter of Stephen and Mary (Smith) Page, of Stafford. She died Sept. 6, 1869; two sons were born of this union: Charles C., born Aug. 25, 1856, who died Oct. 29, 1857; and Charles Clinton (2), born Sept. 19, 1857. The second marriage of Julius Anderson was to Mary Bidwell, of Ashford, Conn., who now lives with Charles C. Anderson. The two children of this second marriage died.

Mr. Anderson in early life was a painter and carried on this business both in Belchertown and in Stafford, later buying the livery business of Edward Clark, of the latter place, and conducting it until the time of his retirement from activity, several years prior to his death. The business was later conducted by Lyman Cushman, to whom he sold it.

Mr. Anderson did much buying and selling of horses, bringing many fine animals from the West, and being one of the most extensive dealers in his locality. In politics he was a staunch Republican, but he was no office seeker.

Charles Clinton Anderson was born in Stafford, Conn., Sept. 19, 1857, and was educated in the schools of his native town. When about sixteen years of age he began to assist his father in the livery business, and was so engaged until the business in Stafford was sold, when he took charge of a stable for his father in Palmer, Mass., successfully managing that for one year. Returning to Stafford, Mr. Anderson then bought the business which was conducted by Charles Wadsworth, and for the following eight or ten years managed this with success, disposing of it to enter into the feed and grain business under E. C. Dennis, where he remained for seven years. The next year he was employed by the firm of Needham & Bowen, but in the following year went to Boston, entering the employ of the Thompson & Houston electric light works, located in Lynn, Massachusetts.

Mr. Anderson then returned to his old home and again engaged in the livery business, managing the "Springs House" stables for A. Needham until 1898, at which time he removed to his present location, and the next year purchased the completely equipped stable of which he is still owner and proprietor. Mr. Anderson has a very complete establishment for the accommodation of the public, his carriages of all kinds being of modern construction, his horses well cared for, and his equipment the best to be found in any similar stable in his neighborhood.

Mr. Anderson was married May 12, 1896, to Ellen Jane Converse, a daughter of Albert Ezra and Emma Jane (Allen) Converse, of Stafford, and to this union has been born: Verna C., Nov. 28, 1897; Ruth F., Sept. 30, 1901. Mrs. Anderson is a valued member of the Congregational Church of Stafford Springs. In politics Mr. Anderson is a Republican, but is too busily engaged in his own affairs to care to accept the duties of political office. Fraternally he is connected with Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M., of Stafford; with Wausean Lodge, No. 32, I. O. O. F., of Stafford; and with Windham Encampment, I. O. O. F., No. 10, of Willimantic, Connecticut.

CHARLES R. HALL is a prosperous and thrifty farmer of North Coventry, Tolland county, and descends from a branch of the Hall family that made Rhode Island its home for many generations. The name is a difficult one to trace in New England annals on account of the great number of that name who came at different times from the Old World to make their home on these shores. Twenty-eight came in the years prior to 1660, and seven of these were John Hall.

The great-grandfather of Charles R. Hall was Freeborn Hall, and his son, Solomon, was born and lived in West Greenwich. He married Phoebe Green, of Coventry, R. I.; he died young, his widow living to be eighty-four. To Solomon and Phoebe Hall were born: Alma C., the wife of Welcome Johnson, of East Providence, R. I.; Amos, the father of Charles R.; Eunice, the wife of Jefferson H. Welch, of Tolland; one who died very young.

Amos Hall was born at West Greenwich, R. I., June 22, 1822, where he remained until manhood, when he married Eunice Green, June 22, 1851, and died at Coventry, Conn., April 23, 1874. Mrs. Eunice Hall was born at Coventry, R. I., Feb. 1, 1828, and died April 9, 1888. She was a daughter of Reuben and Esther (Whaley) Green, being a member of the following family: Rachel, the wife of Samuel Andrew, of Coventry, R. I.; Job W., who lived at Coventry, R. I., where he died; Eunice, who is mentioned above; Barbara, wife of Clark Knight, of Coventry, R. I., where she lived and died; James H., of Coventry, Rhode Island.

Amos Hall owned a farm in West Greenwich, R. I., until 1858, when he sold it, and the same year bought 143 acres in Coventry, Conn., this farm now being owned by his son, Charles R. Here Mr. Hall spent the remaining years of his life engaged in farming and cattle dealing, killing and dressing beef, and making himself successful in several lines. In politics he was a Democrat, and filled several local positions.

Mr. and Mrs. Amos Hall had the following children: Charles Rhodes, the subject of this article; Oliver C., a farmer in Coventry, who is married and has a family; Phoebe Easther, the wife of William R. Rosebrook, a business man of East Hartford, Conn.; Emma Jane, the wife of Elisha P. Brown, of Bloomfield, Connecticut.

Charles Rhodes Hall was born in West Greenwich, R. I., and was brought by his parents when five years of age to Coventry, Conn., where he had his schooling mainly in the public school, being a pupil in a private school for a time, and for a year and a half at the Natchaug high school of Williamantic. Reared on his father's farm, he helped to carry the burdens of farm life, as he was the oldest of the children. After the death of his father, Charles R. Hall bought out the other heirs, and has since carried on the homestead farm.

Mr. Hall was married by Rev. W. J. Jennings, April 30, 1875, to Mary E. Goodwin, a native of Coventry, and a daughter of Henry S. and Anna (French) Goodwin.

The Goodwin family has been long established in New London, Conn., where Azel Goodwin was born, Aug. 31, 1769. He had one brother, Jonathan, a minister in Mansfield, Conn. He married in 1809 for his second wife, Clarissa Hunt, a sister of Gad Hunt, and aunt of Governor Washington Hunt, of New York. This Mrs. Goodwin died in 1829, leaving four children: Clarissa H., married to Sedgwick White, of South Hadley, Mass.; Eveline, married to Porter Edwards, of Hartford; Charles F., of Waterbury, who married Rebecca Bridgeman, of Northampton, Mass.; Henry S., born in Coventry, who married Anna E., a daughter of Eleazer and Fanny (Woodward) French, by whom he had the following children: (1) Charles Henry, who died at the age of seventeen years; (2) Horace Hunt; (3) Mary E., the wife of Charles R. Hall, born April 30, 1855; (4) Amelia F.

To Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Hall were born: (1) Ernest Leslie, born Jan. 27, 1876, who had his business training at Huntsinger's Business College, and is now in the employ of J. P. Root, a prominent merchant of Tolland, Conn.; (2) Leroy Archie, born Oct. 21, 1880, who graduated from the Rockville high school in 1901; (3) Edna Anna, and (4) Elsa Eunice, twins, born Nov. 14, 1889.

Mr. Hall does not devote his entire time to farming, but is engaged in getting out timber, and at one period was interested in buying and selling cattle. For fifteen years past he has sold fertilizer, and now represents the Agricultural Chemical Company. Mr. Hall is Democratic in his politics, and has always taken a very active part in local affairs. For six consecutive terms of three years each he has been a member of the school board, and has been chairman of the board for eight or ten years; in 1880 he was tax collector, and assessor in 1891 and 1893; he has held the office of selectman for the past six years; his services as justice of the peace were creditable, and altogether his record is a good one. In 1892 Mr. Hall united with the A. O. U. W., of South Coventry, and for the past four years has been an agent for the Tolland County Mutual Insurance Company.

ANDREW HENRY MAINE, farmer and cattle dealer of Scotland, Windham county, was born in that town, Feb. 6, 1850.

The Maine family in Windham county descends from an old New London county family. Ancestors of the families now living in Scotland and Windham towns were identified with the colonial interests of Stonington, Conn. (I) Ezekiel Maine, the first of the name who came to Stonington to reside permanently, is not otherwise identified in this country. He settled there in 1670, and in 1672 received a grant of land from the town. He subsequently purchased other lands, and in 1680 received another town grant of land, all probably in North Stonington. His wife's name was Mary and he married probably a short time before he came to Stonington to reside, as Mrs. Ezekiel Maine was a partaker in the ordination of James Noyes, the pastor of the first church in Stonington, in 1674. Ezekiel Maine was admitted to the church, Sept. 3, 1676, and he died June 19, 1714. His children were: Ezekiel, Mary, Jeremiah, Thomas, Phebe and Hannah.

(II) Jeremiah Maine, son of Ezekiel, of Stonington, married Oct. 11, 1699, the widow Ruth Brown; who, with her daughter Ruth, was admitted to the first church of Stonington, and baptized July 16, 1699. Jeremiah Maine was admitted May 18, 1712. He died Nov. 11, 1727.

(III) Jeremiah Maine (2), son of Jeremiah, born April 10, 1708, married (first) in January, 1726-27, Abigail, daughter of Thomas Woodin. She died Nov. 13, 1741, and he married (second) April 26, 1742, Thankful, daughter of James Brown.

(IV) David Maine, born Aug. 26, 1752, married (third) Jan. 8, 1787, Esther, widow of Dr. Asher Palmer, and daughter of Rev. Seth Dean. Children as follows were born to this union: Ira, who died aged two and a half years; Rial, born May 29, 1788; Chandler, born Jan. 28, 1790, deceased Nov. 24, 1831; Fenner, born Oct. 29, 1791, who became the grandfather of Andrew H.; Rhoda, born May 16, 1794, who married Joseph Holmes, and died Feb. 14, 1851; and Saxton, born Aug. 27, 1796. The father of this family died Dec. 27, 1843, aged ninety-one years; and the mother Feb. 24, 1824, aged sixty-eight years.

(V) Fenner Maine, son of David, resided in the southern part of the present town of Windham, in a neighborhood called Jerusalem. By his marriage to Lucretia Maine, he had the following family: Harriet, deceased wife of Samuel Stanton, who lived in Windham, where their son, Robert F., now occupies the home farm, and who was widely known as a spiritualist and clairvoyant; Jonathan W., mentioned below; Avery; Sumner; Laura, who married Peter Meyers, and died in Iowa; Albert, who died young; Hannah, widow of Joseph Porter, who resides in Windham; Ann, who married Benjamin Meyers, and lived in Albany, N. Y., but is now deceased; Elizabeth, who married Dwight Eaton, and lives in Montville, Conn.; and Jane, who died aged ten years.

(VI) Jonathan W. Maine, the father of Andrew H., was born in Windham. He engaged in farming and also conducted a shoe store in Easton, Conn., for a number of years. For many years he was an exhorter and active in church work, and while not a member of any denomination, was a Methodist in belief. In politics he was originally a Whig, later a Republican. Mr. Maine married Lydia C. Robinson, daughter of Andrew and Bethiah (Church) Robinson, and after their marriage they settled upon the Robinson homestead, where the mother was born and spent her entire life. To this worthy couple came three children: (1) A. Walker, born June 11, 1843, a teacher in his younger days, went to Nebraska, and died at Ulysses, that State, aged forty-seven. He and Mr. Hale had carried on a banking business. He married Lois Palmer, daughter of Alfred Palmer, and had three daughters, Flora, Beulah and Ida. (2) Augustus died, aged seventeen. (3) Andrew Henry is mentioned below.

(I) Isaac Robinson, born about 1610, is the first of the family to which Mrs. Lydia C. Maine belonged, in this country. He came to New England in 1631, and settled in Plymouth. He was the son of Rev. John Robinson, who was born in 1575, probably in Lincolnshire, England; was graduated from Cambridge in 1599, and began to preach at Norfolk. In 1608 he went to Amsterdam, Holland, and to Leyden in 1609, and was there pastor of the Pilgrim Church. He died Feb. 9, 1629. His wife was Bridget White. His son (II) Isaac went from Plymouth to Scituate in 1636, in 1639 to Barnstable, in 1663 to Falmouth, and in 1673, was at Tisbury, Martha's Vineyard. In 1701 he returned to Barnstable, and he died probably in 1704.

(III) Peter Robinson, son of Isaac, the emigrant settler, born after 1653, married Experience, daughter of John Manton, of Tisbury, and was of that town until 1706, but is called of Chilmark. In 1710 he resided in Norwich (or Preston), Conn. He purchased land in Windham (Scotland, then called Preston), in 1721. He died in 1739 or 1740, and his wife died in 1727.

(IV) Peter Robinson (2), son of Peter, born in 1697, married June 30, 1725, Ruth, daughter of Samuel Fuller, of Mansfield, Conn. Mr. Robinson died March 22, 1785, and Ruth, his wife, died Jan. 9, 1795.

(V) Experience Robinson, son of Peter (2), born April 22, 1728, married Feb. 14, 1748-49, Zeruriah Palmer, daughter of Elizur Palmer. She died June 9, 1806, and he Sept. 10, 1807.

(VI) Andrew Robinson, son of Experience, born Aug. 1, 1762, married Bethiah Church, and they were the parents of Mrs. Jonathan W. Maine. In 1800 they built the house where Andrew Maine now lives.

(VII) Andrew Henry Maine, the subject of this sketch, was born Feb. 6, 1850, in Scotland, where he grew to maturity, attending the district schools and working upon the farm until he was nineteen, from which time he devoted his attention entirely to his several occupations. For a short time he was successfully engaged in the manufacture of brick, in partnership with a brother, at the old Maine brickyard in the town of Windham. The old homestead is in his possession and there he has always lived. It is a fine piece of property, well cultivated, improved, and contains excellent buildings. Mr. Maine owns some 500 acres of good farming land in the towns of Scotland, Windham and Franklin, and in addition to carrying on general farming, he acts as agent for the sale of farm implements and buys and sells cattle quite extensively, meeting with unqualified success in all his undertakings. In politics he is a staunch Republican and has served as selectman for several years.

On May 14, 1874, he was married in Scotland to Nancy Estella Parkhurst, and two children have been born to them: Clarence, born Nov. 27, 1879; and Eva P., born March 14, 1883.

The ancestry of Mrs. Maine is very interesting and according to the records, the family dates back to one George Parkhurst, born in England, who first married Rebecca, and second, Susan Simpson, of Watertown. The children were all by the first marriage: George B., born in 1618, married to Sarah Brown and second to Mary Phyla; Joseph, ancestor, married to Rebecca Reed; Benjamin; Philu, married to Thomas Arnold; Deborah, married to John Smith; Elizabeth, first married to Emanuel Hilliard and second to Joseph Murry; Mary, who married Rev. Thomas Carter, and resided in Watertown, Massachusetts.

(II) Joseph Parkhurst married Rebecca Reed, June 6, 165-, and she died in 1709. Their children were: Mary, who married Thomas Blodgett, born Aug. 10, 1657; Rebecca, born Aug. 14, 1659; Joseph, Jr., ancestor, born Jan. 12, 1661; Abigail, born March 14, 1664, who married Nathaniel Comming; Ebenezer, born Dec. 2, 1671.

(III) Joseph (2) married Eunice Spaulding, born July 12, 1661; she died Jan. 19, 1743, and he died Dec. 11, 1720. Their children were: Timothy, ancestor, born Jan. 14, 1689, deceased March 3, 1770, who married Elizabeth Cady; John, born 1690, who died Jan. 10, 1777; Eunice, born June 4, 1692, who married Thomas Marsh; Joseph, born Aug. 5, 1695, who married first, Sarah Lawrence and second, Judith Johnson; Hannah, born July 24, 1697; Hannah, Aug. 25, 1698; Samuel, born April 25, 1701, deceased May 22, 1778, who married first Esther Spaulding and second Mary Hutchins; Mary, born Nov. 18, 1702, married to Thomas Pierce. The head of this generation moved from Chelmsford, Mass., to Plainfield, Connecticut.

(IV) Timothy was married Jan. 15, 1717, and he and his wife had the following family: Eunice, born Oct. 10, 1717, who married Gideon Lawrence, and died July 23, 1804; Johanna, born Dec. 19, 1720, who died Nov. 20, 1801, unmarried; Mary, born March 4, 1723, who died Nov. 20, 1801, unmarried; Jonathan, born July 25, 1725, who died Aug. 22, 1787, married Judith Wilson; David, born Oct. 29, 1727, who married Phebe Kingsbury; Timothy, born Feb. 8, 1730-1, deceased Nov. 20, 1815, who married a Miss Cady; Elizabeth, born July 7, 1734, married to Col. Dyer Spaulding; Isaac, ancestor, born April 22, 1738, who died Sept. 3, 17—; married to Mary Cady; Patience, born June 11, 1740; all lived at Plainfield, Connecticut.

(V) Isaac Parkhurst, born April 22, 1738, died Sept. 3, 17—; he married Nov. 19, 1762, Mary Cady, and had the following family: Oliver, born March 3, 1763, whose wife was named Mary; Elias, born May 30, 1764; Isaac, Sept. 7, 1766; Betty, Sept. 26, 1767, who died single Sept. 17, 1840; Lucy, Oct. 10, 1768, who died Sept. 10, 1818, married to James Fairman; Dinah, Oct. 22, 1769, who died Jan. 22, 1852.

(VI) Elias Parkhurst married Free love Stranahan, and their family was as follows: Anthony, ancestor, born Feb. 16, 1798, deceased Sept. 13, 1837, who married Mahetable Harrington; Hiram, born Sept. 23, 1800, who died May 5, 1857, married to Nancy Kenyon; Elias, born Feb. 27, 1803, married Hannah B. Perry; Herbert, born Oct. 19, 1806, deceased in 1884, who married (first) Emeline T. Masely and (second) Caroline Craine.

(VII) Anthony Parkhurst married Mahetable Harrington and their children were: Free love E., born May 20, 1821; Abby E., April 10, 1823; Anthony W., father of Mrs. Maine, July 27, 1824.

(VIII) Anthony W. Parkhurst married Nancy C. Palmer Dec. 2, 1850; she was born Jan. 2, 1827, and died Jan. 15, 1896. Their children were: Susan Lunette, born Oct. 1, 1851, who died June 5, 1854; Nancy Estella, March 12, 1853, who married May 14, 1874, Andrew H. Maine, the subject of this sketch; Eva Thankful, Sept. 24, 1855, married March 20, 1878, to Dr. Casper Barstow, who died February, 1889. She died Oct. 22, 1900, having had the following children: Edith Lunetta, born Aug. 5, 1880, who died Dec. 23, 1880; Edgar, born July 30, 1882; Edna Estella, born Sept. 12, 1885; and Miriam, born Sept. 12, 1887.

The grandfather, Anthony Parkhurst, married in Plainfield and in 1823 came to Scotland, where he purchased property soon afterward. The farm where his son now lives he purchased in 1829, and lived there engaged in farming until his death, the result of an accident. In politics he was a Whig and later a Republican. His son, Anthony W. Parkhurst, has spent his life in Scotland and conducted the home farm. Like his father, he is a Republican, and has held various town offices, was selectman for three years, and represented the town in the Legislature in 1881. In religious matters, he is a member of the Christian Church, and he, as well as all of his family, are very highly respected throughout the community.

GEORGE FRINK. The farmers of Windham county are a most substantial class of citizens, and will compare favorably with those of any other portion of the Nutmeg State. The gentleman whose name we here present is one of the largest cultivators of the soil in the county, and a man whose private character is above reproach, and who is held in the highest esteem by a very large circle of friends.

Saxon Frink, the grandfather of George, is first heard of in Sterling, Conn. His wife's maiden name was Fannie Brown. They removed to the Flat Rock District, Plainfield, Conn., where he engaged in agricultural pursuits, and where he lies buried in the Palmer cemetery by the side of his wife. They were the parents of Albert Frink, the father of George Frink; Louisa, who married Mr. Starkweather, and lived and died in Plainfield; Caroline, who died a spinster in Plainfield; Amarilla, who married John R. Gallup, of Plainfield, where she died; Nelson, who married Caroline Briggs, and lived and died in Plainfield.

Albert Frink was in early life a school teacher, later becoming a farmer. He has been an industrious, upright man, has raised a large family, and is now living a retired life in Sterling, Conn., enjoying a well-earned rest. In political faith he was, prior to 1880, a Democrat, but in that year he changed his politics, and has since been a staunch supporter of Republican principles. He has always taken a very active part in the public affairs of the community in which he has lived, and has served his town on the board of selectmen a number of terms. For over twenty years he was justice of the peace, resigning only when reaching the age limit. In matters of education he has always been greatly interested in securing the best school facilities for his district, and he served for a number of years on the school committee. He has rather a unique record in the matter of legislative experiences, and one that only a man of forceful character and opinions could present; he served during the year 1863 in the State Legislature as a Democrat, and in 1889 was returned as a Republican. His life has been passed for the most part in Sterling, where he was born, and from which place he removed to Plainfield, where he was reared to the age of twenty-five, at which time he returned to his native place, and has since resided there. He married Mary Ann Briggs, who was born March 24, 1824, in Voluntown, Conn., and died in January of 1894, in Sterling. She was a daughter of Benjamin and Hannah (Gallup) Briggs, and was the mother of the following children, all born in Sterling: Willard, who married Ellen J. Bixby, and followed merchandising in Sterling, where he died April 6, 1894, and where his widow still resides; Jane, born June 12, 1851, who married John H. Place, of Coventry, R. I., where he is a farmer and lumber dealer; Rachel, born March 11, 1853, who married Horace A. Warren, of Putnam, Conn., a brick mason by trade; John, born April 9, 1854, a farmer in Sterling, who married Nov. 25, 1877, Hattie Baldwin; Emma, born Sept. 24, 1855, who married Alonzo P. Love, of Sterling; George, the subject of this sketch; Charles, born November, 1858, who married Ida P. Hall, and is now operating the homestead farm in Sterling; Margaret G., born Sept. 6, 1860, who married Edward A. Geer, a farmer living in Griswold, Conn.; and Jerusha C., born April 29, 1862, who married Walter A. Stanton, of Sterling, where he is an engineer by trade.

George Frink was born June 18, 1857, in Sterling, and received a fair education in the district schools in that village, which, by the way, were exceptionally good for that time. At twenty-one years of age he became possessed of the Western fever and went to Dodge county, Minn., where he engaged at farming with his uncle, John Briggs, who owned and cultivated a large wheat ranch of 1,700 acres. He was also extensively engaged in the raising of cattle. There Mr. Frink remained for the following three years, and there he imbibed his large ideas of farming. He then returned to his home in Sterling, where he was offered the position of foreman of the William Lyon (4) farm, located in Woodstock, and containing 175 acres, a rather responsible position for a young man of twenty-four years. He proved himself equal to the occasion, however, and has since that time continued to manage the same farm, which he now owns. It is one of the best in Woodstock, and will compare favorably with any thing in the county. A large dairy of twenty head of cows, which he utilizes in making butter for Webster customers, constitutes a feature of this well-kept farm. Mr. Frink is a staunch believer in the principles of the party of Jefferson, and has served his town on the board of relief for three years and as assessor.

On Jan. 3, 1883, Mr. Frink was united in marriage to Emma Lyon, only daughter of William Lyon (4) and Harriet (Green) Lyon, of Woodstock. His wife passed away Oct. 4, 1893, leaving no children. On Dec. 25, 1895, Mr. Frink married Avis Isabel Gallup, daughter of Nathaniel and Ellen (Matthewson) Gallup, of Sterling, who has borne him two lovely children: Estella Gallup, born April 10, 1898; and Wallace Lyon, born Sept. 19, 1899. Mr. and Mrs. Frink are popular residents of the community of Woodstock, where they are held in high repute among a very large circle of friends and acquaintances.

DANIEL LULL ELLIS. Among the citizens of Stafford, Tolland county, none are more highly esteemed than is Daniel Lull Ellis, the bearer of two of the most highly respected family names in his locality.

The great-great-grandfather of Mr. Ellis of this sketch was (I) Benjamin Ellis, who was born in 1733, and died at the advanced age of ninety-five years, Aug. 27, 1828. In his time he was a leading citizen and was a lieutenant of militia.

(II) Capt. Joseph Ellis, son of Benjamin, was born in 1760, possibly in Sturbridge, Mass., but more probably in Stafford, Conn., his death occurring in West Stafford, April 22, 1828. His occupation was that of a farmer, and he was influential in the Congregational Church. His marriage occurred April 23, 1783, to Molly Dunton, who was born in 1762, and who died Oct. 5, 1847, in West Stafford. Their children were: Sally, born Aug. 22, 1784, who died Oct. 9, 1787; Polly, born Feb. 1, 1786, who married John Cleveland, and died Dec. 5, 1859; Joseph B., Jr., born Oct. 15, 1787, deceased Nov. 8, 1800; Elisha, born Feb. 21, 1789; Sally, born May 4, 1790, who married Zina Winter; Wyllys, born Nov. 24, 1791, who married Abigail Carpenter, and died on July 31, 1831; Royal, born April 7, 1793, who married a wife named Marcia, and died in March, 1829; Azubach, born March 23, 1795, married to Flavel Partridge; Clorinda, born April 10, 1797, who married Abiatha Davis; Natalia, born Dec. 6, 1798, who died Sept. 10, 1806; Joseph, Jr., born Sept. 4, 1800; Ammarylis, born Sept. 15, 1802, who married Alden Glazier, and died May 21, 1847; Beulah, born Dec. 17, 1804, who married Samuel Spellman; and Caroline, born Jan. 4, 1809, married to Lorenzo Lull.

(III) Elisha Ellis, son of Capt. Joseph, was born Feb. 21, 1789, and died May 9, 1869, in Stafford, at the age of eighty years. On Dec. 6, 1813, he was married to Hannah Warren Winter, who was born Nov. 18, 1791, and who died Feb. 16, 1838; for his second wife, he married Sally Drake, in November, 1841, who died Aug. 11, 1892. The children of Elisha were ten in number. (1) Zina Winter was born on Aug. 20, 1814. (2) Elisha Gilbert, who was born July 3, 1816, was married March 4, 1838, to Emily Davis, who was born Dec. 29, 1813, and who was a daughter of Asa and Mary (Robertson) Davis. Elisha Gilbert was considered the strongest man in Stafford and he at one time displayed his remarkable robustness by lifting his wagon from the mud when his team of horses could not do it. His physical development was such that he weighed two hundred pounds and was six feet in height. His two surviving children are Elizabeth Ann, who is the widow of Mervin Shearer, of Ellington, Conn., and Charles G., a resident and one of the most prominent citizens of Stafford, a director in the Savings Bank and one of the stewards in the Methodist Church. He married Lucy Ann Howe, of Stafford, their one daughter being the wife of Burt T. Eaton, of Stafford; (3) Amanda Natalie was born Aug. 9, 1818, and married Leonard G. Goodrich; (4) Horace Dexter, who was born May 2, 1821, married Hannah Poole; (5) Rosanna Maria, who was born June 12, 1823, married William Bliss; (6) William W., was a noted minister of the Methodist Church; (7) Azubah Caroline, who was born Sept. 5, 1827, married Horatio McKinney first, and second John Carroll, of Willington, Conn.; (8) Lucy B., who was born April 7, 1830, married Harrison Howe; (9) Julia S., who was born Dec. 3, 1832, died young, unmarried; and (10) Harriet Eliza, who was born July 26, 1835, was married to Austin C. Bliss, Nov. 26, 1854.

(IV) Zina Winter Ellis, the father of Daniel L., and a son of Elisha, was born in West Stafford, Conn., Aug. 20, 1814, and died March 30, 1890, in his native place. Nov. 14, 1841, he was married to Clarissa Peck Lull, who was born in Stafford, May 6, 1820, and who still survives, finding loving care in the home of her son, Daniel. Her parents were Daniel Peck and Jocastia (Church) Lull, of Stafford. Mr. Zina Ellis was a farmer and also a school teacher, being well known in that profession through Stafford and vicinity, teaching the district schools for some fifty terms, teaching also in Somers, Ellington and the other surrounding towns, entering the profession when but seventeen years of age. In politics he was a Democrat and a man of ability, and was sent as representative several times both to New Haven and Hartford. For many years he was school visitor and served on the board of selectmen, was assessor and filled many of the local offices, always being an active worker in the town affairs.

In his earlier years, Mr. Ellis was a member of the Methodist Church, but later became an Adventist, and was active and faithful in all religious endeavors. They had four children. Philinda Leonora, who was born Jan. 9, 1845, was married Dec. 3, 1863, to Alonzo Marvin Shepard, of West Stafford and their one daughter is Arminda Mariva, who was born May 2, 1865; Daniel Lull is the subject of this sketch. Rev. Elisha Zina, who was born Dec. 14, 1856, was married April 11, 1878, to Mary A. Potter, of West Stafford, who is a daughter of Irving V. Potter. He is the pastor of the Adventist Church of Danbury, Conn., and his children are: Carrie May, born on July 9, 1882; Irving Elisha, Aug. 31, 1886; Celia, July 21, 1892, deceased July 23, 1893; and Frederick Potter, July 10, 1895; Clara Peck, the youngest daughter of Zina Ellis, was born June 10, 1867, and died March 26, 1868.

(V) Daniel Lull Ellis, was born in West Stafford, June 5, 1847; until he was seventeen years of age, he remained at school, and later worked on the home farm until he was twenty years of age. At that date he engaged in business for himself, beginning his efforts by leasing a small place and engaging in the burning of charcoal, the product of his burning being bought in Springfield. Until 1874 he continued in this business and then went into a partnership with his brother-in-law, A. M. Shepard, at which time they purchased a fruit, confectionery and tobacco business on Trumbull street, in Hartford, the firm style being Shepard & Ellis, but in less than a year the partners closed out as they found the business not successful.

Then Mr. Ellis went to Westboro, Mass., and was there employed in the blocking room of H. O. Barnard & Co., manufacturers of straw hats, and there he continued for the following eight years, going from there to Middletown, N. Y. where he was engaged for several months at the trade; he then came back to Stamford, Conn., and entered the employ of H. K. White. One year later Mr. White failed in business and the concern was purchased by the firm of Smart, Patterson & Rice, and Mr. Ellis was employed for seven years with this one firm.

In 1884, Mr. Ellis had purchased a farm of seventy-five acres in Stafford, and in 1890 he retired to this pleasant home which he has wonderfully improved and upon which he has raised great harvests of general farm products. Mr. Ellis keeps several cows and sells his dairy products to the Somers creamery. Since 1891 he has been road supervisor, and one of the road commissioners since 1897, the result being that his locality enjoys excellent highways in all weathers. A staunch gold-Democrat, Mr. Ellis is a man of influence and prominence in his party, and has served through four terms on the board of selectmen, and most conspicuously in the Legislature during 1886, on the Claims committee and in 1891-92 he was in the "dead-lock" session. For several terms he has been a member of the Democratic town committee, and has also been one of the school committee.

Mr. Ellis was united in marriage Oct. 24, 1867, to Ann Frances McIntire, who was a daughter of Ellbridge and Sarah (Burden) McIntire, of Somers, both deceased, the former of whom was a well-known carpenter. Fraternally he is a member of Stafford Lodge of the A. O. U. W., in which he is most highly esteemed.

FRANK V. LYON, one of the representative farmers of Canterbury, Windham county, and who is in the fifth generation of his family to reside on the Lyon homestead in Gay Head District, is a descendant of old colonial stock.

"William Lyon," says Savage, "of Roxbury, Mass., came to New England in 1635, in the ship 'Hopewell' when he was fourteen years of age, probably under the charge of Isaac Heath, a passenger with his family in the same ship. Mr. Lyon was married June 17, 1646, to Rachel, a daughter of Thomas Ruggles, and their children were: John, born in 1647; Thomas, in 1652; Joseph, in 1654; Sarah, in 1657; Jonathan, in 1666; and Jonathan (2), in 1672. One or more of the descendants of William Lyon, the first settler, must have become residents of Woodstock, Conn., for Caleb Lyon and his wife Margaret, a descendant of William the settler, who were the parents of thirteen children, located in Massachusetts, coming from Woodstock, Conn., their eldest son being born in 1729." From a similarity of names it seems that the Lyons in Woodstock and those in Canterbury are closely allied.

Ebenezer Lyon, born in 1717, located in Canterbury in 1763, and purchased in the Gay Head District a farm of about 125 acres, then almost entirely unimproved. This farm has been in the hands of his descendants to the present day, each generation making improvements. In appearance and productiveness it is far above the average Canterbury farm. Some fifty acres have been added to the original tract; otherwise the farm remains as it was when first purchased. Five generations have lived there and tilled the soil. Frank V. has charge of the farm, as the infirmities of age have caused his father, Charles R. Lyon, to transfer the management and labors of it to younger hands. Ebenezer Lyon married Mercy Clark, who was born in 1717, and died April 10, 1804, at the age of eighty-seven years. He died Aug. 27, 1795, at the age of seventy-eight years. To them were born the following children: (1) Abel, born in 1742, married Susannah Leach, who died April 2, 1829, and he passed away Oct. 1, 1815; their family consisted of the following children: Sally; Ebenezer, born Dec. 25, 1769; Joseph Leach, born June 13, 1775; and Spencer, born Nov. 30, 1778; and (2) Ephraim.

Ephraim Lyon was born in 1745, and died May 24, 1813. Dec. 31, 1766, he married Eunice Leach, a sister of his brother Abel's wife; she died Jan. 23, 1783, at the age of thirty-eight years, the mother of the following children: Lovisa, who died young; Albertus; Eunice, born in 1770, who married Mr. Sternburg, and lived at Lockport, N. Y., where she died Dec. 9, 1840; Abigail, born Oct. 22, 1777, who married Dr. Burton, and died May 27, 1863; and Chester, born Aug. 7, 1779, the grandfather of Frank V. Ephraim Lyon married for his second wife Hannah Pearl, who died July 9, 1846, at the age of ninety-five years. To this marriage were born: Leora, born April 12, 1785, who married Reuben Peck, of North Windham, Conn., and died April 6, 1852; Pearl, born in 1787, who died March 4, 1808; Mercy, born in 1789, who married Joshua Crowell, and died in Ware, Mass., March 20, 1824. After the death of Ephraim Lyon, his widow, Hannah, married John Bradford, of Canterbury, Jan. 15, 1823. The house in which Ebenezer Lyon lived stood on the south side of the road, being almost opposite the present homestead. In this house Ephraim Lyon was born, and there he was reared to manhood. He followed an agricultural career, and according to tradition was a constant reader, a deep thinker, and was found at the head in all movements likely to advance the good of the community. In politics he was an old-style Democrat. In religious belief he was a Methodist, and the first gatherings of that denomination were held in his home. In the church he was a powerful worker, and becoming a circuit preacher, traveled according to the custom of the day on horseback from place to place, during the winter being almost continuously on the circuit. During the summer season he devoted himself to the home labors of the farm.

Chester Lyon, the grandfather of Frank V., was born and reared on the home place, educated in the local schools, and in time became one of the leading spirits of the town. For years he held the office of justice of the peace, and much of his time was given to the settling of estates. In the town of Canterbury he was the first probate judge, when it became a separate probate district. For twenty years he held the office of deputy sheriff. In his political views he was a Democrat. Chester Lyon was married first, March 20, 1810, to Sally Manning, who was born in 1788, and died Sept. 12, 1813. By this first marriage Chester Lyon had two children: Harriet, born Sept. 9, 1811, who married Henry P. Palmer, and died Nov. 24, 1867; and Rockwell, who was born Oct. 20, 1812, and died Dec. 11, 1860, in Lockport, N. Y., where he was then editing a paper. His second marriage was celebrated Jan. 8, 1815, when he became the husband of Jerusha B., the daughter of Hezekiah Barstow. She was born Nov. 23, 1787, and died March 23, 1874. To this union were born: Casper L., born Oct. 3, 1815, who married Sarah Stebbins, and died Nov. 8, 1840; Sally, born March 11, 1816, who married Ira B. Eddy, of Pittstown, N. Y., and died March 2, 1868; Henry D., born March 18, 1818, who married first Anna E. Morse, by whom he had three children, Alice G. (who was born July 19, 1846, married Charles Leyenberger and lives in Chicago), Henry Prescott (born in August, 1850, deceased July 6, 1851), and Chauncy (an infant, deceased Oct. 15, 1853), married second Henrietta Young, and was engaged first in Warren, R. I., in the jewelry business, but later moved to Newark, N. J., where he died June 10, 1887; Charles Robinson, mentioned below; Giles Prescott, born March 26, 1822, deceased Jan. 21, 1845; Festus Pearl, a jeweler in Providence, R. I., born April 17, 1824, who married Frances Edwards and died May 6, 1893, leaving two sons; Eliza Barstow, born April 10, 1827, who died March 17, 1849; and Ephraim Chester, born June 27, 1830, deceased Jan. 12, 1831.

Charles R. Lyon was born March 18, 1820, and was reared on the home farm, attending the Gay Head District school. When he was a young man he learned the mason's trade, though he has mainly devoted himself to farming. His entire life, with the exception of three years which he spent at Hartford working at his trade, has been devoted to the home farm. At the death of his parents he received his share of the farm, and, buying out the other heirs, came into possession of the homestead, which has not lessened in value under his management. In all the relations of life he has been more than an average man, and now that his son Frank V., has taken the immediate charge of the farm, they continue as energetic farmers and dairymen. At first Mr. Lyon voted with the Democrats, but as soon as he came to understand the political issues of the times he turned to the Republican party, and has since been one of its most devoted supporters. He has served as selectman two years, justice of the peace three years, and on the Republican town committee, also being on the board of relief. The family are all attendants at the Methodist Church. Nov. 2, 1845, he married Harriet Barstow, daughter of Calvin Barstow, and granddaughter of John Barstow, a veteran of the war of the Revolution. To this union were born: Frank Victor, with his father occupying the homestead, who was born June 13, 1850, and was married Dec. 31, 1874, to Flora J. Lincoln, a descendant of the old Windham family of that name; one that was not named, who died in infancy; Emma Louise, born May 26, 1853, who died in April, 1854; Grace Lillian, born Nov. 4, 1860, who married March 18, 1891, Charles A. Chamberlain, of South Windham, Conn. Their children are as follows: Pearl Lyon and Prescott Robinson, twins, who were born July 24, 1892; Frank Victor, born Aug. 7, 1896; and Homer, born Nov. 27, 1898.

BARSTOW. The Barstow family is of English origin, and came from the West Riding, in Yorkshire. Four brothers, George, Michael, John and William, came to New England, and settled at Cambridge, Watertown and Dedham. George and William came in the "Truelove," in 1635, aged twenty-one and twenty-three years, respectively; (I) John was of Cambridge (his name was usually written Bristoe, says Savage); and his wife, Hannah, bore him the following children: Michael, born in 1653; John; and Jeremiah. John Sr., was drowned Feb. 3, 1658, at the age of thirty-three years.

(II) John Barstow (2), son of the above, located at Scituate, Mass., and was a householder there in 1678, his land lying west of the South Meeting House Common. He was married Jan. 16, 1678, to Lydia, daughter of William Hatch, and had the following family: Job, born March 8, 1679; Jeremiah, Aug. 28, 1682; John, Feb. 15, 1684; Jerusha, in 1687, who died the same year; Susannah, May 5, 1689; Abigail, March 8, 1692; and Lydia, March 26, 1696.

(III) Job Barstow, son of John (2), married March 2, 1707, Rebecca, the nineteen-year-old daughter of Joseph and Mary Bushnell, formerly of Saffingwell. Mr. Barstow settled in Norwich, Conn., where he died, Sept. 14, 1767, at the age of eighty-four years. He was a man of strong intellect and sound judgment, of strict integrity, peculiarly bland and conciliatory, eminently a peace-maker and a healer of divisions among his friends and neighbors. His wife was a woman of strong intellect and very pious. She long survived him, and died May 7, 1784, at the age of ninety-four.

(IV) John Barstow (3), son of Job, was married in 1746, to Jerusha (or Elizabeth) Newcomb, of Franklin, Conn., and settled about 1750 in Canterbury, Conn., where he died Feb. 9, 1796, at the age of seventy-one years, and his remains and those of his wife lie in the old graveyard of Westminster parish. "They were beloved and respected in their lives, and mourned not only by a large family, but by the community in which they lived." Their children were as follows: Alpheus, born in 1748; Samuel, in January, 1749; John, Oct. 2, 1751, who died young; John (2), Dec. 21, 1752; Hezekiah, Feb. 28, 1755; Ebenezer, Sept. 7, 1756; Anne, July 31, 1759; Job, March 5, 1760; Rebecca, June 11, 1763, who married first Nathaniel Annable, and second Col. Pierce; William A., Feb. 21, 1765; and Jerusha, March 2, 1767, who married Nathaniel Palmer, a lawyer and a State Senator from Wilkes-barre, Pennsylvania.

(V) Deacon John Barstow, son of John (3), married Susannah Smith, of Canterbury. He was a man of usefulness through a long life, and it is said of him that for fifty years he was never absent from meeting. His minister once said, "I can set my watch correctly when I see Deacon Barstow coming to meeting." For some twenty years Deacon Barstow was selectman of Canterbury. When he died, Dec. 9, 1838, he had reached the age of eighty-six. His wife died April 14, 1829. Their children were: Bethia, born in 1780, who married Ephraim Palmer, of Scotland, Conn.; Septimus, born Dec. 16, 1781; Luther, born in 1784, who was graduated from Brown University in 1807, settled as a lawyer in Homer, N. Y., and died Aug. 12, 1817, at the age of thirty-three; Calvin, born May 25, 1786; Ebenezer, born in September, 1787, deceased April 21, 1867; Rev. Zedekiah, pastor of the Congregational Church at Keene, N. H., for over thirty years.

(VI) Calvin Barstow, son of Deacon John Barstow, died June 3, 1858, and his wife, Orilla Herrick, who was born Oct. 29, 1789, died Oct. 5, 1878. They were married Oct. 29, 1810. Of their family, Emma, born April 5, 1811, died July 7, 1829. John, born Dec. 10, 1812, married Julia A. Bailey, lived in Bozrah, Conn., and died Sept. 18, 1885. Olive, born May 7, 1815, died unmarried Nov. 15, 1896. Luther, born Oct. 6, 1817, married Mary Kingsley, and died Dec. 7, 1894, leaving three children: William, now in the employ of the Smith Winchester Company at South Windham, Conn.; Casper, M. D., deceased; and Alice, who married a Mr. Baker. Adeline, born July 6, 1820, died Nov. 1, 1825. Harriet, the mother of F. V. Lyon, born March 23, 1824, married Charles R. Lyon. Adeline (2), born Dec. 14, 1826, married Ebenezer Scarborough, of Brooklyn, Conn., and died Sept. 14, 1900. Susannah, born May 26, 1831, married William F. Collier, of Worcester, Mass., and died Nov. 2, 1900, the mother of Charles, now deceased, George and Fred.

(V) Hezekiah Barstow, son of John (3), and brother of Deacon John, was born Feb. 28, 1755. He purchased lands on the plains of Canterbury, which are now owned by George Barstow. From an old deed, dated in 1786, it will be seen that Hezekiah Barstow came from Norwich to Canterbury, but was originally a resident of Essex county, Mass. On May 23, 1776, he was married to Olive Bradford, and their children were: Olive, born Dec. 4, 1777, who died Nov. 24, 1862; Elizabeth, born July 16, 1779, who died Dec. 13, 1809; Mary, born Jan. 7, 1782, who married a Mr. Palmer, and died Dec. 12, 1863; Hezekiah, born Dec. 26, 1783, who died Aug. 12, 1787; Phylura, born Dec. 15, 1785, who married a Mr. Park, and died Sept. 10, 1830; Jerusha B., born Nov. 23, 1787, who married Chester Lyon, and became the mother of Charles R. Lyon, and grandmother of Frank V. and Grace (Lyon) Chamberlain: Sophia, born Oct. 24, 1789; and Hezekiah (2), born Nov. 14, 1791, who married Rebecca Gager, of Scotland, and died Oct. 17, 1863 (he was the father of Dwight Barstow, born Aug. 8, 1820, who became one of the leading men of Canterbury, and died July 14, 1899); and Annie, born Nov. 29, 1793. Mrs. Olive (Bradford) Barstow, the mother of this family, died April 10, 1841, at the advanced age of eighty-four years.

HERRICK. The Herrick family, to which reference is made above, traces its history back to William Herrick, Hireck, or Hericke; Henry, his fifth son, was born at Beau Manor, Leicestershire, England, in 1604, and probably made his first appearance in this country in Virginia, and went from there to Salem, Mass. He married Edith, who was born in 1614, a daughter of Hugh Laskin, of Salem. Mr. Herrick was a husbandman in easy circumstances, and had his home on Cape Ann-Syde, Bass River, which is now Beverly. At Birch Plains and Cherry Hill he owned several farms, on which he settled his sons. He and his wife were among the thirty who founded the church in Salem in 1629, and on the organization of the new parish in Ryal-Syde, in 1697, they with their sons and their wives, were among the founders of the First Church in Beverly. The sons were all farmers. Henry Herrick died in 1671, and his widow still survived in 1674.

(II) John Herrick, son of Henry, the immigrant settler, was baptized May 25, 1650, and settled on the farm at Birch Plains, which was given him by his father. He was married March 25, 1674, to Mary, who was born May 4, 1651, a daughter of John and Mary (Gould) Redington, of Topsfield, Mass. Mr. Herrick died in 1681, and his widow about 1681 married Robert Cue, of Salem.

(III) John Herrick (2), son of John, was born in April, 1675, was married in 1696, to Sarah Kimball, and lived in Beverly, Mass., where he died Jan. 29, 1722-3.

(IV) Robert Herrick, son of John (2), born May 2, 1701, married Sept. 22, 1722, Mary Edwards, and settled in Wenham, Mass., but removed to Manchester in 1725, thence to Canterbury, Conn., in 1751.

(V) John Herrick (3), son of Robert, was born Aug. 7, 1723, in Wenham, and was married for the first time to Rachel Driver, of Worcester, Mass., Nov. 30, 1744; he removed from Manchester, Conn., in 1751 to Canterbury, Conn., where he was married to Elizabeth Smith. To his first marriage were born; Rachel, Robert, Rachel (2), and John; to the second, Robert, Daniel, Elijah, Joseph, Mary Ann and Ruth.

(VI) Daniel Herrick, son of John (3), married Olive Fish, and resided in Canterbury. He had two children, Daniel and Orilla, who married Calvin Barstow.

ROBERT A. SHERMAN, one of the most successful and extensive farmers and dairymen in Sterling, Windham county, was born in South Kingston, R. I., Nov. 22, 1848, and has lived in Sterling since his second year.

The most remote Sherman ancestor of which there is authentic record is Philip Sherman, born Feb. 5, 1610, a son of Samuel, grandson of Henry, and great grandson of Henry, and who came to America in 1633, and was made a freeman of Roxbury, Mass., the following year, his name being the first on the list after that of Governor Haynes. He was banished from the colony in 1637, and the next year went to Rhode Island, where in March of the same year he signed the compact of civil government. He was secretary of the colony in 1639, served as recorder during 1648-49-1650-51, and was deputy in 1656, 1665, and 1667. His death occurred in 1687, while that of his wife, formerly Sarah Oddling, occurred in 1681. The children of this union were as follows; Eber, Sarah, Peleg, Mary, Edmund, Samson, William, John, Mary, Hannah, Samuel, Benjamin, and Philip. Their descendants are scattered over a large area of Rhode Island.

Eber Sherman, born in 1634, married in Kingston, R. I., and his wife, Mary, bore him the following children: Eber, Samuel, Stephen, Elisha, William, Peleg, and Abigail. Another son of the settler, Peleg, born in 1638, married, in 1657, Elizabeth Lawton, of either Portsmouth, R. I., Swansea, Dartmouth, Mass., or Kingston, R. I. The children were Thomas, William, Daniel, Mary, Peleg, Ann, Elizabeth, Samuel, Eber, John, Benjamin, Sarah, Isabel, and George, all born between 1658 and 1687. Kingston is adjacent to the home of the Sterling family of Sherman, and it is not unlikely that they descended from Eber or Peleg, of Kingston.

Eber Sherman, the grandfather of Robert A., was a resident of Exeter, R. I., and through his marriage with Hannah James, had the following children; Robert, Eber and Caleb. The paternal grandfather, Robert, was born in Exeter, where he was reared and educated, and where he married Abigail James, who died in South Kingston, R. I., at the age of seventy-nine. He was a farmer by occupation, and the latter part of his life was spent in South Kingston, where he died at the age of seventy-nine. Of their children, Hannah became the wife of Jesse Sherman, of Sterling, and her husband died May 4, 1850, at the age of forty-eight; Penelope married Charles Wilcox, and lived in Exeter; Abby married Silas Brown, of South Kingston, and later moved to Illinois, where the husband died, the wife thereafter returning to Rhode Island, where she became the wife of J. Lock; Ezekiel J., the father of Robert A.; Eber, born May 1, 1813; Robert, born in Exeter, March 17, 1814, located at Colchester, Conn., his first marriage resulting in William, Robert, Ransey, and Grace, and his second union in George, Frank and Fred; Clark is a resident of Lebanon; and Sanford was for many years a resident of Colchester, Conn., where, through his union with Miss Wilcox he had Della, Vina and Charley, and through his union with Martha Gallup, of Sterling, he had Clark, Retta and Essee; Lizzie Sherman married Christopher R. Champlin, of South Kingston, Rhode Island.

Ezekiel J. Sherman was born in Exeter, R. I.,

Feb. 19, 1816, and was reared and educated in his native locality. After his marriage to Harriet, daughter of Capt. John Sanders, he lived for a time in South Kingston, the native home of his wife, and engaged in farming and stock raising. In February he removed his family to Sterling, and purchased the Jesse Sherman farm of 250 acres, where he has since lived, barring a six months' residence on Sterling Hill. He is a hard working, conscientious man, and though at the present time eighty-six years old, retains much of his youthful vigor and usefulness. He can still bear up under hard farm labor, and can often accomplish as much as men fifteen years his junior. Like his father, he is a Democrat, and he has held several town offices, including those of selectman and road overseer, the latter office being retained by him for nineteen years. Thirteen children have been born to him and his wife, viz.: Abby C., the wife of Chauncey Gallup, of Illinois; Harriet, the wife of Joseph Gallup, of Connecticut; Hannah J., deceased wife of Willard B. James, and mother of Georgiana and Lewis W. James; Robert A.; Anna Priscilla, wife of Samuel P. Greene, of Plainfield, Conn.; Sarah, deceased wife of William H. Barber, and mother of Walter E. and Eva H. Barber; Ezekiel W., deceased, who married Josephine Palmer, and died in Plainfield; Lydia, wife of Simon Palmer, formerly of Exeter and Plainfield, but now a resident of Exeter, by whom she had three children, Jessie, Dora and Gracie; James B., a farmer of Plainfield, who married Lillie Hazen and has four children, Helen J., Nellie M., Bessie and Emma; Mary, deceased wife of Eugene Edwards, of Center Village, and the mother of Maud and Ida; Frank, a bachelor living on the home farm; Lucy, the deceased wife of Theodore Nichols, of Westerly, R. I.; and Idella, who died at the age of sixteen.

Robert A. Sherman received the average education of country reared boys, and in his twenty-second year, Dec. 26, 1869, married Anna Jane Sayles, daughter of Henry and Lucinda (Franklin) Sayles. Thereafter he continued to live on the home farm for about five years, and then located on the Sayles farm in Plainfield for seven years. For a short time he managed the interests of the Charles Henry Bailey farm in Sterling, and then removed to the Louis Hammond farm, just south of his present home. After farming and teaming for three years, he purchased seventy acres of the farm which comprises his present home, to which was later added fifty acres of the old homestead, as well as a portion of the old Amey farm, his possessions now amounting to one hundred and sixty acres of land. His farm is one of the best grass farms in the town, and is therefore well adapted to the use for which it is intended, that of serving for a model dairying enterprise, than which there is no better conducted in the neighborhood. He has a herd of forty head of cattle, twenty-six of which are milch cows, and several horses.

To Mr. Sherman and his wife have been born the following children: Hattie A., born Oct. 10, 1870, married James G. Miller, of Moosup, Conn., and has one son, Lloyd; Gracie M., born Sept. 14, 1872, married James H. Dixon, of Campbell Mills, Conn., and has two children, Edith M., and Robert J.; Robert J., born Jan. 5, 1875, married Eleanor F. Goodrich, has one son, Charles Harry, and lives in Sterling; Harry A., born Nov. 17, 1878, married Ethel Merritt, has one daughter, Angeline Ethel, and lives in Sterling; Orilla, born Sept. 10, 1880, is the wife of Clark C. Congdon of Sterling; Fred W., born Sept. 13, 1887; Bertha M., born Feb. 8, 1890; and Mamie E., born Feb. 22, 1892. The last three children are living at home. Mr. Sherman is a Democrat in politics, and has always taken an active interest in town affairs. Among the town offices which he has maintained with credit may be mentioned those of assessor and member of the board of education, his latter service taking place during the building of the new school house. For several years he has had charge of the highways, and has rendered efficient service in making the roads of the town of excellent and enduring quality. He is industrious and capable, and has the confidence and regard of the community in which he lives.

WILLIAM J. CRAIG, widely known as the leading merchant tailor of Windham county, springs from Scottish ancestry, and exhibits in his character many of the sturdy virtues of his parentage.

Thomas Craig, the father of William J., was born near Belfast, Ireland, as was also his wife, Agnes Hart, by whom he had twelve children. Mr. Craig is still a large tenant farmer near Belfast.

William J. Craig was born near Belfast, Ireland, Oct. 22, 1864. As a boy he lived near Belfast, and his schooling was secured before the age of thirteen years, in the local schools. He was then apprenticed to the tailor trade, and for a period of thirteen years he followed that calling in Belfast. In 1892 Mr. Craig came to America and for two years was employed as a coat maker in Boston, when he came to Danielson, to enter the tailoring establishment of E. W. Hayward. For three years he continued with Mr. Hayward, and for the same period was in the employ of Arthur Scott, who had bought out Mr. Hayward.

Mr. Craig bought out Mr. Scott, Feb. 15, 1887, and established himself in what has since proved to be a very popular and successful enterprise. He has employed as many as thirteen assistants and the year around he requires from eight to ten experienced workers.

Mr. Craig was married Oct. 3, 1895, to M. Annie, a daughter of George Dexter, and a descendant of one of the old Killingly families. They have one child, Lester R., who was born Sept. 5, 1896.

On coming to these shores, Mr. Craig cast his fortunes with the Republican party, and is an intelligent and thoughtful citizen, well informed as to the current issues, and prepared to sustain his political views. He belongs to Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., having united with that fraternity some four years ago. He is also a member of Orient Lodge, No. 37, K. P. Mr. Craig belongs to the Westfield Congregational Church, and for ten years has served acceptably as assistant librarian of the Sunday-school. For some years he has also been an usher in the church.

JOHN EVERETT FISK, corporation counsel of the city of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., is a man who has reached his present eminence by his own efforts, and is generally recognized as the most capable incumbent the office ever had.

Coming from one of the old families of New England, it is not difficult to trace in him many of the attributes which in his ancestors made them prominent and distinguished members of society. His ancestry in America dates from Nathaniel Fisk, who in 1652 came from England with his wife, Dorathea (Symonds) Fisk, and two sons, Nathaniel and John. Before reaching the new home Nathaniel died, but his widow and children settled in Watertown, and John, of these sons, born in 1619, was our subject's early ancestor.

(I) John Fisk married Sarah Wyeth; (II) John (2), born in 1655, married Abigail Parks; (III) David, born in 1697, married Elizabeth Durkee; (IV) Capt. Asa, born in 1733, married Elizabeth Knight; (V) Elisha, born in 1762, married Hannah Wheeler; (VI) Calvin, born in 1807, married Nancy Ann (Converse) Young; and (VII) Everett Y., the father of our subject, married Louisa (Moore) Bartlett.

(VIII) John Everett Fisk was born in Stafford, Conn., Feb. 19, 1869, and received training in the public schools of his native place, including the Stafford high school. Within a short time after he commenced the study of law he entered the law office of Hon. William A. King, now attorney-general of Connecticut, who a few months later removed from Stafford, but Mr. Fisk continued his study in the office of Hon. Joel H. Reed, the present States' attorney, and was admitted to the Bar of Tolland county in 1891, being at that time the youngest member of the Connecticut Bar.

Soon after beginning to practice his profession he was established in Rockville and almost immediately received encouragement, his ability in the management of business early fixing attention upon him, and from that time his rise has been steady, sure and permanent. During 1892-3 he was clerk of the city court and for some years past he has been the efficient and highly popular corporation counsel of Rockville.

On July 23, 1901, Mr. Fisk married Lottie Marion, daughter of Dr. R. N. Roberts, deceased, and Mrs. E. M. (Blakeley) Roberts.

Politics has become somewhat attractive to Mr.

Fisk, and his friends of the Republican party believe there are high seats awaiting one of his ability, aside from his legal ambitions. Mr. Fisk is a Past Grand of Rising Star Lodge, No. 49, I. O. O. F.

Coming to Rockville a stranger, it is remarkable that so young a lawyer should so soon have attained the prominence which Mr. Fisk has done, until one remembers that natural ability, painstaking care, quick comprehension of details and thorough mastery of his case, combined with courteous manners and winning address, must find recognition in any intelligent community. These are attributes possessed by Mr. Fisk, and he is recognized as one of the representative professional men of Rockville.

CHARLES EDWIN LEONARD, the chief of the Willimantic Fire Department, has with the exception of four years, been a resident of Willimantic, Windham county, since 1873.

Mr. Leonard was born June 21, 1854, in Taunton, Mass., and is next to the youngest of a family of five children, two of whom were boys, born to Horatio and Elizabeth (Wetherell) Leonard. When he was a child, his parents removed to Southampton, Mass., and the elder Leonard died at the age of thirty-two when his youngest child was but four years old. At the time this misfortune befell the Leonard family, it had a bright future, but troubles ensued. The widow was left with her five children and a small income to make her way in the world. She is yet living at an advanced age in East Hampton, Mass., where she is highly esteemed by her many friends.

Mr. Leonard has made his own way since he was eight years old. For the first four years of that time he lived with a farmer on Rye street, in East Windsor, Conn., where he attended the winter district school; he was a lad of determination and energy, and never shirked any task set before him. Until he reached the age of nineteen years, when he came to Willimantic, his time had been devoted to farming, with the exception of a brief period spent in a whip factory at Westfield, Mass.

In 1873 Mr. Leonard came to Willimantic to take a position in the spool shop of the Willimantic Linen Company. After a short time he entered the employ of the Atwood Machine Company, where he engaged in the machinist trade. After the fire of February, 1876, when this company lost its plant, it removed to Stonington, taking Mr. Leonard with it. There he was engaged with the firm until about 1880. That year he came back to Willimantic to engage as a contractor with the Morrison Machine Company, establishing a connection that continued unbroken for over nineteen years. In June, 1899, Mr. Leonard assumed a responsible position in the mechanical department of the Willimantic Machine Company, which he was instrumental in establishing. As one of its directors he has worked hard for the success of the company.

Mr. Leonard is a skilled machinist, thoroughly equipped for such work, and possesses the confidence of his employers to a marked and unusual degree. When the Fountain Extinguisher Company, No. 2, was organized he was one of its charter members. After his return from Stonington, Mr. Leonard joined the Alert Hose Company, becoming its foreman in the second year of his membership. After holding this office two years he was appointed first assistant to Chief Daniels, and when that gentleman resigned to become city postmaster, Mr. Leonard was selected to fill his place, a position he has retained to the present time, with the exception of two years when he was not on duty. As Chief his career has been very successful. System and discipline are strong factors of his administration, and he directs his admirable fire-fighting force with coolness, decision, courage, judgment and experience. He never asks another to go where he would not go himself. In his men he is personally interested, and in case of accident or illness, no one is more mindful of their needs. He is a strong factor in promoting harmony among the men and in maintaining good feeling, and in this respect has a model department. It is the universal judgment that in its fire chief Willimantic has the right man in the right place.

Mr. Leonard belongs to the Eastern Star Lodge, F. & A. M., at Willimantic, and is a Republican. He is not an office seeker, and is highly thought of by the city in which his industrious and useful life is passing.

Mr. Leonard was married at Stonington, Jan. 9, 1879, to Miss Minnie Brewster, of that town. She was born in New York, and is the only daughter of George and Mary (Clark) Brewster. Her father was a sea captain, and was long engaged in the foreign trade, penetrating into the remote corners of the globe, and having a rich and fruitful experience. Mrs. Leonard received an excellent education, and is a lady of many charming traits and characteristics. To Mr. and Mrs. Leonard have come the following children: (1) Mary B., a graduate of the Willimantic high school in 1899, who graduated from the Willimantic Normal School in 1901, and is now a successful teacher; (2) George S. B., a graduate of the Willimantic high school in the class of 1899, and a graduate of the dental department of the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, who has now a fine office and is practicing very successfully for himself.

Mr. Leonard built the house on Walnut street in which he is living at the present time, in 1887. The family are associated with the Congregational Church, and belong to the best people of the city.

HON. JULIUS CARL CONVERSE, son of the late Senator Julius Converse, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere, is a native of Stafford, born April 28, 1863. His early education was acquired in the home schools, and he was graduated from the Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn., in 1886. Reared in a manufacturing atmosphere, he has followed in the footsteps of his father and grandfather, and is carrying forward to still greater success the enterprises which they founded and developed. Having inherited many of their characteristics, he is a useful citizen, an excellent business man, and is proving himself in every way worthy of the name he bears.

An ardent and able advocate of the principles of the Republican party, Mr. Converse has been from boyhood, active in the councils of that party, and he has served his town in a number of official relations and to the satisfaction of his constituents. Mr. Converse has been a member of the board of burgesses of Stafford Springs, was elected from the town to the State Legislature in 1889, in which body he served on the committee on Military Affairs, and was chairman of the committee on Forfeited Rights. Again, in 1895, he was chosen a member of the Legislature, and served on the committee on Appropriations. In the following year, Mr. Converse was elected to the State Senate from the 24th district, and in this august body he was recognized as a man of ability and one of that body's most influential members. Socially Mr. Converse is genial and obliging, easily winning friends and always keeping them. As an enthusiastic Mason, he has been master of Ionic Lodge, F. & A. M., of Stafford Springs, and Most Excellent High Priest of Orient Chapter, R. A. M., and he is also a member of the United Workmen and of the order of Macca-bees.

On June 3, 1896, Mr. Converse was married to Edith Clare Baker, of Stafford Springs, a daughter of the late G. H. Baker, and to this union these children have been born: Kingsley, July 28, 1897; and Clover, June 27, 1900. Mr. Converse is at present living in Springfield, Massachusetts.

THEODORE BERR is known as the leading blacksmith in Ellington, Tolland county, and is one of the most popular and respected citizens of that municipality. Mr. Berr was born in the village of Somerfeldt, province of Brandenburg, Prussia.

Gustave Berr, the father of Theodore, was a nail maker in Prussia, and came to the United States, bringing his family with him. Locating at Rockville, he found employment in the woolen mill, and died there at the age of seventy-one years. Paulina Rich, his wife, survived him one year, and their children were: (1) Julius, who was married in Prussia, is a minister, and is now a member of the faculty of the Baldwin Wallace University, at Berea, Ohio; (2) Maria, who married Fred Blank, a merchant, and after his death, Emil Heyne, also a merchant; (3) Emil, for a time engaged in the woolen manufacture at Malvern, Ohio, and now a music dealer in Pekin, Ill., who was married to Lucy Hillerman; (4) August, for a time with his brother at Malvern, Ohio, but now the superintendent of an extensive woolen mill at San Francisco, married to Julia Arbeider; (5) Theodore; (6) Gustave, married to Carrie A. Beck, and a boss weaver in the New England Mills at Rockville.

Theodore Berr was born April 14, 1851, and had but few advantages in the schools of his native land, where his education was secured. When he was thirteen years old he accompanied his parents to this country, making the voyage from Hamburg on the ship "Germania." They were twelve days on the water, landed in New York, and made their way directly to Rockville, where young Theodore found work as an errand boy in the New England mills, where in after years he learned the trade of weaver. He concluded, however, when a young man, that he would rather be a blacksmith, and learned that trade of Horace Treat. He worked two years for that gentleman, receiving fifty dollars a year and his board. At the expiration of that time he became an employe of Banning & Southard, and remained with them for several years. Coming to Ellington at the end of his engagement with this firm, he was employed by Martin Richenberger, who had a shop on the site of Mr. Berr's present shop. At the end of fifteen months he left the services of this gentleman, and went to Malvern, where his brothers were engaged in business, and remained in that town for six years. He had bought a shop, but sold it and returned to Ellington in May, 1879, to the shop in which he is now the sole owner and proprietor. There he has since been engaged in blacksmithing and wood repairing work. Success has crowned his efforts, and he is known as an industrious and honest workman, whose word may be depended on in every particular.

Mr. Berr was married May 27, 1875, in Canton, Ohio, by the Rev. Peter Holbrook, to Samantha Alice Smith, born Feb. 7, 1858, in Osnaburg, Stark Co., Ohio. She is the daughter of John and Maggie (Caylor) Smith. Her father was a laborer who died when she was six months old. The widow married for her second husband, Henry Geip. She died in April, 1856, at the age of fifty-two years. The children of John and Maggie Smith were: Simon, who died at the age of eleven years; Mary, who died when nine years old; Frederick who married Maggie Brigle, and was a blacksmith at Malvern; Samantha Alice. By the first marriage of the father of Mrs. Berr were born: John C., a mechanic in Canton, Ohio; whose wife was Lucinda Voy; Kate, the wife of John Myers, who lives at Massillon, Ohio; Anna J., the widow of James Waters, who lives at Canton, Ohio.

Theodore Berr and his wife are parents to the following family: Gustave F., born June 17, 1876; Gertrude B. P., born May 13, 1878, the wife of Linwood R. Campbell, and the mother of one daughter, S. Ellen M., born Aug. 13, 1896; Margaret T. A., born May 13, 1880, the wife of Charles W. Wiers, of Rockville; Hattie R. M., born May 21, 1882, a graduate of the high school in Rockville in 1900, and a teacher in Ellington, who is a working and valuable member of the Congregational Church, and also in the Grange, in which she has held official station; Charles H. T., born July 14, 1885; Samantha A., born Aug. 8, 1889, who died Aug. 15 of the same year; Emma C. L., born Jan. 21, 1893.

Mr. Berr is a Republican, and is a member of the United Order of the Golden Cross, Safety Commandery, No. 291, of Rockville. He attends the services of the Congregational Church, of which his wife and daughter Hattie, and sons, Gustave and Charles are members.

Mr. Berr is a quiet and hard-working man, and assisted by his noble wife has accumulated a handsome competence besides rearing a fine family of children. He owns his shop and three houses, one of which formerly belonged to John Hall, and was used for a boarding school. Mr. Berr also owns a few acres of land, on which he grows tobacco and garden truck, and which is now managed by his son. The home in which he lives is a hospitable one, and their many friends find a cheerful welcome from the various members of this family.

CALVIN MONROE MUNYAN is a farmer and stock raiser of the town of Thompson, Windham Co., Conn.

The Munyan family of Northeastern Connecticut is one of two hundred years standing in New England. The American ancestor, Edward Munyan, a weaver by trade, came to America about 1700 and located in Salem, Mass. About that time and some years later there was a constant migration going on to the lands of Windham county, Connecticut. There being no great demand for his labors in the weaving business Mr. Munyan joined the tide of those seeking homes in the wilderness. The land in what was known to the Indians as Quinnetisset, now Thompson, Conn., began to be occupied some years after 1700, and that on Thompson Hill in 1716, where Hezekiah Sabin, a son of Capt. John Sabin, of Pomfret, became the first resident proprietor. In 1721 Mr. Munyan purchased of James Leavens one hundred acres of land and removed his family to it, at that time a remote wilderness. This land lay north of Pottaquatic and extended to near the Rhode Island line and is still held by his descendants. Mr. Munyan's family at the time of removal included his wife Sarah, two daughters, Keziah and Sarah, and a son, Joseph, the latter then a boy of ten years. The journey was long and laborious, the roads very poor and the streams seldom bridged. Six cows, ten sheep and four hogs, to stock the farm, shared the perils of the way. Oxen were hired at the different villages to convey the cart of household goods from one settlement to another. The old oak tree under which they encamped the night of their arrival, was found covered with wild turkeys in the morning. A dense unbroken forest stretched eastward many miles into Rhode Island. The Greens and Hascalls were their nearest neighbors, and they supposed them to be the only inhabitants of the region. Wolves chased the cattle; pine knots were burned through the night to scare away wild beasts and Indians. A log house was built during the summer and land adjoining broken up and planted with corn, from which in the autumn three apronfuls of ears were harvested by the daughters. Sarah Munyan, the wife of Edward, was taken into full communion in the old Killingly Church (organized in 1715) Aug. 28, 1728, and Keziah Munyan, one of the daughters of Edward, married Jan. 14, 1736, Benjamin MacIntire.

Joseph Munyan, son of the immigrant settler, born about 1712, married March 11, 1741, Sarah Joslin (marriage recorded in the Thompson Parish Church) and had children, all baptized as follows: Hannah, Jan. 16, 1743; Jonathan, March 10, 1745; Joseph, July 26, 1747; Israel, Jan. 24, 1750; John, Aug. 6, 1758; Benjamin, July 20, 1760; and David, Sept. 28, 1762. The father of this family in 1739, built on the homestead a frame house, one of the first substantial ones of that locality.

Through one of the sons of Joseph Munyan descended David Munyan, the grandfather of Calvin Munyan, whose name introduces this article. David Munyan married Lavina Brown and their children were: Albin, Irving, Hiram and Louisa. Of these Irving Munyan was born July 3, 1819, in the town of Thompson, and March 13, 1842, married Almira Eddy, who was also a native of Thompson, a daughter of Samuel and Almira (Talbot) Eddy, well known and respected people of the town. Mr. Munyan, after living some years in the town of Killingly, purchased a farm in Thompson near Quadic, where he passed his lifetime, engaged in farming. Mr. Munyan was a plain and unassuming man, and one whose manner of life and conduct was such that he made and held many friends and commanded the respect and esteem of his many acquaintances. In his political views he was a Democrat. Mr. Munyan died May 14, 1894, and Mrs. Munyan, Dec. 28, 1884; both are buried in East Putnam cemetery, of which he was the founder. To this couple were born two children, namely: Marcus T., born Dec. 26, 1842, deceased Nov. 7, 1864; and Calvin Monroe.

Deacon Calvin Monroe Munyan, son of Irving, and the subject proper of this article, was born Aug. 4, 1850, at Daniels Village in the town of Killingly, and in the neighboring schools received his elementary education, later attending the Woodstock Academy. Reared on a farm, Mr. Munyan has continued agricultural life as a vocation. He possesses some good timber land in Thompson, and has dealt a good deal in lumber. He is one of the largest dairy farmers in the town. In his political views Mr. Munyan is an Independent, voting for the men for official positions whom he thinks the most desirable and best fitted for them. For several years he served as assessor of the town; he has also served on the school committee and as clerk of the district. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and has freely given his services to advance the cause of religion in his community, and has been a teacher in the Sunday-school. In 1897 he was elected a deacon in the church and still sustains such relation with it. In all these official positions, both in town and church, Mr. Munyan has been efficient and painstaking. He has the confidence, esteem and respect of his community.

On March 6, 1873, Mr. Munyan was married, at Thompson, to Miss Ella J. Bates, a daughter of Welcome Bates and a half-sister of Col. G. D. Bates, of Putnam. Two children have been born to the marriage, namely: Florence I., who married Henry L. Converse, of Putnam, and has a daughter, Hazel M.; Claude Monroe, who was born May 20, 1877. The latter married Ada E., a daughter of Belden S. Brown, born Aug. 22, 1875, in Harwinton, Litchfield county, Conn. Mrs. Munyan, in addition to attending the public schools of her native town, spent some time at Wilbraham Academy, and then was for some six years engaged in teaching school. Their children are: Gladys Evelyn, born July 29, 1899; Merrill Calvin, Sept. 28, 1900; and Herman Belden, Aug. 31, 1901.

Among the earlier generations of the Munyans in the old family neighborhood there were a number of them who went to New London in the war of 1812. A Caleb Munyan was a sergeant in Capt. John Joslin's company, term of service from June 21 to 28, 1813; and an Ebenezer Munyan was a private in Capt. Parley Whitmore's company for the same term of service. A Joseph Munyan was a member of Capt. Samuel Dresser's company, term of service from June 25 to July 15, 1813, and for the same term of service an Isaac Munyan was a member of Capt. Jacob Lyon's company, and another Isaac was in Capt. John Joslin's company, from June 21 to 28, 1813.

ANTHONY FAMILY. The great-grandfather, Gould Anthony, was a native of South Portsmouth, R. I., where he died about 1840 at an advanced age, and one of his descendants, William G. Anthony, remembers the old man clad in the colonial dress—knee breeches and cut-away coat.

Jonathan Anthony, the grandfather, was also born in Portsmouth, where he grew up and married Rachel Church, a granddaughter of Capt. Caleb Church, who was distinguished for gallantry in fighting the Indians, and was quite an extensive farmer at South Portsmouth, where he died at the age of eighty-two. His first wife died when but thirty, and he married again, but his children were all born of his first marriage. To Jonathan and Rachel Anthony were born: Reuben, who died at Westport, Mass.; Peter, died at South Portsmouth, R. I.; Martha, who married Edmund Albrough and lives at Fall River, Mass.; Caleb; Gould, living at Westport; Abby, who died in middle life; Joseph, deceased, who lived on the old homestead at South Portsmouth, Rhode Island.

The father, Caleb Anthony, Sr., was born April 8, 1812, in South Portsmouth, R. I., and died at Scotland, Conn., Nov. 2, 1884. Growing up in South Portsmouth, R. I., he engaged in farming, but when a young man removed to Fair Haven, Conn., where he married Asenath Gammons, born July 16, 1809, deceased Sept. 19, 1887. After marriage he engaged in farming in Fair Haven, and eventually located in Scotland, where he purchased a farm and operated it. As his health was not good, the greater portion of the farm work fell upon the shoulders of his boys, as soon as they grew old enough. In politics, he was a Whig and later a Republican and took an active interest in town affairs, as well as those of national import. Both he and his excellent wife were members of the Christian Church of Howard Valley, town of Hampton, and for many years the father was a deacon in the same.

To Caleb and Asenath Anthony were born a family of children. Abbie X., born Oct. 31, 1834, married March 13, 1853, Daniel K. Haskins of California. William Gammons, born April 22, 1836, married Harriet M. Kimball, an ex-blacksmith and farmer on Pudding Hill, in the northeast part of the town of Scotland, was a representative in 1873, and has a family as follows: Lewis, of Springfield, Mass.; Millisa J., the wife of David Wilson, Jr., of Scotland; Charles E., a farmer of Scotland; Henry E., of Willimantic; Edwin L., a farmer of Scotland; Grace E., married to Walter Butler. The third child of Caleb and Asenath Anthony was Jonathan, born June 11, 1839. Gould, born Nov. 29, 1840, served three years in the Civil war as a sergeant in the U. S. Signal Corps, and died at New Orleans, La., June 24, 1864. Eliza, born June 16, 1842 unmarried, resides in Canterbury, Conn. Mary E., born Jan. 1, 1844, married Rufus T. Haskins, an ex-sea captain and now a farmer, residing in Scotland, and they have: Rufus C., Leander O., Jessie A., Flora M. and Edith A. Caleb was born June 15, 1851. Asenath, born June 25, 1854, married May 1, 1873, Oscar Allen of Hanover, Connecticut.

CALEB ANTHONY, of the above family, was born in Fair Haven, Mass., and when a child was taken by his parents to Scotland, where the father purchased a farm of 100 acres, to which he afterward added 100 more, on Pudding Hill. There the boy attended district school and later had the advantage of being given two fall terms at a select school. Later he learned the trade of carpenter and stone mason, and has been very successful in those lines, as well as in farming. After his marriage he purchased the Webb place on Pudding Hill and about eighteen years ago, built his present home, pleasantly situated and well equipped with the comforts of life. Everything about the premises gives evidence that Mr. Anthony is thorough in all that he undertakes.

Mr. Anthony married Nellie Sullivan, a native of Mystic, Conn., and a daughter of Michael Sullivan. To this union were born: Mabel Winefred, who married Charles Kenyon, of Canterbury; Gould Roydon, a student in the theological seminary at Bangor, Maine, who previously attended business college and the Emerson School of Oratory, Boston, for one year; Mary Maude and Martha Isabel, successful teachers and graduates of Wilimantic Normal School.

In politics, Mr. Anthony is a Republican and has served most acceptably on the board of relief for three terms; was a Representative in the State Legislature, 1887-88, has been one of the school visitors for twenty years, but recently resigned, and for nearly that period was school superintendent. Both he and Mrs. Anthony are charter members of the local Grange, of which Mr. Anthony was the first secretary, has been master three years and lecturer one year, and they are also connected with the Pomona. They are members of the Christian Church, but as there are no services held by that denomination in Scotland, they attend the Congregational Church of the town, and are very active in the good works of the church and the various societies connected with it.

The members of the Anthony family are representative examples of the sturdy New England people; good business men; excellent farmers; kind neighbors; patriotic citizens; upright public officials; men who bring into their everyday transactions the doctrines they hold and listen to on Sunday, and whose whole lives from start to finish are worthy of emulation.

CAPT. ALBERTI TERRY THOMPSON, the popular proprietor of Snipsic Lake privilege, is one of the substantial young men of Rockville, Tolland county.

The father of our subject, Lucius E. Thompson, also well and favorably known in that locality, was born in East Windsor, Conn., Dec. 10, 1831, a son of John Terry and Sarah (Blodgett) Thompson; he grew up in his native place and attended school there, coming before maturity to Rockville, where he entered the New England mill. In this mill he was soon advanced to the position of designer, but in 1860 he entered into the manufacture of wadding, building a mill for the business and becoming very prosperous, until a conflagration destroyed the mill and contents and caused him to lose everything. Later he opened up a flour and feed business in Rockville, and then for some years had the catering privilege for the Hartford high school. He gave that up to associate himself with our subject in the various projects at Snipsic Lake.

On May 26, 1852, Mr. Thompson was married to Frances M. Bowe, who was born at East Windsor Hill in 1830, a daughter of Asa and Sabra (Strickland) Bowe, the former of whom was born in Middletown, Conn., and the latter in Portland, a daughter of Seth and Annie (Shepherd) Strickland. Seth was a Revolutionary soldier and a son of John and Silence (Penfield) Strickland. Asa Bowe's mother died when he was born; he became a well-known shoemaker and farmer and first married Wealthy Webster, who bore him four daughters. His second marriage was to Sabra Strickland, the children of this union being: Julia A., who married Frank Holmes, and later Cyrus Edson; Mary J., who married Elijah Coville and died at East Windsor; and our subject's mother. The death of Asa Bowe, took place at East Windsor Hill, his wife dying at Stafford Springs. Asa was a very well known man and very methodical in his habits, keeping a diary of the events of his life, which proved of great value to Dr. Stiles in the preparation of his publication on East Windsor. Mrs. Thompson, a well preserved and intelligent lady, first came to Rockville in 1846, and after attending school for two winters, entered the mills, for at that time all the daughters of the best old families considered it a privilege to engage in mill work, and as families were often large, it served to relieve their parents of their support. Mrs. Thompson is eligible to the D. A. R., but has never applied for membership. She is a most consistent member of the Union Congregational Church at Rockville.

The eldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson is Frederick H., born in Rockville, who married Margaret B. Carver, a native of Hebron, Conn. In the schools of Rockville he received an excellent education, and for ten years was the owner of the Snipsic Lake privilege and during that time, with Arthur J. Holmes, began a machine shop on the corner of Elm and Prospect streets, which was later removed to Thompson street and still later sold, when he engaged with the firm of Sawyer Mann & Co., of Boston, who were interested in electric work. This was an opening for young Mr. Thompson which took him to various parts of the world, as he was a skilled workman, and he is now in the employ of Church Kerr & Co., a branch of the Westinghouse Company. His residence is in New York, where he has built up a reputation in his line and is sent to foreign countries to manage electrical work for his employers. The second child of the family was Alberti Terry, and the youngest was Annie S., who is now Mrs. John P. Cameron, of Rockville, and has two children, Beatrice Margaret, and Audry Thompson.

Alberti Terry Thompson, was born Dec. 16, 1861, in Rockville, which has been his home ever since. There he attended school and when about fifteen years old entered the employ of Samuel Fitch Sons Company, where he was rapidly advanced on account of natural mechanical skill, and was soon made machine fixer; later he entered his brother's machine shop, spending about five years in machine work.

In the season of 1886 Mr. Thompson first took charge of the business at Snipsic Lake, and in 1887 he bought the boat business from his brother, consisting at that time of two small steamers and now is the owner of three boats, one being thirty-five feet long, another, forty-one feet long, and the third, sixty-one feet long, together with twenty row boats; in 1899 he increased his responsibilities by the purchase of the grove privileges at the lake, including contracts for the same. During the winter of 1887-88 he was engaged in electrical business for the Sawyer Mann Company, of Boston, and spent the winter in Florida, putting in a large electric plant, and for several years was employed in J. J. Regan's mill, doing high class repair work, as it is his pleasure, as soon as the season closes and the boats are put away, to engage in electrical work, in this line having made four trips to Cuba, visiting all the large cities on the island.

Mr. Thompson was married in South Hadley, Mass., Aug. 26, 1881, to Miss Ida May Bacon, of Rockville, a daughter of James M. Bacon, and the children born to this union were: Newton Ernest, born in 1884; Robert Charles, in 1887 and Lillian, who died at the age of eleven years. His second marriage occurred Jan. 23, 1901, to Mrs. Lizzie Taylor.

Capt. Thompson built two houses on Thompson street, in Rockville, which he rents, the street having been named in his honor, but his own home, a most comfortable one, is on Snipsic street. In politics he is a Republican, and is socially connected with the A. O. U. W., of Rockville, and was formerly a member of the Rockville polo team, which is well remembered by the lovers of the sport, as they met all of the celebrated teams of the country and were never defeated.

DANIEL G. ARNOLD. The Arnold family, of which Daniel G. Arnold, one of the prominent farmers and stock raisers of Thompson, Windham county, is a worthy representative, descends, as do also the Arnolds of Rhode Island, from forefathers of extreme antiquity, who were none other than the ancient romance enthroned princes of Wales.

William and Thomas Arnold, sons of Thomas, of Cheshelbourne, England, by different wives, were the American ancestors of the Rhode Island family. These brothers came in the seventeenth generation in direct line from Yuir, King of Gwentland, who flourished about the twelfth century, and who personally descended from Yuir, the second son of Cadwaladir, King of the Britons. (I) Thomas Arnold, son of Thomas of Cheshelbourne, England, by his second wife, was baptized April 18, 1599, and sailed from London, England, in the ship "Plain Joan," in May, 1635. He went first to Virginia, but as early as 1640 settled in Watertown, Mass. After moving to Providence, R. I., he was made a freeman of the Rhode Island Colony, May 18, 1658, and was deputy in 1670. He married for his second wife, about 1640, Phebe, daughter of George and Susannah Parkhurst, and his death occurred March 24, 1674-5, his wife surviving him until 1688. He had the following children: Thomas, born May 3, 1625, who died young; Nicholas, born in 1627, who also died young; Susannah, married April 7, 1654, to John Farmer; Ichabod, born March 1, 1641, who died young; Richard, born March 20, 1642, who died April 22, 1710, his wife, Mary Angle, having died in 1695; Thomas, born 1645; John, born Feb. 17, 1648, who died Jan. 5, 1725; and Eleazer, born June 17, 1657, who died Aug. 21, 1722.

(II) Eleazer Arnold, son of Thomas, lived and died in Providence, where he married Eleanor Smith, daughter of John and Elizabeth Smith, the former of whom was a Mason, and president of the Providence, Rhode Island, plantation. Eight children were born to Eleazer and his wife; their son

(III) Joseph, who died Nov. 4, 1746, married, June 20, 1716, Mercy, daughter of Amos Stafford, who was born in Rhode Island, Sept. 21, 1694, and who bore him eleven children.

(IV) Caleb, son of Joseph, born at Smithfield, R. I., May 26, 1725, died Feb. 5, 1784. June 26, 1745, he married Patience Brown, born July 3, 1729. He took part in the Revolutionary war, as did also his eight sons, and two sons-in-law. Of his children, Ezekiel married Abigail Baxter, and reared a large family; Nehemiah married Alice Brown, daughter of James Brown; Lucy became the wife of William Colwell, and had one son, Arnold; William was born May 31, 1751; Jabez married Lucinda Hunter and for a second wife, Rachel Phettypluce; Caleb married Mary Arnold; Othniel was killed at White Plains, N. Y., during the Revolutionary war; Edward was a drummer boy during the Revolutionary war and was the first to enter Yorktown; Patience married Ephraim Williams of Rhode Island; Oliver was born in 1675 and married Sophia Walker; and Acsah was born in 1767 and married Jonathan Brown. Caleb Arnold married for his second wife, Anna Arnold, by whom he had two sons, Arba and Joseph.

(V) William Arnold, son of Caleb, was born in Smithfield, May 31, 1751, and died at his home in Gloucester, R. I., May 9, 1836. He was quartermaster of the Rhode Island department during 1778-79, and held the rank of colonel. He married Iscah Malavery, who died Nov. 4, 1799, and who was the mother of the following children: Nathan, born July 18, 1774; Mercy, born Sept. 26, 1775, who married Elisha A. Hopkins, and died June 8, 1819; Lydia, March 19, 1777, who married William Stone of Killingly; Patience, April 5, 1779, who married William Alexander; David, June 21, 1781; Caleb, April 5, 1784; Elisha, Nov. 30, 1786; Mary, April 9, 1790; and Sarah, April 4, 1792, who married James Cutler.

(VI) David, born June 21, 1781, at Gloucester, R. I., married Polly Cutler, of Killingly, and had the following children: Betsey, born April 25, 1803, who married Riley Page; Alexander, Dec. 28, 1805; Lester, April 29, 1807; Azriah and Eleazer, June 25, 1808; Lucy, Nov. 16, 1809; Patience, Oct. 24, 1813, who married Riley Darling, and lived at East Greenwich, R. I.; Lydia, April 21, 1816, who married Clovis Eddy, of Gloucester, R. I.; William Henry, Oct. 10, 1818, who died in 1830; Harriet, Jan. 19, 1820, who married Manning Angel; and James, May 5, 1822.

(VII) James Arnold, father of Daniel G., was reared to the farm work to which he devoted the greater part of his life. He was also engaged in lumbering in Gloucester, of which town he was a prominent and well known business man. April 10, 1867, he came to Connecticut, and located on the old Horace Elliott farm of 165 acres in Thompson, near the Putnam line. There he spent the remainder of his life in farming, and died, Dec. 23, 1891. He was a Republican, but not an office seeker, although he filled a number of local trusts. He was a member of the M. E. Church. In Gloucester, R. I., Jan. 20, 1847, he married Abbie A. White, born Aug. 10, 1830, who died Jan. 22, 1863. For a second wife Mr. Arnold married Caroline M. Withey, born in Plainfield, Conn., Feb. 7, 1831, who died Jan. 13, 1901, and who is buried with her husband in the Putnam cemetery. Of this union there was one child who died in infancy. Three children were born of the first union of Mr. Arnold, of whom David was the oldest, born Aug. 14, 1849, deceased in August, 1873, and married to Emma Tucker, of Killingly, who bore him two children: Bertrand E., who died at the age of twenty-four years; and Harry P., of Thompson. Joseph Arnold, second son of James Arnold by his first marriage, was born April 20, 1851, and died Oct. 21, 1851.

(VIII) Daniel G. Arnold was born in Gloucester, Sept. 19, 1852, and was educated at the public schools of Gloucester and Putnam, supplemented by a course in Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. On the home farm he assisted with the general farming, stock raising and dairying, the latter being carried on to a considerable extent. Ever since his father's death he has been the sole owner of the old farm, upon which he has expended much money in general improvements, and in the purchase of modern and labor saving machinery. He is a public-spirited and enterprising man, and though a staunch upholder of Republican principles and issues, has followed his father's example of keeping out of political striving. He is identified with the M. E. Church as a member and as president of the board of trustees, and is an active worker in the interests of the church. For eight years he was a member of the State militia, and served as captain of Company G for two years.

At Putnam, June 20, 1878, Mr. Arnold was united in marriage with Mary F. Elliott, of Thompson, daughter of Sylvester and Mary A. (Jacobs) Elliott, of which union there has been one child, James Sylvester, born Nov. 3, 1886, who is living at home. The Elliott family, of which Mrs. Arnold is a member, is one of the old and honorable ones of Thompson.

Ebenezer H. Elliott, grandfather of Mrs. Arnold, was born in Thompson, Feb. 3, 1787, and married for his first wife, Esther Clough, his second wife being Harriet Kelly. The following children were born into the family of Ebenezer: William D., born Jan. 26, 1812; Lewis, Jan. 30, 1815; Sylvester, March 19, 1817; Alexander, May 21, 1819; Sarah H., April 20, 1823; and Esther A., Jan. 19, 1842, a daughter by the second wife.

Sylvester Elliott, father of Mrs. Arnold, was born in Thompson, March 19, 1817, and died on his farm there, Aug. 17, 1871. He married Mary A. Jacobs, who died Aug. 13, 1882, and is buried beside him in the cemetery at West Thompson. Both were members of the Congregational Church, and Mr. Elliott was a Republican in politics. To Sylvester Elliott and his wife were born the following children: John J., Jan. 30, 1841; Martha A., June 14, 1849, who died Nov. 8, 1896, having married Samuel A. Ross, of Rhode Island; Mary F., May 27, 1854, who married D. G. Arnold; Frank E., March 14, 1857; and Herbert L., Nov. 24, 1858, deceased May 7, 1859.

HANS MATHISEN HANSEN was born in what was then the Danish province, of Slesvig, Oct. 11, 1851, and is a son of Hans Andersen Trulsen Bosen, who was born in Denmark, and followed the trade of weaving all his life. Mette Marie Laustdater, his wife, was also a Dane, and they lived and died in their native country. Their children were: Anne Marie, who married Jens C. Sorrensen, and lives in Tolland; Boy, who died in Tolland; Carl, a farmer of West Stafford; Laurits, the subject of a sketch which appears on another page; Hans M.; two children who died in infancy.

Hans Mathisen Hansen had his education in the Slesvig schools, and when he was fourteen years of age began working on the neighboring farms, which was his occupation as long as he remained in his own country. Mr. Hansen came to the United States while still a boy, sailing from Hamburg, July 20, 1870, on the steamer, "Harmonia," and arriving in New York on the first day of August. He made his way directly to Hartford, where he secured employment in the Hastings brick yard, but his stay in the yards was brief, as he could earn more working on the construction of the Hartford street car tracks. His next work was on the road bed of the Connecticut Western Railroad, where he put in several months, at the end of which he took a place on the tobacco farm of John O'Brien, continuing about a year with him, and then spending a few months with the Connecticut Western Railroad. Mr. Hansen's next position lasted quite long, and covered three and a half years with the National Screw Company, of Hartford, after which he leased, in company with his brother, the Seth Kenyon farm in the Blue Hills. There he remained for a year and a half, when he sold out his lease to Frederick Juuls, the brother-in-law of Laurits Hansen.

Hans M. Hansen then leased of Seth Kenyon the farm which is situated on Albany avenue. From that place he ran a milk wagon in Hartford for about a year, when he bought the old Fiske farm in Tolland, in partnership with his wife's brother, Anders Jacobsen. This is a place of 120 acres and is regarded as a fine establishment. The two conducted the farm together for seven years, when Mr. Jacobson sold out to Mr. Hansen. To the original farm he has added more land, and now owns 228 acres. For about twelve years Mr. Hansen sold his milk in Stafford, but lately it has all gone to the Vernon Creamery. He is a general farmer, with some twelve acres devoted to fruit culture.

Mr. Hansen belongs to the Mountain Park Pleasure Club, and in his politics is a staunch Republican. For two terms he was assessor, for two terms has served on the board of relief, and has been grand juror. With his family he attends the Episcopal Church, although their faith is that of the Lutheran Church.

Mr. Hansen was married Jan. 18, 1872, to Johanne Jacobsen, a native of Denmark, where she was born Aug. 22, 1850, a daughter of Johannes Jacobsen. Their marriage occurred in Hartford. To this marriage were born: Hans M., Jr., who was appointed postmaster at Tolland, to fill an unexpired term, later went to San Francisco, but is now postmaster at West Willington, Conn.; Johannes, who married Bertha Sparrow, of Tolland, is the father of one child, Edwin Henry, and lives in Palmer, Mass.; Martin M., who married Jensine Mary Jensen, of Stafford, and is living at home; Anthony, who has been living in San Francisco, but is now at Stafford Springs; Mette Marie; Serine Laura; Annie Johanne, who died May 19, 1901.

Mr. Hansen has made his way to a very enviable position against great obstacles, and his career is instructive. Beginning in this country not only without money, but without the speech of the people, he has won a good standing in the estimation of his neighbors, and has accumulated a very comfortable competence. His children are given every opportunity to become useful and honorable people, and he is justly proud of the circumstances in which they are placed as compared with the difficulties that beset him on his arrival here.

EDWIN L. HUTCHINSON, a farmer and a most honorable and highly respected citizen of Andover, Tolland county, belongs to one of the old and substantial families of Hebron. Cyrus Hutchinson, the grandfather of E. L., was a native of Hebron, followed farming, and died at an old age in Coventry. His wife, a Miss Woodward, was born in Columbia, and became the mother of the following children: George Nelson, the father of E. L. Hutchinson; Andrew, who married Nancy Parker, and lived in Coventry; Lucina, who married Henry Higgins, of Glastonbury, Conn.; Jane, married to Henry Grant, of Amenia, N. Y.; Ann Eliza, married to George Goodrich; Mary, who married Gibeon Merrett, of Rhode Island, and died in her young womanhood; Melissa, married to Elisha Parker of Coventry.

George Nelson Hutchinson, the father of E. L., was a native of Andover, and was married to Emily Roxey Loomis, a daughter of Daniel and Masey (Spencer) Loomis. Mr. Hutchinson died May 4, 1874, at the age of fifty-four years; his widow passed away Nov. 9, 1893, at the age of sixty-eight years. Mr. Hutchinson did contract railroad work for a number of years, building a railroad in Greenfield, Mass., and sections of the Highland Division of the Consolidated Railroad, near Providence. For some ten or fifteen years he was engaged in that business, and then settled on a farm in Andover, but later removed to Coventry, where he had a livery, which he carried on in connection with his farming. He was a Republican, took a lively interest in politics and filled the office of constable, and was on the board of relief, and in other positions. Both he and his wife were members of the Congregational Church. To them were born: Eugene, a deputy sheriff in Coventry; George, who died in Andover, at the age of nineteen; Edwin Loomis, whose name appears at the opening of this article.

Edwin L. Hutchinson was born March 13, 1860, attended the local schools, and was married March 14, 1888, to Dewilda Lawton, a native of Mansfield, Mass., and a daughter of Horace and Waite S. (Douglass) Lawton. Mrs. Lawton died when Dewilda was an infant. Her grandfather, Peter Lawton, came from Portsmouth, R. I., and the family history runs back to the advent of three brothers on American soil in old colonial times.

Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson live near Bunker Hill, in the town of Andover, making their home on property that had been in the hands of her ancestors for several generations.

Mr. Hutchinson is a thorough and thrifty farmer, devotes much attention to dairying, and keeps about forty cows. He is a patron of the Andover creamery and Boston market. On the Republican ticket his name has appeared as a candidate for tax collector, and he was elected. Mr. Hutchinson belongs to the A. O. U. W., Lodge No. 15, South Coventry, and both he and his wife are members of the South Coventry Grange, of which he served as steward for three years. He is now (1903) a member of the Legislature.

EDWARD E. FOOTE is an enterprising and prosperous farmer residing in Gilead, in the town of Hebron, Tolland Co., Conn., and belongs to one of the old New England families. Nathaniel Foote, his remote ancestor, is on record in Massachusetts Bay as early as 1633.

(I) Nathaniel Foote was one of the first settlers of the town of Wethersfield, Conn., where he received a grant of land in 1640. He was married in England about 1615, to Elizabeth, a sister of John Deming, who was one of the first settlers of Wethersfield, Conn. Mr. Foote was a farmer, and in 1644, the year of his death, was a deputy to the General Court. His widow married Thomas Welles, who afterward became the governor of Connecticut, and died in 1683.

(II) Nathaniel Foote (2), son of the immigrant, was born about 1620 and in 1646 married Elizabeth Smith. They lived in Wethersfield, where he died in 1655.

(III) Nathaniel Foote (3) was born Jan. 10, 1647, was married May 2, 1672, to Margaret, a daughter of Thomas Bliss, one of the first settlers of Hartford. They made their home at Hatfield, Mass., removing from there to Springfield, Mass., lived at Branford, Conn., and finally returned to Wethersfield, where he died in 1703. Mrs. Margaret Foote died in Colchester in 1745.

(IV) Joseph Foote was born Dec. 28, 1690, in Wethersfield, and was married to Ann Clothier in 1719. She died in 1740, and the same year he was married to Hannah, the widow of John Northam. Mr. Foote died April 21, 1756, at Colchester, where they spent their married life.

(V) Jeremiah Foote, born Oct. 11, 1725, was married Sept. 14, 1749, to Ruhamah, a daughter of John Northam. They lived in Colchester, where he died May 15, 1784; and she, Feb. 8, 1809.

(VI) Stephen Foote was born in 1755, and was married April 29, 1779, to Esther, a daughter of Ezra Clark, of Colchester, where he died in 1798. She died March 20, 1842. Mr. Foote, who was the great-grandfather of Edward E., was a farmer, and died on the farm where his life was passed.

(VII) Erastus Foote, the grandfather of Edward E., was born March 25, 1791, and was married Sept. 1, 1816, to Betsy Crouch, of Hebron, Conn. He was born and reared on the family homestead, which came into his possession and which he made his home during life. He died at the home of a daughter in Colchester, at the age of ninety-one years. His vote was cast in his last years for the Republican ticket. There were seven children born to him and Betsy Crouch, whom he survived for several years. (1) William, who married Emeline Brown, died in Colchester. For many years he was a "boss" in the packing room of the Haywood Rubber Company, of Colchester. (2) Rebecca had three husbands, a Mr. Johnson, then Erastus Lathrop, and on his death she married William Downer, and died in Colchester. (3) Albert, born July 22, 1821, was the father of Edward E. (4) Johanna was the first wife of Andrew Utley, a farmer. (5) Elizabeth, the widow of William Bill, lived in New London, then in Hebron, and now in Colchester.

(6) Erastus died young. (7) Emily became the wife of David Strong, a carpenter and cabinet maker, who died in Colchester.

(VIII) Albert Foote, noted above, was reared on the home farm, and educated in the common schools. After his marriage he bought a large farm near the family homestead, and spent his life in its tillage. His death, Sept. 30, 1869, was the result of typhoid fever. His remains rest in the Colchester cemetery. His record is that of a successful man, of great physical strength, a hard worker, a man of high character, and a devoted member of the Methodist Church. He raised cattle, broke them, got out timber and wood on his farm, and was a man of unflagging industry. In his political views he was a Republican. Mary Ann Chase, his wife, was born in South Amherst, Mass., June 17, 1828, and was a daughter of Arnold and Hannah (Douglas) Chase. Their children were: (1) Albert Harrison, who married Ella Payson, lives on the old home farm in Colchester, and has had three children, Allison, deceased, Frank and Elmer; (2) Jennie R., the wife of Chester B. Lyman, of Columbia, Conn., where he follows farming, the mother of Albert E., Fannie E. and Marion H.; (3) Lottie E., widow of Frederick Brown, at one time an employee of a rubber factory, who lives in Providence, R. I., with her married daughter, Mrs. J. A. Masterton; (4) Edward E., whose name introduces this article; (5) Anna B., the wife of George Miller, a farmer in Colchester, the mother of Florence, Clayton, Mary and Amy, who is now dead.

Edward E. Foote was born Sept. 4, 1860, in Colchester, where he attended the local school, and a little later the Bacon Academy, where he studied the common branches under Prof. Tracy. When he was eighteen years of age he became a rubber-shoemaker in the factory of the Haywood Rubber Company at Colchester. He was later made a rubber bootmaker, and followed that work until 1888. That year the factory work was dull, and Mr. Foote rented a farm, on which he made his home until April 1, 1891, when he bought the farm on which he is living today, of the heirs of Thompson H. Strickland. It comprised 150 acres at the time of its purchase, but has since been increased to 260 acres, and makes one of the finest farms in that part of the State.

Mr. Foote is both a general and dairy farmer, and by hard work and good management has lifted a very heavy debt, which he incurred in the purchase of his place, a success largely attained by the faithful help of his wife.

Mr. Foote was married Oct. 23, 1889, to Alice Elizabeth Hills. She was born Sept. 21, 1868, in Gilead, a daughter of Julius Hills, of whom a sketch is found in another place. To this union have come: Robert Erastus, born May 27, 1891; Helen Elizabeth, born April 7, 1893; Arnold Chase, born Jan. 25, 1890.

In his politics Mr. Foote is a Republican, and fraternally is associated with Hebron Lodge, A. O. U. W. Mrs. Foote is a member of Gilead Congregational Church. Both are pleasant and popular characters in the community, and their future is bright.

ALBERT DANIEL STEDMAN was born May 19, 1850, in Tolland, on the farm which is adjoining the one he is now cultivating as his home farm. He is the son of Daniel Patrick Stedman, who was born in Hartford in 1825, and died in Cheyenne, Wyoming, Sept. 22, 1898. He went to California in 1849, and made his home in the distant West.

Daniel P. Stedman made his home in Warehouse Point before he sought the Pacific shores, where he was a great traveler, even going to Australia. Jan. 1, 1849, he was married to Marie M. Crandall, who was born in 1825, and was a daughter of Amos and Eunice (Day) Crandall. Mr. Stedman became a wealthy man in California and in Australia, but lost a good deal of money by the wrecking of a ship. Albert D., whose name introduces this article, was his only child.

Albert D. Stedman began his education in the common schools of Tolland, and at the age of twelve years removed to Wilbraham, Mass., where he prosecuted his studies during the winter months in the public school, and worked on the farm during the summer season for three years. During the next two years he pursued the same plan of operations at Monson, Mass. When he was seventeen his school days ended and he began working in a grist mill, which had a saw and shingle mill attachments, in the town of Monson, owned and operated by Hubbard H. Risley. While employed there for some four or five years, he learned the carpenter trade. In 1871 he came to Tolland and followed his trade under the direction of Benjamin Root, for a number of years. For some three or four years he worked at his trade in Monson, Mass. He was engaged in farming for about four years, and spent as many in railroad labor. In 1884 Mr. Stedman came back again to Tolland, and leased the Smith H. Brown farm on Grant's Hill, a place of 140 acres, which he tilled four years. At Amherst, Mass., he was employed in the Hills Company hat factory as a hat stamper, where he remained until March, 1890, when he removed to Tolland, buying the Smith H. Brown farm on the Coventry road. This farm consisted of 170 acres. Mr. Stedman has sold fifty acres of it, and devotes the remainder to general farming, and the needs of a herd of fine cows, whose milk he sells to the Vernon Creamery.

Mr. Stedman is a Democrat, and is now serving on the board of selectmen. For several terms he has been assessor, and represented the town of Tolland during the session of 1899 and 1900, in the General Assembly. He was assigned to the committee on Temperance.

Mr. Stedman was married Aug. 24, 1872, to Effie A. Smith, who was born in Willington, Conn., and is a daughter of Edwin G. Smith and Angeline (Plumley) Smith of Monson. To this marriage were born: Edith Irene, born July 26, 1873, in Monson, Mass., who married Delos W. Rich, a carpenter of Vernon, Nov. 6, 1895; Edna Effie, born Oct. 16, 1874, who married Eugene W. Bradley, March 24, 1894, and is the mother of Christine Edith, born Oct. 18, 1895, and Clifton Stedman, born Jan. 27, 1896; Louis Edwin, born Feb. 3, 1885.

Mr. Stedman is a successful farmer, and has displayed unusual business ability. In every position to which he has been called he has discharged its duties with satisfaction to the public and credit to himself.

FREDERICK J. SNYDER, a farmer and the first selectman of Coventry, Tolland Co., Conn., descends from an old Bavarian family, noted in the annals of that part of Germany. His grandfather was town clerk and registrar of deeds, etc., in the town in which he lived for many years.

John H. Snyder, the father of Frederick J., was a native of Bavaria, where he was reared, and where he was married to Hannah Blank. Until 1860 he followed farming, when he brought his family to this country, and for seven years lived in South Windham, Conn. In 1867 he removed to Coventry, where he bought a farm on Babcock Hill, living there two years and then removing to Ripley Hill, South Coventry, on the Samuel Topliff place on which he resided until his death, April 23, 1890, at the age of sixty-nine years. His widow is still living. In politics he was a Democrat.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Snyder were the parents of the following family: Frederick J.; Etta K., the widow of Hubert Vallette, of Chicago, who now has her home in Willimantic; Hattie L., who died in Coventry, Oct. 17, 1887, at the age of twenty-one years; Henry J., a resident of Pottstown, Penn., where he is the local representative of Swift and Company.

Frederick J. Snyder was born in Bavaria, Germany, Oct. 2, 1860, and when only six months old was brought to this country by his parents. He received his education at South Windham, and at South Coventry, where he was employed at the mill during the summer months when only ten years old. When he was sixteen he began steady work at the mill, being employed the most of the time in woolen work. For seven years he was employed at Skowhegan and Pittsfield, Maine.

Mr. Snyder was married in Skowhegan, Maine, April 18, 1883, to Augusta C. Biglow, who died about a year after her marriage, leaving one son, Henry B., a bright lad of nineteen years, now at home. Mr. Snyder was married in Plymouth, Maine, to Anna R. Rice, Dec. 25, 1886.

After eleven years of mill work Mr. Snyder returned to South Coventry, bought out the other heirs, and took up farming on the paternal estate. He is largely interested in dairying, keeping about a dozen cows, and he ships his milk to Boston. He has from fifteen to twenty head of cattle for all purposes. Mr. Snyder is very actively interested in town affairs, and is well informed on the questions before the country, taking the Democratic side in such issues. For six years he was registrar of voters, was twice town auditor and has served twice as first selectman, with one year as third selectman.

Mr. Snyder is a Mason, belonging to Uriel Lodge at Merrow, Conn. For fifteen years he has been connected with the I. O. O. F., at Central Village, Conn. At South Coventry he belongs to the A. O. U. W.

MAJOR ARTHUR DEWITT MCINTYRE, who is just entering upon manhood's prime, is one of the leading dry-goods dealers of Putnam and a justly popular citizen. He was born Oct. 6, 1862, in Springfield, Mass., and is a scion of honorable colonial ancestry.

Ebenezer McIntyre, probably an ancestor of the Major, was the first settler in Charlton, Mass., where he located in 1734, at what is now Charlton Center, and gave the ground which was utilized as the site of the first public meeting-house. Charlton was then a part of Oxford. Mr. McIntyre, a man of excellent judgment, erected his dwelling upon a hilltop surrounded by meadowland, his farm comprising 100 acres. He was one of the most prominent men in the district. In his later years he kept an inn, and the first town meeting of the newly organized town of Charlton was held in his hostelry. He was the first town clerk, and also served for several years as selectman. His death occurred in March, 1775. His wife, Amy, bore him six children, namely: Ebenezer; Ezra; Nathaniel; Daniel; Ebenezer (2), who married Betsy Holman, of Sutton, June 5, 1791; and Nathaniel, whose wife's name was Deborah.

In November, 1756, Robert McIntyre married Mary McIntyre, who was born in Charlton, Mass., and was a descendant of Philip McIntire (or Mackentire, as he sometimes spelled it), who was born about 1629, probably in Scotland, and settled in Reading, Mass., between 1645 and 1650. He was married there in 1666, his wife's name being Mary. Daniel, son of Philip and Mary McIntyre, born in Reading in 1669, removed to Salem, Mass., about 1700. He married Judith Putney. Nathan, son of Daniel and Judith McIntire, was born in Salem, and went to that part of Oxford which is now Charlton, about 1734. His daughter, Mary, became the wife of Robert McIntyre, as above related.

Malachi McIntyre, son of Robert and Mary, was born in 1759, and married Lucy McIntyre, daughter of Zebulon McIntyre. This Zebulon McIntyre is believed to have been also a descendant of Philip, of Reading, Mass., and Robert was also supposed to trace his lineage from the same ancestor.

Peter McIntyre, son of Malachi and Lucy, born Nov. 12, 1787, in Charlton, Mass., died Feb. 22, 1849. In 1815 he married Altheda Trumbull, who was born May 3, 1787, the daughter of James (1761-1801) and Judah (1764-1847) (Sheffield) Trumbull. Mrs. Altheda (Trumbull) McIntyre died in 1860, leaving four children, namely: Nelson, born Dec. 4, 1816, deceased; Diana L., born Feb. 21, 1818, widow of Nathaniel Quint, residing in Holyoke, Mass.; Lewis, born July 16, 1820, deceased; and Nathaniel.

Nathaniel McIntyre, son of Peter and Altheda, was born Oct. 12, 1822, in Charlton, where he continues to reside. He is a carpenter by trade, and is also a skillful farmer, and is an energetic, persevering man, of considerable mental power. In politics a Democrat, he has never sought public honors or emoluments. His wife, Arminda, was born in 1824, daughter of Henry Blood, of Charlton. In the maternal line she is a descendant of the Ward family, who were among the first settlers of Charlton. Two children were born to Nathaniel and Arminda McIntyre, Arthur DeWitt, whose name opens this sketch, being the younger. The elder, Lewis Andrew, born Nov. 26, 1857, is now town sexton of his native town, where he is engaged in the undertaking business. He married Minnie E. Gifford, of Sturbridge, Mass., who bore him two children, Grace and Mary.

When Arthur De Witt McIntyre was about two years of age, his father moved to Charlton, Mass., where young McIntyre attended the public schools until he was about nineteen, at which time he resolved to learn the trade of machinist. He accordingly went to Whitinsville, entering the shops of the Whitin Machine Company, and remained four years. After acquainting himself with the details of the work which came to his hand, he secured a position with the Wheelock Steam Engine Co. at Worcester, remaining with that firm about a year. Learning that the photographic studio of G. Wallace Wright, in Putnam, was for sale, Mr. McIntyre decided to purchase it, and become a photographer. He associated himself with J. M. Gillmore, of Worcester, the firm name being Gillmore & McIntyre for about a year, when Mr. McIntyre bought Mr. Gillmore's interest and continued the business alone until December, 1892, when he disposed of it to Messrs. Smith & Warren; it is now conducted by William B. Smith. Mr. McIntyre was not long out of business, as he bought an interest in the dry goods store of the late A. B. Williams, Jan. 1, 1893, and for the third time set himself to master a new line of daily occupation. The firm remained A. B. Williams & Co. for about a year, when Mr. Williams sold his interest to his partner, and Mr. McIntyre assumed the entire responsibility and management, and has so continued to the present time.

The first marriage of Major McIntyre took place in Whitinsville, Mass., Jan. 18, 1889, to Bertha M. Carr, daughter of Loami B. and Ann (Prentice) Carr. Mrs. Bertha M. McIntyre was called away Feb. 17, 1899, dying in Putnam, while the Major was absent on duty in the United States army during the Spanish-American war. Three children graced this marriage, viz.: Allen Carr, who was born Sept. 19, 1890, in Putnam, and is now attending the Whitinsville schools, making his home with his maternal grandparents; Maurice Mason, born April 22, 1892, in Putnam, where he is attending the district schools; and Arthur D., Jr., born in Putnam, May 23, 1897.

The second marriage of Major McIntyre took place March 4, 1900, when Miss Jessie Augusta York, daughter of Jesse H. and Julia A. (Hinkly) York, of Putnam, Conn., became his wife. This union has been blessed with one child, Robert Blood, born June 17, 1901.

Major McIntyre is a staunch Democrat in politics, and has been honored by election to several offices of trust. He has served on the board of relief three successive years; also on the town school board several years, and was its secretary; and was city clerk in 1900 and 1901. He also received the unanimous nomination of his party for mayor in 1899, and again in 1901, and in the latter year cut down the Republican majority of 300 to 130. In 1902 the Major was elected a director and secretary of the Putnam Park and Fair Association.

For some years Major McIntyre has been secretary and member of the board of trustees of the Universalist Church of Our Father. Fraternally he is a member of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M., of Putnam, being a past senior warden. He is also a member of Putnam Chapter, No. 41, R. A. M.; of Irsael Putnam Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F., of which he is past noble grand; of Putnam Council No. 340, Royal Arcanum; and of General Putnam Commandery, No. 348, of the United Order of the Golden Cross.

In military affairs Major McIntyre has especially distinguished himself. Since 1887 he has been a member of the State militia, having joined in May of that year, Co. G, 3d Infantry, C. N. G., and from the ranks was promoted step by step to captain, which rank he attained July 16, 1897; he was promoted to major April 6, 1900, when he was placed in command of the 2d battalion, 3d Regiment. The Major has been for twelve years a member of the 3d Regiment Rifle Team, and has been five times a member of the winning team—once more than any other of his comrades. His first three years of service in this regiment were given as a member of the signal corps. He was mustered into the United States service as captain of Co. G, 3d C. V. I., and served nine months, being one of the first to leave his business and family to offer his service to free Cuba from the tyrannical yoke of Spain. His company, however, was held in reserve in camp duty at Camp Haven, Niantic, Conn., Camp Meade, Pa., Camp Marion, S. C., and Camp Onward, Ga., and was mustered out at the last named camp, in Savannah, March 20, 1899.

Mr. McIntyre is secretary of the Business Men's Association of Putnam, having always taken a keen interest in the work of that body. He has also done not a little excellent journalistic work, being at present the local representative of the Boston Globe. Mr. McIntyre has ever made it a principle to put his entire heart and soul into whatever work he had in hand, and his success as a photographer was due entirely to his close attention and devotion to detail, which has become to him a second nature. That he has achieved a like success as a dry-goods merchant is not to be doubted, and his well known industry and untiring energy are commensurate with his ambition to become one of Putnam's solid and representative business men.

GEORGE BURDETTE PIERSON was born in Glastonbury, Conn., April 27, 1851, and by industry and economy, with strict integrity in all his dealings, and a neighborly spirit, has become one of the leading men of Tolland.

Nathan Pierson, the father of George Burdette, was born in Glastonbury, Conn., March 31, 1809, and in his active days was a very extensive farmer and lumberman. An active and devoted Methodist he served as steward of the local church for years. In 1844 and again in 1846 the senior Pierson represented Glastonbury in the General Assembly, and in 1863 attended the same body as the representative from the town of Tolland. In Glastonbury he was selectman for a number of terms. He was also a director of the Tolland Savings Bank. In 1855 he came to Tolland and purchased the Luther Anderson farm, a fine estate of 200 acres, beautifully situated on the Willimantic river. There he lived many years, and died April 15, 1897, long surviving his wife, who passed away Aug. 1, 1891. Mr. Pierson stood very high in the public esteem, and was regarded as a man with few and small faults and many large and noble virtues.

Nathan Pierson was married Dec. 1, 1831, to Julia M. Post, a daughter of Asahel and Anna (Denham) Post, of Hebron, Conn., where she was born May 8, 1809. To this union were born ten children, five of whom are still living: (1) Josephine, born May 23, 1833, deceased at the age of twenty-two years; (2) Dennison, born Dec. 23, 1835, who died Jan. 16, 1898, in Manchester, Conn., where he followed farming, and was twice married, first to Eliza Wares and second to Julia House; (3) Lyman, born Sept. 22, 1837, who died unmarried July 16, 1896, at Manchester, where he followed the trade of a silver burnisher; (4) Martin V., born July 9, 1839, who is now living in Norwich, Conn., where he is running a large sale and livery stable, and who married Annice Finley; (5) Thomas B., born July 20, 1841, who never married; (6) Melissa, born July 20, 1843, who died in infancy; (7)

Newton, born Sept. 25, 1844, who died at the age of twenty-one years, an engineer; (8) Melissa E. (2), born Dec. 15, 1846, deceased at the age of seventeen years; (9) Frederick A., born April 15, 1849, who is living in Hartford, engaged in the insurance and real estate business, and whose wife, Lizzie Pulfred, is now dead; (10) George B., April 27, 1851. Thomas Benton, whose name appears above, enlisted in the 8th C. V. I., at the outbreak of the war, and died of lung fever at Roanoke Island, N. C., in 1862.

Samuel Pierson, the grandfather of George B., was born in Wallingford in 1759, and died June 8, 1845, in Glastonbury. A prominent and successful ship builder, he was also a successful farmer, and an active worker in the Methodist Church, of which he was an honored member. In town matters he was a leading spirit, and was called upon to fill many of the local offices. At the beginning of the Revolution he was impressed as a seaman on board a British man-of-war, from which he escaped to join the American army.

"During the latter service, while marching barefooted over the frozen earth, with his head inclined forward to see his way better, he was reproved by an officer behind him for not marching in an erect, soldier-like manner, at the same time striking him with his sword. Pierson suddenly brought his musket back with such force, that the butt struck the officer, and knocked him down. He then wheeled and was about to pin him to the earth, when he was prevented from it by the efforts of his fellow soldiers. * * * He was arrested, tried by court martial and sentenced to be shot. General Washington, hearing of the affair, had the prisoner brought before him, and asked him if he did not know that it was death for a private to strike an officer. Pierson replied with considerable spirit: 'I know it is death for an officer to strike me.' General Washington immediately ordered him to be released, and a pair of shoes from his own chest to be given him. General Washington then reproved his officers, charging them to be more careful of their men; adding that such a soldier as Pierson was too valuable to lose, and if he had a body of men like him he could pierce the enemy's center. Pierson was at length taken prisoner by the enemy, and as he was being marched away unarmed, he managed to get his shoes off, and on approaching water he rushed for the water, crying, 'Catch me if you can!' plunged into the water and swam away."

The above narrative was told by a man who knew Pierson well, and who said he had a fiery temper, and was ready to go through any danger.

Mr. Pierson was married about 1785 to Betty Dickinson, who was born in 1765, and died Dec. 13, 1839. He died June 8, 1845, and was father to fifteen children; Betty, Anna, Orinda, Mehitable, Ephraim, Samuel, Permelia, Sally, Sukey, Ephraim (2), Elizabeth, Daniel, Nathan, Nathaniel and Betsy.

Ephraim Pierson, the great-grandfather of George B., was born in England, and became a sea captain. Dying on the ocean, he was buried at sea.

George B. Pierson was born in Glastonbury, and was taken to Tolland when he was a child of two years of age. At the age of sixteen years he ceased attending the district school, and began working on the home farm, where he remained in charge until April 1, 1900, when he took charge of the farm in Willington that belongs to James L. Besse, the Hartford caterer. This place consists of about seventy-five acres.

In the old Pierson homestead Mr. Pierson had about 400 acres, on which he kept about eighteen cows, sending the product to the Mansfield creamery. Mr. Pierson is a Democrat, and has served the town of Tolland as assessor for one term. Mr. and Mrs. Pierson were both members of the Grange at Tolland, while living there. They belong to the Methodist Church in Tolland.

Mr. Pierson was married May 10, 1874, to Miss Nellie Desire Baker, a daughter of Davis Baker, of East Willington. Her mother's maiden name was Ann M. Faulkner, and both are now dead. Their oldest child, (1) Myrtice Josephine, born Feb. 24, 1875, in Tolland, married Arthur Robertson, Oct. 19, 1898, and lives in Rockville, where her husband is a cabinet maker, and is in partnership with his father. They have two children: Bertram, born Dec. 24, 1899, who died Sept. 4, 1901; Viola May, born March 31, 1902. (2) Lulu Grace, born July 26, 1877, married Samuel Johnson, Dec. 25, 1897, and they are now living in New Haven, where he is an electrician connected with the Postal Telegraph Company. (3) Netta Arabella, born Dec. 13, 1878, married Jesse Dearden, a farmer living in Tolland, and died July 30, 1900, eleven days after the birth of her daughter, Alice Nellie.

GEORGE M. COX is a miller at Vernon, Tolland county, where he deals in flour and feed, and is well known as a thoroughly honorable and upright man.

George Martenson Cox was born in Hartford, Conn., Nov. 28, 1860, but when he was a babe his parents moved to Bloomfield, and five years later they made their home in South Windsor. Mr. Cox had his education in the district school, which he attended very regularly until he was eleven years old; and after that age he worked on the farm during the summer season, and attended school a few weeks in the winter. In 1883 he began work in a grist mill at Broad Brook, which was owned by A. E. Arnold, where he remained nine years and thoroughly learned the business in every detail. For a few months he was employed in a mill at Rockville, and about a year in East Hartford. For two years he was employed in Sadd's Mills at Ellington, and then went into the meat business with his brother-in-law, H. D. Granger, at East Hartford. This, however, he soon disposed of, selling to Mr. Granger, and in 1895 he bought of G. P. Babcock the grist mill and saw mill property at Vernon, and also the farm in connection. Mr. Cox devotes his entire time to the milling custom work. He has a considerable business in grain and feed, and is a popular and genial gentleman.

Mr. Cox is Republican, with no ambition for the honor of office-holding, but with broad and patriotic enthusiasms for a good school and a high grade of social and business life. Mr. and Mrs. Cox belong to the Methodist Church, where he holds the position of steward. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity at Broad Brook, where he is much esteemed for his genial and social spirit.

Mr. Cox was married in Broad Brook, June 5, 1895, to Marie L. Allen, a daughter of John M. Allen, of Ellington. Her mother's name was Nancy V. Kenyon. To this union were born: Allene Marie, March 31, 1896; Melvin George, Sept. 7, 1897; Ruth Louise, Nov. 15, 1898; Kathryn Dorris, April 16, 1900.

JOSEPH ARTHUR GIROUARD, M. D., a rising young physician of Willimantic, Windham county, with a most hopeful and promising professional outlook, was born in Manville, R. I., Feb. 26, 1875, and comes from one of the best families of that town, where his father, Louis Girouard, is still prominent both in business and social circles.

The Rhode Island Girouards came from St. Ours, in the Province of Quebec, Canada, where Louis Girouard was born about 1843. There also his wife, Hermine Cormier, was born the same year. She was the daughter of Francois Cormier, and both the Girouards and Cormiers were prosperous and prominent people. Her father accumulated an extensive property, and became the father of four children, all girls.

France Girouard, the paternal grandfather of Joseph Arthur, was the grandson of an emigrant from France, who located in Canada in the old days, and made for himself a home in the wilderness. France Girouard was a successful farmer, and wielded much influence in his native community. A very comfortable competence was accumulated by him, and left to his only son, the father of Joseph Arthur, mentioned above as Louis Girouard. That gentleman was given an unusually good education, taking a classical course in St. Hyacinthe College, a prominent school in Canada, from which he received the degree of A. B. Mr. Girouard had intended to follow the profession of law, and was preparing himself for that calling when failing health compelled the abandonment of his studies and the choice of another career in life. Mr. Girouard was fortunate in the possession of means that enabled him to take up mercantile enterprises in St. Ours, Canada, where he remained until after his marriage. Early convinced that the States afforded a better opportunity for a young man of push and business tact, Mr. Girouard removed himself and his family to Woonsocket, R. I., where for the purpose of familiarizing himself with business methods in vogue in the United States, he entered the employ of Alphonse Gaulin, then the most noted merchant of that city, remaining with him for some two or three years. At the end of that time he removed to Manville, R. I., where he established himself as a merchant, forming with Messrs. Bouvier and Gaulin, of Woonsocket, R. I., a company of three which did business together up to eight years ago, when Mr. Girouard bought their shares and ran the business for himself. He at once took a leading place in the local trade, and made a home which he holds and occupies at the present time. His business is complicated and extensive, including all departments of a general store, as well as a bakery, a market, and valuable real estate holdings. He occupies a creditable position in the business, political and social world, and as a man and a citizen is regarded as far-sighted and intelligent, and as of great value to the community.

Mr. Girouard thinks very highly of education, and all his children have been given a college education, and fully prepared for all the responsibilities of life. The extensive business which has gradually been built up has, on account of his poor health in recent years, passed into the hands of his sons, whose ability is not questioned.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Louis Girouard are as follows: Louis, the oldest son, now identified with his father's business; Mary, the oldest daughter, married to Mr. Louis Lemoine, of Arctic Center, R. I.; Hermine, married to Mr. Philippe Lacroix, of Manville; Joseph, in business with his brother, Louis; Isabelle, at home; Joseph Arthur, a physician at Willimantic; Angelina, Adeline and Bernadotte, all at home; Napoleon, in business with his brothers, Joseph and Louis; Leonidas, a student at the Friends' School in Providence, preparing to enter Brown University; Rodolphe, a student at the same school, also preparing for Brown University. Mr. and Mrs. Girouard take a justifiable pride in their children, whose bright minds, kind hearts and devotion to their parents, together with their business ability, social accomplishments and general self-mastery constitute a family far above the ordinary.

Dr. Joseph Arthur Girouard attended the schools of his native town, and when he was eleven years old became a student at St. Hyacinthe College, where he early acquired the reputation of a hard worker and a close student, and there he remained until he was sixteen years of age, when he entered St. Mary's College, a Jesuit College, at Montreal. He spent three years in that institution, after which he took a course in English at Brown University. This was followed by a course in the Baltimore Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1899, taking at the same time an internship of twelve months in the Maryland General Hospital at Baltimore. During the spring and summer months of the same year he took the medical examinations of the three State Boards of Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut. The following October Dr. Girouard established himself in the practice of his profession at Willimantic, where his frank and cordial manners, his manifest ability and his general mastery of his profession have won him many friends, and enabled him to gain a good and rapidly growing practice. A refined and scholarly young man, he is sure to take a foremost place among the physicians of the city, and become prominent and successful in his chosen field, for which he displays a marked aptitude.

Dr. Girouard was married Oct. 1, 1900, to Miss Wavine Brazeau, a native of Manville, R. I., where she was born Oct. 2, 1875, a daughter of Cyrille and Arzelie (Cloutier) Brazeau. Her parents came from St. Hyacinthe, Canada, though Mrs. Girouard was reared in her native town. The two daughters born to Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Girouard are Bernadette and Marie Therese.

Dr. Girouard is a member of the Windham County Medical Society, of the Connecticut State Medical Society, and also holds membership in various local fraternities, the Knights of Columbus, St. Jean Baptiste Society, the Foresters of America, and the Foresters of St. Louis and Jacques-Cartier, of Manville. In religion he is a member of St. Mary's Catholic Church. He is bound by no political ties, as party organizations have no interest for him.

JOHN MCPHERSON, the manager of the wool sorters at the New England Mill, Rockville, Tolland county, is one of the oldest employees in point of service connected with that mill, entering their employ April 1, 1866. He is a thorough Scotchman, a plain and unassuming man, a good citizen, and a leading representative of the industrial interests of the city.

Mr. McPherson was born in Ireland, between Belfast and Lisburn, July 16, 1841, and was a son of Thomas and Martha (Woods) McPherson, who had located on a farm. The mother was born in the North of England, and the father in the Highlands of Scotland, where he was a farmer, but they moved to Ireland shortly before the birth of their son, John. He lived to be about sixty years of age, and died when John was about eight years old, five years after the death of his wife. He was the father of twelve children, ten of whom survived his death, reaching adult age. Those who came to this country were: Alex, who died in Newark, N. J., in the summer of 1900; Margaret, who married Herman Otto, a miller, and died in South Manchester; Mary, a widow, who has her home in Manchester; John.

John McPherson attended the pay schools of his native country, which were supported by the pupils paying directly to the teacher. He made his home with Thomas James and David Davis, executors of his father's will. Mr. McPherson was reared as a farmer boy, the family with whom he made his home being good people, and giving him a home in every sense of the word. His immigration to this country was the result of a sudden determination on his part, hardly formed over night. He sailed from Liverpool and after a six weeks' voyage landed in New York in company with a friend, and with him he remained for a time in New York. Early in the summer of 1858, the year of his arrival in the United States, he went to Burnside, which bore the name of Scotland at that time, not far from Manchester, where he had a married sister living. His first work was in a paper mill. In the following year he found work in the Hockanum mill at Rockville, but was there only a short time. July 29, 1862, he enlisted in Co. D, 14th C. V. I., and was mustered into service Aug. 30 of the same year. For two years he was with that regiment, whose name is inscribed in indelible letters on the scroll of fame. He was wounded Dec. 13, 1862, at Fredericksburg, and was absent from duty for some weeks. He was transferred on account of his wounds Dec. 4, 1863, to Co. B, 24th V. R. C., and was discharged at the conclusion of the war, June 27, 1865. The following testimonial came unsolicited from his captain at the time of his discharge:

"Wisewell Barracks—24th V. R. C.—Washington, D. C., July 8, 1865: To Whom it May Concern:

"Mr. John McPherson, late a member of my company, mustered out by order of the Secretary of War, the Rebellion being at an end, was in my command a year and a half, and was in every particular an excellent soldier, and is a good citizen. Without hesitation I recommend him to the consideration of officers and citizens. He will not deceive any one. He fought at Antietam and Fredericksburg, at latter battle was wounded.

(Signed) "J. R. STONE,"
"Captain of Company B, 24th V. R. C."

Mr. McPherson set up a barber shop in Washington, but his family wished him to return home, and after a few months he came back to Connecticut, and went into the barber business at Rockville.

Mr. McPherson went into the New England mills, April 1, 1866, and began an apprenticeship of a year and a half in the wool sorter's trade, receiving ten dollars and his board. Henry Gardner was his instructor in learning the trade, and after he had mastered it he worked under Abner Hardwood; when the mills passed under the reorganization he remained at work. For seven years he worked for J. W. Thompson, and then became "boss sorter" in his mill, which position he still holds in what is now the New England mills. During all this time he carried on a barber shop evenings in his own home.

Mr. McPherson was married in 1864 in Rockville, to Miss Emma Billson, of Trowbridge, England, who came to this country when twelve years old. She was the mother of the following children:

Nellie L., born March 29, 1866, who became the wife of Frank H. Grant in 1885, and died in 1893, leaving two children, Bernice and Nellie; Ida A., born May 3, 1870, who married Charles N. Thrall, Oct. 9, 1895, resides in Havana, Cuba, and has one child, Corinne E.; Frank B., born April 8, 1872, a bookkeeper for Case, Lockwood & Brainerd, in Hartford, who married Miss Minnie Stone, of Hartford; Arthur H., born July 9, 1875, who lives in Havana.

Mr. McPherson was married to his present wife, Oct. 31, 1895; she was Miss Lina Wheldon, and was born in Indian Orchard, May 12, 1866, being a daughter of William H. and Charlotte (Thompson) Wheldon. Mr. Wheldon was born in New York, and his wife in England.

Mr. McPherson is a Republican, and cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1864. He was a member of the city council from the 4th ward, when Rockville became a city, and served two years. He is a member of the Burton Post, G. A. R., of Rockville, Fayette Lodge, F. & A. M., and the A. O. U. W. Mr. and Mrs. McPherson are members of the Methodist Church, and he is a member of the board of trustees of that organization, after having served for some time as a steward. She is a teacher of the Sabbath-school, a worker, a member of the Women's Missionary Society, is fourth vice president of the Epworth League, and is county secretary of the W. C. T. U. Since their marriage they have lived on Orchard street, where Mr. McPherson has had his home for many years.

PETER MOGENSEN was born in Denmark, March 5, 1851, in Jylland Province of the kingdom of Denmark, and is a son of Mogen Sorrensen, who was also born in Denmark, where he was a very successful farmer. He married Marice Sorrensen, and both are dead, he dying in Denmark and she in Tolland. Their children are: Jens Sorrensen, who is now living in Denmark, and bears his father's name according to the Danish custom (by the same custom the other children are all Mogensen); Sorren, who lives in Denmark; Peter; Anna, who married John Johnson, and is now living in Tolland; Marren, who married Yergen Larsen, and lives in Hartford; Mary, who married William R. Tate, and lives in Hartford.

Peter Mogensen received his schooling in his native community and at the age of fourteen years became a clerk in the grocery store of G. C. Leth, where he remained for eight years. At the end of that time he made his way to the United States, leaving Hamburg on the Cunarder, "Cuba," April 4, 1874, and landing in New York. Coming directly to Hartford the young immigrant spent the first year in farming for a man named Gilbert, who owned a place in West Hartford. There he spent a year, put in another year at the National Screw Works, and a third year for John Loomis at South Manchester. In that city he was foreman of the saw mill of Isaac Blinn for four years, acting as head sawyer and having a number of men under his direction. Mr. Mogensen worked a year for the Cheney Brothers, in South Manchester, and two years at Holyoke, Mass., for the Massachusetts Screw Company. He was engaged seven years as a foreman in the factory of the Davis Screw Company, at Dayton, Ohio, and returned to Tolland in 1889, where he bought the Dobson place, a fine estate of 208 acres, and there he devotes himself to general farming. On the place are kept some fifteen cows, and their milk is converted into butter, which is sold to patrons in Rockville.

Mr. Mogensen is secretary of the Mountain Park Pleasure Club, an organization of which he is a charter member, and which he helped to form. He is a Republican, and in 1896 was elected assessor of the town, a position to which he has been twice re-elected. In religion he and his family are members of the Episcopal Church.

Mr. Mogensen was married Feb. 29, 1879, to Christina Sonnikson, a native of the province of Schleswig, then a part of Denmark, but now of Germany. She became the mother of one child, Marietta, born July 26, 1880, and died Feb. 6, 1881. Mr. Mogensen was married for the second time to Mary Rasmussen, March 29, 1883, in Dayton, Ohio. They have the following children: Peter, born Nov. 12, 1884, in Dayton, at home; Harry, born in Dayton, May 22, 1887; Arthur, born in Tolland, Oct. 2, 1893; Charles, born March 2, 1896, in Tolland.

Mr. Mogensen is an honorable and upright man, who has worked hard and long for the comforts he now enjoys, and which he has richly earned by his industry and economy.

MARTIN LAUBSCHER, one of the substantial young business men of Rockville, Tolland county, who is identified with the city's best interests, was born on Vernon avenue, Rockville, Conn., Oct. 20, 1863, a son of Abraham and Katharine (Yost) Laubscher, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume.

During his boyhood days, Mr. Laubscher attended school in his native city, his first experience being in the building in the rear of the present Memorial Hall, where he was taught by Miss Maria S. Bennett. Later he attended school in a building then known as No. 2, but now used as a barn by Mr. F. J. Regan; while his last studies were pursued at the high school on School street.

From early boyhood, Mr. Laubscher evinced a taste for a commercial life, and while still in school and after leaving assisted his father, learning from that excellent man honest business methods, which were to stand him in good stead. In March, 1881, feeling the need of additional business training, he entered Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., from which he graduated in June of that year. Returning to his old home, Mr. Laubscher entered the employ of White, Corbin & Co., serving as office boy. However, as the entire-office force consisted of Mr. Laubscher and a Mr. Prescott, much of the clerical work as well, fell upon his shoulders. In December, 1881, the firm removed to what was then known as the Florence mill. The following January, Mr. Laubscher was made head bookkeeper, retaining that position until May, 1898, when he enlisted in Co. C, 1st C. V. I. He had been a member of Co. C, 1st C. N. G., since its organization, Feb. 25, 1890, entering as a private, and being made 2d lieutenant the same day. In March of the following year, he was made 1st lieutenant, and a few days later, captain. At the time the regiment was called out for service in the Spanish-American war, he was still serving as captain and took his troops, first to Niantic, Conn.; later to Portsmouth, N. H.; thence to Camp Alger, in Virginia, returning home in September, 1898.

During the time that Mr. Laubscher was engaged in defense of his country, White, Corbin & Co. had become the White-Corbin & Co. division of the U. S. Envelope Company, and upon his return, he was made chief accountant, his long experience making him a very valuable man to the concern, in whose employ he has since continued.

Mr. Laubscher was married, at Ansonia, Conn., to Miss Lillian M. Pease, a native of Rockville, born March 15, 1865, daughter of Robert and Ellen (Strong) Pease. The Pease family are numbered among the first settlers of Enfield, Conn., and the Strong family is one of the oldest in New England. To Mr. and Mrs. Laubscher the following family has been born: Martin Paul, July 25, 1887; Louis Kenneth, April 4, 1889; Florence Eleanor, Feb. 8, 1892; Lenore May, Oct. 26, 1893; Herman Kelsey, Dec. 27, 1895; Evelyn Roselle, Dec. 11, 1897, all born in Rockville; also Wallace Nelson, Sept. 11, 1899, and Robert Strong, Oct. 26, 1901, both born in Tolland. For a number of years, the family resided in a pleasant home on North Park street, but in the spring of 1900 removal was made to Tolland, where they occupy a charming house on East Main street, and enjoy the advantages of both city and country life. The little ones of the family are very bright and interesting, and Mr. and Mrs. Laubscher dispense a delightful hospitality.

In political matters, Mr. Laubscher is a Democrat and takes an active part in local politics. In 1892 he was elected second city clerk of Rockville, which honor came to him entirely unsolicited, and was therefore more of a tribute to his high standing in the community, than if he had sought the office. After serving a two years term, he declined a re-nomination on account of pressure of business. Mr. Laubscher was also the first secretary of the Rockville Building and Loan Association, formulating the set of books still in use. For some time he has been the auditor of that organization, and takes an active interest in its growth. Socially, Mr. Laubscher is a member of A. O. U. W., and is very popular in that order. A man of a high order of ability, thoroughly conversant with the details of his business, Mr. Laubscher stands high in the esteem of his fellowtownsmen, and is regarded as one of whom Rockville may well be proud.

WAYLAND WILMONT SHELTON. One of the most progressive merchants of Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., is Wayland Wilmont Sheldon, who was born in South Woodstock, Nov. 17, 1868, a son of Charles Smith Sheldon, who was born in Scotland, Conn., March 22, 1850, and married Phebe W. Harrington, daughter of Jeremiah and Phebe (Weaver) Harrington, also of South Woodstock; their union was crowned with two children: Wayland W., mentioned above; and Fred Edwin, born July 28, 1873, in South Woodstock. The latter, a farmer, married in September, 1897, Jennie Neilson, who has borne him three children, viz.: Charles Frederick; and Beatrice and Bernice, twins.

Charles S. Sheldon was educated in the district schools of Scotland, Hampton and Windham, and in November, 1867, located in South Woodstock, where he conducted a grist mill one year, and then traveled as a salesman of Yankee notions throughout eastern Connecticut for five years; next he took up an old abandoned store in South Woodstock, put in a general stock, and conducted it from April, 1877, until 1890, when he retired in favor of his son, Wayland Wilmont.

Charles S. Sheldon is a Democrat politically, and has served as constable, grand juror, postmaster under Grover Cleveland four years, justice of the peace, selectman three years, and chairman of the Democratic town committee for ten years. Religiously, he is a member of the Baptist Church in South Woodstock, and fraternally is a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 46, F. & A. M., of Woodstock, in which he has served as senior warden, and master.

William Green Sheldon, father of Charles S. and grandfather of Wayland W., was born April 5, 1813, in South Kingston, R. I., and died Sept. 15, 1896, in South Woodstock, Conn. He commenced life as a cabinet-maker, but later went to Canada and put up machinery for cotton mills for several years, being a fine machinist. He next located in Hampton, Conn., followed farming several years, then removed to Coventry, Conn., farmed about seventeen years, and finally retired to Woodstock. He was a Jeffersonian Democrat, but never aspired to office.

William G. Sheldon married Aug. 9, 1838, Harriet Burlingame, who was born Sept. 17, 1820, and died March 12, 1892, in Coventry. She was a daughter of Hiram and Morolas (Lawrence) Burlingame. To William G. Sheldon and his wife were born seven children, namely: Stephen, Dec. 11, 1841, who died Dec. 27, 1841; John A., Dec. 29, 1846, who died March 1, 1847; Edwin B., March 2, 1848, who died Oct. 12, 1868; Charles S., who is mentioned in the opening paragraph of this sketch; Ella F., Aug. 6, 1852, who died May 4, 1896, first married to Jeremiah Hoyle, of Putnam, second to Christopher Haskell, of Webster, Mass., and third to Fred Eastman, also of Webster; Emma M., the sixth of the family, Oct. 6, 1856, who died Feb. 27, 1868; and Phebe E., Nov. 5, 1858. She was first married to Lloyd E. Cole, of Eagleville, Conn., and is now living in Los Angeles, Cal.; she had one child by this marriage, Claude S. Cole, who died Oct. 18, 1883, aged four years; the mother next married Alfred M. Parker, of Putnam, Connecticut.

Wayland W. Sheldon received his early education in the district schools of his native town, and later supplemented this by an attendance for several years at the Woodstock Academy. It had been his intention to enter college, but owing to the ill-health of his father, Wayland at the age of eighteen entered his father's store as an assistant, and at the age of twenty-one succeeded to the business, which he has since most prosperously conducted. He carries an up-to-date stock of groceries, dry-goods, furnishings, shoes and general merchandise, equal in extent to that of similar stores in the larger cities. By his suavity and accommodating disposition he has secured an extensive patronage, which he retains through his inflexible integrity, as he never under any circumstances misrepresents his wares. In 1892 Mr. Sheldon purchased the general store in West Woodstock, formerly owned by George Fox and conducted it as a branch of his South Woodstock store for three years, when he disposed of it to Edward T. Perrin, since when his attention has been entirely devoted to his South Woodstock establishment.

In his fraternal relations, Mr. Sheldon is a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 46, of Woodstock, of which he is now the senior warden; he is likewise a member of Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M., of Danielson, Conn., and of Senexet Grange, No. 40, of Woodstock; of the latter his wife is likewise a member. Mr. Sheldon worships at the Baptist Church of South Woodstock, of which congregation Mrs. Sheldon is an active member. In politics Mr. Sheldon is independent but his proclivities are toward Democracy. Although indifferent as to public office, Mr. Sheldon is now serving as secretary and treasurer of the town school board and has served his town as delegate to several State and county conventions.

The marriage of W. W. Sheldon took place Dec. 11, 1890, to Miss Emma Louise Coldman, daughter of James and Elmira Janette (Sanger) Coldman, of South Woodstock. Mrs. Emma Louise Sheldon's father was born in England, and when about forty years of age came to South Woodstock, where he was engaged in the manufacture of cotton twine until his death; his widow is now living in Southbridge, Mass. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon has been blessed with two children, namely: Raymond Wilmont, born July 17, 1893, and Gladys Coldman, born Sept. 14, 1895, both in South Woodstock.

EVERETT A. FRINK, proprietor of the Crystal Spring Bottling Company, of Chaplin, Windham county, is one of the most enterprising business men of the town, and holds a prominent position in the commercial world.

Nelson Frink, father of Everett A. Frink, was a farmer and resided at Plainfield, Conn., where he died in middle life, having married Caroline Briggs, who survived him, dying in Chaplin, Oct. 22, 1901. To the parents were born three children: Ellen, who married George Howard and resides at Quinebaug, Conn.; Hiram, who is a foreman for Holden Arnold in Willimantic; Everett A.

Everett A. Frink was born Oct. 22, 1863, in Plainfield, Conn., where he resided until the age of fourteen years. At that time his mother moved to Chaplin. During his residence at Plainfield, he attended the district school and also went to the school of Sterling, Conn., where his mother resided for two years prior to coming to Chaplin. Early in life he commenced to earn his own living, and was first employed in a saw mill and at lumbering in Chaplin. Later he was employed by his brother-in-law, Mr. Howard, in New Boston, Conn., in the making of small drinks. The experience which has so materially aided Mr. Frink in his present enterprise was gained from Mr. Howard, and at the age of sixteen he returned to his mother's home in Chaplin, and began the making of root and small beers, which he put up in jugs and sold in Willimantic. From this start the business grew, and Mr. Frink continued it in Chaplin until 1892, when he sold out and located in Quinebaug, Conn., where in 1892 and 1893, he was engaged in the manufacture of carbonated beverages. Returning to Chaplin, he re-purchased his business and except one year when he was engaged as a musician at "Pine Grove House," near Camp White on Providence river, he has been engaged at this line of business.

The country about Willimantic abounds with springs, and among the finest is the one in Chaplin which came into the possession of Mr. E. A. Frink, who is manufacturing temperance beverages on his own account. This boiling spring, with exceptionally pure, crystal-like water bubbling over a rocky ledge, has long been noted for its excellence. It furnishes an endless supply, and the water is used exclusively in all of Mr. Frink's preparations. In his plant he has great facilities for the manufacture of his products; it is equipped with all needed machinery and appliances, and everything in the way of carbonated beverages and temperance drinks is manufactured by him. His preparations are evenly excellent and his famous Frink's root beer has attained a widespread reputation. His transactions are at wholesale, as he supplies retailers throughout a large amount of territory, and although most of his shipments are made by rail, he has one team in constant attendance on the local trade. His root beer is made from roots, barks and herbs, and his root beer extract is used by other manufacturers of root beer. His business is a thriving one and his present home and farm consist of 100 acres which are known as the "Henry Hunt Place," and he purchased the property of C. E. Pomeroy, of Willimantic.

On Dec. 31, 1887, Mr. Frink was married in Southbridge, Mass., to Gertrude N. Shippee, born Dec. 4, 1867, a native of Hampton, Conn., and a daughter of Darius and Eliza (Kemp) Shippee, Mr. Shippee being a prominent meat dealer in Hampton. To Mr. and Mrs. Frink three children have been born: Nelson Llewellyn, Aug. 18, 1894; Claude Bryan, April 2, 1897; Velma Gertrude, Jan. 4, 1901. The second son was called for W. J. Bryan and Mr. Frink has an autograph letter from that great and genial statesman thanking the parents for the honor done him, and a copy of the first edition of The Commoner was sent to the little namesake of the distinguished man.

In politics Mr. Frink is a Democrat, has served on the board of relief for 1901, and has been elected justice of the peace several terms, but refused to qualify. At present he is chairman of the Democratic town committee, and was delegate to the State Democratic convention in 1900. He is also a member of the board of selectmen for 1902.

Mr. Frink is a well-known violinist, and leads Frink's orchestra and also prompts at dances; in addition he is a fine performer on the clarinet. Mr. Frink is entirely self-made and his pleasant home and prosperous business are the outcome of his own industry and business foresight. Personally he is genial, and possesses the qualities calculated to win friends. Recognized as one of the political leaders of Chaplin, popular and prosperous, Mr. Frink is an important factor in the commercial and social life of the town where he has accomplished so much.

HENRY BEEBE, one of the most enterprising and progressive farmers of the town of Ellington, Tolland county, has a fine country home near Windermere Station, where he has spent useful and honorable years.

Martin Beebe, the father of Henry, when a young man came with his mother, Mercy, from West Springfield to Ellington, where he reared his family, and occupied a creditable position in the world. His father had died when Martin was very young, and his mother after coming to Ellington, married Daniel Jones, by whom she had one son, Ezra. Again left a widow she returned to the home of Martin Beebe, and there died, Oct. 26, 1840, aged seventy-seven. Her other son, Ezra Jones, settled in Moodus, Conn., where he married and had four children, two of whom are living.

When Martin Beebe came to Ellington he was employed as a farm hand by Col. Abbott and Capt. Joseph Abbott, but when he had been there some time he bought a place near where the residence of his son is now standing, and as his means permitted, enlarged and improved the place. Some years later he erected the home in which his son Henry is now living. Quite successful in his farming, his last years were attended with the comfort that the honest accumulation of a competency alone can give. He died July 4, 1861, at the age of sixty-four years, and was buried in Ellington. When he died he owned a farm of about ninety acres. He was a member of the Congregational Church. Martin Beebe was married to Annie Pember, a daughter of Elisha Pember, of Ellington, and she died at the age of fifty-six years. To them were born: (1) Austin, who was married to Elizabeth Dewell, learned his trade in Rockville, and worked there for awhile before going to New Britain, where he followed the trade of a carpenter and joiner, and where he died. (2) Martin, who died at the age of twenty-eight years in New Britain, was a joiner. (3) Henry. (4) Ann Maria, married Royal Allen, and died in Manchester, Conn., where he is in business as a machinist. (5) Emily, died unmarried. (6) Elisha was married to Celesta Dimock, followed farming in Tolland, and in his last years ran a livery business in East Boston, Mass., then moving to Hartford to engage in a teaming business, where he died. During the war he was a member of the 14th C. V. I. (7) Mary R. is the widow of John D. Gallup, and lives in Manchester, Conn. The old family Bible, with its records, is in her possession. (8) Louisa Jane is the wife of Charles B. Sikes, of Ellington.

Henry Beebe was born Nov. 5, 1828, in the town of Ellington, on the paternal estate in that community. He attended the district school in the neighborhood where he lived, but as he was one of the older children, he had a boyhood of hard work, and his education was cut short, and as his elder brother went away from home, he was compelled to take a large share of the farm work on his own shoulders. When he was married he rented a house near his parents' home and continued his work on the farm until his father died, when he purchased the interest of the other heirs in the place, and took possession. For many years he was an extensive tobacco grower, but of late years he has rented the most of his farm, and retains only a small part under his own control. In 1870 he put up what was pronounced to be the finest barn in the town.

Mr. Beebe was married April 14, 1858, to Olive D. Kenyon, who was born in Plainfield, Conn., Nov. 14, 1829, and was the daughter of Thomas and Mary (Clark) Kenyon. Mrs. Beebe died April 27, 1900, and was buried in Ellington. Mr. Beebe is a Republican, and belongs to the Congregational Church, where he served as deacon for fourteen years. When she married Mr. Beebe, Mrs. Beebe was a member of the Baptist Church, but in her later life she became a Congregationalist. Deacon Beebe married (second) Mrs. Mary E. Barrows, of Willimantic, Jan. 29, 1902; her father was Joseph H. Whipple, of Ashford, Conn., who married Eunice Newton, daughter of Truman Newton, of Norwich, Vt. Deacon Beebe has been very successful, owns a good farm, and no citizen stands higher than he in the estimation of his fellow townsmen.

JOHN GROTE, the proprietor of the Union Street Market, at Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., is one of the leading young business men of that city, who through his own industry, thrift and perseverance, has worked his way to success in a manner that is certainly remarkable.

Born June 8, 1868, at Greig, in Saxony, Germany, John Grote, who was an only child of his parents, William and Bertha (Stuckenholz) Grote, received a good education in the excellent schools of his native city, and worked in the large market conducted by his father. However, as the boy grew to manhood, his ambition to see something of the great outside world became so strong that he left home, in spite of his parents' desire that he remain with them and share their plenty, and worked at his trade, that of butcher, in various parts of Germany. Even this did not satisfy him, and he resolved to cross to America. His first attempt to secure work on a vessel bound for New York failed, but he was not discouraged, and in July, 1887, shipped on the North German Lloyd steamer "Alber," bound for New York, as a coal trimmer. During the voyage of nine days, he suffered greatly from sea sickness, but was not deterred in his purpose; as soon as the vessel reached the dock, Mr. Grote decided to go on shore, contrary to rules, and not wishing to leave his clothing behind, put it all on at once, under his working clothes. As the weather was very warm, one of his superior officers noted that he was too heavily dressed for the season, and the attempt proved a failure. It was impossible to discourage this ardent young spirit, however, and it was not long before John Grote stood upon American soil, without a penny in his pocket, and unable to speak a word of English.

A cousin, William Petig, had come to America some time previously, settling in Rockville, Conn. John Grote knew that the location of his cousin was Rockville, but that was all, still to Rockville he was determined to go. Making repeated inquiries in Hoboken, in German, he could not obtain any information, and was wandering aimlessly through the streets, when he saw a sign of a German drug store. Entering, he asked the way to Rockville, but when asked in what State the Rockville he wanted was located, he could only shake his head. At last, as he told the druggist that his Rockville was near a big pond or lake, where lots of weaving was done, it was decided that the one in Connecticut was his destination. Begging money to cross the ferry, he made inquiries for the depot that would take him to Rockville. The old yellow horse cars then ran from North River points to 42d street, and he was told to follow that line. Starting out, he patiently tramped along after one of the cars, stopping when it did, and at last he reached the depot. Here a new difficulty presented itself. As he had no ticket, he was not allowed to pass the gate, but the railroad officials did not appreciate the persevering spirit of the young German. Watching his opportunity he finally managed to get on the tracks, and began to walk to Rockville, bearing that name written on a slip of paper. This assisted him in making inquiries, and he begged sufficient food to sustain him, but slept very little, so anxious was he. After many trials he reached Bridgeport, and there managed to get a ride on a freight car as far as New Haven. Starting out to walk again, between New Haven and Hartford he met some railroad laborers, and one of them being a German, arrangements were made for him to work for the remainder of the day with these men, with privilege of riding to Hartford at night. The kindly German took him to his own home that evening, gave him a good supper and bed, and in the morning furnished him with a ticket to Rockville, which Mr. Grote reached Aug. 7, 1887. Being an expert at his trade, he had no trouble in finding employment, engaging with Benjamin Weigel, on West Main street, at a salary of $18 a month. Still the spirit of adventure burned brightly in the young man's breast, and in a few months he removed to Hartford and worked in the wholesale market of M. Wieder, on Front street. While there he met with an accident in a friendly tussle, which laid him up in the hospital for six weeks.

The next trip Mr. Grote made was to New York, whence he went to California, via the Isthmus; he worked at his trade in San Francisco, and then concluded to ship to Japan, as it was necessary for him to report for military duty in his native country. However, fearing that he might not be able to get there in time, if he went via Japan, Mr. Grote finally decided to sail direct from New York, and began his journey across the United States on foot. Many interesting incidents are told by Mr. Grote of this trip, especially in the desert of Nevada. At times he would stop in some city, work at his trade long enough to earn a little money; then start out again, never discouraged, enjoying his adventures, and gaining knowledge of the country and language, finally returning to Rockville. There he again worked at his trade, and in May, 1889, started for Germany, again shipping as a coal trimmer, on the steamer "Elbe." Before embarking, Mr. Grote consulted the German consul at New York with regard to an injury he had received to one of his fingers, thinking that it was serious enough to exempt him from military duty. However, he was informed that it was not of sufficient importance to make any difference, a conclusion which was incorrect, as after the laborious voyage Mr. Grote was exempted from all military duty, on account of this very injury. In August, 1889, Mr. Grote again embarked for America, but this time as a passenger, and traveled to Rockville in the ordinary way, although he recalled with pleasure his experiences during his former trip. Entering again the employ of Benjamin Weigel, he remained a few months, then went to Clinton, Mass., intending to go into business for himself, but not being entirely suited with the opening, returned to Rockville, and engaged with L. Stamm.

In October, 1891, four years after he had first located in Rockville, Mr. Grote opened a market at Dalesville, Conn., and in December, of the same year, also started one on Ward street, Rockville. In 1897 he purchased the Union Street market, and conducted the two, but during the same year sold the market on Ward street to William Petig, and devoted all his energies toward the development of his business on Union street, making of it the best market in Rockville.

On Feb. 29, 1892, Mr. Grote was married to Miss Anna Weigel, a native of Rockville, born Feb. 10, 1875, a daughter of Benjamin and Anna (Schmidt) Weigel, both natives of Germany. To this union one child has been born: Bertha Anna, May 3, 1893. Mr. Grote is a member of the Turner society of Rockville, and he and his wife are consistent members of the German Lutheran Church.

There are few men of Mr. Grote's age who have had a more varied life, or one that has proven as successful. In less than fourteen years, he has not only built up his present firm financial standing, but has crossed the Atlantic five times, the last trip being to his old home and the Paris Exposition, in 1900; he has traveled to California and back, almost without money, and developed himself from an ignorant boy, into the brisk, well-informed business man, whose prosperity is assured, and whose popularity is wide spread.

JOSEPH MACFARLAND, a well-known citizen of South Coventry, Conn., where he is successfully engaged as a manufacturer of shoddy, and as a farmer, was born of Scotch descent, in Tartaraghen, County Armagh, Ireland, Aug. 18, 1859. His literary training was partly acquired in the national schools in his native county. He grew to manhood, engaging at farm work on the farm with his father as long as he remained in Ireland.

In 1881 Mr. MacFarland came to America and locating at Enfield, Mass., he found work in E. P. Smith's mill; after working there about one year he went to Gilbertville, Mass., where he was employed in the George H. Gilbert Manufacturing Company's Mills. During the time he was faithful to his work and husbanded his earnings. So in a short time he was able to go to the Mount Hermon school in East Northfield for a further education, and to pay his own way. Oct. 3, 1886, he came to South Coventry, Conn., where he was employed in Kenyon's mills; he remained in their employ until the mill stopped, when he entered the employ of Mr. E. O. Tracy and worked in his mills until Oct. 24, 1899, when he started in business for himself. He bought land—a tract of fifteen acres—near the Huntington home in South Coventry, and bought the mill owned by Charles E. Kingsbury, in which he at once began the manufacture of shoddy, while on his land he carried on farming and fruit growing. Mr. MacFarland has always been hard working and industrious, and his business methods have always been honorable and upright. His success is due wholly to his own efforts, as he began life a poor boy and has unaided attained a substantial share of this world's goods, and with it a high place in the estimation of his fellowmen.

In September, 1886, at Gilbertville, Mass., Mr. MacFarland was married to Mary Jane Williamson, who was born in County Armagh, Ireland, a daughter of James Williamson, who still resides there. Three children came to bless this union: William James, born June 29, 1887, who was accidentally killed Sept. 22, 1897; Gertrude, born June 10, 1890; and Arthur Joseph, born May 5, 1893. In politics Mr. MacFarland is a Republican, but outside of school matters has taken no active part in party work. Socially he belongs to Lodge No. 15, A. O. U. W., of South Coventry. He and his wife are members of the Congregational Church, and assisted in the organization of the local Christian Endeavor Society, of which he was president; he has taught in the Sunday-school, and in many ways has shown his sincere interest in religious matters.

FRED E. COLVIN. The Quinebaug store at East Brooklyn, the largest department store on the Norwich & Worcester Railroad, owes its present prosperity to the superior business sagacity of its manager, Fred E. Colvin, than whom no better example is forthcoming of the advantages of perseverance and unswerving faithfulness in any chosen line of occupation. He was born in East Brooklyn, Windham County, Aug. 14, 1868, and his entire life has been spent within the radius of his present surroundings, with the exception of one year spent in the wholesale shoe business in New York City.

There remains little doubt that the family of Colvin, under discussion, owes its American origin to John Colvin, of Dartmouth, Mass., and Providence, R. I. This early ancestor purchased land in Providence, Aug. 16, 1705, and it is supposed lived upon his 300 acres for the remainder of his life. After the death of his first wife, Dorothy, he married May 30, 1726, Mary Keach, and died three years later, in 1729. His children were: Anna, John, Stephen, Abigail, Samuel, Amey, Deborah, James and Josiah. The children were born between the years 1679 and 1700, and of these, John, who was born in 1681, and married three times, lived in Dartmouth, Mass., in Providence, R. I., and Scituate, R. I., in which latter place his death occurred in 1764. Samuel, born in 1688, lived in Providence and Coventry, and died in 1759. James born in 1695, lived in Providence and Coventry, and died in 1755.

David Monroe Colvin, the father of Fred E., was born in Smithfield, R. I., May 4, 1836. When a boy he left home and went to live on the farm of Mr. Porter, at Thompson, Conn., where he continued to live and work until attaining his majority. He attended the district schools, and after his marriage resided on a rented farm until he removed to East Brooklyn in 1859. His work in the belt room of the Quinebaug Company mill was interrupted by the demand for his services in the Civil war, in which he enlisted in August of 1862, as a member of Co. B, 18th, C. V. I. During his three years in the war, he was under command of Captain Thomas K. Bates, and Colonel William G. Ely, and followed the fortunes of his regiment up to the time of his discharge at Harper's Ferry, Va., June 27, 1865. He saw much of the terrible and gruesome side of warfare, and was wounded at the battle of Winchester, Va., in 1863. After the war he returned to his former position with the Quinebaug Company, in time succeeding to the general management of the outside help, in which capacity he was employed up to the time of his death, Dec. 20, 1871, his demise being directly traceable to exposure and injury during his military career. He was a Republican in political affiliation, and a member of the McGregor Post, G. A. R., of which latter organization he was commander. In the M. E. Church he was wont to exercise a wide and helpful influence, and did much toward building up the denomination in his locality. He is buried in Westfield cemetery, as is also his wife, who was formerly Loretta Bates, born in Webster, Dec. 8, 1839, a daughter of Captain Alanson and Betsey (Keith) Bates. The marriage occurred in Webster, then Dudley, Mass. Mrs. Colvin died from the effects of a fall a week before her death, May 17, 1902. She was the mother of the following children: Everett M., born Oct. 18, 1859, in charge of the meat market of the Quinebaug Company, and through his marriage with Alina Phillips, the father of three children, Karah P., Waldo, and Alanson Bates; Irving D., born Dec. 1861, who died Aug. 5, 1863; Irving W., born Nov. 1866, who died March 19, 1868; Flora L., born May 14, 1862, who married Herbert A. Gallup, and died Oct. 28, 1887; and Fred E., born Aug. 14, 1868.

When twelve years of age Fred E. Colvin removed with his mother to the Killingly side of the river, and continued for another year to attend the district schools. His first business experience was obtained upon entering the shoe store of Deacon E. R. Burlingame, at the age of thirteen, and while with this concern he managed to save sufficient money to take a course in the Hinman Business College, at Worcester, Mass., from which he graduated, and thereafter returned to his home. Owing to impaired health he spent a year in recuperating, and then began his association with the firm of which he is now manager. At that time Charles E. Phillips was manager, and under his tutelage Mr. Colvin spent three years as a clerk, thereafter engaging as bookkeeper until he succeeded to the position of Mr. Phillips, in August of 1900. His present responsibility is a large one, and calls for the exercise of the many sided ability fostered while learning the business from the bottom up. Under his management fourteen assistants carry out the designs of the business, and this includes the grist mill run in connection therewith. An immense business is conducted annually. In 1895 Mr. Colvin started a millinery store on Main street, which has since had an era of prosperity under the capable supervision of his wife.

In November, 1890, Mr. Colvin married Irene A. Chamberlain, who was born in May, 1868, a daughter of Simeon and Sarah (Gould) Chamberlain. Of this union there is one daughter, Zylpha May, born Aug. 19, 1892. Mr. Colvin is variously connected with affairs in the community with which he is associated, and he is one of the staunch upholders of Republican principles and issues. He is Past Grand of the Quinebaug Lodge No. 34, I. O. O. F.; a member of the Unity Encampment No. 21, of Central Village, of which he is a Past Chief Patriot; and a Patriot Militant of the Canton Oneco, of Norwich, and has declined State offices in the same. Since boyhood he has been a member of the M. E. Church, and for the past twelve years has been chorister. Upon the organization of the Brotherhood of Saint Paul, an auxiliary of the church, he was chosen first president, and he is at present, and has been for several years, one of the stewards of the church. He is a popular and successful business man, and his numerous desirable personal attributes have won and retained many friends.

WILLIAM PETIG, one of the thrifty and energetic young business men of the city of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., is the popular and accommodating proprietor of the Union market, and a manufacturer of all kinds of fancy meats and toothsome sausages.

Mr. Petig was born July 11, 1863, in Lippe-Detmold, in Germany, a son of Frederick and Louisa (Grote) Petig, the former of whom was well-known in his native section. In 1842 he joined the military service in Germany, and later served for fifteen years in the police service, a part of the time as captain. He died when William was but eight years of age, leaving his widow with five boys, Frederick, Simon, George, William and Herman, all of whom remained in Germany, except William and his youngest brother.

After the death of Frederick Petig, an uncle,

William Grote, took William to his home in Greiz, in Saxony, and there he went to school and was treated as a son, in time being taught by this uncle his trade, that of a butcher. In 1881, after becoming thoroughly instructed, he started out on his own account and worked at his business through Germany, and was in Amsterdam when he made the decision to try his fortune in the great land across the Atlantic. His uncle had trained him to be economical and he was possessed of sufficient means to pay his way, and in February, 1886, he sailed from Amsterdam, on the Holland line steamer, "Leedamm," and fourteen days later reached the great city of which he had thought and heard so much. Perhaps the greatest handicap the young German found in the strange city, was his inability to either understand or to speak the language, and for a few days he was unable to obtain work, but at length an inquiry at Castle Garden induced him to go to Rockville, where he was immediately employed by a fellow-countryman, Louis Stamm, and with him he continued at his trade for one year.

The language still was puzzling and Mr. Petig endeavored to learn it in every way possible, succeeding so well that few speak or write it any more fluently now, but in those days it was very discouraging. After another few months in New York, he returned to Rockville, again entered the employ of Mr. Stamm, a year later engaged with Benjamin Weigle, in a market on West Main street, where he continued until in October 1889, when he made a trip to Germany and visited his family. He returned in the early part of 1890, came again to Rockville and again worked for his last employer, leaving there for the market of P. Kernan, on Market street, where he was employed until February, 1891, when he went into the business for himself, buying out the market of August Burke, on Windermere avenue. There he commenced his business, although a few weeks later he removed it to Village street and in 1892 bought out the whole business of Benjamin Weigle, on West Main Street. In June, 1897, Mr. Petig, still prospering, bought out John Grote, in the Union market on Ward street, also the property, and he has since carried on a most thriving business. Mr. Petig not only deals in all kinds of meats, but is a manufacturer of fancy meats, making a specialty of fancy bologna sausages.

The marriage of Mr. Petig occurred Dec. 10, 1890, in Rockville, to Miss Margaret Schaffer, who was born in Eisenach, Saxony, July 1, 1871, a daughter of John Schaffer, who had come to the United States when she was but twelve years old, and the family had settled in New Britain. The children born to this union are: Lizzie Louisa, Frederick William, Henry Frederick, Lillian and Rosa. Politically Mr. Petig does not belong to any party; he is a member socially of the Turner Society; of the German Reading Club; the Sons of Herman; the Singing Society; the Royal Arcanum, and the Maccabees, taking an active interest in all of them. With his family, his religious connection is with the German Lutheran Church, where they possess the esteem of all. The energy and perseverance he has shown have been ably seconded by his most estimable wife, and it is with satisfaction that they regard the great advance they have made in the past years, their honesty and fair dealing having gained the confidence of the public.

MERRICK J. WORTHINGTON. One of the prominent and successful farmers and dairymen of West Stafford, Conn., is Merrick Jesse Worthington, who owns a fine farm of 275 acres of valuable land, and as an estimable citizen worthily represents an old and honorable family.

Merrick Jesse Worthington was born May 5, 1862, in West Stafford, Conn., a son of James and Polly (Converse) Worthington, the former of whom was born June 6, 1811, in Monson, Mass., where he was a farmer until the age of twenty-five years, when he moved to Stafford and became interested quite extensively in the lumber business. Later he managed the farm which is now so ably conducted by his son, and there he died Jan. 2, 1891, esteemed and respected by his fellow-citizens. His political sympathies had always been with the Democratic party, although he would never accept any office at its hands.

James Worthington and Polly Converse were married Sept. 7, 1838. She was born May 15, 1817, in West Stafford, and was a daughter of Roswell Converse, of West Stafford, whose wife bore the maiden name of Fisk. She died Aug. 23, 1889. Of their children, Mary Jenette, who was born May 21, 1839, married Orrin Fletcher, of West Stafford; Henry James, who was born July 7, 1840, is a farmer now living in Manchester, Conn., having married Ella Cushman; Sarah Jane, who was born Sept. 15, 1841, was first married to John Church, of Wakefield, R. I., and second to John Fisk, of Willington, Conn., and she is now living in Springfield, Mass., a widow; Hannah Jurane, who was born Dec. 28, 1842, married Alonzo Beebe, and died in Iowa, where they lived for a number of years, Mr. Beebe being a native of Enfield, Mass.; Elmer J., who was born Sept. 10, 1844, is a farmer in West Stafford, where he has served on the board of selectmen, grand jury, and board of relief, and has also served on the district school committee. He was married Aug. 5, 1869, to Ann Eliza Cummings, who was a daughter of Willard and Eliza Ann (Trask) Cummings, of West Stafford, and their children were: George Elmer, born Nov. 17, 1870, in West Stafford, who died May 6, 1899, unmarried; Ernest Andrew, born Dec. 13, 1871, in West Stafford, at home; Arnold Willard, born June 17, 1874, who died Aug. 28, 1875, in West Stafford; Wilbur Everett, born June 26, 1876, who was married June 1, 1901, to Minnie Lambert, of Springfield, Mass., and is steward in "Cooley's Hotel," in that city; Harry Hall, born April 20, 1879, in West Stafford, is at home; Dwight Leroy, born Jan. 19, 1882, who died in West Stafford, Feb. 9, 1901; Mertie Jane, born March 14, 1884, at home; Charles Orrin, born March 21, 1887, in West Stafford, at home; Laura Edna, born Nov. 30, 1889; and Raymond Leroy, born July 17, 1892. Noble Jerome, the sixth child of James Worthington, who was born April 23, 1846, in West Stafford, was a blacksmith by trade, married Jane Harris, of Granby, Mass., and died in that place, Dec. 1, 1900; Rufus Julius, who was born Nov. 6, 1848, is a farmer living in Somers, Conn., and married Abby Davis, of Stafford; Monroe Jeremiah, who was born July 18, 1853, is a farmer of Somers, Conn., and married Ellen Delaney; Georgianna, who was born April 28, 1855, in West Stafford, married Albert Hammar, a farmer in Iowa, and died there in 1888; Betsey Joanna, who was born Oct. 10, 1856, is the widow of Albert Chapin, and now lives in Somers, Conn.; Maria Jennie, who was born Feb. 14, 1861, married Augustus Anderson, a farmer of Somers, Conn.; and Merrick Jesse was born May 5, 1862. It may be noted that in the above family each member had a name beginning with the letter J.

Merrick Jesse Worthington was born in the old home in West Stafford and was educated in the excellent schools of that locality. At the age of eighteen years he began to be personally interested in farming operations. After his father's death he bought out the interests of the other heirs, and has continued to manage the home farm with great success, and has also been very extensively engaged in the wood and lumber business, having many acres in fine timber land. Mr. Worthington owns 275 acres of land, cultivating about seventy-five acres and raising all kinds of farm products, and using about 200 acres in wood and pasture land. His dairying interests are large and successful and he always keeps as many as ten cows, finding a ready sale for all his products in Somers, Connecticut.

On Sept. 29, 1885, Mr. Worthington was united in marriage to Miss Henrietta Harwood Noble, who was the estimable daughter of Deacon Alva Darius and Mary Jane (Risley) Noble, of Somers, Conn., and the children born to this union are: Jessie Henrietta, who was born April 15, 1887; Olive Genevieve, who was born Aug. 15, 1888; and Blanche Isabelle, who was born Nov. 3, 1890.

In his political affiliations Mr. Worthington has been a life-long Democrat, and has been called upon to serve in a number of local positions, most efficiently performing the duties of school committee clerk for several years, as a member of the school board, and those of grand juror. Fraternally he is a member of the O. U. A. M., in which he has passed the chairs, and is a member of the State council; is a member of Mt. Vernon, No. 10, of Somers, Conn., and is Past Councillor of the same. Mrs. Worthington is a consistent member of the Congregational Church, and Mr. Worthington is a regular attendant and one of its most hearty supporters.

JOHN G. HANSON, a thrifty and industrious resident of Willimantic, Windham Co., Conn., was born near Goteborg, Sweden, Dec. 29, 1861, and from the age of eleven years has shifted for himself. His early history varies from hunting bear in Lapland, to being an invited guest in the Royal palace of King Oscar, of Sweden. The parents of John G. Hanson were farming people, and lived and died in the home country. When young Hanson was eleven years old he went to Stockholm, where he engaged to serve on a vessel that sailed around the north coasts of Europe. For three years he was on the water, and then became a clerk in a store in Lapland, spending five eventful years in that country, during which time he was engaged in different duties and pleasures, hunting Lapland bears, driving reindeer, sleeping out in the snow with a sleeping bag for cover, after the fashion of the land, and enduring many hardships and adventures that could only come to one living in so high a latitude.

When Mr. Hanson returned from Lapland, he again went to sea, this time on the four-master, "Northern Star," which sailed from Sweden for South Carolina, with a cargo of lumber, making the round trip in about eleven months, after putting in at an English port with a cargo of oats. On the last stage of the journey the ship was frozen in the ice in the North Sea for three weeks, and the crew were reduced to three ounces of bread a day. On his first experience as a sailor, while the ship was in the harbor at Stockholm, it was inspected by King Oscar, who was attracted by the bright and charming young face of the lad, John G. Hanson, invited him to come to the Royal Palace, and after having him shown over the magnificent building, he offered him a place in the palace; young Hanson declined, grateful as he was for the offer from the king, as he wished a more individual life career. While Mr. Hanson was in Europe he visited thirty-two of the more important cities of the Old World.

In 1884 he determined to come to the United States, and though he had but little money, he was full of pluck and energy. Landing at New York, he at once went to Mansfield, Conn., where he secured employment as a farm hand with August Storrs. After about a year he left Mr. Storrs to enter the employ of Buck, Durkee & Stiles, wholesale grocers at Willimantic, where he was a driver of one of their teams. By this firm and its successors he was employed some eleven years. J. C. Lincoln employed him for three years in the same capacity and still later, Dennis Shea.

In 1887 Mr. Hanson bought his present property on Jackson street, where he has since lived, and where he has conducted a grocery and confectionery business to the present time. He has also built a house on this property, which he rents.

Mr. Hanson was married Aug. 5, 1884, in Brooklyn, to Miss Annie Langreen, a native of Sweden, and to their union has come one child, Aleda, who is now at home.

Mr. Hanson is a Republican. By his own industry and thrift he has accumulated a very satisfactory competence. In the community he holds a good place, and is well thought of by those who know him best. Since he was eleven years old he has not been home, neither has he seen his parents since that time.

FRANK PALMER FENTON, town clerk and treasurer of the town of Windham, Windham county, is one of the best known and most popular officials in the town. He was born in Mansfield Centre, Tolland county, Oct. 31, 1873, and is descended from one of the oldest families in that section of the State.

(I) Robert Fenton, the ancestor of the Connecticut family of that name, was first on record in Woburn, Mass., in 1688. It is not known whence he came, but it is supposed that he was of Welsh origin. He remained in Woburn a few years, and tradition says he came from that place to Windham, Conn. Between May 30, 1693, and April 19, 1694, he was received as an inhabitant of the town, but the exact date is not given. He located in the north part of the town which afterwards became Mansfield. His occupation is thought to have been that of a carpenter, as he built the first bridge across the Natchaug river. He was one of the patentees of the town of Mansfield, which was set off from Windham and made a town, Oct. 20, 1703. In 1707 he became one of the proprietors of the town. Previous to 1730 he left Mansfield and located in Willington, where he died at the home of a son. By his wife, Dorothy, he had the following children: Robert, born Oct. 6, 1688, at Woburn, Mass.; Francis, born at Woburn, July 22, 1690, one of the earliest settlers at Willington; Samuel, born in Mansfield; Bridget, born Aug. 14, 1695; Jacob, born April 5, 1698, who became one of the first settlers of Norwich, Vt.; Dorothy, born Sept. 4, 1700, who married Samuel Slafter; Anne, born July 7, 1703, who married John Rigbe; Violata, born Aug. 20, 1706, who married John Harris; Ebenezer born Aug. 29, 1710, mentioned below; and Abigail, twin to Ebenezer, born Aug. 29, 1710.

(II) Ebenezer Fenton, son of Robert, was twice married. His first wife, whom he wedded Feb. 11, 1740, was Mehitable Tuttle, daughter of Jonathan Tuttle, and their children were: Jonathan, born May 17, 1741; Ebenezer, Jr., April 15, 1743; Sarah, Feb. 16, 1744; Nathan, Feb. 9, 1746; Solomon, June 23, 1749, who served seven years in the war of the Revolution, was the first lieutenant in a company of the 2d Regiment in 1779, and being a good mechanic, did valuable service in repairing arms; Lydia, May 26, 1753, who married Jacob Barrows; and Elijah, born Aug. 8, 1754. For his second wife Ebenezer Fenton married, Aug. 26, 1762, Lydia, eldest daughter of Malachi Conant. The children born of this union were as follows: Nathaniel, March 26, 1764; Jacob, Nov. 5, 1765, who resided in different places and died in Fluvanna N. Y.; Mehitable, Jan. 18, 1767; Abigail, Feb. 2, 1769; Robert, May 24, 1771, deceased June 19, 1776; Justin, Sept. 14, 1773, deceased in Ohio; Malachi, April 9, 1776, in Otsego county, New York; and Robert (2), Oct. 11, 1780, who resided in Green, Chenango Co., New York.

(III) Ebenezer Fenton, Jr., son of Ebenezer, lived in the northeasterly part of the town of Mansfield, about one-half mile south of the old Methodist meeting house. He served in the Revolutionary war in the 1st Regiment. He was probably the most ingenious mechanic ever in Mansfield and made surgical instruments of a superior kind, electric machines, and, unaided by science, a telescope, spy-glass and microscope. His ingenuity was so remarkable that it became the common belief that he could "make anything." On Dec. 25, 1766, he married (first) Sarah Dunham, daughter of Ebenezer Dunham, and the following children were born to them: Eunice, July 29, 1767; Bethiah, Nov. 5, 1768, who died Aug. 2, 1769; Alice, Oct. 20, 1770, who married Jonathan Storrs; Azel March 21, 1772, mentioned below; Oliver, who removed to New York State; and Elisha, a blacksmith residing near Atwoodville, town of Mansfield, who married (first) Philata Storrs, and (second) Lois Conant. For his second wife Ebenezer Fenton, Jr., married Rebeckah Johnson.

(IV) Azel Fenton, son of Ebenezer, Jr., was a blacksmith by trade, and a man of much physical strength and vigor. He lived in the early part of his life in the eastern part of town, but in his later years at Mansfield Center, where he died highly respected by his neighbors and friends. Sept. 17, 1798, he married Elizabeth Barrows, daughter of Isaac Barrows; she died Jan. 24, 1859, aged ninety-one years. He passed away April 2, 1847, aged seventy-five. Of their children we have the following record: Rosman, born Dec. 22, 1799, married Susan Sturtevant, and located in Essex county, N. Y.; Chauncey, born Aug. 20, 1801, was a lawyer in Crown Point, N. Y., and married Mary Ann Perkins; Elizabeth, born June 10, 1803, married Hezekiah Crane, and moved to New York State; Olive, born March 10, 1805, married Nehemiah Wheeler, and resided in Essex county, N. Y.; Caroline, born Oct. 15, 1806, died unmarried at the age of forty-six; Horace, born May 15, 1808, was a blacksmith at Mansfield Center, and married (first) Emily Whitney, (second) Mary Huestis, and (third) Caroline Hall; Ebenezer, born Oct. 1, 1811, married Samantha Johnson; Isaac Palmer, born May 15, 1813; and Juba, born Jan. 16, 1817, died young.

(V) Isaac Palmer Fenton, son of Azel, was engaged for many years in mercantile business at Mansfield Center, where he was also prominent in public affairs. For thirty years he was probate judge, and he held other town offices, including that of selectman. Early in life he was a Democrat, but later became a Republican. June 28, 1831, he married Sarah Campbell, by whom he had the following children: Helen E., born Feb. 8, 1836, a teacher for a number of years in the Providence Reform School; Marcia C., Feb. 7, 1838, who married Jan. 24, 1864, William W. Lincoln; Sarah P., Aug. 10, 1840, who married A. M. Dougherty, of Newport, R. I., quartermaster of the 8th C. V. I.; Olive M., Dec. 15, 1843; and Franklin D., Jan. 10, 1846. The mother died at the home in Mansfield Center, and was buried there.

(VI) Franklin D. Fenton, son of Isaac Palmer, grew to manhood in his native town, and engaged in mercantile business. Like his father he was keenly alive to the public needs, and ever played the part of a public-spirited citizen. For eight years he was postmaster at Mansfield Center, and he represented that town in the State Legislature one term. He was also first selectman and justice of the peace. Later he located in Willimantic and engaged in mercantile pursuits there, soon winning a high standing in the estimation of the citizens of his adopted town. Mr. Fenton married Emily M. Swift, a daughter of Anson A. Swift, and four children gladdened their home, Susie, who married H. A. Olds, of Willimantic; Anson C., deceased; Frank Palmer, our subject; and Frederick A.

(VII) Frank Palmer Fenton received his education in the Mansfield and Willimantic schools, and so well did he apply himself to the pursuits of knowledge that when he left the school room as a pupil, it was to re-enter it as a teacher. For seven terms he taught school in Mansfield and Windham and studied law in the office of William A. King, of Willimantic. When war was declared against Spain in April, 1898, he enlisted in Co. E, 3d C. V. I., under Capt. Edward F. Flynn, of Willimantic, and Col. Tyler of New London. They went into camp at Niantic, Conn., and later were sent to Camp Meade, Pa., thence to Camp Marion, S. C., and to Camp Onward, Ga. While in Niantic Mr. Fenton was appointed corporal and later was made sergeant. After the war was over he retained his membership in the Connecticut National Guard, and was made second lieutenant of Company E, later first lieutenant, and is now captain.

In the political world Mr. Fenton has held a prominent place. In March, 1899, he was elected town clerk and treasurer of the town of Windham, to fill an unexpired term. In October of the same year, he was nominated on the Democratic ticket and elected to the same office, and in 1901 he was nominated on both tickets and again elected to these offices, which positions, it is needless to say, he fills with credit to himself and to the general satisfaction of the public, without regard to party affiliation.

Mr. Fenton is a young man of temperate habits, and is well liked socially. He is past chancellor of the K. P., and commander of the Second Battalion, U. R. K. P. He also belongs to the Heptasophs, the Woodmen of America and the I. O. O. F., of Willimantic. He is also a member of the Board of Trade, and of the Willimantic fire department.

In January, 1902, Mr. Fenton was united in marriage with Rose E. Gray, who was educated in Willimantic, and was a successful teacher. She is a consistent member of the Congregational Church, and is highly esteemed for her charming personality.

WILLIAM NELSON REEVES, the popular and efficient superintendent of the J. A. Dady Company, engaged in the manufacture of silk at South Coventry, Tolland county, was born in Putnam, Windham county, Feb. 12, 1866, a son of Ettenine and Solime (Bennor) Reeves.

Ettenine Reeves was a native of Canada, and when still young came to Connecticut. Locating at Putnam, he found employment in Morse's mills, where he remained for over forty years, being overseer for a large part of the time. After retiring from active life, he made his home with his son William N., in South Coventry, where he died March 4, 1903, aged sixty-nine. In religious connection he held to the faith of the Church of Rome. His wife, Solime Bennor, was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, a daughter of Peter Bennor. They became the parents of five children, two of whom died young. Of the others, Alfred resides at Holyoke, Mass.; William Nelson is our subject; and Eusebe makes his home in Putnam. The mother died in Putnam and with her husband sleeps her last sleep in the consecrated ground of the Roman Catholic cemetery at that place.

William Nelson Reeves received his education in the district schools of the town of Putnam, and was still quite young when he began work in the mill of Mr. J. A. Dady, receiving at first the salary of $6.00 a month. He applied himself assiduously to learn the details of the business, and so successful was he in this that in 1892 he was appointed superintendent of the mill, an office he continued to fill to the eminent satisfaction of his employers and of the employees for six years. His natural executive ability has made him a good director, while his intimate practical knowledge of the work of the mill enables him to direct both wisely and well. In 1898 the South Coventry mill was opened, and Mr. Reeves became its superintendent, having under his direction seventy-five hands.

Politically Mr. Reeves is a Republican but in no way can be called an office seeker. Socially he belongs to the Catholic Knights of America, the Royal Arcanum and the A. O. U. W.

In 1899, Mr. Reeves was married in Putnam to Annie O. Connor, and they reside in a pleasant home in South Coventry. Mr. Reeves is highly respected and his genial nature makes him very popular socially.

WILLIAM LOUIS AYERS was born July 14, 1866, in Waterbury, Vt., and is a son of Orris Joseph Ayers, who was born in the same place, May 16, 1836. The father has been a successful farmer, and is now spending his last days in the peace and comfort that attend honest and industrious lives. In politics he is a Democrat, but has never taken any active part in party affairs. He is known as a quiet and unassuming gentleman of sterling worth and upright character.

Orris J. Ayers served in the Civil war as a member of Co. I., 10th U. S. Infantry, and was also in the regular army for a number of years, his entire military experience covering about ten years.

Mr. Ayers was married in 1865, to Miss Emeline C. Ladd, who was born Oct. 30, 1848, and is a daughter of John and Sarah (Bragg) Ladd. They have had the following children: William L.; Franklin Orris, who died at the age of fifteen years; Albert Allen, born Nov. 21, 1869, a carpenter living at home with his parents; Mabel Maude, born Jan. 21, 1872, who married Jerry Lyman, and lives in Waterbury, Vt.; Cassius Ulysses, born April 27, 1874, who married Lillian Henshaw, of Nova Scotia, and is an employe of the Vermont State Asylum, at Waterbury; Walter J., born Aug. 7, 1879, at home; Charles F., born Sept. 2, 1883, at home.

Joseph Ayers, the grandfather of William Louis, was born Sept. 21, 1800, in Vershire, Vt., where he followed the business of butcher on an extended scale and carried on a large farm. He died shortly before the war. Olive Chase, his wife, was born in Vershire, Vt., April 18, 1799 and died June 17, 1897. They had six children, the oldest named William.

William L. Ayers was born in Waterbury, Vt., where he acquired his education in the public schools, supplementing it with a course at the Green Mountain Seminary at Waterbury Centre, near where his father is now residing. For seven terms he was in the seminary, which he left when he reached the age of seventeen years, to apply himself to farming. In 1890 he came to Tolland and purchased the Selden Tracy farm on the Mansfield road. This farm consisted of 120 acres, and under his industrious tillage it has greatly improved. Mr. Ayers devotes himself to general farming, also keeps about a dozen head of cattle, and is a noted butter maker.

Mr. Ayers is a Democrat, and holds very decided views on the public questions of the times. For several terms he has served on the board of selectmen and the board of relief, and is known as a public-spirited and progressive citizen.

Mr. Ayers was married March 10, 1890, to Mary Clement Dodge, a daughter of Alfred and Angie (Clement) Dodge, of Morristown, Vt. This union was blessed with the birth of the following children: Harold William, born Dec. 27, 1890, who died Jan. 23, 1899; Orris Joseph, born Aug. 12, 1893, is a student at school; Howard William, born Feb. 19, 1900; Alfred Dodge, born Nov. 20, 1902.

Mr. Ayers is a hard-working man, and his success is very largely due to his own persistent and unwearied industry. His character is above reproach, and he is much liked by his neighbors.

GEORGE O. THOMAS, the leading dry goods merchant at Danielson, Windham Co., Conn., is a self made man, full of energy and business spirit. He has won a good standing in the community, and is regarded as a thoroughly representative man of the most modern and progressive elements of Windham county.

Nicholas Thomas, the grandfather of George O., was born Aug. 5, 1793, in Scituate, R. I., and when a young man located at Sterling, Conn., where he learned the machinist's trade. After his first marriage he operated a machine shop at Killingly Centre, where he made his home. This shop was destroyed by fire, and though he lost heavily, he immediately erected another, and spent his life as a machinist in Killingly Centre, where he died March 4, 1876. His remains were interred at Westfield. A hard-working man, he was quite well-to-do at one time, but lost heavily through endorsements. In middle life he was thrown from a horse, and ever afterward walked with a cane. He was a Mason, and a Whig, though later becoming a Republican. A man of intelligence and character, he belonged to the Baptist Church, at East Killingly. Betsey Fenner, his first wife, was born July 25, 1796. She died Sept. 30, 1825. She was a daughter of Benjamin and Mary (Greene) Fenner, both members of prominent Rhode Island families. Their children were: Susan, who married Charles Cole, of Sterling, and after his death returned to her father's home, where she lived the rest of her days; Mary, who married Henry Warren, a farmer, after his death became the wife of Morgan LaRue, and died in Sharon Springs, New York.

Nicholas Thomas was again married, Julia A. Fenner becoming his wife. She was born July 20, 1810, and died Nov. 27, 1885. She was a sister of the first Mrs. Thomas, and the mother of the following children: Benjamin Nicholas, the father of George O. Thomas; Phoebe, the wife of George L. Field, who resides at Dayville; Julia T., the wife of William Field, of Dayville; Emma, who married W. Johnson, and lives at Putnam; Henry Lathrop, born Nov. 24, 1838, who died April 17, 1839.

Benjamin Nicholas Thomas, the father of George O., was born Feb. 2, 1830, in Sterling, Conn., where he attended the common school, and later at Killingly was also a student in the common school. When a young man he taught school for several terms in the towns of Killingly and Plainfield, and for two terms after his marriage he was engaged in teaching. Later he became a bookkeeper in the employ of the Sayles Company of Dayville, a position he held as long as he lived. For several years prior to his death he had charge of the Company store, in partnership with E. R. Burlingame, under the firm name of Thomas & Burlingame. For about a year prior to his death, Oct. 29, 1867, he was in failing health. His remains were laid to rest in Dayville. A Republican, he served on the board of selectmen for several years, and was postmaster at Killingly (Dayville) a number of years prior to his death. His religious connections were with the Congregational Church.

Mr. Thomas was married March 30, 1853, to Charlotte H. Niles, who was born April 16, 1829, in Brooklyn, Conn., a daughter of George A. and Dolly (Bennett) Niles. Mrs. Thomas survives her husband, and has her home in Danielson. She has had excellent educational advantages, having been educated in the Killingly schools, and the West Killingly Academy. Before her marriage she was a successful teacher and taught several seasons in Brooklyn and Plainfield. The death of her husband left her with a family of small children to support, and for two years she taught at Killingly Centre. Her literary ability was marked, and she became well known in the fields of poetry and story writing; for many years she contributed poetical effusions to the New York Ledger, while it was under the ownership of Robert Bonner, and also wrote very freely for the local press. She issued a book of poems, the title of which was "Lady Evelyn." By her unwearied labors and fertile pen she was able to keep her children together, give them a good education, and prepare them well for the trials and duties of life. These were her children: (1) Wilfred Niles, born Jan. 9, 1854, who married Anna Warren, was a school teacher and farmer and died in Killingly; (2) Jessie Gertrude, born April 13, 1856, who died Sept. 17, 1866, at Sharon Springs, N. Y.; (3) Dudley Nicholas, born Feb. 19, 1858, who attended school at Killingly, and at Eastman Business College, and is now residing in Oakland, Cal., married to Ora E. Streeter and has three children, Mortimer N., Fred B. and Elsie L.; (4) Mortimer Winfield, born May 18, 1860, who graduated from the Danielson high school, Williston Seminary and Williams College, is now principal at Blackinton, Mass., married Mary Phelps and is the father of Maxwell P., deceased, Wellsworth C. and Fostine C.; (5) George O., whose career forms the theme of this article; (6) Raymond Harcourt, born Feb. 1, 1865, who died Oct. 3, 1866; (7) Maria Maude, born Aug. 26, 1867, who died April 5, 1868.

George Ormond Thomas was born in Dayville, Sept. 12, 1862, and secured his education in the schools of his native town. When he was eighteen years old he left school and began his business career as a clerk for Sherman & Keach, a dry goods firm at Danielson, with whom he remained for five years, and then entered the employ of George Leavens in the same business. Mr. Thomas next ventured a partnership with W. E. James, under the firm name of James & Thomas, in a drug store at Danielson, but sold out to his partner in less than a year. For a short time he was employed in the drug store of R. F. Lyon at Danielson, and then he became manager of a branch store at Franklin, Mass., belonging to Clifford Folger, of South Framingham, Mass., where he remained some two years, returning at the expiration of that period to Danielson to enter the dry goods business in company with F. E. Bitgood, under the firm name of Bitgood & Thomas. After six successful years Mr. Thomas retired from the store in favor of his partner, bought the dry goods business of James Perkins, April 1, 1898, and has since successfully conducted it.

Mr. Thomas was married to Ida F., a native of Killingly, and a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Page) Young. Her father was long engaged in business in Danielson. She has become the mother of one child, Mildred A., born Sept. 15, 1886.

Mr. Thomas is a Republican, and also belongs to Orient Lodge, No. 37, K. P., of which he is a Past Chancellor. He also belongs to Charles H. Bacon Company, Uniform Rank, K. P., and attends the Baptist Church.

George A. Niles, the maternal grandfather of George O. Thomas, was born in Savannah, Ga., Dec. 25, 1803, a son of Ephraim and Esther (Cornell) Niles. Ephraim Niles was a ship carpenter and died in Smithfield, R. I. When George A. Niles was three years old, the family came north to Maine, but finally settled in Rhode Island. Young as he was at the time he retained a vivid recollection of the sea voyage. The death of his mother, and an accident to his father which necessitated the amputation of a limb, resulted in his finding a home in Brooklyn, Conn., and in that and neighboring towns his life of tireless industry was passed. When a young man he was long engaged as boss farmer for Comfort Tiffany, who was the father of the famous New York jeweler, and while in his employ planted the fine shade trees on the Brooklyn side of the bridge. Later in life Mr. Niles conducted a grinding mill, for the preparation of Nova Scotia plaster for fertilizing purposes. The last portion of his life was spent in Danielson, where he died April 7, 1890. His remains were buried at Westfield. Dolly Bennett, his wife, was a native of Sterling, Conn., and a daughter of Sampson and Ruth (Shepherd) Bennett. She bore her husband the following children: Charlotte Hyde; Daniel B., who died young; George S., who married Irene La Rue, resides in Brooklyn, N. Y., and has had two children, Anita L., who died young, and Morgan L.

George O. Thomas, through his grandmother, Julia Ann Fenner, descends from John Greene, who was born Feb. 9, 1596 or '97, in England. John Greene was a surgeon, and came from Salisbury, Wiltshire, England, with his wife, Joanna, and five children. They left Hampton, April 5, 1635, in the ship, "James," and arrived at Boston June 5, 1635. They first located at Salem, and the following year removed to Providence. In 1642 Mr. Greene purchased the Spring Green estate below Pawtucket, and was one of the twelve original purchasers of Shawomet, a tract of land embracing the greater part of the present towns of Warwick and Coventry, a contract executed Jan. 12, 1642 or 43. In 1644 he went to London to negotiate for Narragansett, and was one of the committee who first organized the Colony of Rhode Island under a charter obtained from Charles I, in 1647. From 1652 to 1658 he was commissioner. In 1651 he was in the Assembly of Providence and Warwick. In 1638-39, he was one of the eleven men baptized by Roger Williams in Providence, and became one of the twelve original members of the first Baptist Church which was organized in America, at Providence. His will was dated Sept. 28, 1658. His children were all baptized in St. Thomas Church at Salisbury, England. There his first marriage to Joanna Tattersall was celebrated, Nov. 4, 1619. She was the mother of his children, and died in 1643. His second wife was Mrs. Alice Daniels, of Providence, and his third wife was a Miss Phillippa. She survived him nearly thirty years. His children born between 1620 and 1633, were: John, Peter, James, Thomas, Joanna and Mary.

John Greene, the oldest of the children just mentioned, was born Aug. 15, 1620, in England. In 1651 he was elected commissioner from Warwick, and semi-annually was re-elected until 1659, when he was elected assistant, a position to which he has chosen yearly until 1686, when the charter was abolished by King James II. In 1689 he was again elected assistant, and in 1690 was made deputy governor, in which office he continued until 1700. This was a longer time than any other man had held the position continuously. The lapses in his services as assistant probably came from his going to England on colonial business. In 1651 he was Recorder, and in 1657, 1658 and in 1661 he was attorney general. From 1683, the time of Andros, he was Major of the Main, or in modern terms, major general. His name appears on the charter obtained from King Charles II. in 1663, as one of the principal persons applying for it, and he was one of the ten assistants as provided for in the charter. In 1664 he was given a captain's commission, and was afterward called Captain Greene. Later he was known as Major Greene, and still later as Deputy Governor John Greene. He was a witness to the purchase of Shawomet in 1642, and two years later purchased from his father his Providence property. His death occurred Nov. 27, 1708.

John Greene married Ann Almy, who was born in 1627 and died May 17, 1729. Both were buried on the Spring Green farm. Their children born between 1649 and 1670, were Deborah, John, William, Peter, Job, Philip, Richard, Anne, Catherine, Audrey and Samuel.

Job Greene, noted in the above family, was born Aug. 4, 1656, and was called Major Job Greene. He was an extensive land owner, and in 1726 transferred a portion of his property, consisting of 412 acres on the east side of the Pawtuxet river, to his son Daniel. The same year he gave his son Philip a tract of land lying northwest of the south branch of the Pawtuxet, containing 278 acres, together with his house and saw mill. In his will dated in 1744, he leaves to this son his mansion house at Occupassetuxet, where his father, the deputy governor, lies buried, and also his land in the south forks of the Pawtuxet, his land on the north side of the river in Warwick and Coventry, his cattle swamp land, agricultural tools, silver cups, his negro man Phineas, and his negro woman with her children. Among his other children he distributed his Natick lands, farms in Tunkhill, Scituate, bills of credit and money. He died at his home in old Warwick.

Job Greene was married Jan. 22, 1684, to Phoebe Sayles. She was born Aug. 4, 1656, a daughter of John and Mary (Williams) Sayles, of Providence. Mary Williams was a daughter of John Williams. Their children, born between 1685 and 1705, were Anne, Mary, Deborah, Job, Phoebe, Christopher, Daniel, Richard, Catherine and Phillip.

Judge Phillip Greene, born March 15, 1704 or '05, was judge in the court of Commons pleas in Kent county from 1759 to 1784, and was Associate justice of the Supreme Court in 1768. He was married Aug. 12, 1731, to Elizabeth Wickes, who was born Feb. 5, 1706, a daughter of John and Sarah (Gorton) Wickes, and died Dec. 23, 1776. Her husband the judge died April 10, 1791. They lived and died at Pawtuxet. Their children, born between 1732 and 1752, were Phoebe, Sarah, Job, Christopher, Phillip, Elizabeth, William, Mary and Sarah (2).

Col. Christopher Greene, born May 12, 1737, lived in Centerville, R. I., in a house that formerly stood just north of the bridge, where now stands the dwelling known as the Levalley house. At a latter period he lived at Arctic Center. He was a captain in the Canada expedition under Arnold and Montgomery, and was taken prisoner at Quebec in 1775. He repelled the Hessians under Donop at Red Bank, N. J., in 1777, and was killed at Points Bridge on Croton River, in Westchester county, N. Y., in an encounter with the Tories May 13, 1781. For his gallant defense of Fort Mercer (Red Bank) Congress passed resolutions of acknowledgment and praise, Nov. 4, 1777, ordering an elegant sword to be presented to him. He did not, however, live to receive it, and several years after his tragic death it was presented to his son, Job Greene.

Col. Greene was married Jan. 6, 1757, to his third cousin, Anna Lippett. She was born Nov. 15, 1735, a daughter of Jeremiah and Welthiann (Greene) Lippett. She was later married to Col. John Low, and died June 9, 1816, at the age of eighty. Her remains were buried with those of her parents opposite the Baptist Church in Old Warwick. The children of Col. Greene, born between 1757 and 1777, were Welthian, Job, Phoebe, Ann, Frances, Elizabeth, Jeremiah, Daniel, Westrard, Christopher and Mary.

Mary Greene, noted in the preceding family list, was born Sept. 20, 1777, and died Sept. 20, 1864. She married Benjamin Fenner, and had her home at Sterling, Conn. Their children, born between 1794 and 1816, were Jeremiah, Betsey, Benjamin, John, Christopher, Joseph Wasren, Julia Ann, Amy and Mary Melinda. Of these, Betsey, who was born July 25, 1796, married Nicholas Thomas and died Sept 30, 1825. Later Mr. Thomas married Julia Ann, a sister of Betsey, who was born July 20, 1810, and who died Nov. 27, 1885. She was grandmother of George O. Thomas.

JOHN E. S. PHILLIPS. An enterprise which caters to the most exacting element of Brooklyn, Windham county, and which is conducted after the most approved business principles, and with due regard for the best interests of its many patrons, is the meat establishment owned and managed by John E. S. Phillips, a native of East Brooklyn, and born Nov. 24, 1870.

The family of which Mr. Phillips is a member has long been identified with Connecticut, and of its latter day representatives, the paternal grandfather, John Phillips, lived for many years and eventually died, in Lisbon. He was a farmer by occupation, and the father of four sons, George A., Henry, Joseph, and Gurdon. George A. Phillips, the father of John E. S., was born in Lisbon, and there learned the mason's trade, at which he became an expert, and was in demand for some of the most ambitious undertakings in his line throughout the State. After leaving Lisbon he lived for many years in East Brooklyn, removing therefrom to Danielson, and later to Pomfret Landing, where he died in 1888 at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Edwin T. White, at the age of seventy-seven years. He was a tireless worker, and an honorable man, and in his political affiliations was invariably on the side of the Democratic party, although he never became involved in office seeking. For his first wife he married a Miss Snow, of Lisbon, who died leaving two children, of whom George was a druggist, and for several years before his death was both druggist and postmaster of South Coventry, Conn.; while William is a traveling salesman of Providence, R. I. The second wife of George A. Phillips was formerly Mary H. (Phipps) Joslyn, widow of Monroe Joslyn, by whom she had two children, one of whom, Charles H., was adopted by Charles Bush, of Brooklyn, but is now deceased. Of the second marriage there were born three children, of whom John E. S. is youngest; Jennie I. is the wife of Edwin T. White, a prominent citizen of Pomfret Landing; and Isabella died at the age of eleven years. Mrs. Phillips, who was a daughter of Jason Phipps, a farmer of Thompson, was born in 1831, and died in 1894 at the home of her son, John E. S.

Educationally, John E. S. Phillips has been particularly fortunate, and not only studied in the public schools of East Brooklyn, the high school at Danielson, and the school at Brooklyn village, but attended a private school on New York avenue, New York City, the principal of the latter being John L. Mowry, one of the foremost educators in the East, and now in charge of a large school in Jersey City. He then entered the Agricultural College at Amherst, Mass., and after completing the three years' course, assumed charge of the large farm of his half brother, Charles Bush, at Bush Hill, Brooklyn. In this capacity he remained for five years, or until the death of Mr. Bush in the forepart of 1897. In April of 1897 he purchased his present business of the estate of Harvey Harris, and has since built up a large and profitable trade in the meat line, his wagon being on the road every day during the summer, and every other day during the winter. In the meantime he has accumulated a fair showing of this world's goods, and owns, besides a paying tenement house in Brooklyn Green, a farm of thirty acres a short distance from the Green, and purchased in 1902.

On Jan. 14, 1902, Mr. Phillips married Jennie Harris, the widow of Harvey Harris, and daughter of William Cheney, of Brooklyn. Formerly Mr. Phillips was fraternally associated with the Quinebaug Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Danielson, and he is at present a member of the Brooklyn Grange, in which his wife has held office. He is a member of the Unitarian Church.

F. J. COOLEY is a successful merchant at Rockville, Tolland county, and as a young man he was called upon to fill such positions of trust and honor in his native town as usually fall to the more aged and experienced. He is still a young man, but has risen from the bottom and fought his way to the top, and is regarded as one of the sound and substantial business men of Rockville.

F. J. Cooley was born July 16, 1866, in Somers, Conn., and is the son of Levi and Mary (Batton) Cooley. The earlier years of his life were spent in his native town, where he had but little education, as his parents were poor, and he had early to take up the work of life. His last two years at school were spent in the home of his brother, George W., in Somers, where he did chores for his board and attended the Battle street school. From a boy of ten or eleven years of age, he was put to hard work, as, though small of stature, he had great energy and determination; the work he did was remarkable considering his youth. When little more than entered upon his 'teens, responsibilities fell upon him almost as upon a man with a family, and the boy exhibited a spirit that proved him to be an exceptionally dutiful son. When but thirteen years old he earned a man's pay, working for William Burden, of Somers, a farmer, and a noted business man. All his earnings went to the support of his mother and the home. There he early secured a knowledge of tobacco culture, as he was observing and manifested an adaptation one much older might not have shown. After he reached fifteen years he was seldom out of employment, and wherever he worked he made a reputation that would always warrant his return. When about eighteen years old he went to North Somers, Conn., where he worked for Fred Wood, who was engaged in work on the town roads. In the fall of that year he was offered a situation as a clerk in a store in Somerville by O. L. Dart. This position he had not sought, and it was doubtless the result of his steady habits, industry and good reputation. This was the beginning of his mercantile career. He was engaged by Mr. Dart for three months, for which he was to receive twenty dollars. Taking readily to the business, he made such progress in it that at once he became a valuable man, and continued with Mr. Dart as long as that gentleman was in business. Mr. Dart was manager of the company store of that place.

Mr. Cooley left the store of Mr. Dart in 1886, and in September of that year went to Ellington to clerk for H. C. Aborn & Son, where he remained until August, 1889, when he became a member of the firm of M. H. Aborn & Co. Their place was on West street, Rockville, the establishment now under the management of Mr. Cooley. After two years the business was moved for a few months, and then taken back to the present stand.

In 1892 Mr. Cooley became the sole proprietor of the business, purchasing the interest of Mr. Aborn, and conducted it alone until 1894, when the firm became Cooley & Thompson, A. M. Thompson becoming the junior partner; they remained in partnership till January, 1901, when Mr. Cooley succeeded the firm, the business being now conducted under the name of F. J. Cooley. Mr. Cooley had been the active manager of the business and his close attention and his characteristic energy were invaluable to its progress. During his entire career he has taken but a month's vacation.

Mr. Cooley was married Dec. 16, 1885, in Somers, Conn., to Miss Nellie Cady, a native of that place, born Feb. 18, 1864. She is the daughter of William H. and Emma Jane (Huriburt) Cady. Her father is the chief of police of Rockville, and his sketch may be found elsewhere. Mrs. Cooley's girlhood days were spent in Lakewood, N. J., the home of her parents, for a time, but when she was twenty, they came back to Somers. To this union were born: Pauline May, born Feb. 1, 1887, now in the class of 1904, of the Rockville high school; Leslie F., born April 14, 1888; Percy Leroy, born Nov. 28, 1892; Sterling, born April 20, 1894; Winifred, born Oct. 18, 1895.

In his political connection Mr. Cooley's sympathy is with the Democratic party. In 1897 he served on the board of relief, and was justice of the peace in 1895 and 1896. His term as selectman expired in October, 1900. For the strongly Republican Second ward he was elected alderman by a large majority, and while a member of the council he never missed a single meeting. For a number of terms he was town auditor, and in social affairs is a member of the I. O. O. F., in which he has held prominent office. Mr. Cooley belongs to Alden Skinner Camp, No. 45, Sons of Veterans. His position as a citizen and a business man is a prominent one, and he has gained it by his own efforts. He bought his excellent home on West street in Rockville, and it is one of the most pleasant and attractive in the city. Mr. Cooley is engaged in the tobacco business, and is very successful in all his enterprises.

WILLIAM S. MARTIN, the skillful and active photographer of Stafford, Tolland county, has a high reputation for his proficiency throughout New England. He was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, Sept. 29, 1866, a son of John S. and Rosalie (Hansen) Martin.

John S. Martin is a native of Copenhagen, where the family has lived for generations. He is a popular hotel keeper there. By his wife, Rosalie Hansen, he has become the father of five children, namely: William S.; Alfred, in the mercantile business in Germany; Louis, a brewer and wholesale dealer in hides near Copenhagen; and Marian and Mark, at home.

William S. Martin was the only member of his family to come to the United States. He was educated in private schools in his native city, and for a short time attended the University of Copenhagen with the intention of entering the medical profession. While there, however, an opportunity for an immediate source of revenue caused him to abandon the idea of medicine, and he became bookkeeper in a large wholesale house in Copenhagen, for some time following clerical work. In 1885 he came to the United States, landing in New York, where as an energetic, ambitious and determined youth he found employment in various capacities. For a few years, as his means were limited, he worked at whatever he could find to do. In 1889 in New York he first became identified with photography; this proved congenial to his tastes, and was easy for him to learn, as he was by nature endowed with artistic skill. His power of application enabled him readily to master the intricacies of the work, and he rose rapidly in his chosen calling. As soon as his means permitted, he established himself in business, locating at Greenfield, Mass., in partnership, under the firm name of Martin & Lanfair. At the end of two years, Mr. Martin severed his connection with the firm, and located at Springfield, Mass., where he opened a studio for himself. In November, 1897, he located in Stafford Springs, as manager of the George M. Bolton photograph gallery, which business he shortly purchased, and has conducted it since with never failing success. He is highly esteemed, not alone by those of his profession, but by those who have met him either in business or in social life.

WILLIAM WALDO LATHROP, deceased. Among those who helped to make Stafford, Tolland county, an enterprising business center, must be numbered William Waldo Lathrop, the popular druggist, now deceased, who was born at Bridgeport, Conn., April 10, 1863.

Ferdinand Lathrop, father of William W., died March 31, 1878, in Coventry, Conn. In business life he was a manufacturer, and although at the time of his death he was but forty-five years of age, he had attained considerable success. His first wife, Harriet A. Waldo, died Oct. 16, 1863, aged thirty years. To this union had been born: George A., who died March 15, 1861, aged seven months and seventeen days; and William Waldo. For his second wife Ferdinand Lathrop wedded Maryette Fuller, who died Aug. 30, 1883 aged forty-one years, having borne her husband one child, Mary, who married Benjamin Fessenden. The grandfather's name on the paternal side was John Lathrop, but nothing further is known of him.

William Waldo Lathrop was born in Bridgeport, and brought to Tolland county in his infancy. He received his education first in the neighboring schools of his home, then in Coventry, and later he attended Willimantic high school. After leaving school, he entered a grocery store in South Coventry, where he remained a short time, and then went to South Manchester and clerked in a drug store for several years. In 1889 he came to Stafford Springs, and started in the drug business, in which he continued until his death, which occurred Sept. 11, 1897.

In establishing himself in the drug business in Stafford Springs, Mr. Lathrop really acted in opposition to the advice of several whose familiarity with the business situation at the time was not to be doubted. His first place of business was located where his later success was achieved, and he succeeded from the start. Fire destroyed his first store, but not until a time when the experimental stage had been passed, and when he knew the possibilities of a well-kept and up-to-date drug store in Stafford Springs. He at once began the construction of a larger store, in which he placed the most modern and elaborate fixtures, so that when it was reopened the town could claim the finest store of its kind in the county, and certainly one finer than any drug store in a town of the size in New England. Mr. Lathrop's business foresight and judgment in this enterprise were very much in evidence by the success which came to it. In business matters generally, or in matters of finance, his opinion carried weight, and not infrequently was sought. His was a foremost position among the representative business men of his town. In politics he was a Democrat, but was not a politician, never desiring or seeking office.

On Feb. 3, 1887, Mr. Lathrop was married to Harriet West, a daughter of Mrs. F. M. West, of South Manchester, Conn., and to this union were born: Frank Waldo, born Dec. 5, 1888; and Dorothy West, born June 19, 1891. Mrs. Lathrop is a consistent member of the Episcopal Church.

The following is clipped from the Stafford Press under the date of Sept. 16, 1897, and demonstrates the high esteem in which Mr. Lathrop was held by his fellow-townsmen:

"The business ventures of Mr. Lathrop always proved fortunate, as he had talent combined with push and energy. He sold his business in Manchester and came to Stafford Springs in 1889. He built up and retained a good business here. He invested his surplus money in real estate here, and at the time of his death owned many single and double houses on Grant avenue, besides his own residence. He was of a happy, genial disposition, and had a host of friends. He was fond of practical jokes, and was never more happy than when planning or taking part in any kind of an escapade that promised good-natured fun."

DAVID A. BROWN was born Sept. 7, 1862, in Tolland, Conn., and is a son of Smith Harness Brown, who was born in Smithfield, R. I., Oct. 1, 1829.

Smith H. Brown was taken by his parents when he was about four years old to Tolland, where his life was spent. They had bought a farm, and there he spent his boyhood and youth in attendance on the local schools, which he left when he was nineteen years old to devote himself to the cultivation of the soil. A very successful farmer, when he died he owned more land than any other man in Tolland county, having over 1200 acres in his hands. His death occurred Aug. 19, 1900, and his reputation was that of an honest and thoroughly industrious man. After leaving school he taught for nine winters in Tolland. Mr. Brown was a man of domestic habits and was devoted to his family. He was a Democrat and represented his town in the State Legislature in 1864, and was first selectman for a number of years. He served on the board of relief, was assessor, school visitor and constable at different times, and for many years was a justice of the peace.

Smith H. Brown was married to his first wife,

Roxanna Crandall, Oct. 25, 1854. She was born in 1829, and died without issue, May 31, 1855. In January, 1857, Mr. Brown was married to his second wife, Maria M. Crandall, a sister of his first wife. She was born April 7, 1825, and is a daughter of Amos and Eunice (Day) Crandall. To this marriage were born: Emma R., born March 26, 1858, who married Arthur P. Kingsbury, of Coventry, and died Jan. 19, 1879; Elisha P., born Sept. 11, 1859, now living in Bloomfield, Conn., foreman for the Hartford Lumber Company, who married, Jan. 11, 1890, Emma R. Hall, of Coventry; Seth, born April 12, 1861, who is living in Chicago, where he is engaged in the grocery business, and who married Hattie Hodgkin, of West Superior, Wis.; David A.; George M., born June 15, 1865, who died Nov. 27, 1893, in Waterbury, where he was engaged as a telephone operator; Lizzie M., born March 10, 1866, deceased Dec. 6, 1884; Smith H., Jr., born Aug. 20, 1867, now living in Newport, R. I., where he has charge of a wholesale grocery house.

Seth Brown, the grandfather of David A., was born in 1804 and died April 10, 1870, in Mansfield, Conn. Farming was his life business, and he is remembered as an industrious and hard-working man. As he was a man of more than ordinary ability, he was called upon to fill the various town offices, and served as selectman for several years. Almira Green, his wife, was born in Smithfield, R. I., and died in Worcester, Mass., in 1892. Their children were as follows: Smith H., noted above; Abbie Matilda, born in 1835, who married Charles Wesley Charter; Jane Malinda, born Jan. 13, 1839, married to Samuel C. Bradley, of Rockville; Albert Arnold, deceased in infancy; Lotina Almira, born in 1844, who married Frank A. Foster; Martin Arnold, born in 1846, who married Lydia Slade; Harriet Eunice, born in 1848, married to Arnold Richardson.

David A. Brown received his education in the common schools of Tolland, which he left at the age of seventeen, to apply himself to the work of life. For several winters he taught district schools and worked on his father's place during the summer. When he married, in 1886, he leased the old Jonathan Webster farm in the town of Berlin, where he continued for three years. At the end of that time he came back to Tolland and purchased a farm in the south part of the town on "Grant's Hill." Six years later this farm was sold and Mr. Brown bought the Joshua Griggs farm of 140 acres, situated in Tolland street, and is engaged in general farming and dairying.

Mr. Brown is a Democrat and takes an active part in town affairs. He represents his town in the State Legislature of 1903, and has held many offices in the town, including first and second selectman, assessor, member of the board of relief, and justice of the peace. He has been a member of the board of school visitors since 1889 and acting school visitor for eight years.

Mr. Brown is an attendant at the Methodist Church, of which his wife is a member, and she is also a member of the ladies' societies connected with the church.

Mr. Brown was married March 24, 1886, to Ida Augusta Webster, who was born Feb. 10, 1864, and is a daughter of Gardner and Martha (Drake) Webster, of Tolland. Their children are: (1) Howard Gardner, born Aug. 18, 1888, in Berlin, Conn., who dropped dead Nov. 10, 1900; Lizzie Maria, born Feb. 5, 1891, in Tolland, who died Aug. 13, 1892; Ruby Evelyn, born Nov. 21, 1893; George Smith, born April 21, 1895; Doris Miriam, born April 22, 1897.

Mrs. Brown is a great-granddaughter of Simeon Webster, who was a soldier in the Revolution, and had a yearly pension of $96 until his death in 1841, at the age of eighty-four. Her grandfather, Milton Webster, was a prosperous farmer of Tolland.

Mr. Brown comes of an old and honored New England family, and he well sustains the honor of the name. He is a prosperous and successful farmer, and is much esteemed by his neighbors for his sterling worth and genuine character.

CHARLES S. BOTTOMLEY, present superintendent of the New England mill of the celebrated Hockanum Company, at Rockville, Tolland county, has been associated with that community only a few years, but he has already attained to an acknowledged position in manufacturing circles. Perhaps his knowledge of his business is in a measure instinctive, for he comes of a family whose members have long had important connection with woolen manufacturing, but there is no doubt that his rapid advancement from one position of responsibility to another, and his unusual success in every capacity, are due to his characteristic thoroughness and application.

Mr. Bottomley is an Englishman, born July 16, 1866, at Shelf, near Bradford, son of William and Elizabeth (Lister) Bottomley, who were the parents of six children. The father was at one time engaged in manufacturing on his own account, and was subsequently connected with Briggs, Priestly & Co., of Bradford, for a number of years. He had practically been raised in this branch of manufacture, having learned under his uncles, who were prominent manufacturers at Shelf. William Bottomley died in England, and his widow still resides there. Of their family, Herbert, the oldest son, also came to this country, and was for a time a member of the firm of A. Priestly & Co., at Camden, N. J., but is now a resident of England.

Charles S. Bottomley received a good education, attending the schools in the immediate locality of his home, and later a boarding school near York, England. At sixteen he took up his life work, entering the employ of Briggs, Priestly & Co., at Bradford, and the remaining four years of his residence in England he spent at the different branches of the woollen business, learning all he could. To familiarize himself with the theoretical side of the business he attended at night the Bradford Technical School. Thus by the time he came to this country, in May, 1886, Mr. Bottomley had a most comprehensive knowledge of the business upon which he had entered, and in which he was determined to make his mark. His first engagement in the United States was at Camden, N. J., in the mill of Priestly & Co., with whom he remained until 1897, during that period filling various positions, with ever increasing responsibility, until at the time he left he was designer and assistant superintendent. In June, 1897, Mr. Bottomley came to Rockville to take the position of designer in the American mill, and in March, 1900, he entered the Hockanum mill there in the same capacity. Since August, 1900, he has been superintendent at the New England mill, where he has now the respect of the employees and the highest esteem and confidence of the owners. Mr. Bottomley is a staunch Republican in political faith, and votes regularly, though he has never taken any active interest in party matters.

On Jan. 20, 1897, Mr. Bottomley was married to Miss Lucy M. Pickering, of Camden, N. J., who was born in Manchester, England, and was but four years old when brought to America by her parents, Jonathan and Eliza Maria (Thomas) Pickering. Mr. and Mrs. Bottomley have had one child, Margaret, born Sept. 22, 1898. They attend the Union Congregational Church at Rockville, and are highly esteemed in that body as well as in the best social circles of that place, where they are ever welcome.

ARTHUR SCOTT, for a number of years identified with the business interests of Danielson, Windham Co., Conn., is now giving his attention largely, if not exclusively, to work as a photographer.

William Scott, the father of Arthur, was a native of Fifeshire, Scotland, and when a young man made his home in Carlisle, England, where he married Margaret Smith. Having mastered the trade of a machinist, he followed that until November, 1872, when the family left England, and coming to America, located at Providence, R. I., where William Scott is still engaged as a machinist.

Arthur Scott, one of the thirteen children born to his parents, of whom five are now living, was born in Carlisle, England, Feb. 9, 1868, and was about four years old when his parents removed their family to this country. His education was secured in the city schools of Providence, and from school he entered the Gorham Manufacturing Company, and later a tailoring establishment to become a cutter. For a time he followed this trade in Providence and Boston, and in 1891 came to Danielson to enter the employ of E. W. Hayward, with whom he remained two years, when he bought out Mr. Hayward. For five years he was engaged as a merchant tailor, when he sold out to William J. Craig, who is still in business. Mr. Scott was very successful, and at times employed as many as eight hands in his shop.

Mr. Scott has a well deserved reputation as a teacher of dancing, and has won for himself a large and well pleased patronage in this line.

Mr. Scott, like many others, has devoted his leisure hours to photography, and his interest in the art has become so overmastering that he has made it his main business. Recently he erected a gallery in the rear of his home on Broad street, and as a photographer, makes quality, and not quantity, his aim. He does not care to turn out much work, but what he does he wishes to be worthy of preservation. Mr. Scott built his elegant home on Broad street in 1895, and it is counted one of the finest houses in the borough.

Mr. Scott was married in Providence, R. I., to Bertha S., a daughter of Hon. Thomas and Pauline (Kellogg) Davis. To this union were born: Walton Bremner, Jan. 7, 1896; Robert Davis, Oct. 6, 1897.

Mr. Scott is a Republican, and belongs to Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., at Danielson.

E. O. WINSHIP, M. D., of Rockville, Toland county, was born Dec. 19, 1875, in Danby, Vt., and comes of an old family of that State, where his ancestors have resided for several generations back.

Dr. Winship was reared in the place of his birth, attended school there, and as a boy worked on the farm, in the lumber woods, in a factory, in fact, anywhere he could obtain employment, his time when not at school being of necessity occupied with some kind of work. At school he was studious and ambitious to learn, and well advanced for one of his years. After finishing at the local school, he entered the Burr and Burton Seminary, at Manchester, Vt., from which he graduated in the class of 1895. He then took up teaching, which he followed for two years, to acquire means for his college course. Entering the Medical Department of the University of Vermont, he was obliged after a short time, because of failing eyesight, to leave college, and again took up teaching, this time as principal of the grammar school in Manchester, Vt. After one year he returned to the Medical College and completed his course, graduating in the class of 1900, of which he was valedictorian. He then took up a post-graduate course at the Post-Graduate College and Hospital, New York, and Nov. 30, 1900, located in Rockville, where he has since remained.

E. O. Winship is as genuine a type of the strictly self-made young man as can be found anywhere. Beginning life on his own resources, his most valuable assets being his ambition and energy, he has already secured a position in his profession for which many of its members work a life time. Dr. Winship had the benefit of excellent home training, as his family were people of eminent respectability, and the results are very evident. He worked his way through college, defraying every expense himself by working or teaching during vacations. Coming to Rockville an entire stranger, and also with the draw-back that youth often proves in his profession, he has succeeded in building up a practice that is rapidly growing, and such a one as might be the pride of any physician, as it comes from many of the best families of Rockville. Personally Dr. Winship's gentlemanly bearing and evidence of refinement have won for him a high position in society. He is a physician who lends dignity to his profession. Not in the history of the city has a young physician come in an entire stranger and so rapidly worked his way to the front. The Doctor is a Congregationalist, and member of the choir of the First Congregational Church at Rockville. Fraternally he affiliates with the Foresters and the Modern Woodmen of America, both at Rockville, and professionally he holds membership in the Vermont State Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society, and the Tolland County Medical Society. He is a member of Delta Chapter, of A. K. K., at Burlington, Vt. His political sympathies are with the Republican party.

Dr. Winship was married Dec. 3, 1903, to Miss Bessie Morgan, granddaughter of the late Col. Morgan, of Glens Falls, New York.

WILBUR N. HILLS, an enterprising farmer of Gilead in the town of Hebron, Tolland county, was born Feb. 10, 1865, in Gilead, a son of George H. and Laura J. (Warren) Hills.

George H. Hills was born Aug. 24, 1835, in Gilead, and was reared upon the farm, working for the farmers in the vicinity as well as upon his father's property. Among the men by whom he was employed during his boyhood were Seth Dickinson and Leonard Hale, the latter residing on John Tom Hill, in the town of Glastonbury. After he attained his majority, the father learned the trade of butchering, and worked in Gilead till 1870, when he went to Meriden, Conn., for three years; he then returned to Gilead and worked at his trade till 1876, when he moved to Manchester, Conn., working for about a year upon a farm. About this time he returned to Gilead, where he now resides, engaged in farming and butchering, although the latter calling engages the greater portion of his time, as he is an expert in his line, and his skill is widely known.

On May 28, 1860, the marriage of George H. Hills occurred in East Hartford, Mrs. Hills being a daughter of Nathaniel and Sarah (Bidwell) Warren. Of their children, (1) Lucy E., born May 12, 1862, is the wife of Charles Milton, a machinist of Hartford, and has five children: Raymond C., born April 14, 1886; Retha E., Aug. 17, 1890; Howard I., May 10, 1893; Inez, Feb. 25, 1896; Charles Leslie, March 3, 1900. (2) Wilbur N. (3) Ellen M., born Nov. 16, 1869, is wife of Carlton B. Jones, of Hebron, a mechanic, and has four children: Claude W., born June 17, 1894; George Merle, Sept. 20, 1896; Elsie M., Jan. 8, 1899; Carlton H., Aug. 24, 1901. (4) Merton W., born April 20, 1879, married Dec. 10, 1902, Vera B. Jones, born Oct. 6, 1879, daughter of Dan and Olive (Hoadley) Jones.

Wilbur N. Hills attended the common school in Meriden, Conn., during the residence of his parents there, and when they went to Gilead, he went to the district school of that locality until he was seventeen. His summers were spent at farm work upon his father's farm. Remaining at home until he was twenty-one, he then engaged with William S. Ellis, of Gilead, for a year at farm work, but returned to his father's farm and remained until his marriage. At that time, 1890, he rented a small farm on Gilead street, which he farmed on a small scale, and also worked by the day, remaining there for two years. Then he rented the William H. Norton farm in the north part of Gilead and worked that farm, still continuing to hire out by the day. In 1895, by hard work, he had accumulated sufficient to purchase his present farm, known as the Charles H. Brown place, a tract then consisting of 100 acres, but Mr. Hills has added to the original farm and now has a fine property of 140 acres, which he is constantly improving, and there carries on general farming, dairying and stock raising, and also deals extensively in grain and feed, this latter line having been established in 1897. The house he occupies is a large, old-fashioned residence which was built previous to the Revolution, and the farm had been in the possession of the Brown family for many generations before it came into the hands of Mr. Hills.

Mr. Hills was married April 17, 1890, to Annie A. Post, born Aug. 28, 1868, a native of Hebron and daughter of Abel and Sarah A. (Rollo) Post. The Post family is one of the oldest of Hebron. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hills, Ethel L., Aug. 6, 1897, a bright, attractive little girl.

Like his father, Mr. Hills is a staunch Democrat, and has served on the board of assessors in 1895-96 and 1899; he has also served on the board of relief in 1898 and 1900. He attends Gilead Congregational Church, of which he is a liberal supporter.

Mr. Hills descends on his mother's side from Richard Warren, who came to America in the historic "Mayflower." The first Warren house stood in Silver Lane (in East Hartford), so called by the French soldiers, who camped there at the time of the Revolutionary war, and who, it is said, stored their money in one of the rooms of the Warren house. The first of the name to settle in East Hartford, where the family is numbered among the oldest, was William Warren, who married Mary Andrews, and settled in that locality in 1664.

Ashbel Warren, great-grandfather of Mr. Hills on the maternal side, married Penelope Pratt, whose mother's name was Margaret Ely, and to them were born seven children: Ashbel, who married Abigail Hayes; William Ely, killed by lightning in 1804, when still a young man; Harriet, married to a Mr. Camp; Sarah, deceased unmarried; Nathaniel, grandfather of Mr. Hills; Frederick, who went South; Margaret, who married James Colier.

Nathaniel Warren, the grandfather, was born Aug. 13, 1797, and Aug. 20, 1820, married Sarah Bidwell, who was born June 8, 1800. By calling a farmer, he resided at the Warren homestead, Silver Lane, East Hartford, where he died May 13, 1877, and his widow died July 13, 1878. To him and his wife were born: Harriet F., Jan. 16, 1821, who married Watson Hayes, and lived in South Windsor; Lucius H., March 20, 1823, who married Abby Miner, and was a resident of Milford at the time of his death; William Ely, June 17, 1825, who married Louisa (Gillett) Hills, widow of Sherman Hills, and lived in East Hartford; George Austin, Oct. 27, 1827, who married Almira Risley, was a successful farmer, and resided in East Hartford on the old homestead, where he died Sept. 6, 1898; Emily A., July 5, 1830, who married Edwin Miner and lived in Gilead; Leverett D., Dec. 12, 1832, who married Mary Wheeler and lived in Bridgeport; Alfred Newton, Aug. 8, 1835, who married Ann Eliza Stowe, and lived in Dunlap, Iowa; Laura Jane, April 21, 1838, mother of Mr. Hills; Frederick R., Dec. 5, 1840, who married Amelia Milton, and lives in Silver Lane.

Mr. Hills is accounted one of the rising young men of the town, and the success which has attended his lifework is certainly the result of his own efforts. Commencing in life with nothing but his own willing hands, a brave heart and the ability to grasp opportunities whenever presented, he has added little by little to his possessions, until he is now in comfortable circumstances, and stands high in the community.

AUGUST LAUBSCHER, superintendent and assistant to the manager of the P. P. Kellogg & Co. division of the U. S. Envelope Co., at Springfield, Mass., is a native of Rockville, Tolland county, having been born in that city March 26, 1866, a son of Abraham and Katharine (Yost) Laubscher.

During his boyhood days Mr. Laubscher attended the excellent schools of Rockville, standing at the head of his classes, and giving to his studies that persevering attention which later was to make of him one of Rockville's leading business men. Before he was thirteen he entered the high school, and for two years, notwithstanding his youth, lead in all his studies. At this time his school life ended, and he entered the employ of his father, keeping the books and serving in other clerical capacities.

While still in school, Mr. Laubscher amused himself during his leisure hours with a small printing press, becoming quite proficient in its manipulation. In the spring of 1882 he entered the employ of White, Corbin & Co., at Rockville, envelope manufacturers and printers, serving this firm four years faithfully, finally rising to the position of foreman. His next venture was as foreman of the Rockville Journal, and there he remained until he entered the employ of the Morgan Envelope Company, at Springfield, Mass., in February, 1889, as overseer of that establishment, a position of great responsibility, requiring skill and experience. In November, 1893, Mr. Laubscher left this desirable position, to accept a still more responsible one, as manager of the Phoenix Printing Company, at Springfield, Mass., where he remained until September, 1895, when the P. P. Kellogg & Co. division of the United States Envelope Company secured his services.

On April 25, 1889, Mr. Laubscher was married in Rockville to Miss Adelaide Eliza Rix, a native of Montville, Conn., a daughter of James and Martha (Keeney) Rix.

By close attention to the details of his business, Mr. Laubscher has risen steadily to his present position, from his boyhood inspiring confidence and respect, and the success which has attended his efforts is due to his own ability, industry and conscientious performance of his duty.

STEPHEN P. BROWN, a successful farmer and dairyman of Mansfield, Tolland county, has descended from one of the first settlers of Windham and the family has been a very numerous one in years past. The street leading from Willimantic cemetery to Perkins' Corner in Mansfield, was formerly called Brown street on account of the numerous residents of that name residing on it.

(1) John Brown, the first settler of this family in America, was a very distinguished man in his day. Stephen Brown, the Willimantic settler, was a grandson of Major John Mason, of Norwich, the hero of the Pequot war. The first conveyance of any of the land given by Joshua to the Norwich legatees was by Samuel Mason to his brother-in-law, Capt. John Brown, March 2, 1677, when he gave to him a 1000 acre right on which Stephen, the son of Capt. Brown, settled. A part of this land, embracing the home farm or at least a considerable portion of it, is now owned by Elias P. Brown's children, and has remained continuously in the possession of the Brown family for 226 years, and during six generations.

John Brown was acquainted with the Pilgrims at Leyden before 1620, but the year of his coming to this country is unknown. He settled in Plymouth Colony, was at Duxbury in 1636 and was an original proprietor and early settler of Rehoboth. The following notice is made of him in Morton's "New England Memorial:" "In his younger years traveling into the low countries, he came acquainted with and took good liking to the revered pastor of the Church of Christ, at Leyden, as also to sundry of the brethren of that Church; which ancient amity induced him (upon his coming over to New England) to seat himself in the jurisdiction of New Plymouth, in which place he served God and the country, several years, he was well accomplished with abilities to both civil and religious concerns and attained through God's grace, unto a comfortable persuasion of the love and favor of God to him; he falling sick of a fever, with much serenity and spiritual comfort, fell asleep in the Lord, and was honorably buried in Wannamoisett, near Rehoboth." Bliss, in his "History of Rehoboth," says: "He was first elected to the office of assistant in Plymouth Colony, in 1636, which office he ably filled for seventeen years. He was also one of the Commissioners of the United Colonies of New England from 1644 to 1655."

John Brown was one of the original proprietors of the town and owned large estates in land located both in Rehoboth and at Wannamoisett. He was a friend to religious toleration, and was the first of the Plymouth magistrates to express scruples as to the expediency of coercing the people to support the ministry. He was a man of talent, piety and integrity, and his death was deeply felt throughout the whole colony. He had at least the following children, all born in England: James, who married Lydia Howland, was an assistant of the colony in 1665, and died at Swansea, Oct. 29, 1710, aged eighty-seven years; Mary, who married John Willett, July 6, 1636; and John, Jr.

(II) John Brown (2), son of John the immigrant, was probably born in England and married a daughter of William Buckland, dying March 31, 1662. These were his children: John (3), born in September, 1650; Lydia, Aug. 6, 1655; Annah, Jan. 29, 1657; Joseph, April 9, 1658; and Nathaniel, June 9, 1661.

(III) Capt. John Brown of the above family seems to have been held in high esteem by his Mason relatives and the Mohegan Indians. Samuel Mason gave to him 1000 acres of land in 1677, a dozen years before the settlement of Windham, Conn., by Cates, said land being situated on the Willimantic river, extending north from Willimantic cemetery to Perkins' Corners; and in the deed of gift to Capt. Brown by Oweneco in 1689, the captain was highly spoken of and his military powers hinted at. As he lived in the times and among the stirring scenes of King Philip's war, it is quite probable that he saw active service in that struggle, in which Oweneco and the Masons participated. It would seem that much effort was made to induce Capt. Brown to settle in Windham, but without avail. The exact date of his death is not found, but it was previous to 1711, although probably not long before. The home farm of Capt. John Brown was laid out on Willimantic river, in April, 1706, as follows: "abutting south-west one hundred and fifty rod, the west corner a stake against the mouth of Hop river; the south corner is a double whit oak; abutting south-east on Mr. James Allyn lot; one hundred and sixty-four rod the east corner being a whit oak bush on the plain; abutting north-east on the Commons one hundred fifty rod; the north corner being a whit oak abutting north-west on Commons and addition land of Capt. Brown a hundred and sixty-four rod; which addition land abutted on the river seventy-two rods then an easterly line eighty rods to meet with the line of the first lot; the lot with the addition contains one hundred and sixty acres besides allowance for a highway." The home lot was laid out in the crotch of the river, Dec. 26, 1699, and the home farm added as above.

Capt. Brown married Anna Mason, a daughter of Major John Mason, of Norwich, Nov. 8, 1672, and these children were born: John, April 28, 1675, who married Abigail Cole, July 2, 1696, and died in 1752; Lydia, who was married March 16, 1697, to Joseph Wadsworth, of Lebanon, Conn., and died Dec. 27, 1759; Martha, Nov. 20, 1681, who married Deacon Eleazer Fitch, her cousin; Daniel, in October, 1683, who died in infancy; Ebenezer, June 15, 1685, who married Sarah Hyde, Feb. 25, 1714; Daniel (2), Sept. 26, 1686; Stephen, Jan. 29, 1688, who settled at Windham near the Willimantic river; and Joseph, May 19, 1690.

(IV) Stephen Brown, son of Capt. John, settled at Windham before 1720. Tradition makes him a man of courage and determination, with a good degree of the Mason blood and spirit. He took part in the famous "Hartford Riot," in 1722, in which Jeremiah Fitch, his cousin, of Coventry, was liberated from the jail where he was imprisoned on account of some decision respecting the Hop river lands. He married first Mary Risley, in June, 1729, who died April 2, 1730, and then he married Abigail, the daughter of Thomas Rugg, March 4, 1731, and she died in November, 1731; his third marriage was to Mary Jacobs, of Mansfield, in November, 1734, his death occurring in October, 1766. The only child of the first marriage was Stephen, Jr. By his second marriage was born Abigail, Nov. 2, 1731, who married George Anderson, of Mansfield. By his third marriage were born: Mary, April 18, 1738; and John, June 18, 1742.

(V) Stephen Brown (2), son of Stephen, was the great-grandfather of Stephen P., and was married Dec. 3, 1760, to Mary, daughter of Nathaniel Shattuck, these children resulting from the union: Eunice, Lucinda, Hannah, Joseph H., Stephen, Ambrose, Jerome, Elijah, Mary and Annis.

(VI) Joseph Hill Brown resided in the town of Windham and followed a farming life all his days. Later he moved to the farm now occupied by his grandson, and spent his last years in the home of his son, Henry Brown. His wife was Martha Barrows, of Mansfield, and they had these children: Fanny; Washington, a farmer who located in Rockville, where he died; Almira, who married Lemuel Palmer; Henry; Joseph Hill, Jr., who married Nancy Lyman, was a farmer in Mansfield, and later moved to Rockville, where he died; Martha, who died a maiden lady; and Elijah Nelson, who married Clarissa Campbell, was a farmer and resided in Mansfield, Ashford and later in Willimantic, where he died.

(VII) Henry Brown, the father of Stephen P., was born in December, 1797, in Windham, near the Mansfield town line, where he grew to manhood. As a young man he worked out and later owned the property occupied by the Windham town farm; he also owned a lot, which he sold to the town of Windham, and which is now used as a burying-ground, at Willimantic. In April, 1831, he sold his farm there and removed to Mansfield, where he purchased of a Mr. Hovey the farm now owned by his son Stephen, where he continued farming until his death. He erected the present family home and lived until June, 1890, reaching the advanced age of ninety-two years, still being remarkably active up to the time of his death, and doing light work on the farm. A life-long Republican, he always advocated the views of that party, but never accepted office. In the Congregational Church he was active and was valued as a man of probity and Christian character. Mr. Brown was married four times, first to Mary Geer in 1823; second to Mrs. Cushman in 1832; third to Fanny Porter Storrs in 1856; and fourth, in 1869, to Mrs. Mary E. (Stearns) Tilden, who had been twice married previously, first to a Mr. Marsh and then to Mr. Tilden. A child of his second marriage was born in 1834, Mary E., who died in 1840. The children of the third marriage, that with Fanny Porter Storrs, born Oct. 21, 1818, a native of Mansfield, and a daughter of Experience and Sophia (Arnold) Storrs, were: Julia A., born Nov. 2, 1856, who was unmarried and resided with our subject until her death, Sept. 23, 1901; Henry S., born Jan. 24, 1860; and Stephen P. Henry S. Brown is now assisting our subject in his farming operations. He has always been engaged in farming in Mansfield and for nine years from 1887 to 1896, he owned one of the neighboring farms. In his politics he is a Republican, and is a member of Elmwood Lodge, No. 47, A. O. U. W.; he is a member of the Mansfield Congregational Church, in which he has for many years been a deacon and clerk of the church. He was married Oct. 20, 1887, to Addie E., the daughter of Deacon James J. Slate, born Dec. 1, 1863, who died Nov. 7, 1900, and since that sad time he has resided with his brother.

(VIII) Stephen P. Brown was born Aug. 10, 1862, in the house he now occupies, was educated in the district schools, assisted his father, cared for him in old age, and after his death bought the interests of the other heirs, and now owns a farm of 200 acres, which he has improved and made one of the most valuable in the town. In connection with his farming interests, he carries on a successful milk business, beginning his dairying in 1891, and now has one of the best in Willimantic. His political sympathies make him a Republican, although not an office-seeker, and he is a member socially of Elmwood Lodge, No. 47, A. O. U. W. In the Mansfield Congregational Church he has faithfully served as treasurer, and liberally supports all of its charities.

Mr. Brown was married Oct. 19, 1899, to Alice E. Mason, of Mansfield, a daughter of Charles J. and Cordelia (Browning) Mason, who is a direct descendant of Major John Mason, of Norwich, before mentioned. One son, Harry Mason, has been born to this union, born March 3, 1901. No more industrious, respected and enterprising farmers find a home in Mansfield than Henry and Stephen Brown, fit representatives of an honorable family.

G. PERCIVAL BARD, M. D. Seldom will it be found in any locality, when a young physician comes in an entire stranger, that in a short time he is able to build up not only a large practice, but one which includes so many of the best families. Such results at once suggest an unusual degree of professional skill, as well as a pleasing personality. Dr. Bard is a native of Norwich, Conn., born June 9, 1872, and he comes from a prominent family of that city.

The remote ancestry, no doubt, were of old Knickerbocker stock. John Bard, the great-grandfather of Dr. Bard, was born June 13, 1778, in Sharon, Conn., whither the family removed from the Hudson River country in York State. The Bard family is scattered over various sections of the country and no doubt all spring from the same Knickerbocker ancestry. In New England the family have been especially prominent in the line of manufacturing jewelers. The firm of Mabie, Todd & Bard, the leading gold pen manufacturers of the world, has for a member J. Sprague Bard, our subject's great-uncle, now a retired manufacturer of Brooklyn, Connecticut.

John Bard, the great-grandfather, learned the trade of jeweler when but a young man, and followed it during the greater part of his active life. For a short period during the war of 1812, he was engaged in the hotel business at Windham Center, Conn. He lived for a short time in the towns of Scotland and Canterbury, Conn., locating in Brooklyn in 1836. There he carried on a jewelry business through many years, moving for a few years to New York City, but when business cares no longer interested him he returned to Brooklyn, where he lived in retirement for some twelve years. He died June 21, 1866, and was buried in Brooklyn cemetery. His wife, Mary Foster, was born July 18, 1777, in Canterbury, Conn., daughter of William Durkee Foster, who was a Revolutionary soldier. To John Bard and his wife were born children as follows: Sophronia, who married Samuel Robbins, a merchant, and died in Fairlee, Kent Co., Md.; George J., a gold pen manufacturer, who died in Brooklyn, mentioned below; James D.; Edmund H., who resides in New York, and although over eighty-three is an active music teacher; John, Jr., who lives retired in Providence, R. I., formerly a gold pen manufacturer; J. Sprague, a retired manufacturer of gold pens, who resides in Brooklyn, Conn.; Charles, the president of the Norwich Savings Society, of Norwich; Mary F., the widow of Howard Meeks, a clergyman of the M. E. Church of Fairlee, Md., who had two children that died in infancy.

George J. Bard, the second in the family of John, was for many years engaged in the manufacture of gold pens, and he died in Brooklyn, Conn. He married Emily D. Hawkes, and became the father of George F. Bard.

George F. Bard, the father of Dr. Bard, was for a number of years in the plumbing, brass-founding, and coppersmith business, and is at present a resident of Norwich. He married Miss Minerva Place, of New York. He is a thirty-second degree Mason. For a number of years he was a director in the Merchants' National Bank, and he is one of the best known men of Norwich.

Dr. G. Percival Bard received his education in his native city, and graduated from the Norwich Free Academy. He then became a clerk in the First National Bank of Norwich, remaining for a few years, when he determined to enter the professional world, and began the study of medicine under Dr. Edward H. Linnell, of Norwich. He graduated from the New York Homeopathic College, and Flower Hospital, class of 1900. He served as interne in the Homeopathic Hospital of Rochester, New York, and later took up the regular practice of his profession in Norwich. In May, 1902, he located in Stafford Springs, where he has one of the most desirable and rapidly increasing practices in that town.

Dr. Bard is a Republican in political preference; and socially he is a member of Ionic Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Stafford Springs. He is a member of the Connecticut Homeopathic Medical Society, New York County Homeopathic Medical Society, New York Homeopathic Medical Society, and the American Institute of Homeopathy.

EMORY J. COOPER is the agent of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad at Ellington station, and sustains a reputation as a capable, trustworthy and efficient representative of his company in every respect.

John Cooper, the father of Emory J., was born in Leeds, England, where he resided until he reached the age of sixteen years. His father was a manufacturer of woolen goods, and John was early put to work in the factory. His educational advantages were limited, and he was reared to hard work. He learned the trade of a cloth dresser, and when he was sixteen years old came to the United States, landing at Boston; he made his way to Southbridge, Mass., where he was employed in the Hamilton mills, being among the first cloth dressers to come to this country. Commanding good wages and proving thoroughly reliable, he was retained by the Hamilton mills for several years, and then was engaged in the Woodstock mills, in Woodstock, Conn., becoming proprietor there in company with a Mr. Kenyon, under the firm name of Kenyon & Cooper. The tariff on woolen goods being taken off in 1842, the business was crippled, and the firm met with such reverses that they determined to close the mills.

John Cooper had a deeply religious turn of mind, and from a young man had made the study of the Bible a regular pursuit. Eventually he became a minister of the Methodist church, and was a popular pastor at Marlborough, Willimantic, Mystic, Uncasville, Manchester, Norwich, Nantucket Island, New Bedford, East Weymouth, Provincetown, Hockanum, Moorehouse Point and Centerville, towns and cities in Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. For some years he was engaged in supplying vacant pulpits, and worked very busily in his calling as long as his health permitted. His death occurred Oct. 18, 1878, while he was supplying Haddam Neck, though living in Hartford. A Whig in early life, he later became a Republican.

John Cooper was married Oct. 3, 1841, to Miss Abby M. Carpenter in Woodstock, Conn. Mrs. Cooper was born in Woodstock, April 4, 1826, and is a daughter of Alfred and Betsy (Huntington) Carpenter. Mrs. Carpenter is still living, and makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. John Cooper.

To John Cooper and his wife came the following children: (1) Sarah, born Aug. 3, 1842, who died Dec. 10, 1856; (2) Elizabeth C., born Feb. 20, 1845, who is the widow of Mr. Cook, and resides in Minneapolis; (3) John A., born Aug. 26, 1847, who married Elizabeth Cook, and is a clerk in the employ of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, at Hartford; (4) Francis W., born Nov. 9, 1849, who has had two wives, Harriet J. Parker and Lottie M. Bentley, and is now residing at New Rochelle, N. J., with his children, Lottie and Frank; (5) Charles Wesley, born Oct. 10, 1851, who died in August, 1858; (6) Mary A., born Dec. 24, 1854, who married Silas B. Wheeler, and lives in Mystic, Conn.; (7) George H., born Jan. 16, 1857; (8) Charles Wesley, born Jan. 8, 1859, who married Ernestine Spencer, and is engaged in the insurance business in Hartford; (9) Rufus T., born Feb. 15, 1861, a graduate of the Hartford high school and Greenwich Academy, and valedictorian of his class at the Wesleyan University, at Middletown, who prepared for the ministry at Drew Theological Seminary, and is now a clergyman in the New York Methodist Conference, married, and the father of two children, Ruth and Wesley; (10) Edwin Thomas, born March 3, 1863, a tool maker in Brooklyn, who married Alice Cook, and has two children, Edward and Herbert; (11) Sarah C., born April 26, 1865, the wife of Frank Beardsey, of Enfield, Conn.; (12) Arthur C., born May 9, 1867, who died in 1897, unmarried; (13) Emory J.

Emory J. Cooper was born June 10, 1870, while his father was located at Mystic, Conn. His parents removed to Hartford, where he attended the city schools, and when his father died, the family located at Warehouse Point, where young Emory completed his schooling, and applied himself to work at the age of sixteen years, undertaking the machinist trade in the factory of the Spencer Arms Company. For two years he was employed there, when the company went out of business, and at the same time Mrs. John Cooper removed to Middletown, where young Emory attended the high school for a short time. Later he was employed by the Western Electric Company in the city of New York, remaining with that house for three years; he was with the Arbuckle Coffee Works for a year; two years later he was employed by the railroad as relief agent, and in July, 1899, was appointed agent at Ellington.

Emory J. Cooper and Lura Davis were married at Newington, Conn., Nov. 10, 1898. Mrs. Cooper was born in Newington, and is the mother of one child, Emory James, Jr., born Sept. 21, 1899. Mr. Cooper is a Republican, and is a popular character with the traveling and commercial public. An energetic and capable man, he is specially successful in his business, and stands high in the favor of the officials of the company.

Mr. Cooper's maternal ancestry is closely intertwined with old colonial narratives. (I) William Carpenter, the first American ancestor of Mrs. John Cooper, was born in 1605 in England, and with his wife, Abigail, came to New England in the ship, "Bevis." Made a freeman at Weymouth, Mass., in 1640, he was a deputy to the General Court from that town in 1641 and 1643. He became a freeman of the town of Rehoboth in 1645, and the same year was chosen as its deputy in the General Court. In 1659 he died, and his widow in 1687.

(II) Joseph Carpenter, the son of William, was born in England in 1633, married Margaret, the daughter of John Sutton, in 1655, and died in 1675, his widow surviving until 1700.

(III) Benjamin Carpenter, son of Joseph, was born in 1658 in Rehoboth, Mass., and was married to his wife, Renew Weeks, in 1679. She was born in Dorchester, Mass., and was a daughter of William Weeks, of that place. Mr. Carpenter died in 1727.

(IV) Benjamin Carpenter (2), son of Benjamin, was born in 1680 in Swansea, Mass., was married in 1706 to Mary Barney, and moved with her to Ashford, Conn., about 1733. He lived and died a farmer.

(V) Uriah Carpenter, son of the foregoing, Benjamin (2), was born in 1711 in Swansea, Mass., married Sarah Hayward in 1733, and the following year purchased land in Ashford. When he died in 1762, he was in the service of the government at Havana, Cuba. After his death his widow was again married, to a Mr. Eaton, by whom she became the mother of Maj. Gen. Eaton, afterward famous in the siege of Tripoli, and consul to Algiers in 1811.

(VI) Hezekiah Carpenter, son of Uriah, was born about 1736 in Ashford, married Joanna Aldrich in 1759, and his residence is given as Johnston, R. I. He was a soldier in the American Revolution, and his death occurred about 1820. For some years before his demise he was in Havana, Cuba.

(VII) Uriah Carpenter, the son of Hezekiah, and the great-grandfather of Emory J. Cooper, was born in Ashford in 1762, married Elizabeth Briggs in 1785, a native of Taunton, where she was born in 1767. They lived in Ashford and in Woodstock, Conn. Mr. Carpenter was a farmer and fought in the Continental army as a member of Capt. John Williams' company of Col. Johnson's regiment. During the cold winter of the Revolutionary war he was in service on Staten Island. He died Jan. 3, 1816, and his widow, Feb. 23, 1853.

(VIII) Alfred Carpenter, the grandfather of Emory J. Cooper, and the son of Uriah Carpenter (2), was born Nov. 27, 1789, and was married Nov. 27, 1821, to Betsy Huntington, born in 1795, and a daughter of Shubael and Mary (Thatcher) Huntington, of Woodstock. Mr. Carpenter was a farmer and died Sept. 11, 1872. His widow lived until June 27, 1880, having had only one child, who became the mother of Emory J. Cooper.

T. F. O'LAUGHLIN, M. D. Not frequently does it occur that a college graduate can immediately step from his Alma Mater into the confidence and esteem of a strange city, without backing and with only the introduction which his own ability gives, and at the same time secure a really enviable position as a citizen, but such has been the case with T. F. O'Laughlin, M. D.

Dr. O'Laughlin was born in Willimantic, Windham county, Conn., Aug. 27, 1872, a son of Ross and Hannah (Kelleher) O'Laughlin, who had come to America in their youth and have resided in Willimantic for many years, Mr. O'Laughlin being a merchant of that place. Five children were born in this family: Mary, Mrs. Thomas Henry, of Willimantic; John J., a resident of Hartford; our subject; Theresa, a milliner of Willimantic; and Annie, a student at Smith College, class of 1904.

Dr. O'Laughlin was reared in his native city and passed through the public schools, graduating from the Willimantic high school in the class of 1890, and then entered upon the study of law in the office of James T. Lynch, where he continued one year. Active, alert, ambitious and progressive, and having natural qualifications for newspaper work, he decided to adopt that as a profession, and became first reporter and then city editor of the Willimantic Daily Chronicle. In connection with these duties he also became the correspondent of the metropolitan dailies, and later purchased the Willimantic Daily Herald, all before he was twenty years old.

Not content with the field thus afforded in newspaper circles, the Doctor resigned this, and in the fall of 1892 entered the medical department of the New York University, from which he graduated in the class of 1896, coming immediately to Rockville, where he opened an office on St. Bernard's Terrace, where he has since resided. The success which has attended the practice of Dr. O'Laughlin has been remarkable and his position is already among the foremost practitioners of Tolland county.

Dr. O'Laughlin is connected with Almirante Council, Knights of Columbus, of New York; is a member of and medical examiner for Loom City Tent of the Maccabees, at Rockville; also of Court Snipsic, Foresters of America; member of the board of school visitors; member of the high school committee; and on Feb. 28, 1898, the common council unanimously elected him health officer, which position he holds at the present time, receiving the position from a strong Republican board.

Dr. O'Laughlin is a Democrat but not a strong partisan, and was the alternate to the national convention at St. Louis in 1900 and was a delegate to the Democratic State gubernatorial convention at Bridgeport in 1898. In the spring of 1901 he was honored by an election to the position of president of the Tolland County Medical Society, being the youngest man who ever held the office. Dr. O'Laughlin is a member of both the State and the American Medical organizations where he receives the just meed of praise from his brother physicians, who treat the young Esculapius with confidence and esteem.

In manner Dr. O'Laughlin is winning, his tastes are scholarly and simple, although he has the quick wit and cheerful good nature which mark his ancestry. Already his friends are legion and his grateful patients among the most exacting in the community.

GEORGE H. CHAMPLIN, one of the active young farmers of the town of Columbia, Tolland county, descends from an old Lebanon family, of whom the first trace is found in the person of Grandfather Thomas Champlin, born in Lebanon, Conn., where he died at the age of eighty. His wife's maiden name was Elizabeth Perry, also of Lebanon, and she died in Columbia at the age of eighty-three. The grandfather was a farmer and a very highly respected man. To him and his wife were born: John, who died in Hopkinton City, R. I.; Elijah, who died in Hopkinton City, R. I.; Abbie, who married a Mr. Loomis and died at Norwich, Conn.; Maria, who married Andrew Phelps and resided at Andover, Conn.; Henry.

Henry Champlin, father of George H., was born at Lebanon, Conn., in 1848, and died in Columbia, Nov. 26, 1899; he was married in Lebanon to Maryetta Dingley. Soon after marriage he came to Columbia and purchased a farm on Pine street, where he engaged in farming, and was quite successful.

George Henry Champlin was the only child of his parents and was born in Columbia, Nov. 6, 1870, and after attending the Pine street school, he received one term's instruction at the Willimantic high school. During his boyhood days he learned to farm upon his father's property, and with the exception of a year spent upon the railroad at South Manchester, he has devoted his energies to the development and improvement of his farm, gives special attention to dairying and fruit growing and sells his product to the Rathburn Creamery Co., of Hebron. Like his father before him, he is a Democrat and has held various local offices, having been a member of the board of selectmen, also assessor one term. Both he and his excellent wife are consistent members of the Columbia Congregational Church. Socially he is a member of the A. O. U. W. of Hebron, Conn.

On Dec. 3, 1891, Mr. Champlin was married to Julia Holbrook, a daughter of Justin Holbrook, and one child, a daughter, Theda, was born to them, Nov. 12, 1893.

The Holbrook ancestry is traced back to Grandfather John Holbrook, a native of Columbia, who spent his entire life there, dying in January, 1842, aged sixty-one. In Lebanon he was married to Betsy Kinnie, who died at the age of ninety-eight. John Holbrook lived on Pine street, just south of the schoolhouse, and his son, Justin, now lives across the street. The occupation of this worthy man was that of farmer and blacksmith. To him and his wife were born: Charles, deceased, a blacksmith, who married Laura Williams; Lathrop, deceased; Angeline, deceased, who married Septemus Loomer and lived in Columbia, Conn.; Cornelia, deceased, who married a Mr. Palmer and lived in Wapping, Conn., dying in Columbia; Justin, father of Mrs. Champlin, born May 14, 1823, who married a Miss Clarke; Charlotte, widow of Benjamin F. Strong, of Adrian, Mich.; George, deceased, who lived in Columbia, Conn., and married Lucinda Loomer.

To Justin Holbrook and his wife were born: Alice, wife of A. G. Turner, of Willimantic, Conn.; Alfred J., who married Sarah Standish, of Colchester; Julia, wife of Mr. Champlin; Jennie C., wife of Fred A. Hunt, of Columbia; William J., who married Julia Ransom, of Colchester, Connecticut.

JULIAN A. EUVRARD. The United States owes a large part of her population to the unrest in Europe, due mainly to the military exactions which the different governments on the continent resorted to during the nineteenth century. Time was when the ruling monarch, taking offence at some slight unfriendly action of his neighbor, ordered out his subjects to avenge the supposed insult. It is a tribute to the advancing civilization of the age that the days of such foolishness have passed. As stated before, however, while such conditions lasted, life for the poor peasant was frequently a burden, and he sought by every honorable means to escape taking up arms. This was frequently impossible, but the discovery of America and the opening up of new territory offered an avenue of escape to such as had the hardihood to cross the ocean and breast the storms of life in a wild and unsettled country. The gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph owes his citizenship in this "land of the Free" to the fact that his father left his native country of France at the commencement of the Franco-Prussian war, and, first removing to Switzerland, later came to this country.

Julian Euvrard is one of the enterprising young business men of Pomfret, Windham Co., Conn., where he conducts a plumbing business, and where he is fast establishing a reputation which bids fair to make him one of the leading business men of his community. He was born in the Canton of Berne, Switzerland, Oct. 18, 1872. He was the son of Charles Euvrard, who was a native of France, and lived near the boundary of Switzerland. Charles Euvrard learned the trade of watch-making, which he followed until the Franco-Prussian war in 1870. As before stated, not being in sympathy with that war, he left his native country and moved over into Switzerland, locating at Berne. There he followed his business until the year 1889, when he left for America, locating in New York, where several of his children had preceded him. He lived there until 1894, when he came with his son Julian to Pomfret, where he is at the present time located, spending his latter days in the peaceful pursuits of farming and gardening. He married in France Fredrique Ablitzer, who was also a native of France, but of German and Swiss descent; her father, Charles, was a soldier under the great Napoleon for eleven years. During this period, he was promoted to a first lieutenancy, and participated in the memorable Russian campaign, which was so disastrous to the "Man of Destiny." To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Euvrard eight children were born: Octavia, who married Henry Buensod, 15 Wall street, New York City; Edmund, of New York City; Lewis Auguste, of New York City; Julian A., the subject of this review; four other children are dead.

Julian A. Euvrard was given an excellent preliminary education in the public schools of Berne, Switzerland, and there he remained until the year after his father came to America; he landed in New York City in the year 1890. In New York he took up the study of plumbing in the New York Trade School, upon leaving which he worked at the plumbing and tin-smith business in the city until 1894, when he came to Pomfret, as before stated. He there bought the plumbing business of J. J. Dunn, and, purchasing a tract of land known as the William Robinson place, which his father oversees, he engaged in the plumbing business. His close application and the thorough workmanship that he insists on, both in his own work and that of his assistants, has resulted in bringing to him a very lucrative trade. He has each year added to his stock and the amount of work done, and bids fair to be the leading plumber in his section of the State. In social life he is a leading member of the A. F. & A. M., Putnam Lodge, of Woodstock, and in political faith supports the doctrines embraced in the platform of the Republican party. Religiously he and his family are consistent members of the Congregational Church. He married in New York City Victorine Bugnon, who was born in France and is a lady of much culture and refinement, a devoted wife, and a kind mother to her one child, Camille Josephine.

The success which Mr. Euvrard has attained in his short residence in Pomfret, and the high esteem in which he is held by all who have come in contact with his genial personality, auger exceedingly well for his future.

ARTHUR W. ANNIS, the superintendent of the Vernon Creamery, at Rockville, Tolland county, and a man of irreproachable business character and personal standing, descends from an old and well established family in Hartford county. His grandfather, William Annis, resided in Manchester, where he followed the carpenter trade. Three times married, he had a family of two sons and four daughters.

Bertram H. Annis, the father of Arthur W., was born in March, 1834, in Manchester, Conn., where he received his education in the local schools, and where at the age of sixteen years he was engaged in various pursuits. For a time he followed teaming, and was later engaged in the flour and feed business in Hartford. During the Civil war he was engaged in Colt's Factory at Hartford, and later was the proprietor of a grocery store at Tylerville, in the town of Haddam, Conn., but at present lives retired at Agawam, Massachusetts.

Mr. Annis and Miss Carrie Tucker, a daughter of Elias and Lucinda (Bates) Tucker, were married in Hartford. Mrs. Annis was a native of Haddam, and became the mother of the following children: Arthur W.; Addie, the wife of James H. Clark, of Agawam, Mass.; Edith, who married George Havens, now of Springfield, Mass.; Lucinda I., now Mrs. Edward Alexander, of Chester, Connecticut.

Arthur W. Annis was born in Hartford, Conn., Sept. 16, 1864, and remained under the parental roof there until he reached the age of twelve years, when the family removed to Haddam, taking young Arthur with them. He was given a good practical and business education, and at the age of sixteen years entered a grocery store in Middletown, where he spent two years. For a similar period he was in a store at Hartford, and for a third period of two years served as a clerk in a grocery at East Granby. Mr. Annis' next engagement was as assistant butter-maker in the East Granby creamery, where he remained two years, and then came to Haddam, where he opened the grocery store which was later carried on by his father. In May, 1889, he came to Rockville as butter-maker in the Vernon creamery, which had then been in operation about three months. For five years Mr. Annis was butter-maker, and in April, 1895, became superintendent of the creamery. From that day to the present time he has managed the business of the creamery very successfully, and is regarded as one of the most capable creamery men in the State. For the past two years Mr. Annis has been secretary and treasurer, for a time being assisted in these two offices by his wife, a most excellent and capable business woman.

Arthur W. Annis was married Dec. 6, 1893, to Mary Clark, a native of Agawam, Mass., and a daughter of Sumner and Martha (Hartwell) Clark. Jonas Clark, an uncle of Mrs. Annis, was the founder of Clark University. To Mr. and Mrs. Annis there has come one child, Carrie Pearl, who was born March 1, 1897.

In his political relations Mr. Annis takes an independent stand, though he usually affiliates with the Republican party. He attends the Congregational Church, and is a member of the Rising Sun Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Rockville. With his wife he belongs to the Order of Rebekahs.

The Vernon creamery is an institution of a high grade, its product being one which is not surpassed anywhere. At the Paris Exposition it received a silver medal for excellency.

CHARLES W. KENYON belongs to a family of successful agriculturists. His grandfather, Thomas S. Kenyon, born in Rhode Island, Feb. 18, 1796, followed farming throughout his mature life. Soon after his marriage he purchased a farm near the Stone Hill District, in Plainfield, Conn., where he followed his occupation extensively. He died July 5, 1869. By his wife, Mary P. Clarks, of Rhode Island, who was born Dec. 3, 1801, and died Jan. 8, 1864, he had three children: Anthony Bradford, mentioned below; Olive, born May 24, 1829, who married Henry Beebe, of Ellington, Conn., and died in 1900; Esther, born July 13, 1833, who married John Knowles, now deceased, of Ellington, Connecticut.

Anthony Bradford Kenyon, father of Charles W., was born April 12, 1825, in Plainfield, Conn., where he was reared to farm work, and continued to engage in agriculture on the home place, till about thirty years old. When a young man he married Jane E. Fairman, who was born April 10, 1831, daughter of I. P. Fairman, of Plainfield, Conn., and they had two children: Sarah A., born May 5, 1859, who married George E. Larkham, a well-to-do dairyman of Canterbury, and has had one child; Charles William, mentioned below.

In 1870 Mr. Kenyon purchased the Joseph Parks place in the Bradford District, Canterbury, Conn., and on this 112 acre farm he carried on a highly flourishing agricultural industry. He died Dec. 30, 1894, and his wife, Sept. 1, 1898. Both were esteemed members of the Sterling Hill Baptist Church. In politics Mr. Kenyon was a Democrat. His success in life was largely due to his energy and industry.

Charles William Kenyon was born in Canterbury, June 7, 1872. After attending the local district schools he went to Norwich and took a course in Snell's Business College, obtaining a thoroughly practical education. Then returning to the home place, which after the death of his father he inherited, he began farming. Jan. 14, 1896, he married Mabel W. Anthony, daughter of Caleb Anthony, of Scotland, Conn., and they have had two children: Harold Anthony, born March 25, 1898; and Earl Charles, Dec. 17, 1899.

On the large, well cultivated farm, Mr. Kenyon carries on general agriculture and dairying with marked success. As a Democrat he takes an active interest in local politics and has served three years as assessor. His family attend the Congregational Church. A man of marked ability and great capacity for work, he is highly esteemed.

EDWIN H. KEACH, one of the rising young men of Danielson, Windham county, has built up the leading business of his kind in the town, and has had only the help of his earnest and untiring disposition, his strong will and determined purpose. Beginning with no capital, he has made his way to a creditable position solely by his native ability and unwearied labors. Born in Providence, R. I., June 20, 1865, he is now in the prime of life.

Mr. Keach was brought to Connecticut when very young, and the family located on the Brooklyn side of the borough. His education was mainly secured in the East Brooklyn schools and the Danielson high school. For two years, while he was in attendance at the high school, he was employed as a clerk in the drug store of W. W. Woodward. Leaving school at the age of fourteen years, for the ensuing ten years he was employed as a clerk in the hardware store of W. O. Jacobs & Co., where he remained until the spring of 1891, when he purchased the business of George Jencks & Co., who had a stove and tinware trade, and carried a small stock of hardware. Mr. Keach had very little capital, and was compelled to run heavily into debt, but his heart was stout, and he accomplished what he determined. The firm became E. H. Keach & Co., but Mr. Keach quickly became the sole owner of the store.

The business prospered from the first, and at that time it needed the services of three employes. Mr. Keach increased the stock in all branches and added steam heating and plumbing, which has since become a very important branch of his trade. A large line of agricultural implements was also added, and he has secured a large trade in seeds. At the present time he has seven men in his employ.

Mr. Keach has at different times handled several very important heating and plumbing contracts, among them being the heating and plumbing of the new St. James Catholic Church at Danielson, and the Phoenix block. He had a large supply contract with the People's Tramway Company, when that line was under construction. In many of the factories of this section he has a good trade in furnishings and in repair work.

Mr. Keach was married Feb. 12, 1892, to Clara E. Lewis, of Providence, R. I., daughter of Luther and Phoebe A. Lewis.

Mr. Keach is a staunch Republican, and though he has never sought office, in 1895 he was elected to the court of burgesses, and served one term. In 1899 he was re-elected without solicitation or desire on his part, and has been re-elected each succeeding year. The present (1903) court of burgesses of Danielson is composed of successful and public-spirited business men of the place, who have voted their salary back into the borough treasury.

Mr. Keach has extensive fraternal relations in the city, belonging to Quinebaug Lodge, No. 34, I. O. O. F.; Aetna Lodge, No. 21, A. O. U. W.; Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M.; Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M.; Montgomery Council, No. 2, R. & S. M.; Columbian Commandery, K. T., of Norwich, and Sphinx Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Hartford. He attends the Episcopal Church, and is a popular, quiet, and unassuming gentleman, who has been in every sense the architect of his own fortunes.

WILLIAM B. CHANDLER. This young and enterprising merchant of Windham county, town of Thompson, community of North Grosvenor Dale, is a descendant of one of the oldest families in the county, and is a man who has himself been prominently and honorably associated with its history. He is a member of the mercantile firm of John Elliott & Co., doing a large general mercantile business at the above point. He is a son of William Bradbury Chandler, who was a son of Winthrop.

William Bradbury Chandler was born near the line of Woodstock and Thompson, in the latter town, Aug. 17, 1818. He received an excellent education in the district schools and later learned the carpenter trade, but found that this required too vigorous action for the condition of his health, and later had to abandon it. He then took up the shoe-making trade, which he followed for a number of years. In the year 1875 he came to North Grosvenor Dale, where he spent the remainder of his life, his decease occurring Aug. 17, 1886. He lies buried in East Woodstock cemetery. In life he was a man who combined excellent qualities of citizenship, but was of a quiet temperament, and though a staunch Republican, was not an office seeker in any sense of the word. He held membership in the Congregational Church. He married Aug. 17, 1839, Abigail A. Billings. Mrs. Chandler was born in Charlton, Mass., Jan. 2, 1822, and was the daughter of Samuel and Abigail (Adams) Billings, both of whom were natives of Bellingham, Mass. The grandfather on the paternal side was William Billings, and on the maternal side the grandparents were Caleb Adams and Matilda Muscroft.

To William Bradbury Chandler, Sr., were born six children. John, the eldest son, was given a good education and became a teacher. He is now superintendent of the public schools at Ellenville, Ulster Co., N. Y. He married Sarah, daughter of Peter and Mary (Morris) Lane, and after her decease Ruth Whiting, of Jordan, N. Y. To the first marriage were born James and John, while the second wife is the mother of Herman and Rachel. William, the second child, died in infancy. James died at the age of seventeen years, and Nancy Elizabeth at fifteen years. Susan Morse is now Mrs. Luther Stites, of Lowell, Mass. She has four children, Gertrude L., Luther Clarence, Florence May, and Burton Chandler. The subject of this article is the youngest child of his father's family. Mrs. Chandler is still living, at the ripe age of eighty-one years. She has been a devoted mother and is a lady of many refined tastes. She is a consistent and earnest member of the M. E. Church.

William Bradbury Chandler, Jr., was born in the town of Thompson, near the Woodstock line, Feb. 28, 1860. He passed the period of boyhood and adolescence in the pursuit of his excellent educational equipment, supplementing the training in elementary branches by a course at Dudley Academy. He early became connected with the business world, in which he has been so successful, at sixteen entering the general store of Byron S. Thompson at Grosvenor Dale as a clerk. He was with this employer five years and then succumbed to the Western "fever," an attack of which all Eastern young men of spirit must undergo. He went out to Illinois, but a few months in that State was sufficient tonic to send him home with the resolve to remain in the land of his birth. He again secured employment with Byron S. Thompson, and after two years entered the employ of his present partner, John Elliott, who was conducting a business at the present site. In 1900 he became junior member of the firm of John Elliott & Co. He is also assistant postmaster.

The marriage of Mr. Chandler occurred in 1893 at New Boston, Mrs. Chandler's maiden name having been Mary Prince. She is the daughter of William and Catherine (Harwood) Prince, and has borne her husband one son, William Reginald.

Mr. Chandler is a young man whose genial personality inspires in all a wholesome regard, and whose fine executive ability makes him a desirable figure in the public life of the community. In the fraternities he is most popular, being a member of Cornerstone Lodge, No. 122, A. F. & A. M., and a charter member of the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

EVERETT LINCOLN FLETCHER. Among the prosperous and influential men of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., one who deserves special mention is Everett Lincoln Fletcher, who was born Aug. 14, 1864, in Griswold, Hartford Co., Conn., and traces his ancestry back many generations to the earliest colonial days.

According to the family records, the Fletcher family originated in America in the person of one Robert Fletcher, who settled in Concord, Mass., in the year 1630, when seventeen ships arrived in Massachusetts Bay and at Plymouth. Robert had then three sons, Luke, William and Samuel, and was thirty-eight years of age. It was five years later that Concord was organized, and Robert grew with the place, becoming a wealthy and influential man. His death occurred at Concord, April 3, 1677, when he was eighty-five years of age. His children were: the three sons already mentioned; Francis; and Cary.

The name Fletcher was originally written Fladger and was the name of the trade of making arrows, or as some think, of affixing the feathers upon the arrow—"fledging" it. The French word "Flechien" has exactly the same meaning and some members of the family have inferred that French blood flowed in their veins. All the traditions, however, point to an English or Welsh extraction, and Yorkshire, in the northern part of England, is mentioned as the spot from whence Robert came to the colonies, and the name is common in Yorkshire to this day. At the time when Robert Fletcher's great-grandchildren were still living, information was gathered which appeared to point conclusively to Yorkshire as Robert's native place, and it may therefore be safely assumed that such was the case and that this honorable family sprung from the sturdy stock of English origin.

(II) Francis Fletcher was born in 1636 in Concord, Mass., and was the fourth son of Robert the emigrant. His marriage occurred Aug. 1, 1656, to Elizabeth Wheeler, a daughter of George and Katherine Wheeler. Remaining in Concord with his father, Francis became, like him and his older brothers, a great land owner, although they settled in adjoining towns. Records show that he was in full communion with the church at Concord in 1677, and was admitted as a freeman the same year. At that time he owned seventeen lots of land in Concord, amounting to 437 acres. The date of his wife's death was June 14, 1704. His children were: Samuel, Joseph, Elizabeth, John, Sarah, Hezekiah, Hannah and Benjamin.

(III) Corporal Samuel Fletcher, the eldest child of Francis Fletcher, was born Aug. 6, 1657, and died Oct. 23, 1744, in Concord, Mass., where his birth also occurred. He was married April 15, 1682, to Elizabeth Wheeler, who died Oct. 26, 1744, surviving him but three days. Samuel was selectman in Concord in 1705, 1707, 1709 and 1713. The family of Samuel consisted of: Samuel, Joseph, Elizabeth, Sarah, John, Hannah, Ruth, Rebecca, Samuel (2), Benjamin and Timothy, all born in Concord.

(IV) Timothy Fletcher, the youngest in the family of Samuel Fletcher, was born Aug. 28, 1704, in Concord, Mass. His wife was named Elizabeth and his children were; Elizabeth, Timothy, Sarah, John, James, Joseph, Benjamin, Ephraim and Lydia (twins), Joel and Samuel, all born in Concord, Massachusetts.

(V) Ephraim Fletcher, the son of Timothy, was born Feb. 5, 1740, in Concord, Mass., and died Jan. 1, 1836, in Newport, N. H. He married Sarah Davenport. The family of Ephraim Fletcher was: Sarah, Ephraim, Amos, Polly, Lydia, Timothy, Anna, Joel and Benjamin.

(VI) Amos Fletcher, son of Ephraim, was born March 2, 1770 or 1771, in Sutton, Mass., (probably), and died Dec. 31, 1858, in Shaker Village, Conn. He married Lucy Alden, born Aug. 28, 1771, a daughter of Joseph and Bathsheba (Jones) Alden. The place of her birth was Wales, Mass., and she died in Holland, Mass., in May, 1840. Amos Fletcher was a tailor by trade, residing in Holland, Mass., and later joined the Shaker community. His wife, Lucy (Alden) Fletcher, was the fifth generation from John and Priscilla Alden, her line of ancestry being: Joseph, Samuel, Deacon Joseph and Joseph (2).

The family born to Amos Fletcher was: Bathsheba and Charity, (twins), the former marrying Eli Damon and dying in Holland, Mass., April 23, 1865, aged seventy-one years; and Charity, marrying Roswell Blodgett and dying in Holland, Mass., Feb. 11, 1858, aged sixty-four; Joel, who married Fanny Webber, and died Sept. 30, 1841, in Holland, Massachusetts; Erastus, who was the grandfather of Everett L.; Jebina, who was born March 18, 1802, died Nov. 28, 1858, whose first wife was named Nancy, and his second, Betsy Orcutt; Louisa; Amos, Jr., whose wife's given name was Charlotte, and who died in Providence, R. I.; Nathan, who married Elizabeth Church, and died in 1857, in Three Rivers, Massachusetts.

(VII) Erastus Fletcher, son of Amos Fletcher, Sr., and grandfather of Everett Lincoln Fletcher, was born Nov. 20, 1707, in Wales, Mass., and he married March 19, 1826, Mary Marcy, born Sept. 15, 1804, in Holland, Mass., who died May 8, 1838, in Granby, Mass. Erastus Fletcher died Nov. 29, 1883, also in Granby, Mass. The family of Erastus Fletcher was: Lyman Washington, who was born Nov. 12, 1828, in Granby, Mass., where he died Aug. 4, 1830; Mary Luván, who was born Feb. 17, 1830, in Granby, Mass., married Harvey Pratt, Jan. 15, 1850, in Belchertown, Mass., a farmer, and now resides in Vinland, Wis.; Lyman Flint, who was born April 18, 1831, in Granby, Mass., and died Feb. 24, 1894, in Holyoke, Mass., married to Marion Coombs, and a farmer by occupation; Orrin Lincoln, who was born Aug. 10, 1832, in Granby, Mass., and died June 20, 1897, in West Stafford; John Dela, who was born Dec. 14, 1836, in Granby, Mass., married Tabatha Story Devereux, of Rhode Island, and is now a painter and paper hanger, as well as a woolen mill worker.

Erastus Fletcher married a second time, and his choice was Sarah Marcy, the sister of his first wife. Their marriage occurred Dec. 14, 1838. Sarah Marcy was born April 22, 1809, and died in Holland, Mass., Sept. 8, or 11, 1839, aged thirty years. There were no children by his second marriage. July 21, 1840, Erastus Fletcher married Elmira Hervey, born in Boston, Mass., Dec. 20, 1814. By this marriage there were: George Nelson, born April 30, 1841, served in the 21st Mass. V. I., and at the close of the war was a prisoner in the infamous Libby prison (he married Mary Ann Chapman, of Portland, Conn., and is now a farmer of Southwich, Mass.); Harriet Elmira, born Aug. 27, 1842, who married Henry Bouton, of New York State, and is living in Portland, Mass.; Charles Wesley, born Nov. 13, 1844, now living on the old farm in Granby, Mass., who married (first) Frances Bartlett of Ware, Mass., and whose (second) wife was named Mary; Maria Emeline, born Aug. 22, 1846, who married Charles Cooper, but is now a widow; Wilbur Fish, born Jan. 10, 1848, who died Sept. 13, 1854; Ellen Eliza, born Sept. 2, 1849, who lives in Holyoke, Mass., the widow of John Lewis Sparks, during his life the proprietor of a bakery; William Franklin, born July 1, 1851, living in Southwich, Mass., conducting a grist-mill (his wife is named Ada); Sarah Amelia, deceased, was born Aug. 7, 1853; Herbert Harvey, born Aug. 10, 1855, resides in Boston, Mass., a graduate from Williams College, and now in the publishing business, who married Alice Kellogg, of Granby, Mass.; Edward H., born Feb. 17, 1858, deceased; Foster Harlan, born Nov. 10, 1860, who is living in Springfield, in the dry goods business. Erastus Fletcher was a shoemaker by trade and was a very good workman, and he also conducted a farm. He was a man of high principles and lived up to his convictions, gaining the respect and esteem of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

(VIII) Orrin Lincoln Fletcher, son of Erastus Fletcher, by his first marriage, and father of Everett Lincoln Fletcher, was born Aug. 10, 1832, in Granby, Mass., and married Oct. 21, 1857, Mary Jenette Worthington, who was born May 21, 1839, and died May 4, 1865, in Griswold, Conn., a daughter of James and Polly (Converse) Worthington, of West Stafford, Conn. Two sons were born to this union: Wilbur Lagrange, born Sept. 13, 1858, in Stafford, Conn., married Nov. 24, 1881, Nettie Moore, who was born in Stafford, Aug. 7, 1862, a daughter of Harvy and Phoebe (Washburn) Moore, and their children are: Ernest Leon, who was born Nov. 20, 1882, in Hampden, Mass.; Bessie Irene, Dec. 7, 1884, in Hampden, Mass.; Robert Everett, March 7, 1886, in Stafford Springs, Conn.; Mabel Alice, Oct. 7, 1890, who died in August, 1891, in Somerville, Conn.; Ruth Esther, Jan. 16, 1893, in Somerville, Conn.; Dorothy Pearl, April 7, 1895, in Somerville, Conn.; Paul Edward, Oct. 7, 1897, who died March 25, 1898, in Somerville, Conn.; Evelyn Priscilla, who died July 27, 1899, in Somerville, Conn. The second son of Orrin Lincoln Fletcher was Everett Lincoln.

Orrin Lincoln Fletcher married (second) Nov. 23, 1865, Maria Celenda (Orcutt) Pasco, widow of Charles Franklin Pasco, and daughter of Warren and Selenda (Johnson) Orcutt, and she was born Oct. 5, 1837, in Stafford, Conn. Of this marriage two children were born: Eva Jenette, Sept. 8, 1870, in Stafford, Conn., who is at home; Herbert Orcutt, April 7, 1872, in Stafford, Conn., who is a machinist in Watertown, Mass., unmarried. The father died in West Stafford, Conn., June 20, 1897. During his early life, and until the spring of 1872, when his health failed, he engaged in milling, being a "fuller" by trade, although he understood thoroughly, all lines of "wet finishing." For many years he worked in Granby, Mass., his birthplace. Mr. Fletcher also worked in Orcuttville, Conn., where he had learned his trade, and where he also had a farm of fifty acres of excellent farming land. He was overseer of the Lathrop Brothers mills at Griswoldtown, village of Hopeville, Hartford Co., Conn., from 1864 to 1867. At that date he went to Manchester, Conn., and acted as overseer for Hilliard & Spencer until 1869, when his health began to fail. In politics he was a very staunch Republican, and was active in the Adventist Church although a member of the Congregational Church of Stafford, Conn. During his entire life he lived honorably, setting an excellent example, not only to his family, but also to the community, and in his death West Stafford lost one of its most respected citizens.

(IX) Everett Lincoln Fletcher was taken from his native place, Griswold, Conn., when he was about four years of age, to West Stafford, Conn., where he received his education in the district schools. Leaving school when about sixteen years of age, he began to work for neighboring farmers by the month, his first employer being Deacon Alden Davis, who lived near Somers, Conn., with whom he remained several months. For a year or two he continued working on the farm during the summer months, and in the Orcuttville and Warren Woolen Company mills for the winter season.

In 1885 Mr. Fletcher went west to Nebraska and took up a preempted claim of 160 acres and improved it extensively. For the next four years he remained West, working up his claim, and farming extensively in Iowa and in the "Black Hills,"

Dakota, one summer; he returned in 1889, to the East and for the next four years was engaged in conducting a milk route in Somerville, for Mayro Keeney. In 1891 he disposed of his Nebraska farm at a good profit, and in April, 1894, he purchased the Deacon Alden Davis farm in Stafford, consisting of 140 acres, all of which is in a good state of cultivation. The house is a very comfortable one, the barn in excellent shape, while the other buildings, machinery and tools show that Mr. Fletcher is a progressive farmer who understands thoroughly how to make his land yield a good profit upon his investment. In addition to general farming, Mr. Fletcher has a herd of cattle of fifteen head and sells his product to the Somers creamery, and also gathers cream for that concern. Since 1895 Mr. Fletcher has had a partner in the conduct of his farm, in the person of his brother-in-law, Bert D. Cooley, the business being conducted under the firm name of Fletcher & Cooley.

On April 2, 1890, Mr. Fletcher was married to Miss Mattie Sarah Cooley, the daughter of Silas Benton and Jane Persis (Hunt) Cooley, of Somers, Conn. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher, seven interesting children have been born: Edna Jenette, March 24, 1892, at Somerville, Conn.; Eunice Viola, Sept. 30, 1893, in Somerville, Conn.; Celia Gertrude, April 13, 1895, in West Stafford, Conn.; Helen Cooley, Nov. 3, 1896, in West Stafford, Conn.; Eva Maria, March 12, 1899, in West Stafford, Conn.; Mattie Jane, in West Stafford, Conn., May 27, 1900, who died July 23, 1900; Marjorie Irene, June 8, 1902. Mrs. Fletcher is a lady of gracious manner and charming hospitality, and surrounded by her family of little ones, pursuing her daily duties, making a pleasant home for her beloved family, she is a true example of the ideal woman, whose world is her circle of dear ones.

Mr. Fletcher is a staunch Republican, supporting the candidates of his party whenever occasion offers, but so far he has had so many duties connected with his own business cares that he has not had the time to take an active part in political matters, although his opinion is often sought as to the best candidates in local affairs. Taking a deep interest in everything connected with educational matters, however, he has consented to serve upon the school committee of his district, and has made some very useful and much needed changes and given excellent advice. In social matters, he is an active member of the Order of United American Mechanics, Mount Vernon Lodge No. 10, of Somers, Conn., and he is now holding the important office of Past Councilor in that fraternity.

Being a man of high principles and moral life, Mr. Fletcher recognizes the good work done by the church in every community, and gives liberally of his time and means towards its support, attending the Congregational Church.

At the age when the boy of today is tenderly cared for in the home circle, Mr. Fletcher was forced to face the world alone. Beginning as a humble farm boy, paid but scanty wages, he is now, while still a young man, the possessor of the very farm upon which he first engaged in laboring for his own support. This fact but serves to illustrate the character of the man, and demonstrates what can be accomplished by hard work, honorable dealings and strict economy, and the esteem in which he is held in the community shows that his efforts are appreciated by his neighbors, and he is recognized as one of the most prosperous young farmers of Stafford.

THEODORE STAUDT. Perhaps there is no business man in Tolland county, Conn., who is so successfully pursuing his line of trade, after so short a residence in the United States, as our subject, Theodore Staudt, who with enthusiasm and energy has built up a prosperous business in florists' goods and supplies and is now giving Rockville the best service in that line that the city has ever had, his greenhouses rivalling those of the large cities.

Theodore Staudt was born in Wies-Baden, Germany, Nov. 16, 1863, the son of Christian and Margaret (Geist) Staudt, the parents being people in easy circumstances, the father an intelligent and practical man who realized that the best fortune he could give his sons would be a trade, and insisted that each one should become proficient in one line. Christian Staudt was an educated man and was one of the most successful and highly respected teachers of his vicinity, following that profession for forty-seven years, and he was so highly esteemed that he was retired with a credit of fifty years, the German law providing full retired pay to its educators of a half century. The original family was from Holland, the grandfather, Henry Staudt, removing from Amsterdam to Germany; there Christian Staudt always lived, and there he reared a family of eight children, six of whom were boys, but Theodore is the only one in America, the others being merchants or manufacturers in Germany.

Until Theodore Staudt was fourteen years of age he had every educational advantage and then on his own choice went into the employ of a florist to learn that business. After learning the business very thoroughly, in 1892 he decided to seek other lands, and with a young friend decided to go to England; later they changed their minds and planned to go to America for two years, thinking they might be able to endure the United States as long as that, and with this end in view, in January, 1892, they took passage from Amsterdam on the Holland line vessel, the "Rotterdam," and eleven days later, Feb. 1, safely landed at New York.

An uncle, Adam Geist, was located at Bridgeport, Conn., and thither Mr. Staudt went; he soon found work at his trade, earning in that city his first American dollars. In the following January he left Bridgeport and went to New York to enter the employ of the well-known seedman and florist, Peter Henderson, where he remained until 1894, when he went to Norwich, Conn., later to Union Hill, N. J., and in February, 1896, he reached Rockville. At that time the florist business of Schmeiske Brothers was for sale, and he soon became its owner, and has most satisfactorily conducted it ever since.

Mr. Staudt was married in January, 1896, to Miss Margaret Kroenig, a native of Munich, Germany, a most estimable lady. The practical character of his knowledge of his business, combined with his energy and constant attention to it, has contributed to his success, and the residents of his city are to be congratulated upon the flourishing industry in their midst, which certainly deserves patronage and encouragement.

MRS. J. PAULSEN has exhibited in her own career the possession of a business ability seldom found in her sex, and her record in Rockville, Tolland county, is in every way creditable, both in her social relations and in her business enterprises.

Mrs. Paulsen is a native of the city of New York, where her parents, William and Gertrude (Pohlman) Prelle, had long been settled. They were both natives of Germany, and came to this country when young. Their marriage occurred in New York, where Mr. Prelle was engaged in business as a manufacturer and retailer of cigars, on the corner of Greenwich and Desbrosses streets. They spent their lives in New York, where they died in old age. The business which her father established and conducted for many years, is now in the hands of her brother, Charles W. Prelle. Frederick Prelle was the grandfather of Mrs. Paulsen, and at one time he had his home in Rockville.

Mrs. Paulsen was the second child and the oldest daughter of her parents, and was reared to womanhood and had her education in her native city. In 1890 she married Martin Paulsen, who was a native of Schleswig, Germany, and came to the United States when a young man. A butcher by trade, he followed the market business in New York, and became very prosperous. His untimely death on March 7, 1893, cut short a brilliant career that had every promise of solid results in the future.

Mrs. Paulsen spent the first few months after her husband's death with her sister in Jersey City, where her only child, Martin, was born Sept. 25, 1893, on Washington street, in that city. Late in 1893 Mrs. Paulsen came to Rockville and soon entered business as the proprietor and manager of the dry goods and millinery store, which was established by her aunt, Mrs. Carrie Arit, a number of years previously. A retail trade only is sought, and Mrs. Paulsen has an extensive and desirable patronage from the best people of the city. The store is 20x36 feet in dimensions, and is conveniently and attractively appointed. The extensive stock which she keeps carefully replenished is very complete and embraces millinery and white goods of every description, dress goods, linens, domestics, fancy goods, hosiery, gloves, laces, embroideries and furnishing goods. It is a fine store and is a modern and up-to-date establishment in every respect.

Mrs. Paulsen has become a considerable owner of real estate since her coming to Rockville, owning the store where her business is conducted and other business property on Village street, as well as a handsome residence property on Ward street.

WILLIAM N. PINNEY, a successful and enterprising young farmer near Windermere Station, town of Ellington, Tolland county, resides on a tract of land which has been in the Pinney family for many generations. In times past, this family was one of the most numerous in Ellington, and it undoubtedly is one of the most ancient.

(I) Humphrey Pinney, the founder of the American branch of the Pinney family, came from England in 1630, locating at Dorchester, Mass., and married Mary Hull, who came from England in the same vessel with him. In 1635 he removed from Dorchester and settled at Windsor, Conn. He had a family of eight children, by two marriages, and he died Aug. 20, 1683.

(II) Samuel Pinney, the oldest son of Humphrey Pinney, was born in Dorchester, and married Rejoice Bissell, daughter of the immigrant, John Bissell, by whom he had four children. In 1667 he removed to Simsbury, leaving there in 1676, when it was burned by the Indians. Later he was employed in surveying lands in Ellington, and from the Indians purchased the land where he finally settled. Ellington then was a part of Windsor and it is supposed that he was the first settler in Ellington, in 1717, and there he lived and died.

(III) Capt. Benjamin Pinney, a son of Samuel, had two wives; the name of the first was Ladd, and of the second, Lathrop. He died in 1777, at the age of sixty-two.

(IV) Eleazer Pinney, son of Capt. Benjamin, was born in 1753, in Ellington, where he was a farmer by occupation, and was also a distinguished soldier. As sergeant of militia in the campaign against Burgoyne, he belonged to a company of Connecticut yeomen who were famous on account of their bravery. Sergeant Pinney took part in the battle of Stillwater, Sept. 19, 1777, and was also in the battle of Saratoga, Oct. 7, 1777, which decided the fate of Burgoyne's army, and he was one of the division which stormed that gentleman's camp. "Leftenant" Pinney, as he was called, ranked among the first citizens of Ellington; was representative in the General Assembly; was a selectman for fourteen years, no other man having held the office so long, and was the administrator of a large number of estates, the demands in this line being so frequent that he was jocularly styled "Administrator-General" of Ellington, and was the guardian for many minors. His death took place as late as 1836, and he was esteemed and lamented by all. He built the house and lived where William N. Pinney now lives. The first wife of Lieut. Pinney was Eunice King, whom he married in 1779, and who died in 1782, leaving these children: Benjamin, born July 4, 1780, who married Susannah McKinney, and died May, 1860, his wife passing away June 10, 1868; Parmelia, married to Samuel Belcher; Elizabeth, married to John Pitt Barle. The second wife was Anna McKinney, of Ellington, and the children of this union were: Eleazer, born in 1785; Ebenezer, born in 1790, who married Etta Lee, of Hartford, and died in South Windsor, in 1877; Loring, born in 1802, who married Susan Blodgett, and was a farmer in Ellington, where he died in 1881; Nelson, born in 1804, who married Miranda McKinney, of Ellington, was a farmer, and died in 1871; Andrew, born in 1809, who married a Miss Moore, of Ellington, where he was a farmer, and died in 1871; Eunice, who married Oliver King, and died in 1865. Lieut. Pinney gave to each of his sons a farm.

(V) Eleazer Pinney (2) was a farmer in Ellington. His life was one of goodness and kindness and he was much beloved in the community. His death took place in 1851. His wife, Damaris Chapman, of Ellington, died in 1852. Their children were: Ebenezer, who married a Miss Grover, of Tolland, was a wagon maker, and resided in Willington; Nelson; John; Edward V. C., a brick mason by trade, and a gifted musician, who died in Ellington, married to Harriet Moody, of East Windsor, by whom he had one child, Belle, married to E. H. Preston, of Rockville.

(VI) Nelson Pinney was born April 27, 1804, and resided on his father's farm. He became a very large landowner, engaged extensively in farming, raising great numbers of cattle, and also operated a stone quarry, which was located on his farm, and worked at the trade of stone mason, doing some of the work and furnishing a portion of the stone on the Windermere mill. Mr. Pinney laid the stone for the present Congregational Church at Ellington. With all these numerous business interests, he found time to serve efficiently his town as selectman, and in minor offices. Dec. 19, 1827, he married Miranda McKinney, who was born Feb. 8, 1806, a daughter of Selden and Miranda McKinney, and died Sept. 23, 1892. Their children were: Mary Ann, born Jan. 10, 1831, who died Aug. 24, 1850; Isabel, born Nov. 11, 1832, who died Aug. 24, 1850; Selden, born Dec. 11, 1834, who died Feb. 14, 1838; Ann, born Nov. 26, 1837, now residing in Detroit, Mich., who married W. H. Potter, and went to Dexter, Mich., later marrying a Mr. Holcomb, now deceased; Selden, born July 21, 1839, who died Dec. 11, 1859; Miranda, born Feb. 6, 1841, who died May 15, 1842; and Loring Judson.

(VII) Loring Judson Pinney, father of William N., was born April 27, 1844, on the old homestead, where he grew to manhood; as he was the only son that survived, he remained at home and inherited the farm upon the death of his father. There he was engaged until his own death, Aug. 27, 1875, and he was laid to rest in Ellington. His political convictions attached him to the Democratic party, and he was one of the most liberal supporters of the Congregational Church. He married Mary Hibbard, of Rockville, a daughter of Monroe and Elizabeth (Bissell) Hibbard, and she now resides in New London. The children of this marriage were: William N.; Harry H., who married Alberta Burdick, was a foreman, holding an important position in the factory of Pratt, Whitney & Co., machinists, at Hartford, but now superintendent of the Westinghouse works, Cleveland, Ohio; and Hattie M., who died in infancy.

(VIII) William N. Pinney was born Dec. 21, 1865, in the house which he now occupies. In his native town and also in Rockville he had educational opportunities, but the death of his father when he was but ten years old closed his school career, and made necessary an entrance into some business even at that early age. He soon found employment in the Windermere mills, near his home, and there he worked in various capacities until he was seventeen years old, by which time he had progressed sufficiently to be entrusted with the charge of the picking room, where there were a number of workmen, the greater number older than he. For the succeeding two and one-half years, Mr. Pinney remained in this responsible position, and then took a little leisure trip, spending one winter in Ann Arbor, Mich. In the following spring he returned to Ellington, where he was employed in the mill for another year, and then went on the farm, which his mother was managing, and for two years he assisted her. He then went to Windsor Locks, where he established a tobacco store which he successfully conducted one winter, disposing of it when he desired to go into a mill in Westerly, R. I.; that position he filled for a short time only. For some time he also worked in a grocery store, and then entered the employ of F. W. Coy, who was the owner of several stores, in a general store in Westerly, and during the summer season in a similar establishment at Watch Hill. For the following two and one-half years the business relations of Mr. Pinney and Mr. Coy continued, but in the spring of 1888, Mr. Pinney purchased the interests of his mother and brother in the home farm, and since that time has been engaged in dairying, tobacco growing and general farming. In 1890 he established a milk route in Rockville, which with the exception of 1893 he has continuously conducted and has a large and increasing patronage. The farm is one of the most productive in the locality, consisting of 100 acres of fine land, well situated and very valuable, the many improvements which Mr. Pinney has made contributing both to its value and attractiveness.

On Nov. 1, 1888, William N. Pinney was married to Anna L. Lamphear, who was born in Westerly, R. I., June 10, 1861; a daughter of Perry and Elizabeth (West) Lamphear, the former of whom was a boss dyer in the mill in Westerly. Mr. Pinney in his political convictions has always been a Democrat, and now (1903) holds the office of selectman, to which he was elected three years ago, and he has filled the position of third, second and first selectman during this time. He is a liberal supporter of the Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Pinney is a member. Mr. Pinney is one of the most energetic and progressive farmers of the neighborhood, and well represents his long and honorable ancestral line.

JEROME M. WOODWARD, one of the most successful farmers of Hampton, and representative of a family for many years connected with Windham county, was born in the northern part of Brooklyn, May 8, 1866, and is a son of Elisha Adams and Julia B. (Millard) Woodward. Among others who have sustained the Woodward reputation for sobriety, enterprise and thrift, may be mentioned W. W. Woodward, of Danielson, and Sylvanus M. Woodward, of Brooklyn; in the biography of the former is an extended account of the early fortunes of the Woodwards in America.

Elisha Adams Woodward was born in Brooklyn, June 15, 1835, and owing to the death of his mother when he was ten years of age, he was deprived of the care of parents, and placed in the family of Deacon Edwin Scarborough, a farmer of Brooklyn. It was intended that he remain with the deacon until his eighteenth year, and in return for services rendered, he was to receive board and clothes, and the privilege of attending the winter terms of school, but when sixteen years old he started out on his own responsibility, and received for work by the month $12, his hours of work extending from the rising to the setting of the sun, with few vacations and small leisure. This uneventful existence was interrupted by the breaking out of the Civil war, and Mr. Woodward gladly left the monotony of his life behind him and enlisted, July 28, 1862, in Co. I, 18th C. V. I., for a service of three years. He was under the command of Captain Knapp and Col. John Ely, and Mr. Woodward participated in all of the battles of his regiment up to the battle of Winchester, June 15, 1863, his twenty-eighth birthday, when he was taken prisoner and confined in the Rebel prison on Belle Island. At the end of a month he was paroled, and returned home to visit his wife and infant daughter for a week. He was afterward exchanged, and eventually rejoined his regiment at Martinsburg, W. Va., about three months after the battle of Winchester. As a private he continued to share the martial fortunes of his regiment, and steadfastly refused all offers of promotion. He was discharged at Harper's Ferry, Va., June 27, 1865, and returned to Brooklyn, where his family was residing.

After the war, Mr. Woodward engaged at the stone mason's trade, and in the prosecution of this occupation for many years lived in different parts of the town and county. In 1887 he rented the farm on Kimball Hill, Hampton, now occupied by his son, Jerome M., and in 1895, removed to Brooklyn, and lived on a farm which he owned in the western part of the town. In March, 1897, he purchased at auction the farm formerly owned by Capt. Havilah Taylor, which contains 105 acres, upon which he is at present engaged in general farming and stock-raising.

On Dec. 23, 1859, Mr. Woodward married in East Greenwich, R. I., Julia B. Millard, born May 3, 1840, a native of East Greenwich, and daughter of William Bowen and Etherline C. (Edwards) Millard. William Bowen Millard was originally a farmer but later an undertaker, and his death occurred in East Greenwich, at the age of forty-nine years. His wife was a native of Abington, Pa., and she died in Whitewater, Wis., at the home of her son, at the age of seventy-three years. Mrs. Woodward was one of seventeen children, of whom seven grew to maturity and are still living. To Elisha Woodward and his wife were born the following children: Lillian C., Oct. 5, 1862, who married Elwood E. Sweet, a farmer in Foster, R. I., and has two children, Cary May and Emery Elisha; Jerome M.; Ninette, Feb. 24, 1871, who married Lester H. Burnham, of Hampton, in 1890, and has had four children, May Ethel, deceased, Jesse Lester, Harold Woodward and Mildred; Edwin Ward, Oct. 28, 1875, who married Minnie Ludke, and is extensively engaged in farming at Whitewater, Wis.; and Frederick Stetson, Aug. 13, 1882, who resides on the home farm. Elisha Woodward is a Democrat in political affiliation, but has never sought or desired official recognition. He, his wife and oldest daughter are members of the Episcopal Church.

In his youth Jerome M. Woodward was favored with a splendid constitution, and was of such large and strong proportions that when comparatively young he could command a man's wages. At the age of thirteen years he commenced work by the month for the neighboring farmers at $6 per month for the first season, increasing in price each year until at the age of sixteen years he commanded, received, and, in all probability, earned full wages of a man. He wanted to be master of his own little wallet, so he made arrangements with his father to the effect that his father have all of his wages until he became eighteen years of age and that he should go to school winters till he was sixteen. He thereafter went to Whitewater, Wis., where he was employed from 1884 until 1888, for a part of the time working for his uncle, Walter Parrish. The rest of the time he was employed by Ralph Pomeroy, of Edgerton, Wis. He returned to Connecticut in 1888 and worked on different farms for four years, three years of this time being on the farm of W. H. Lincoln, of Hampton. He then engaged in the lumber business with most satisfactory results, buying lots, clearing them of timber, and employing ten to fifteen men at a time in the winter. At the same time he worked as hard as any of his men, and the combined energies of all succeeded in getting out a great deal of railroad timber, lumber and cord wood. Shortly before his marriage he went out of the lumber business, and in February, 1895, bought with his lumber earnings the Kimball Hill farm, which his father had rented years before, and which contains 260 acres. At the present time he also owns other land in the towns of Hampton and Brooklyn, as well as valuable timber land in Eastford and Chaplin. He is thus one of the very large landowners of Windham county, and his property and generally large interests are directly traceable to his own untiring energies and business sagacity. He still continues to engage in the lumber business, and for the past five years has been connected with his brother-in-law, Henry M. Evans, of Brooklyn. He has made marked and modern improvements on his farm, has all the latest devices and labor saving appliances, and he is regarded as an authority on scientific and thoroughly successful farming. In connection with general farming he conducts a large dairy, milking about twenty cows.

On April 30, 1895, Mr. Woodward married Esther Evans, born in Brooklyn, Aug. 8, 1861, a daughter of Elisha and Dilla M. (Cady) Evans, and sister of Henry M. Evans, of Brooklyn. Previous to her marriage Mrs. Woodward engaged in educational work for sixteen successive years, and resigned from the Witter District during her twenty-second term a few weeks before her marriage. She was educated in the public schools of Brooklyn, and began her teaching there at the age of seventeen. Mr. Woodward is a Republican in politics, but entertains very liberal views as to office holders, believing always in voting for the man best qualified to serve the interests of the people. He is broad minded and liberal, and while living in his beautiful home on the hill, with its comprehensive view of the surrounding country, maintains a vital interest in all matters pertaining to the general welfare of the community.

GEORGE LESTER BRADFORD, a blacksmith in the Society of Westminster, town of Canterbury, Windham county, descends from one of the town's first families, who have long been identified with the community. The family have lived almost entirely in the northern part of the town, and the school district of that section has the name of Bradford District.

(I) William Bradford, of Austerfield, Yorkshire, England, was baptized March 19, 1589, son of William and Alice (Hanson) Bradford. In 1609 he went to Holland, and was at Leyden in 1612. He married there Nov. 15, 1613, Dorothea May, from Wisebeach, Cambridge, England. After a residence in Holland of a half score of years, Mr.

Bradford and his wife came to New England in the "Mayflower," leaving behind an only child, John. Mrs. Bradford fell overboard and was drowned in Cape Cod Harbor, Dec. 7, 1620. Mr. Bradford married (second) Aug. 14, 1623 (the fourth marriage solemnized in the colony), Mrs. Alice Southworth, daughter of Alexander Carpenter. Mr. Bradford became one of the foremost men in the Plymouth Colony. He was governor of the colony from 1621 to 1657, the year in which he died (May 9), excepting five years during which he declined the honor. His widow survived until April 5, 1670.

(II) Major Wm. Bradford, son of Gov. William, born in 1624, in Plymouth, married (first) about 1651-52, Alice, born in 1627, daughter of Thomas and Wealthea Richards, of Weymouth, who died Dec. 12, 1671; he married (second) the widow of Pastor Wiswell, and probably a daughter of Thomas Fitch of Norwalk, and (third) Mary, widow of John Holmes, of Duxbury, and daughter of John Wood, alias Atwood. Major Bradford was one of the most important men of the colony. He was deputy from Plymouth, 1656-57, and from 1658 for twenty-four years was assistant deputy; and for the remaining ten years of the colony's existence filled the new office of Deputy Governor, save three years. He was colonial commissioner for twelve years, and was judge of probate from 1695 to 1702 or longer. He was commander-in-chief of the Plymouth forces in King Philip's war, and was wounded in the Narragansett fight. He died March 1, 1704.

(III) Thomas Bradford, son of Major William, born in 1657, received from his father lands in Norwich, Conn. He married, it is said, Ann Smith, daughter of Nehemiah and Anna (Bourn) Smith, and (second), Priscilla, daughter of Major John Mason, and he died in 1708.

(IV) James Bradford, son of Thomas, was born in Norwich, Conn., in 1684, and died in 1762. He married (first) Edith, who died in 1724. He married (second) Dec. 7, 1724, Susanna Adams, a daughter of Samuel Adams, and she died March 27, 1762. In 1720-21 James Bradford purchased 300 acres of land of Edward Raynsford, and eighteen acres of Harvey Adams, in Canterbury, Conn., and was first of the name to locate in that town. James Bradford was the father of the following children: Thomas, born Nov. 14, 1712, who married Eunice Adams; John, Jan. 30, 1715; Jerusha, June 27, 1716, who married Jonathan Pellitt; William, July 1, 1718; Sarah, Aug. 27, 1720, who married Joseph Adams. By his second wife; Anna, baptized in 1726, who married Eleazer Cleveland; Mary, baptized in 1729, who married Joseph Woodward; and James, baptized in 1733.

(V) William Bradford, son of James, married (first) in 1741 Zeriah Lathrop. In 1743 he married (second) Mary Cleveland, daughter of Josiah. She was born June 29, 1720, and died Aug. 6, 1765.

He married third, Martha Warren; and fourth Mrs. Stedman.

(VI) John Bradford, son of William, was born July 27, 1750, and died Oct. 9, 1827. On April 22, 1773, he married Elizabeth Bond, who died March 18, 1822. He married (second) Jan. 15, 1823, Hannah Lyon. His children were: Jonas, born March 1, 1774, who died Sept. 28, 1775; Ebenezer, March 10, 1775, who died May 31, 1776; Alice B., March 8, 1777, who married James Adams, Jr., and died April 25, 1812; Lydia, April 9, 1779, who married Rinalds Burleigh, and died Jan. 25, 1853; Moses, June 11, 1781, who graduated from Yale, and died May 23, 1803; William, Sept. 28, 1783, who married (first) Mehitabel Parish, and (second) Zeriah Parish; and Luther.

(VII) Luther Bradford, the grandfather of George L. Bradford, was July 17, 1786, and Feb. 11, 1821, married Clarissa Fuller. He died Feb. 5, 1858, and his wife died June 1, 1861, aged seventy-one years. Their children were: John, mentioned below; Abigail, born Oct. 10, 1825, who married Abel Weeks, of Canterbury, and died Nov. 16, 1856; Giles, born June 14, 1828, living retired at Marion, Linn Co., Iowa. Luther Bradford grew to manhood and passed his entire life successfully engaged in farming. In politics he was a Whig, and he took an active interest in matters of a political nature. Both he and his wife were members of the Westminster Congregational Church, the latter first joining the church in her native home, Hampton, where she lived until her marriage.

(VIII) John Bradford, son of Luther, was born Dec. 15, 1823. He was married April 24, 1850, to Rebecca Jane Congdon, who was born Feb. 7, 1825, a daughter of Thomas T. Congdon and Mary Segur, his wife. Thomas T. Congdon was born in Charleston, R. I., July 1, 1791, and died in Hampton, Conn., May 30, 1848. His wife, Mary Segur, whom he married Nov. 22, 1821, was born in South Kingstown, R. I., May 13, 1792, and died Oct. 30, 1880, the mother of two children: Mary Ann, born March 30, 1823, who died April 18, 1900; Rebecca Jane, Mrs. Bradford. To John and Rebecca (Congdon) Bradford were born children as follows: Thomas C., March 28, 1851, who lives in Putnam, Conn., married Martha Spalding, and has three children, Howard C., Marjory Cross and Ralph Spalding; William Henry, Aug. 2, 1853, who lives on the homestead; Mary Ellen, Sept. 3, 1855, who married Winslow B. Gallup, and lives in Chaplin, Conn.; John Clayton, July 5, 1858, who died June 28, 1872; Charles Clitus, Sept. 30, 1861, who has been an invalid for the past twenty years; George Lester, Aug. 5, 1865. John Bradford, the father, received his education in the local schools of the Bradford District, and in Plainfield Academy. He grew up on the place usually called the Bradford homestead and in time purchased of his father a farm of 140 acres. This he added to until at the time of his death he had some 200 acres. In early life he had learned the carpenter's trade, and the farming, which he counted on quite largely, was left to his sons, after they became old enough to assist, and he devoted most of his time to his trade. In politics he was a Republican, and held various town offices.

(IX) George Lester Bradford was born on the home place, Aug. 5, 1865, and attended the Bradford district school, later spending one year at the Natchaug, at Willimantic, Conn. He assisted his father at the carpenter's trade and became familiar with that and then learned the blacksmith's trade. In 1885, in company with his father, he built a shop on property purchased of Charles Bass, and located one mile north of Westminster Church on the Brooklyn road. In connection with blacksmithing he now carries on a farm of 200 acres, and keeps a dairy of some fifteen cows.

Politically Mr. Bradford is a Republican, and he has served as second selectman one year, also as justice of the peace, and grand juror. In 1895 he represented the town in the State Legislature, and served on the committee on Constitutional Amendments.

On Jan. 1, 1890, Mr. Bradford was united in marriage with Nella Francis Babcock, of Plainfield, Conn. Their home has been blessed with three children: Alice Nella, born Oct. 3, 1892; John William, born Aug. 16, 1895; and Cecil Babcock, born July 19, 1897. The family attend the Westminster Congregational Church, and are highly esteemed in the community that has so long known them.

CHARLES E. AYER, a prominent resident of Killingly, Windham Co., Conn., widely known for his extensive business interests as well as his useful citizenship, descends from an old New England family.

(I) John Ayer, the first of the family to settle in America crossed the Atlantic in 1637 in the ship "Mary Ann," commanded by Capt. Coos, and he was described on the shipping list as "John Ayer, grocer, of Norwich." At the time he was forty-five years of age. Soon after his family of eight children joined him, and after living in Newbury for a time, he removed to Haverhill, Mass., March 5, 1645, and died there in 1657, aged sixty-five years. His wife, Hannah, passed away in 1675. Their children were: John, who married Sarah Williams; Nathaniel; Rebecca; Mary; Obediah, who married Hannah Pike; Robert, who married Elizabeth Palmer; Thomas; Peter, who married Hannah Allen; and Hannah.

(II) Thomas Ayer, son of John, died at Haverhill, Mass., Nov. 9, 1686, married Elizabeth Hutchins, and they have had seven children, viz.: John; Elizabeth; Mary Love, who married Joseph Kingsbury; Thomas; Samuel; and two sons who died in infancy.

(III) John Ayer, son of Thomas, was born May 14, 1657, and it is supposed that he came from Stonington to Saybrook, Conn., where he took up land. In 1710 he and his eldest son, John, built a house at Ayer's Point, and, as he was a maltster, he erected also a malt house, a little south of the present residence of William Y. Ayer, at Ayer's Point, in Saybrook. Some of its foundations still remain. Although accident had deprived him of one arm, he was active and energetic and successfully conducted an extensive business. In 1740 his old home was replaced by a new one in which his last days were spent, and his death occurred in 1743. The present residence was built in 1828 by Thomas Youngs Ayer.

In 1684 John Ayer married Hannah Travis, daughter of William Travis, of Haverhill, Mass., and they had a family of eight children, as follows: Hannah, who married Sylvanus Harrington; John, mentioned later; Sarah, who married a Mr. Packer; David, who married Jerusha Williams; Ruth, who died at the age of four years; Esther, who married John Phillips; Joshua, who married a Miss Parrish; and Daniel, who died Sept. 23, 1714.

(IV) John Ayer (2), son of John, was born in 1688, and married Sarah Colt, of Lyme, Conn., daughter of John Colt. He died Feb. 21, 1760, and she died Dec. 5, 1760, the former aged seventy-two years and the latter sixty-eight years. Their children were: Daniel, born July 19, 1716, who married Esther Chapin, and died Sept. 13, 1764; John, Nov. 1, 1718, married to Abigail Cook; Joseph, April 3, 1721, who died April 1, 1814; Travis, March 16, 1723, who married Rhuannah Matson; Elisha, Sept. 29, 1725, who died Dec. 6, 1751; Sarah, Feb. 20, 1728, who married Silas Peck, and died Sept. 17, 1778; Supporah, Sept. 21, 1730, married to Richard Lill; Mary, Nov. 29, 1732, deceased July 20, 1739; Elizabeth, March 26, 1735, who married Samuel Phillips, and died in September, 1778; and Hannah, Feb. 25, 1740, who married Gibbon Jewett, and died Dec. 25, 1760.

(V) Deacon Joseph Ayer, son of John (2), is buried on the farm he occupied in Stonington. In 1751 he married Thankful Drake, and their children were: Ruanna, born Aug. 20, 1752, who married Timothy Swan; Thankful, Jan. 9, 1754, who married Ebenezer Tracy; Joseph, Oct. 5, 1755; Elisha, Aug. 16, 1757, who married Hope Fanning, and died in June, 1853; Lucy, July 21, 1759, who married John Avery and died in October, 1856; Hannah, July 28, 1761, who married Solomon Williams, and died Feb. 2, 1822; Cynthia, June 12, 1763, who married Christopher Avery, and died in February, 1833; Martha, May 11, 1765, who died May 19, 18—; Joseph, Sept. 19, 1767, who married Bridget Hull, and died Jan. 18, 1840; Louise, Sept. 13, 1769, deceased Jan. 17, 1797; Olive, July 6, 1771, deceased in August, 1834; and Elizabeth, March 29, 1773, deceased May 21, 1860.

(VI) Joseph Ayer (2), son of Joseph, lived in Stonington, married Bridget Hull, and there their children were born, as follows: Joseph, May 19, 1793, who married Thankful Rogers, and died Dec.

26, 1876; Bridget, Oct. 10, 1794, deceased Aug. 3, 1833; Thankful, May 30, 1797, who married a Mr. Lee, of Hanover, Conn., and died Dec. 4, 1880; Ann Wheeler, Dec. 24, 1798, who married a Mr. Grant, of Hanover, and died Sept. 11, 1882; Lucy, March 31, 1801, who became Mrs. Smith, and lived in Genesee county, N. Y.; Harriet, July 19, 1803, who married a Mr. Latham, lived in Lyme, Conn., and died Jan. 20, 1846; Betsey, Feb. 13, 1806, who was the second wife of the above mentioned Mr. Latham, and died Sept. 26, 1873; Latham Hull, Sept. 4, 1807, deceased March 8, 1846.

(VII) Latham Hull Ayer, son of Joseph (2), and the grandfather of C. E. Ayer, of Killingly, was reared in Stonington, Conn., but after marriage he went to Genesee county, N. Y., later returning to his native State, where he died March 8, 1846, and was buried at Hanover. Sept. 13, 1830, he married Susan Ames, born June 30, 1811, in Preston, Conn., who died Jan. 6, 1866. Their children were: an infant son; Joseph Curtis, born April 3, 1832, who died Aug. 10, 1891; Latham Hull, Sept. 11, 1842, who resides in Keokuk, Iowa, and has a son, Latham, Jr.

(VIII) Joseph Curtis Ayer, son of Latham Hull Ayer, and the father of C. E. Ayer, was married in March, 1856, to Miss Eliza Frances Danielson, who still makes her residence in her native place. The children born to this marriage were: Charles Elmer, July 31, 1857; Charlotte Danielson, Aug. 15, 1861; Harriet L., Dec. 13, 1864, was married in June, 1892, to Dr. Charles H. Kingsbury, of Milford, Mass., and their two children are Paul, born May 24, 1898, and Floyd, born April 30, 1901; Mary Alice, April 29, 1869, who married Capt. Hugh McKinnan, in March, 1901, and is in Shanghai, China; and Sarah Lord, April 11, 1872, a teacher.

Deacon Joseph Curtis Ayer was born in Genesee county, N. Y., but came to Danielson, Conn., when a young man, entered into a grocery business and later opened and operated a grocery and meat business at South Killingly, where the latter years of his life were spent. He was a deacon of the South Killingly Congregational Church.

(IX) Charles Elmer Ayer, son of Deacon Joseph, was born in Danielson, Conn., July 31, 1857, and was educated in that place, almost completing the course of the Danielson high school. He then went to Galesburg, Ill., and for a period of fourteen years was in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, two years as fireman, and the other twelve years as engineer on passenger trains. Upon his return to Connecticut, he located at Dayville, town of Killingly, and opened a meat market, which he conducted for six years, disposing of this business to enter the employ of the Nelson Morris Beef Company, as manager of a beef house, and one year later he was made an inspector, holding that position for two years. The excellent judgment and fine executive ability displayed by Mr.

Ayer resulted in his then being given charge of the New England business, in which position he faithfully served the company for three years. For the past two years Mr. Ayer has had the entire charge of the company's interests east of Buffalo, N. Y. It is unusual to have advancement come so rapidly as it has to Mr. Ayer, but the great company he represents have not failed to recognize his extreme reliability and fitness for large business management.

In politics Mr. Ayer is a strong Republican, and has held various offices in Killingly, and served from 1890 to 1895 on the board of selectmen.

On Jan. 26, 1887, Mr. Ayer was married to Miss Agnes M. Harris, and to this union a daughter, Edna Harris, was born, July 21, 1890. Mrs. Ayer is a daughter of Hiram Harris, a successful farmer and mill-man of Plainfield, Conn., and a granddaughter of Edwin and Rachel Harris. Hiram Harris was born in Brooklyn, Conn., in 1834, and in 1856 he married Cynthia E. Lyon, to which union were born: Eugene A.; Agnes M., now Mrs. Ayer; Winnifred E.; and Florence Ellen.

ARTHUR WELCOME KINGSBURY. Among the successful and progressive business men of the town of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., Arthur Welcome Kingsbury occupies a prominent position and stands well with his fellow citizens.

The grandfather, Rufus Kingsbury, was born Jan. 30, 1806, in Vermont. His parents died when he was young, and he went to live with his uncle, Lathrop Hall. After he grew to manhood, he was engaged in teaming, first in South Hadley, then in Springfield, and later in Somers, and there he purchased a farm. Still later, he came to Stafford, where he farmed on Stafford street, settling in the town about 1860. In politics he was a Democrat, and died March 14, 1881, aged seventy-five years. May 30, 1836, he married Celia Smith, a daughter of Leonard Smith, of West Springfield, Mass., and to them were born; Melissa Ann, June 15, 1837, who married Jude R. Buck, of Stafford; George Rufus.

George Rufus Kingsbury was born May 9, 1839, in South Hadley Falls, Mass., and received his education in the schools of Somerville, Conn. When sixteen, he left school, and under David Hitchcock learned his trade of wool sorter, which he has followed ever since. In connection with his wool sorting business, he purchased a farm on Stafford street, of sixty-five acres, although he afterwards disposed of the greater portion of it. For the past thirty years he has been employed at the leading mills of his locality, having been with the Mineral Springs Company for sixteen years, and with the Phoenix mills since 1890. In every position he has held, Mr. Kingsbury has always given unqualified satisfaction.

Politically Mr. Kingsbury is a Democrat, but while he always does his duty as a citizen and casts his vote conscientiously, he has never had the time to devote to political affairs, and has not sought or desired office. For many years he has been an earnest member of the Congregational Church of Stafford Springs.

The marriage of Mr. Kingsbury occurred at Somers, Conn., March 1, 1860, when he was united to Mary Jane Davis, a daughter of Eber and Lucy (Cady) Davis, of Somers, Conn. To them were born: Melvia Melissa, Jan. 2, 1862, who married Wallace Jones, of Stafford; Arthur Welcome; George Everett, Sept. 14, 1866, who married Bessie Norwood Grant, of Holyoke, Mass., and is now living in Meriden, Conn., engaged in the undertaking business; Willie Edgar, May 24, 1869, who married Jennie McCaskill, of Newton, Mass., and is now engaged in the insurance business; Clarence Randolph, Nov. 14, 1874, who married Mary Rose, of Stafford, Conn., and now resides in Holyoke, Mass., where he is teller of the South Hadley National Bank.

Arthur Welcome Kingsbury was born July 9, 1864, in Somers, Conn., and came to Stafford, Conn., when still a child. At the age of nineteen he went to Milford, Mass., for Albert C. Kinney, where he spent three years, acquiring a practical knowledge of the marble business, for which he had always had an inclination. His business life had begun early, for he left the common schools when but fifteen or sixteen, and after working upon the farm for a short time, entered the Riverside Woolen Company's mills, remaining with them for two years, in the carding and finishing rooms. However, he inclined towards an outdoor occupation, and after learning his trade, he removed to Springfield, Mass., for two years, then to Thompsonville, and he and M. J. Liberty purchased the marble business of the Samuel Harris estate, under the firm name of Liberty & Kingsbury. After three years, however, he sold his interest to his partner, and returned to Stafford, this being in 1891. There he started in business at the upper end of Main street, and as his undertaking prospered, in the spring of 1893 he purchased a lot on Furnace avenue, and erected a commodious brick block, in which he has his quarters. Understanding so thoroughly as he does every detail of the work, he is favored by a large patronage, employs several skilled men, and is noted for doing the best work in his line not only in Stafford, but throughout the entire neighborhood. All of the higher branches of the work are done by Mr. Kingsbury himself, as he allows no one else to do the lettering, which is performed with compressed air, as is the polishing. As he produces so superior a grade of work, success has attended his efforts, and the future is very bright before him.

On March 6, 1889, he was married to Frances S. Chaffee, a daughter of Cheaney A. and Mary A. (Johnson) Chaffee, of Warren, Mass.; no children have been born to this union.

In 1900, Mr. Kingsbury opened a quarry near

West Stafford, of local granite for curbing, buildings and bases, and since then has filled contracts for building stone, as well as those for cut stone work.

Mr. Kingsbury is a member of the American Benefit Society, and Modern Woodmen of America, in which he takes an active part. For many years he has been a member of the Congregational Church, and is secretary and treasurer of the Sunday-school; his wife is also a member of the same denomination. In politics he is a Democrat, has served as chairman of the Citizens party for four years, and in 1901 was elected a member of the board of burgesses of the borough of Stafford Springs for two years; he takes an interest in local affairs, although with him business is the first consideration. Energetic, hard-working and a keen man of business, he stands well in the commercial world, and his pleasing manner and kindly disposition make for him a host of friends.

ROBERT EPHRAIM HYDE, one of the most enterprising and progressive young farmers of Ellington, comes from an old New England family, which has been numerous and creditably represented in the northern portions of Tolland county.

The ancestral history of the Tolland Hydes in America begins with the story of (I) William Hyde, an original proprietor of the town of Hartford as early as 1639, and two years later surveyor of highways. Removing to Saybrook for a time, about 1660 he became one of the thirty-five original proprietors of Norwich. He was a man of considerable importance among the settlers of the last-named community, and was frequently elected selectman. His death occurred in 1681.

(II) Samuel Hyde, son of William, was born about 1637 in Hartford, and married Jane Lee, of what is now Lyme, Conn., about 1659. Her father, Thomas Lee, came from England in 1641, and died on the voyage. Mr. Hyde and his wife moved to Norwich the year following their marriage, and their daughter, Elizabeth, was the first white child there born. Mr. Hyde died in 1677.

(III) Thomas Hyde, son of Samuel, who was born in 1672 in Norwich, married Mary, a daughter of Stephen Backus, of Norwich, in 1697. Mr. Hyde was a farmer, and settled in what is now Franklin, Conn., where his death occurred in 1755, following that of his wife some three years.

(IV) Capt. Jacob Hyde, son of Thomas, was born in 1703, in what is now Franklin, and in 1727 married Hannah, a daughter of Deacon Joseph Kingsbury, who was born in 1709. Capt. Hyde was a farmer, and located in Franklin.

(V) Ephraim Hyde, son of Capt. Jacob, was born in 1734, in Franklin, where he married Martha Giddings. They located in Stafford, where they lived and died.

(VI) Jacob Hyde, the great-grandfather of R. E., and the son of Ephraim, was born in 1767, in Stafford, and married Lydia Hall. They made their home in Stafford, where she died in 1844, and he three years later. They were farming people, and became the parents of the following children: Joseph, who married Maria Newkirk; Ephraim, the grandfather of R. E. Hyde, who was born March 17, 1794; Lydia, born in 1797, who was married in 1823 to Daniel Pinney, of Stafford, where she died in 1833; Jacob, Jr., born in 1802, who died in 1828; Hannah, born in 1808, who married Samuel Rockwell, Sept. 24, 1834, a shoemaker in Ellington, and later a merchant in Hartford. She lived to a great age, and died in Meriden, Oct. 13, 1893.

(VII) Ephraim H. Hyde, the grandfather of R. E., was born in Stafford, and came to Ellington about 1855, where he located on the farm now occupied by his grandson, R. E. There he died Feb. 22, 1873, and was buried in Ellington, having made a record as a successful farmer, a prominent citizen, and a man of good life and upright character. In his earlier life he voted the Whig ticket, but in his later years he became a Republican, and represented the old twentieth district in the State Senate one term, and the town of Ellington two terms in the General Assembly. In 1827 he married Nancy A. Shaw, a daughter of Julius Shaw. She was born in 1797, died in 1839, and was buried in Stafford. To them were born the following children: Marilda, born in 1830, who married Frank Rice for her first husband, and is now Mrs. Rudolph Fuller, of Somers; Jacob, born in 1832, who died in 1847; Julius, born in 1834, a merchant at Stafford, who was married in 1856 to Harriet Presbey, and died in 1864; Mary, born in 1836, who died in 1862; Elam S., born in 1839, who married Clarissa Underwood, of Tolland, was a merchant, and followed that calling in South Manchester, and at Rockville, dying in Ellington in 1891. Mrs. Clarissa Hyde died June 26, 1900. They had the following children: Clara, Jennie A. and Charles H. For his second wife Ephraim Hyde married Esther Foster in 1840. She was born in 1804, became the mother of Elbert F., May 12, 1841, and died June 20, 1882.

(VIII) Elbert Foster Hyde, father of R. E., was born in Stafford, and came to Ellington with his parents when a young man. His education was obtained in the district schools, and he remained on the home farm until July 30, 1862, when he enlisted in the Union army for a three years' term, being mustered into Co. D, 14th C. V. I. This regiment saw much hard service, and was known as the "Fighting Fourteenth." Mr. Hyde participated in many bloody battles, and was wounded in the Wilderness, May 6, 1864, and again at Petersburg, June 17, 1864, where he received a wound that eventually destroyed his left eye. He was discharged June 8, 1865, and returned to Ellington, to resume his work on the home farm. After the death of his parents he bought out the other heirs to the paternal estate, and continued its cultivation until his death, Jan. 3, 1900, which followed a decline of several years, and a period of two years of total blindness. The wound that caused the loss of his left eye was never entirely healed, and undoubtedly hastened his death. For this and other ill effects of army life he received a pension from the General Government. A successful farmer despite his failing health, he stood well in the community, and was elected first selectman several years. He was a Republican, and belonged to the U. O. G. C., Safety Commandery, No. 291, of Rockville; to the Burpee Post, No. 71, G. A. R., of Rockville; the Ellington Grange; and the Ellington Congregational Church.

Elbert Foster Hyde was married May 24, 1866, to Marriette R. Martin, a native of Ellington, and a daughter of Joseph and Cynthia (Smith) Martin. She died in 1882. To them were born six children: (1) Etta F., born Feb. 6, 1867, is the wife of Edward D. Little, of Somers, Conn., superintendent of the creamery in that town. They have two children, May Etta, and Stanley E. (2) Myrtie C., born March 13, 1868, married Charles B. Sikes, Jr., of Ellington, where he is a farmer and holds the position of postmaster; they have the following children: Mildred, Buel H., Iola S. and Elbert E. (3) Elbert E., born Feb. 22, 1873, graduated from the Rockville high school in 1891, and has become an electrical engineer. He was in Cuba previous to the Spanish-American war, and passing through Havana on his return to the United States, contracted yellow fever, which broke out on board ship. When he arrived in New York he was sent to the hospital, where he died. His remains were cremated and brought to Ellington for interment. (4) Robert Ephraim, whose name introduces this article, was born Dec. 9, 1875. (5) Millie M., born in 1877, died young. (6) Joseph, born in 1879, died in infancy. Elbert Foster Hyde was again married, to Mrs. Sarah A. Congdon, Feb. 5, 1884, who survives him.

(IX) Robert Ephraim Hyde was born Dec. 9, 1875, in the house in which he is now living. His education was obtained from the public schools, and he was graduated from the Rockville high school in 1894. While in attendance at this school he was prominent in athletics, and was captain of the high school football team, playing also on the high school base ball club. It track and other athletics he was a leader.

After leaving school Mr. Hyde returned home, and took up the work of the home farm, on account of his father's serious illness. After his father's death Mr. Hyde purchased the interests of the other heirs and became the owner of the entire homestead, which consists of 250 acres. This fine estate has been greatly improved under his wise and energetic management, as he has greatly increased the cattle on the place, and is extensively engaged in dairying. His father had a dozen cattle, and he has sixty. At the present time, beside being the largest cattle owner in Ellington, he is extensively engaged in tobacco culture, and owns a portable saw mill, putting on the market yearly considerable quantities of wood from that portion of his farm that is still heavily wooded. Mr. Hyde is a hard worker, pushing himself to the front by energetic and systematic work.

Mr. Hyde and Miss Ida T. Kibbe were married Dec. 31, 1896. She was born Nov. 4, 1875, in Ellington, and is a daughter of Horatio and Alice C. (Phelps) Kibbe. Their children are: Alice, born March 3, 1899; and Elbert F., born Jan. 18, 1901. Mr. Hyde is a Republican, and was elected a member of the board of selectmen in 1898 and in 1900, being one of the youngest men ever elected to that body in Ellington. Mr. Hyde belongs to Rockville Lodge, No. 18, A. O. U. W., and the Ellington Grange. Both Mr. Hyde and his wife belong to the Ellington Congregational Church.

ERNEST DEROY ROYCE. One of the enterprising young men of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., is Ernest Deroy Royce, who was born Jan. 4, 1874, in Willington, Conn. On the paternal side he traces his ancestry back to his great-grandfather, John Royce.

The paternal grandfather, Elnathan Royce, was born in Willington, Conn., and married Polly Maine, of Willington, Conn., and by occupation he was a farmer. The family of Elnathan Royce was: Betsey, John, Nathan, Julia and Amanda.

The maternal grandfather, William C. Maine, was born in Binghamton, N. Y., and came to Willington, Conn., when a young man, and there he married and had the following family: Phoebe A., mother of our subject; Jennie; George W. and Julius P., twins; Julia; Etta.

Nathan Dow Royce, the father of Ernest D., was born Nov. 18, 1833, in Willington, Conn., and died at the same place, Jan. 18, 1901. At various times during his life, he engaged in the butchering business, and also farmed extensively, purchasing a fine farm on Village Hill, Willington, of about 100 acres. In politics he was a Democrat, very staunch in his support of the party, and for a number of years served as assessor. He attended the Methodist Church of Stafford, of which his widow is a member.

On Jan. 28, 1855, he married Phoebe Annette Maine, daughter of William Comstock and Melinda (Sisson) Maine, of Willington, Conn. To Mr. and Mrs. Nathan D. Royce were born: (1) Herbert D., April 9, 1857, a butcher, married Ida J. West, and they have the following family: Herbert D.; Maine W.; Thurston W.; Fred A.; Jennie A.; Emma J., who died young. (2) Emma J. was born April 28, 1859, and married Frank J. Brown, of St. Charles, Ill., where he is a farmer, and they have one child, Herbert J. (3) Anna W., born March 25, 1863, married Frank H. Stone, of Northampton, Mass., where he is a grocer and meat dealer, and they have no children. (4) Nettie L., born Aug. 15, 1867, married Robert McNeill, of Rockville, a grocer, and they have three children: Mabel A.; Maine R. and Mildred R., twins. (5) Ernest D.

After attending the district schools of his native place, Mr. Royce was given the advantage of a high school course at Stafford Springs and he graduated from that institution in the class of 1890, being honored by being chosen valedictorian of his class of seventeen. After leaving high school, he entered Child's Business College at Springfield, Mass., from which he graduated in 1891, having taken the business course. Being well qualified for the work, Mr. Royce next taught school in District No. 7, in Willington for two terms, and then entered the employ of Joseph and John H. Mullen, in the Forest mill, as bookkeeper, which position he still retains, and is also general manager of the concern. Mr. Royce also was agent for the house, and, when in 1898, occurred the death of Mr. John H. Mullen, and the firm became T. F. Mullen & Co., his services were retained as before.

Socially Mr. Royce is a member of the order of Maccabees, of which he has been one of the leading supporters, and in which he has held many of the offices. He is also a member of the M. W. A. Although not a member, he attends the Methodist Church of Stafford Springs. In politics he is a Republican, but is not an office seeker. By his integrity and uprightness, he has made his way in the world and has a very bright future before him.

WILLIAM H. HAMMOND. The Hammond family is one of the oldest and most honorable in New England, where it has been perpetuated ever since its first settlement in 1636. Thomas Hammond, a native of England, born in Lavenham, County of Suffolk, came, in 1636, to America, and settled at Hingham, Mass. His wife, Elizabeth (Cason) Hammond, accompanied him, and they probably resided in Hingham until 1656, when he disposed of his property and moved to Newton, where he died in 1675, aged eighty-eight years. From this Thomas Hammond, the family in Windham county is supposed to have directly descended.

The first record of any Hammond in Windham county, Conn., is that of Josiah Hammond, whose first wife's name was Mary; after her death he was united with Abigail Durkee, Nov. 9, 1751. He resided in that part of Pomfret, which is now known as Hampton, on the farm which is occupied by his descendant, William H. Hammond.

Hezekiah Hammond, son of Josiah, was born Nov. 4, 1733, and was married Nov. 15, 1758, to Lucy, daughter of Ebenezer Griffin. He died Dec. 9, 1813, at the age of eighty years, and she died Oct. 20, 1824, aged eighty-five years. He was an extensive and successful farmer, and a man of influence in his community, and was considered a leading citizen of Hampton.

Col. Asahel Hammond, grandfather of William

H., and son of Hezekiah, was born May 10, 1778, in Hampton, and resided on the farm now occupied by William H., where he followed farming successfully for many years. He remained on this farm until a few years prior to his death, when he removed to Brooklyn, Conn., and there spent the rest of his life, dying Nov. 13, 1861. He lies at rest in the Brooklyn cemetery. Col. Hammond received his title because of his office in the State Militia. For many years he was president of the Windham County Mutual Fire Insurance Co., and he was also a director in the Windham County National Bank, being a man of affairs and ample means. In early life he was a Whig, and upon the formation of the Republican party he became attached to it. He attended the Congregational Church.

On Dec. 9, 1801, Col. Hammond married Betsey Robinson, who was born Jan. 9, 1779, and died May 25, 1865; she is buried in Brooklyn, Conn. Mrs. Hammond was a descendant of the noted John Robinson, of Leyden, and was a daughter of Joshua Robinson, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Children were born to Col. and Betsey (Robinson) Hammond as follows: Justin, who married Susan Peckham, became a physician, and resided in Dayville, Conn., where he died; Emeline, who married Daniel Wheeler, a farmer, resided in Plainfield, Conn.; Catherine married James Cain, a jeweler, and died in Brooklyn, Conn.; Josephine, who married Jedediah Leavens, died in Norwich, Conn.; George R. is mentioned below; Lucy, who married Amasa Hall, died in Norwich; Laura P., widow of John Franklin, resides in Brooklyn, Conn.; Henry Kirk, who married (first) Martha Fay, and (second) Sarah Greenleaf, was long engaged in the wholesale grocery business in Norwich, Conn., and died there.

George Robinson Hammond was born May 28, 1814, on the farm now occupied by his son, William H. Hammond. His education was acquired both in the common schools of Hampton, and Wilbraham Academy, and after his return home he engaged in teaching in various parts of Windham county, but after his marriage he settled on the home farm and gave his father his assistance for several years. Later he purchased the farm of his father, operating the same during the remainder of his active life.

In connection with farming he carried on extensive dairying, and for a long period was well known as a reliable cheese manufacturer. Mr. Hammond was particularly successful in the management of stock, handling many head during the year, and was also the largest sheep owner in the town. At that time the growing of sheep was a very important local agricultural industry, though it is now in a great measure carried on in the immense ranches of the far west.

In politics Mr. Hammond took a serious part, voting always with the Republican party, and taking a deep interest in all matters of importance to his locality. In 1867, he consented to represent the town of Hampton in the Legislature. Almost all the town offices were efficiently and honorably held by him, and for many years he was a justice of the peace. He was known locally as Capt. Hammond, that being his rank in the militia. Like all mentally strong men, he said right out what he meant, and was never afraid to live up to his words. Not only was he a deeply interested member, but also a very liberal supporter, of the Hampton Congregational Church, in which he held the office of deacon for several years. Capt. Hammond died of heart failure Jan. 16, 1892, and his remains were interred in the Hammond cemetery, at Hampton.

On March 30, 1840, Capt. George R. Hammond married Sarah Elizabeth Bottum, born Jan. 12, 1813, a native of Mansfield, Conn., daughter of Joshua and Phoebe (Adams) Bottum, the latter of whom was a native of Groton, Conn., and the former of whom was a prominent resident of the Mount Hope District of Mansfield. Mrs. Hammond died April 13, 1876, the beloved mother of eight children, namely: George Asahel, born May 26, 1841, married Jane Crandall, and is a member of the well known firm of Hammond & Knowlton, silk manufacturers of Putnam, Conn., of whom extended mention is made elsewhere; Henry Robinson, born Nov. 28, 1842, died Sept. 16, 1849; Betsey, born July 21, 1844, died Sept. 23, 1849; Charles Steadman, born Jan. 4, 1846, died March 28, 1847; Charles Storrs, born July 12, 1848, married Annie L. Scammel, and was long a bookkeeper in the employ of Hammond & Knowlton, at Putnam, dying Jan. 12, 1886; William Henry was born Jan. 4, 1850; Harriet Elizabeth, born Aug. 20, 1853, died April 30, 1854; and Lucy Ann, born April 26, 1856, married George E. Hart, an instructor in piano tuning in the Perkins Institute for the Blind, at South Boston, Mass., and died Dec. 17, 1886.

William Henry Hammond, who is an extensive and substantial farmer of Hampton, was born in the house he now occupies. His primary education was obtained in the common schools, and he attended the Norwich Free Academy one year, and Burnham's Business College at Springfield, Mass. After completing the latter course he returned to the home farm, and in company with his father engaged in farming and since the latter's death Mr. Hammond has continued in the same lines. He owns a large acreage of land, some of it located in Eastford and Pomfret, but the larger portion in Hampton. The improvements are modern, complete and substantial. He keeps, on an average, thirty milch cows for dairy purposes, besides other stock. In connection with his other business interests Mr. Hammond has become the agent for fertilizers and agricultural implements in his locality.

On Feb. 5, 1873, Mr. Hammond was married to Miss Alice M. Sharpe, born March 10, 1852, daughter of Horace Ingalls and Sarah (Austin) Sharpe, farming people. A family of four children came to Mr. and Mrs. Hammond, as follows: Arthur

Sharpe, born Sept. 8, 1874, died Feb. 23, 1884; Annie Eleanor, born Sept. 13, 1879, a graduate of the Putnam high school, class of 1897, and the Worcester Normal school, class of 1901, is now engaged in teaching; George Austin, born April 23, 1882, died June 30, 1883; Helen Storrs, born May 31, 1886, is a student at Woodstock Academy.

Like his father, Mr. Hammond has been prominently identified with the Republican party, has served on the board of selectmen for six years and has held many of the local offices. In 1886 he was honored by his fellow citizens with election to the State Legislature, and during his useful term in that body he served on the committee on Constitutional Amendments and Engrossed Bills. Mr. Hammond organized the first Farmers' organization in the Legislature, which secured the passage of the Oleomargarine bill, and also established the Storrs' title for the then Storrs School, now the Connecticut Agricultural College in Mansfield, besides many other minor bills as they came before the legislative body. Mr. Hammond has always taken a deep interest in agricultural matters, and has been prominent in his support of the Grange. He was a charter member of Little River Grange, and has served two terms as its master, being the second occupant of that office. Mrs. Hammond is also a member and interested in this work. Mr. Hammond was selected by the Grange as a member of the board of agriculture, of which he served two terms, and he also served efficiently three years as a trustee of the Connecticut Agricultural College. When the Pomfret Creamery Association was in existence, he served one year as manager. He has been a director in the New England Milk Producers Union for twelve years. Mr. Hammond belongs also to Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum. He and his family are liberal supporters of the Congregational church, which they attend.

SKINNER. The following is an account of the descent of the Skinners from the Welsh, in the north of England, in the time of Oliver Cromwell, about the year 1657.

There were four brothers, of whom one went to Scotland, one to Ireland, and two to America, landing at Plymouth, Mass. It is not certainly known how long it was before one or both of them arrived at Windsor, Conn. John Skinner, a descendant, who was born in 1674, married Sarah Porter, of Windsor, and moved to Colchester about 1700, and was one of the first settlers in that town, and afterward a deacon in the church at that place. He died there, aged sixty-six. His descendants were nine children, five sons and four daughters. The sons were: (1) John; (2) Daniel; (3) Joseph; (4) Aaron; (5) Noah. Joseph was an eminent Christian in the Baptist Church. Aaron and Noah were afterwards deacons of the church in Colchester. The daughters were: (6) Hannah; (7) Anna; (8) Elisabeth; and (9) Mary.

Daniel Skinner, son of Deacon John, was born in 1704, and married Elisabeth Hitchcock, who was born in 1706. They settled and continued to live in Colchester until April 10, 1770, when they moved to North Bolton, now Vernon, where he died May 16, 1787, aged eighty-three years. His widow, Elisabeth, died Sept. 3, 1791, aged eighty-five. Their descendants were four sons and four daughters: (1) Daniel, born in February, 1728, who died Feb. 24, 1806; (2) Elisabeth, born in March, 1733; (3) Sarah, born in 1735; (4) John, born in August 1748, who died Feb. 24, 1809, aged seventy-one; (5) Elijah, born in June, 1746; (6) Lydia, born in 1748, who died in 1753, aged five; (7) Hannah, born in 1750, who died June 6, 1807 (it is supposed she married an Arnold); and (8) Reuben, born in August, 1752.

Reuben Skinner, son of Daniel, was born in Colchester, and came to Vernon, settling near the Center, where he owned a farm of considerable extent. In early life he was a Whig, though in his later years he voted the Democratic ticket. He belonged to the Vernon Congregational Church. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, in the defense of Boston. He lived with his parents until their death in January, 1779. He married Margaret McCray, who was born in 1752, daughter of John McCray. Their descendants were eight children: (1) Daniel, born April 20, 1774, who died Oct. 11, 1776, aged two years; (2) Sarah, born April 8, 1776; (3) A child born in 1778, who died young; (4) Lovinia, born Jan. 2, 1779; (5) Anna, born June 22, 1781, who died May 3, 1795, aged fourteen; (6) Daniel (2), born March 9, 1784; (7) Mary, born Jan. 28, 1787, who died Aug. 1, 1818, aged thirty-one; (8) Reuben, born Aug. 31, 1790. Margaret McCray Skinner died Feb. 15, 1796, aged forty-four, and Reuben married for his second wife Hannah House, Jan. 1, 1799. Their children were: (1) Nelson, born June 10, 1800; and (2) Lewis Terril, born in September 1801, who died in May 1806. Hannah (House) Skinner died Oct. 8, 1812, aged fifty-five. Reuben was married the third time to Miss Kneeland, and died May 8, 1823, aged seventy.

Nelson Skinner, son of Reuben, was born on the home place in Vernon, and secured his education in the Center school, attending the Scantic Academy one term. He remained at home until his marriage, at which time his father gave him a part of the old homestead, on which he built a house and he lived there until he was thirty-eight years of age. That year he sold the property and bought in the Northwest District, where his grandson George Nelson Skinner now lives. This place, which consists of 150 acres, has been in the hands of the family since that time, with the exception of two years, when it was owned by John Brown.

Nelson Skinner lived on this farm until 1866, when he sold it and came to Scantic, there buying a place of seven acres on which he lived until 1877, when he broke up housekeeping and made his home with his children until his death, in Rockville. Mr. Skinner was a staunch Democrat, and a devout member of the Congregational Church, singing in the church choir for fifty years.

Nelson Skinner married Julia Baker, April 3, 1822. Julia (Baker) Skinner died Sept. 6, 1825, aged twenty-seven. There were two children by this marriage: (1) Lewis Terril, born Jan. 23, 1823; and (2) Harrietta Lovinia, who died Sept. 13, 1825, aged seventeen days. For his second wife Nelson married Fanny Skinner, in April, 1826. They had ten children: (1) Francis Lovinna, born Sept. 11, 1827; (2) Nelson Dwight, Jan. 9, 1830 (who died Jan. 30, 1883); (3) Julia Rosella, June 3, 1833; (4) George Trumbull, Oct. 13, 1835; (5) William Henry, Jan. 31, 1837, (who died Aug. 28, 1892); (6) Albert James, April 4, 1839, (deceased July 16, 1866); (7) Jerome Addison, July 1, 1841; (8) Jennie Sarah, Nov. 6, 1843; (9) Lorenzo Barton, Aug. 2, 1845 (deceased March 22, 1852); (10) Eliza, September 1847, (who died Jan. 1, 1850). Nelson Skinner married for his third wife Sarah Lord, who died in September 1875, and he died Feb. 2, 1880, aged seventy-nine.

Lewis Terril Skinner, son of Nelson, was born in Vernon Center, and obtained his education in the Vernon and Center schools. When he was fourteen years of age he entered the Frank mill at Rockville, where he worked for about a year, and then entered the employ of the New England mill, where he remained a year and a half, and worked as a carder and sorter. For some two years he was in the Dry Brook mill, and seven and a half years in the Somerville mill as a sorter. For a year and a half he was in the Hockanum mill, and then, in 1853, bought a farm of forty acres in East Windsor, where he engaged in farming, continuing mill work in the Windsorville woolen mills, where he was engaged some twenty years as a wool sorter. Since that time he has given his entire attention to his farm work and has added eight acres to his place, on which he raises tobacco and other articles suitable for a small farm, and at the same time conducts a dairy. Though he is quite advanced in years, Mr. Skinner is still active and vigorous, and enjoys an enviable reputation as an upright, honorable and industrious man, and a model in every way. In his politics he is a strong Democrat and has filled certain local offices to the pleasure and satisfaction of the people. For nine years in succession, from 1881, he was assessor of the town; was on the board of relief in 1880; and was clerk and treasurer of the Eleventh district for thirty-four years. Lewis Terril Skinner and his wife are members of the Union Congregational Church at Rockville. For nearly fifty years he has been a member of the church, and his life brings no shame to his profession.

Lewis Terril Skinner, son of Nelson, was married Nov. 27, 1845, to Maria Saphronia Wolcott, daughter of Hiram and Saphronia (Crane) We cott; she was born March 7, 1826, and died Feb. 14, 1881, aged fifty-four. She was a member of the Union Congregational Church, and for years was a devoted teacher in the Sunday school. (1) Charles Albert, their oldest son, born April 30, 1848, died Sept. 17, 1848. (2) Calvin Lewis was born Oct. 21, 1849 and is a farmer living at Broad Brook. He married for his first wife Ella R. Strong, who died March 1, 1873, aged eighteen, on the birth of her child, Ella Bell, who died Jan. 1, 1881. On April 8, 1874, Calvin Lewis married Jennie F. Pinney, and they had five children: Lottie Maria, born May 2, 1875, who married June 11, 1902, John McGregor, a dyer in Broad Brook woolen mills; Lewis Henry born July 25, 1880, who died March 30, 1895, aged fourteen years and eight months; Estella Marion, born Aug. 30, 1886; Harold Griswold, born June 22, 1894; and Gwendolyn Jennie, born July 6, 1896. (3) Ellen Maria, born April 28, 1854, was married March 31, 1880, to Charles Beaumont, agent for the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, and they have five children: Howard Eugene, born Dec. 8, 1882, who married Grace Etta Fairchild Nov. 20, 1902; Clayton Griswold, born July 16, 1884; Charles Elliott, born Sept. 13, 1885; Arthur Lucius, born Nov. 8, 1888; and Bertha Olive, born Aug. 4, 1890.

(4) GEORGE NELSON SKINNER was born Dec. 10, 1858, in East Windsor on the place purchased by his father in 1853, and his education was obtained at the Eleventh district school. Remaining at home until he was twenty-six years of age he helped his father in the care of the farm, and then he was married, settled on the old Skinner farm, which he rented for five years, and in 1890 bought it. This farm comprises 150 acres, and demands the entire attention of Mr. Skinner. Tobacco is his principal crop, and dairying is a leading line with him. He keeps about fifteen cows. In politics he is a Democrat.

George Nelson Skinner was married to Della Maria Hayes, daughter of Francis and Julia (Gilman) Hayes, born Sept. 3, 1861. To them were born George Raymond, Nov. 6, 1885; Ethel Maria, June 3, 1887 (who graduates in the class of 1904 from the Rockville high school); Luther Calvin, March 26, 1889; Lewis Terril, May 31, 1895; Ruth Ellen, Feb. 13, 1897; Mabell, May 29, 1899 (deceased May 30, 1899); and Della Frances, Aug. 16, 1902 (who died April 23, 1903, when eight months old).

Lewis Terril Skinner married for his second wife Emerett (Sadd) Pinney, Nov. 21, 1883, and had by this marriage one son, Reuben Allen, born Feb. 18, 1885.

Frances Lovinna Skinner, daughter of Nelson, married William R. Orcutt, of Rockville. He was selectman of the town of Vernon for several years, and a large owner of property, situated on Main and Market streets. He died in May, 1882. By this marriage there was one son, William F. Orcutt, born June 9, 1850, who married Ella L. Brown, Sept. 25, 1884. Two children were born to them: Mildred Frances, Aug. 9, 1885; and Dorothy, April 14, 1891.

Nelson Dwight Skinner, son of Nelson, born Jan. 9, 1830, died Jan. 30, 1883, aged fifty-three years. On June 2, 1852, he married (first) Julia E. Charter, who was born April 24, 1830, and died June 16, 1856, aged twenty-six. Two children were born to them: Clarence Dwight, born in March 1854, who died Aug. 29, 1854; Adelbert Dwight, born June 14, 1856, who died Oct. 16, 1856. Nelson Dwight for his second wife married Isabella Eliza Brown, Nov. 26, 1867. She was born July 11, 1848. The children by this marriage were three in number: (1) Caroline Bell, born Sept. 28, 1868, was married Oct. 20, 1887, to Emerson J. Terrell, postmaster and merchant at Beacon Falls, who died in June, 1896, leaving one child, Charlotte Isabella, born Nov. 27, 1894. Caroline Bell married for her second husband, Emory Lewis Terrell, Jan. 19, 1898. (2) Charlotte Eliza, born April 19, 1873, married Lyman Twining Tingier, Nov. 26, 1893. He is a lawyer of Rockville, clerk of the superior court and judge of the police court. Their son was born Nov. 28, 1894, and died in March 1896. (3) Dwight Nelson, born Dec. 13, 1878, is a student of Baltimore Medical College.

Julia Rosella Skinner, daughter of Nelson Skinner, married George J. Barrows (now deceased), of Hartford, Sept. 4, 1861. They had one child that died in infancy.

George Trumbull Skinner, son of Nelson, married Harriett Walker Dart, Aug. 15, 1859, and one daughter was born to them, Harriett Louise, Aug. 5, 1863; she married Albert C. Dart, March 23, 1886, and had one child, Eula Marion, born March 12, 1895.

William Henry Skinner, son of Nelson, a merchant of Rockville for a number of years, conducted a wholesale and retail meat market, which he sold, and then was in the furniture and undertaking business up to his death on Aug. 28, 1892, aged fifty-five. On Dec. 27, 1865, he married Hannah Ann Gould, and their children were: Albert Gould, born Oct. 8, 1868, died in December, 1870, aged two. Walter Henry, born Sept. 1, 1871, is the proprietor of the Park street livery stables; he married Martha C. Aborn, Dec. 25, 1894, and their children are: Lucile Anderson, born Oct. 30, 1898, and Everett William, born Jan. 9, 1893. Freddie D., born Nov. 20, 1872, is now in the employ of the Adams Express Company; he married Esther Jane Hinchliffe, Aug. 6, 1898, and their children are: Alden Gould, born Oct. 14, 1899, and Bernace Lauton, born Nov. 3, 1902.

Albert James Skinner, son of Nelson, born April 4, 1839, died July 16, 1866, aged twenty-seven. He married Martha M. Sears, and one son, Howard, was born to them in 1866, and died in June 1887, aged twenty-one years. [Compiled by Mr. G. N. Skinner, of Rockville, Connecticut.]

CHARLES W. S. FROST, M. D., whose scientific acquirements, upright character and devotion to his profession have given him a leading place among the physicians of Waterbury, Conn., was born in that city Dec. 22, 1857, a son of Warren S. Frost, who traces his ancestry to Samuel Frost, of England.

Samuel Frost came to America from the mother country in 1700, and on March 21, 1733, wedded Naomi Fenn, of Wallingford.

David Frost, son of Samuel and Naomi, was born in Southington, Conn., Sept. 16, 1743, and died Dec. 15, 1812. During the war of the Revolution he was a soldier in the Continental army. He married Mary Beach Nov. 6, 1761, a daughter of Joseph Beach, a prominent man of his day.

Enoch Frost, son of David, was born in Southington, Jan. 8, 1765, and died May 27, 1822. His entire life was passed as a farmer. Anna Culver was his wife, and they became the parents of six children: Anna, Stephen C., Selah, Nancy, Enoch W., and Eunice.

Selah Frost, the Doctor's grandfather, was born in Waterbury, Feb. 2, 1798, and died in 1848. He was engaged as a merchant in Torrington. His wife was Ursula Brooker, and they reared a family of two children: Mary and Warren S., the father of the Doctor. Mary married George Mason, who is now deceased.

Warren S. Frost was born in Torrington, Jan. 19, 1827, and his long and useful life was terminated April 20, 1899. He married Miss Edna J. Spring, of Collinsville, Conn., a daughter of Thomas Spring, who was born in Granby, Conn., and was a farmer and wheelwright. The Springs are of English extraction and the first representative of the family on the American shores came over about 1680. Mrs. Edna J. Frost died Sept. 20, 1897, and is remembered as a woman of far more than the usual gifts and attractions. She was a good wife to her husband, and a wise and helpful mother to her children. Mr. Frost was a Republican and served many years in the Waterbury common council. The family were all connected with the Congregational Church.

Dr. Charles W. S. Frost spent his boyhood days in Waterbury, where he acquired his elementary and general English education in the public schools and the Waterbury English and Classical School. He entered Yale Medical School in 1876, and graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York City, in 1880. His vacations were spent in the hospitals of the great city, and soon after his graduation he came to Waterbury, opening an office here. The summer of 1880 marked the beginning of a singularly successful professional career. Dr. Frost and Miss Jennie G. Davis were married Feb. 5, 1880. By this union was born one daughter, Edna J. Dr. Frost was again married Dec. 31, 1891, to Mrs. Minnie L. Ryder, the daughter of Leander Wright, of West Ashford, Conn. Two children have been born to this union: Barbara and Sela. The Doctor is a Republican, and was president of the board of health for two years, of which he has been a member since 1887. He is city and town health officer and is a member of the staff of Waterbury Hospital. Dr. Frost was secretary of the Waterbury Medical Society for eleven years, and is a member of both the State and County Medical Societies. On the membership roll of the Masonic fraternity, the K. of P., the Red Men, the R. A., the Heptasophs, the K. O. T. M., the O. U. A. M., the Sons of the American Revolution and several social organizations, such as the Waterbury Club, and Golf Association, the name of Dr. Frost is found; and wherever he appears he is sure to be a welcomed presence. Dr. Frost is a member of the first Congregational Church, and is a man of fine character and superior professional standing.

AUGUSTUS BASSETT. During the busiest part of his well directed life, Augustus Bassett was identified with business interests in Danielson, Windham county, where his death occurred several years after his retirement, Dec. 25, 1899. He was not only a shrewd financier and public-spirited citizen, but he performed the inestimable service to those around him of making them forget their troubles, and look on the happy side of life. He was a delightful wit; a gifted raconteur, and had the faculty of appreciating a joke at his own expense. He enjoyed music and flowers and the beautiful things of this world, and carried around with him a disposition which sought out the pleasant rather than the disagreeable. Such have always a host of friends, and build up memories in the hearts and minds of all who know them. Mr. Bassett was born on the paternal farm in Killingly, Jan. 21, 1821, a son of John, and grandson of John Bassett, the latter of whom lived and died on his farm in the northern part of Killingly.

John Bassett, the father of Augustus, was born in Killingly, and after the death of his parents succeeded to the possession of the home farm. He built the house now standing on the farm, and in the course of time greatly increased his landed possessions. He was a general farmer and stock raiser, and through hard work, economy, and natural thrift became one of the largest land owners and most successful business farmers in the town. His personal appearance carried out the general impression of worth conveyed through his attainments, for he was more than six feet tall, of splendid proportions, and was considered very fine looking. In his prime he could accomplish an enormous amount of hard work, more than any of his sons were ever capable of, and his unusual activity remained with him until a short time before his death, June 22, 1859, at the age of eighty-nine years and ten months. He was a Whig politically, and held a few town offices, and he was a devout member of the Congregational Church, towards the support of which he was a liberal contributor. He had much to do with the building and subsequent maintenance of the Dayville church. Twice married, the first wife of Mr. Bassett was formerly Lucy Walker, of Killingly, who died Oct. 16, 1814, at the age of forty-three. She was the mother of seven children, all of whom became respected and useful members of the community of Killingly. For a second wife Mr. Bassett married Susan Grinman, of Thompson, Conn., who died Dec. 31, 1852, at the age of seventy-two. The children of this union were as follows: Betsey, the wife of Abel Williams, who was taken sick on the voyage to Europe, and after her death in London, was interred in Greenwood cemetery, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Augustus.

In his youth Augustus Bassett saw more of the work than the pleasure or profit of farm life, and when comparatively young began to cherish ambitions remote from the occupation of his forefathers. Notwithstanding that his labors extended from the rising to the setting of the sun, he managed to qualify as a teacher in the public schools, and at the age of fifteen had started upon a career of teaching, many of his pupils being both older and larger than himself. In the meantime his wages were drawn by his father, who, up to his twenty-first year, placed them unbeknown in the bank, to the credit of his son. This fact did not develop until after the death of the older man, and it was then found that his parental forethought had resulted in a nice little sum. While teaching Augustus worked on the farm in the summer time, his father having given him the farm as an inducement to continue to devote his life to that occupation. He remained in possession of the homestead until after the Civil war, and then, because of his aversion to country life, sold the farm, and purchased a saw and grist mill of Deacon Ezekiel Burlingame, at Attawaugan. For about a dozen years he made a fair success of his milling business, eventually disposing of the mill to Charles Young, after which he purchased a grain and feed store in Danielson, of Deacon Burlingame. In the feed business he was ably assisted by his son, Charles W., and continued to do business in a room in the Exchange Block, until the death of his son. He then disposed of the enterprise, and lived comparatively retired for the rest of his life. His declining years knew no bitterness because of long continued illness, but he rather maintained a cheerful demeanor, and the same effervescent jollity of mood in the wake of his declining powers. Up to the last he liked to be surrounded with friends, and was particularly partial to hitching up his horses and taking his friends to drive.

On May 18, 1848, Mr. Bassett married Sarah Jane Walker, born in Medway, Mass., Aug. 9, 1820, a daughter of Clark and Sarah (Lovering) Walker. Clark Walker was a successful farmer of Medway, and himself and wife lived retired for many years, eventually dying at the home of their son-in-law, in Danielson. To Augustus Bassett and wife were born the following children: (1) Anna Lovering, born Sept. 7, 1849, was a graduate of Aiken Seminary, owned by her aunt, Mrs. Williams, and died unmarried, July 29, 1887. (2) Fred Eugene, born June 23, 1853, was professionally trained in medicine under Dr. Joseph E. Winters, of New York City, and at the College of Physicians & Surgeons, New York, from which latter institution he graduated with honors. He has a very large and lucrative practice at Rye, N. Y., and is a man of means and extended popularity. Oct. 15, 1884, Dr. Bassett married Harriet L. Williams, of which union there are three children: Wilfred Walker, born Oct. 25, 1885; Dorothea Lovering, born April 29, 1889; and John Clarke, born Oct. 29, 1890. (3) Charles Warren, born Jan. 1, 1856, was his father's assistant in business, and met death by drowning at Thompson, Conn., while out with a party of friends, Aug. 13, 1875. (4) Lewis Augustus, born Dec. 24, 1859, died Sept. 6, 1860. (5) Nellie Walker, born May 30, 1861, and died Feb. 14, 1865. (6) John Clarke, born Aug. 26, 1864, attended the schools of Danielson, and for a time was traveling salesman for the Jacobs Manufacturing Company, of Danielson. He later went to Langford, S. Dak., and became interested in the banking business with Edwin Davis, formerly of Danielson, as cashier of the Langford National Bank. He later established the Aberdeen National Bank, at Aberdeen, S. Dak., and at the present time is president of both the above mentioned institutions. He resides at Aberdeen, and is a very successful man and fine financier. On June 29, 1892, Mr. Bassett married Harriet J. Galbraith, of Minneapolis, Minn., and of this union there are four children: Ruth Lovering, born May 17, 1893; Helene Walker, born Sept. 5, 1894; Marjorie, born Aug. 2, 1896; and Clarke Davis, born Nov. 9, 1898. Mrs. Bassett, beloved for her many admirable personal qualities, and rich in the possession of many well spent years, retained her mental and physical alertness, until her death, Sept. 6, 1902.

EZRA ALLEN GALLUP, one of the most enterprising of the descendants of the emigrant ancestor, John Gallup, who came from the Parish of Mosterne, Dorsetshire, England, in 1630, is a prominent farmer and dairyman of Sterling, Windham county, and has a farm of 150 acres in the southwestern part of the town. He is the eldest son of Daniel A. and Barbara P. (Gordon) Gallup, and was born in Sterling, Sept. 23, 1844.

In his youth Mr. Gallup experienced the average hardships and difficulties which entered the lives of the youth of his time, and his education at the district schools was but incidental to the arduous duties to be performed on the home farm. When about twenty years old he spent a year at farm work in the town of Griswold, Conn., and upon returning to Sterling, rented a farm upon which he has since lived. This same farm he was able to purchase in 1870, and he has improved upon the original seven cows and yoke of oxen to the extent of possessing at the present time a farm unrivaled for general production, and stocked with twenty-five head of cattle and four horses. Dairying and general farming have been carried on successfully up to the present time, and in the meantime Mr. Gallup has branched out into various lines of activity, and for a period of five years operated an acid mill, the enterprise being discontinued when the commodity became unmarketable. During 1877-'78 he engaged extensively in the horse and cattle business, purchasing his stock in New York and Canada and selling to local buyers.

The wife of Mr. Gallup was formerly Olive A. Knight, born in Johnston, R. I., July 31, 1843, a daughter of Benoni and Celia (Austin) Knight. Benoni Knight was born in Johnston, R. I., April 10, 1813, and died Jan. 27, 1877; his wife, formerly Celia Austin, was born in Coventry, R. I., in September, 1815, and died Feb. 11, 1864. To Mr. and Mrs. Gallup have been born the following children: (1) John Waterman was born July 2, 1867. (2) Arthur Allen, born Jan. 24, 1869, married Ethel Roscine Young, who was born June 24, 1876, in Sterling, Conn., and they have two children—Ruth Elizabeth, born May 6, 1898, in Killingly, Conn., and Merrill Knight, born Feb. 13, 1901, in Killingly, Mrs. Gallup's father, Erastus Short Young, born in Sterling, Conn., Feb. 20, 1820, died in 1890; he was deacon of the North Sterling Congregational Church for a number of years. Her mother, Adeline Elizabeth (Mitchell) Young, was born in Sterling, Conn., Sept. 7, 1850. (3) Frank Ezra, born April 1, 1872, is a farmer of Sterling, and married Hattie Alice Frink, Dec. 25, 1898; their son, Frank Ezra, was born June 3, 1900. (4) Jennie Augusta, born Oct. 21, 1873, married Oct. 19, 1893, Dudley B. Williams, of Moosup, Conn., and has had four children: Harold Gallup, born Dec. 21, 1894; Jennie Augusta, Jan. 2, 1898; Lester Gordon, Aug. 4, 1900, died Feb. 10, 1903; Helen Stoddard, Dec. 17, 1902. (5) Edward Earl, born March 15, 1875, married June 27, 1901, Lucinda Etta Brown, of Voluntown, Conn.; they have one child, Madeline B., born June 13, 1902. (6) Lena Gordon, born Sept. 8, 1876, lives at home, and has engaged in teaching school. (7) Daniel Benoni, born May 7, 1884, is living at home. Mr. Gallup is an industrious and worthy member of the community of Sterling, and his public spirit and uprightness have won him the confidence of all who know him.

(1) John Gallup, emigrating ancestor of the large number of families bearing his name in America, came hither from the Parish of Mosterne, Dorsetshire, England, sailing from Plymouth, England, March 20, 1630. The good ship "Mary and John" arrived safely at Nantasket, now Hull, Mass., May 30, 1630, the wife and children of the emigrant coming to this country in the year 1633. John settled in Dorchester, but soon after became a resident of Boston, where he was admitted to the First Church Jan. 6, 1634, and was made a freeman in the same year. He was the owner of Gallup Island, where he had a snug and profitable farm, and he also had other lands in different parts of the district, besides a house in Boston. He also was a skillful mariner, and well acquainted with the Boston harbor, and after the settling of Rhode Island and Connecticut his vessel furnished about the only means of communication between these two Colonies. In September, 1633, John Gallup achieved great distinction by piloting the ship "Griffin," of 300 tons burden, through a newly found channel, the vessel containing among its 200 odd passengers such notables as Rev. John Cotton, Rev. John Harker, and Rev. Mr. Stone. Capt. John Gallup died in Boston, Jan. 11, 1650, his wife, Christobel, surviving him until Sept. 27, 1655. The children of this couple were: John, Joan, Samuel, and Nathaniel, all born in England.

(II) John Gallup (2), son of the settler, came with his mother, two brothers and a sister to America in 1633, joining the husband and father in Boston. In 1643 he married Hannah Lake, daughter of John and Margaret Lake. In early life he showed evidences of the brave and courageous nature which afterward distinguished him as an Indian fighter. With the Massachusetts military forces he, with his father, engaged in the Pequot war, and he bore himself so bravely that the General Court of Connecticut gave him 100 acres of land. John Gallup (2) located at New London, Conn., about 1650, and in 1654 took his family to the east side of the Mystic river, now Stonington, where was located the generous land gift. He represented the town in the General Court in 1665-67, and although he was over sixty years of age when King Philip's war broke out, fading faculties had not dimmed his ardor. He courageously assumed the rank of captain and led his men into the fearful swamp fight at Narragansett, and he was one of the six noble and valorous captains who gave up their lives in that hopeless struggle. He was esteemed as an intrepid fighter and brave gentleman, and his death was a great blow to the community. His children were as follows: Hannah, born in Boston, Sept. 14, 1644, married Stephen Gifford, of Norwich, June 18, 1672; John; Esther, born in New London, March 24, 1653, married Dec. 17, 1674, Henry Hodges, of Taunton; Benadam, born in Stonington, Conn., in 1655; William, born in 1658; Samuel; Christobel, married Dec. 31, 1677, Peter Crary, of Groton, Conn.; Elizabeth, married Henry Stevens, of Stonington; Mary, married John Cole; and Margaret, married Joseph Culver, of Groton, Connecticut.

(III) John Gallup (3), son of John (2), was born in 1646, married in 1675, Elizabeth Harris, of Ipswich, Mass., and settled in Stonington on land granted his father by the government in consideration of his valuable services during the Indian wars. John Gallup (3) was prominent and respected, and represented his town in the General Court in 1685-96-97-98; he also served with his father in King Philip's war, probably being present at the terrible Narragansett fight. However, he was an excellent interpreter, and afterward became friendly with the Indians. In 1701 a committee was appointed to renew the bounds of the Winthrop lands purchased at Plainfield, Conn. This committee consisted of prominent men of the town, and a large body of Indians who acted as guides, Mr. Gallup acting as interpreter on the occasion. Although Mr. Gallup possessed land in Plainfield, he never moved there, but on the contrary lived at the old home in Stonington, where his death occurred April 14, 1735. To himself and wife were born the following children: John, born in 1676; Thomas, born in 1682, married Hannah French; Martha, born April 2, 1683, married John Gifford, of Norwich, Conn.; Samuel, born Oct. 9, 1687, married Mehitable Blount; Elizabeth, baptized July 14, 1689; Nathaniel, born in 1692, and married Margaret Gallup; William, baptized May 26, 1695, died at Voluntown, Conn., Aug. 18, 1735; and Benjamin, born Nov. 1, 1696, married Theody Parke.

(IV) John Gallup (4), son of John (3), born at Stonington, Conn., in 1676, married in 1709, Elizabeth Wheeler, born in Stonington in 1683, a daughter of Isaac and Martha (Park) Wheeler, and granddaughter of Thomas Wheeler, who came from England to America in 1630. About 1710 Mr. Gallup removed to Voluntown, and was one of the very early settlers of that locality, where he took up a large tract of land, which to-day is a treasured possession of the family. At the time of its organization in 1721 he was chosen a member of the first board of selectmen of the town, and his name is mentioned in all the important transactions of the community during his lifetime. He was ruling elder of the First Church, Presbyterian, and was captain of the first militia company in 1726. His death occurred in 1755, his wife having preceded him in 1735. Their children were as follows: William, born Sept. 2, 1710, died Feb. 10, 1734; Isaac, born Feb. 24, 1712; Elizabeth, born April 9, 1714, married Zachary Frink; Martha, born Sept. 3, 1716, married Thomas Douglass; Hannah, born Jan. 29, 1719, married Manuel Kinne; Dorothy, born March 22, 1721, married John Reed; and John, born June 9, 1724.

(V) John Gallup (5), son of John (4), born in Voluntown, Conn., June 9, 1724, married, April 9, 1747, Hannah Frink, and died in Voluntown, April 6, 1801, his wife's death occurring Dec. 1, 1773. He spent his entire life in Voluntown, where were born the following children: Hannah, born Feb. 15, 1748; William, born Oct. 8, 1749, died Aug. 8, 1835; John, born July 23, 1750, died Jan. 7, 1789; Elizabeth, born June 2, 1753; Daniel, born March 7, 1754, died Nov. 17, 1776; Wheeler, born Jan. 20, 1755; Jabish, born May 12, 1759, died June 3, 1840; Samuel, born April 7, 1760, died Oct. 13, 1856, married Lucy Averill, born March 16, 1760, died Feb. 21, 1846; Nathan, born Feb. 11, 1763, died June 1, 1829; and Dorothy, born June 11, 1765, died Sept. 20, 1785.

(VI) Nathan Gallup, son of John (5), was born in Voluntown, Feb. 11, 1763, married, Jan. 19, 1786, Jerriah Gallup, daughter of Benjamin and Amy (Kinne) Gallup. Mr. Gallup settled in Sterling on what is called Ekonk Hill, where he prospered as a farmer, and where he died, June 1, 1829, his wife following to the other world Oct. 31, 1838.

(VII) John Gallup (6), son of Nathan, was born in Voluntown, Feb. 25, 1787, married, May 9, 1816, Mathilda Kinne, and settled in the south western part of the town on Ekonk Hill, where he died April 10, 1864, at the age of seventy-seven years. He was a highly esteemed member of the Baptist Church, and he was upright, pious, genial, and faithful. In fact he was one of the very few against whom no darts of unkindness or criticism are ever sent, for his heart was filled with love for all that lives and breathes. His last illness, arising from a malignant cancer, was fraught with untold suffering, yet he bore it all without murmuring, and seemed at all times to have his faith set upon the final outcome of things rather than the everyday suffering and pain. His last words were: "Jesus is coming to take me to himself. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." His wife, Mathilda Kinne, was born in August, 1800, and died in December, 1885. She bore him the following children: Daniel A.; Emily, the wife of Charles G. Williams, of Brooklyn, Conn.; Rachel, the wife of Minor Peckham, of Providence; Hulda, the wife of Joseph Tyler, of Griswold, Conn.; and Ora, the wife of Elisha Park, of Providence.

(VIII) Daniel A. Gallup, son of John (6), was born in Sterling, March 21, 1819, and during his years of activity was a successful and practical farmer. His home was noted for its hospitality and good cheer and was one of the popular social centers of the neighborhood. Politically Mr. Gallup was a stanch Democrat and represented the town two terms in the Legislature. He was a supporter of the Congregational Church at Ekonk, of which his wife was an active member and worker. He died June 22, 1888. His wife, Barbara P. Gordon, daughter of Daniel and Sarah Campbell Gordon, whom he married Oct. 1, 1843, was born in Voluntown, in January, 1825, and died April 4, 1885. Daniel Gordon was born Aug. 14, 1782, and died June 2, 1856, while his wife was born Aug. 15, 1784, and died April 8, 1863. To Daniel Gallup and his wife were born three children: Ezra Allen, born Sept. 23, 1844; Lucy, the wife of James J. Williamson, of Woodstock, born Sept. 30, 1847; and George H., born Nov. 5, 1860.

GEORGE H. BACKUS, of the firm of Backus Bros., merchants, of South Windham, Windham county, is a descendant of one of the sixteen landholders who obtained land from the Indians.

William Backus, a native of England, who came to America and located at Saybrook in 1638, was the common ancestor of the Norwich and Windham families of the name. In 1660 he removed to Norwich, as one of the original proprietors of that place, was made a freeman in 1663, and died in 1664. His two sons were William and Stephen.

Lieut. William Backus, son of William the emigrant, was an original proprietor of Norwich, Conn., and was one of its most enterprising settlers. Later he became one of the proprietors of Windham. He was one of the legatees of Joshua Uncas, from which estate he received three shares of 1,000 acres each. He married Elizabeth, a daughter of Mr. Pratt, of Saybrook, and she died in 1730. His death occurred in 1720. Their children were: William, John, Sarah (who married Edwin Culver), Samuel, Joseph, and Nathaniel.

William Backus (3), son of Lieut. William and the eldest of his family, was born in 1660, and settled in Windham as early as 1693, for his name is found in the first of twenty-two inhabitants made in that year. Previous to this his father gave him one of his 1,000 acre tracts, which was located at Windham Center. On Aug. 31, 1692, he married Mary Dunton, and he died Jan. 25, 1742. They had the following family: Samuel, Abigail (who died young), Mary, Daniel, Harriet, Peter, William, Stephen and Ephraim.

Samuel Backus, the eldest child of William (3), was born July 5, 1693, and was married Dec. 2, 1719, to Sarah Gard. They lived in Windham, and had the following named children: Mary, who died at the age of seventeen; Lemuel, who was killed by the Indians; Adonizah; Nathaniel; Abigail, who married Samuel Huntingdon, of Mansfield; and Ann.

Nathaniel Backus, son of Samuel, was born in 1728, and married Oct. 7, 1753, Elizabeth Hebard, a daughter of Robert Hebard. Nathaniel died Dec. 14, 1815, his wife in 1813, at the age of eighty-three. To them were born: Elijah, who moved to Vermont; Huldah; Calvin; Luther; and others.

Luther Backus, son of Nathaniel, born in 1772, died in 1855. He was three times married, and was the father of twenty-one children, the largest family ever reared in Windham. His third wife was Melinda Lyman, by whom he had a son when he was over seventy years of age.

Harry Backus, the eldest in the large family of Luther, was married Jan. 3, 1819, to Susannah D. Sawyer, daughter of Daniel and Susannah (Dennison) Sawyer, and their children were: Julia Ann, Albert Henry, John Christopher, Hulda Maria, Eliza Elizabeth, Luther F., Mary M., Chester H., and George Abbe. Four of this generation still survive: Eliza E., Mrs. George Severance, of Hudson, Iowa; Chester H.; George A.; and Mary M., Mrs. Loydon, who was born Dec. 3, 1830. Harry Backus, died in 1871.

Luther F. Backus, the father of George H., was born in Windham March 5, 1828, and died in South Windham Aug. 7, 1883. He married Ellen Canniff, a native of Ireland, who died May 1, 1895, at the age of seventy-five years. Both were buried in the Windham cemetery. The father spent his whole life in the town of Windham, engaged in farm work, and for some thirty years followed milling. His last employment was as engineer for the Adams Nickel Plating Company, of South Windham. In politics he was a Democrat, became well and favorably known, and was one of the substantial and reliable citizens of his community. He was the father of the following named children; (1) William Christopher, born June 15, 1854, is mentioned further on. (2) Luther Edwin, born Jan. 29, 1856, married Annie Shay, and has three children—Helen, Florence and William. His business is that of machinist for the Smith Winchester Co., of South Windham. (3) George Harlow is mentioned below. (4) James Henry died in infancy. (5) Charles Henry, born Jan. 2, 1865, is in the employ of Backus Bros. He married Carrie Shaddock, and has two children, Hazel M. and Charles H., Jr.

George Harlow Backus was born Sept. 30, 1858, at South Windham, Conn., where he has always lived. Until he was sixteen years old he continued at school, and then became receiving and shipping clerk for the Adams Nickel Plating Company, of South Windham remaining until the spring of 1879, when he became a clerk for E. H. Holmes, at South Windham. Thus he continued until March, 1880, at which time, in association with his brother, William C., he purchased the business of Mr. Holmes, and the firm has ever since that time controlled the trade not only of Windham, but of the surrounding country. They do a general merchandise business and also carry on a coal yard, and rank among the leading business firms of their part of the county.

On July 13, 1887, Mr. Backus was married to Lizzie Ann Lamb, a native of the town of Norwich, born Aug. 20, 1867, daughter of Charles Henry and Caroline Calista (Taft) Lamb. To this union has come one daughter, Calista Ellen, born Feb. 4, 1900.

In politics Mr. Backus has always been a faithful Democrat, and he has served in a number of local offices, having been a justice of the peace, and postmaster at South Windham for a term of four years under President Cleveland's second administration. He also has been a member of the board of relief, was two years town collector for the east division, and is a notary public.

Concerning the standing of the firm of Backus

Bros., we can close this article in no better way than by quoting from a recent publication: "Among the mercantile houses of high character that of Backus Bros., at South Windham, is a leading representative. This firm has been in business here for the past twenty-two years, and they handle a complete line of staple and fancy groceries, provisions of all kinds, canned goods and all articles that are required to meet the wants of the trade derived from all classes of people. They also carry a line of baked stuffs, and handle a complete stock of men's working clothing, another branch of the business being the selling of clothing by samples. In the rear of the store is located a coal yard conducted by this enterprising firm, and with them is also located the office of the Postal Telegraph and the Southern New England Telephone.

"The individual members of the firm are William C. and George H. Backus, both of whom are gentlemen of excellent business attainments, are popular socially, and are respected for their probity, honor and business acumen. George H., gives his attention to the store, while William C. attends to the duties of station agent for the Central Vermont railroad, which position he has held for twenty-eight consecutive years. They are assisted in the store by their brother Charles H., who is well known and popular with all our people."

WILLIAM CHRISTOPHER BACKUS, agent for the Central Vermont railroad at South Windham, and a member of the firm of Backus Brothers, general merchants, South Windham, was born there June 15, 1854. He was educated in the district schools and at an early age worked at farming, so continuing until 1874, when he learned telegraphy. He obtained employment as telegrapher and agent with the Central Vermont railroad, which position he has filled with general satisfaction for the past twenty-nine years. In 1880 he became a member of the firm of Backus Brothers which is conducted by his brother George H., at South Windham. Mr. Backus is a life long Democrat, and he was nominated by his party as representative to the State Legislature in 1902, being elected by a handsome majority in a Republican stronghold. He is popular with all classes, and is liberal in church views. On Nov. 22, 1877, he married Harriet A. Hatch, daughter of Samuel Orville and Eunice T. (Armstrong) Hatch, of South Windham. [A full history of the Hatch family will be found in the sketch of Jonathan Hatch, of South Windham.] Samuel Orville Hatch, father of Mrs. Backus, was born in Lebanon, Conn., June 22, 1809, a brother of Jonathan Hatch, of South Windham. He lived in South Windham, where he died June 13, 1877; he was buried in the cemetery there. He married Eunice T. Armstrong, and they had the following children: E. Eliza; John O., who died Sept. 23, 1885, married Edna L. Gavitt; Jonathan A.; Mary A.;

Henry Chester, married Lucretia Johnson; Harriet A. married William C. Backus; Adella B. married Eugene Kinne; Charles P.; Carrie L.; and Lillie L.

FRANCIS. (I) David Francis was born June 15, 1766, and died Sept. 21, 1826, at Erie Village, N. Y. He married Clarissa Everett, who was born Oct. 1, 1770, and died Jan. 31, 1849. Their children were: (1) Betsey, born Oct. 11, 1789, married Seth Sherwood and died in 1851. (2) John, born Oct. 22, 1792 is mentioned below. She married a Mr. Walton in 1825, and died in 1845, aged forty-one years. (6) Hiram, born Jan. 12, 1809, settled in Corey, Pa., engaged early in the oil business, and became very wealthy. The father, David Francis, served in the war of the Revolution, enlisting from Goshen, Connecticut.

(II) John Francis, born Oct. 22, 1792, in Windham, Conn., died in Canterbury. He spent part of his boyhood with an uncle, John Francis, who came from Boston to Windham in 1796, married Irene Walden, and then settled in Canterbury. He married in 1812, Esther Walden, who was born Oct. 17, 1788, in Windham, a daughter of John Walden, and a direct descendant of Walter Palmer, the pilgrim, who settled in Stonington. Their children were as follows: (1) John Newton, born Dec. 19, 1812, died in New Orleans. (2) Frederick N., born April 15, 1814, went to Utah, where he lived the rest of his life. (3) Nathaniel E., born Sept. 15, 1815, went to St. Louis, where he remained. (4) Emma, born Feb. 27, 1817, married Norman Park, of Canterbury. (5) Susannah, born Sept. 29, 1818, died unmarried. (6) A son, born March 16, 1820, died in infancy. (7) Henry and (8) Harriet, twins, were born May 2, 1821; Henry went to Cincinnati, Ohio, became a minister and died there. He served as chaplain in the war of the Rebellion. Harriet married Luther Sanger, brother of Hon. Marvin Sanger, of Canterbury, Conn., and died aged thirty-five years. (9) David Palmer, born Jan. 22, 1823, settled in New London, began practice there in 1845, and became a very prominent physician. He died aged sixty years. On June 17, 1852, he married (first) Nancy Pinkham, daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Pinkham, of Boothbay, Maine. He married (second) in November, 1864, Miss Carrie C. Hull, of New York City. (10) Mary Esther, born Jan. 14, 1825, married (first) Daniel Wheeler, of Stonington, and (second) J. D. Hoyt Chamberlin, of Buffalo, N. Y., a lawyer. (11) Edwin A., born Aug. 24, 1826, was a Baptist minister, and was an evangelist for years. Later he settled in Binghamton, N. Y. twenty years old, of consumption. (13) Oliver S., born June 7, 1829, is still living, in Canterbury. In January, 1853, he married (first) Sally A. Brown, of Jewett City, and had three children. He married (second) Mrs. Martha Davis, of Canterbury, in 1897. (14) Fanny E., born March 2, 1831, married Jesse Tourtellotte, and they are living in Weaverville, Cal. They went to California from Thompson, Conn., in 1849. (15) Thomas Congdon, born June 13, 1832, died in June, 1897, in Lisbon, Conn. He was a dentist by profession, but he was engaged as a farmer and station agent. He married (first) Mary Rogers, of Jewett City, April 6, 1864, and (second) Jane Bennett, of Jewett City in October, 1867.

John Francis, the father of this family, during the early part of his married life lived in Griswold, Conn., improving a farm on shares, and from there moved to Canterbury, to the old Francis homestead, given him by his uncle, John Francis. The old homestead has been the scene of many a marriage ceremony, performed by him as justice of the peace. In politics he was an old fashioned Democrat, true to the Democracy from the time he cast his first vote to his last. Bringing up a family of eight sons and six daughters, all of whom proved themselves worthy of their kin, his riches were in his children. A member of the Congregational Church and a faithful follower of Christ, he lived an active, useful life, highly respected and honored among men.

(III) Emma Francis, born Feb. 27, 1817, in Canterbury, Conn., married Nov. 10, 1839, Norman Park, of Canterbury, Connecticut.

PARK. (I) Eleazer Park, baptized Nov. 12, 1738, in Preston, Conn., had children: Peter, Eunice, Simeon, Asa, Abijah, Elijah and Mary.

There were no children by this union. (5) Isabella Everitt, born Sept. 20, 1847, in Canterbury, died April 4, 1892, in Middletown. She married in October, 1870, Amos Kidder, of New Hampshire, and they had one child, Clarence Arthur, born Jan. 28, 1882, at South Canterbury, Conn.; he makes his home with Mrs. Beckwith.

JOSLIN. From the town of Thompson, Windham county, the home for several generations of the Joslin family, which it will be observed is one of historic interest, have gone out into the world several brothers, who have each achieved a position in society, success in business or in the professions, and been useful citizens, all belonging to that class termed self-made men. Of these men, Hon. Orrin Franklin, Hon. Allen Lafayette, Prof. Abner Davis and Howard Payson Joslin, sons of the late Deacon Joslin, with their lineage, it is in main the purpose of this article to treat.

In an article on the origin of the Joslin family, we find the following: The Joslin family is a very old one. Its history reaches back even beyond the time of the Emperor Charlemagne, whose daughter married Count Joceline. One of their descendants was Sir Gilbert Jocelyne, who accompanied William, Duke of Normandy, in his expedition for the conquest of England in 1066, and became the founder of the Joslin family in that country. He received from William I extensive territorial grants in the County of Lincoln, among which were the lordships of Sempringham and Tyington. His son, Gilbert, devoted himself to a religious life, and founded the order called Gilbertines, and was canonized a saint by Pope Innocent III, in 1202. The younger son, Thomas, married Maude, daughter and coheir of John Hyde, of Hyde Hall, and granddaughter of Baron Sudeley, by which marriage the family obtained the estate which has ever since remained in its possession.

One of this stock married Anne, the heiress of the Percys, and became Duke of Northumberland. Another was a signer of the "Magna Charta." Another is the present Earl of Roden. Others have been bishops, lord mayors, etc.

Another of the descendants of Sir Gilbert Jocelyne was Thomas Josseline, who was the founder of the family in America. He came over in the ship "Increase," in 1635, and landed in Hingham, Mass., with his wife, Rebecca, a son, Nathaniel, and four daughters, Rebecca, Dorothy, Eliza and Mary. Later an older son, Abraham, who had been left at school, joined the family, and they removed to Lancaster, Mass., of which place they were among the original proprietors and inhabitants. Thomas Josseline died in Lancaster in 1660. The sons, Abraham and Nathaniel, are doubtless the "two brothers," mentioned in all traditions which claim that two brothers came from England, and that all Joslins are descended from them. Abraham was a mariner, and was lost at sea in 1670. Nathaniel died in Marlboro in 1694.

Undoubtedly of the same stock was Israel Joslin, of whom the following note was found with the journal of Joseph Joslin: "Israel Joslin was born in Devonshire, England, and after twenty or thirty years came to America, but first had married there (England); had one child, and lost his wife; then came to Newfoundland, fishing; then to Salem, where he married Sarah Bayley, who was born February 13, 1698. They moved to Cape Porpoise; then to Salem again; and then to Killingly, Conn., and there lived and died, August, 1761. His widow, Sarah Bayley, died 1771." From the records we find that Israel "Joslyn" bought land in the northern part of Killingly, before Thompson Parish was set off, between 1720 and 1726, and he had a daughter baptized there in 1722. In 1740 he bought of Peter Aspinwall a farm near the Rhode Island line, probably the place occupied by his son Joseph. In 1728 at the first reported town meeting of Killingly, he was appointed highway surveyor. Jan 18, 1730 (O. S.), with twenty-seven brethren, he signed a covenant and was incorporated with them as "The Second Church of Killingly," in the parish of Thompson, his name appearing fifth on the roll, indicating precedence in age and position. Mr. "Joslyn" was evidently a man of character and standing, respected in town and church.

Israel and Sarah "Joslyn" had eight children:

- (1) Israel, born Sept. 30, 1719, is mentioned below.
- (2) Sarah, born Feb. 8, 1722, baptized in Killingly, the same year, was married March 11, 1741, to Joseph, son of Edward Munyan, who removed from Salem to Killingly in 1721.
- (3) Gideon, born May 3, 1724, moved to Framingham.
- (4) Joseph was born May 14, 1726.
- (5) Benjamin was born July 31, 1728.
- (6) Hannah, born Dec. 31, 1731, was married Oct. 26, 1749, to Obadiah Merrill, son of Nathaniel, who bought land of Henry and Ebenezer Green in 1722, "south side of Pottaquatic Hill," now occupied by Horace Bixby. They had a family.
- (7) Edward, born Jan. 30, 1734, died Feb. 22, 1744.
- (8) John, born May 6, 1736, probably died young.

(II) Israel Joslin (2), son of Israel, was married Nov. 20, 1739, to Mary or Sarah, probably a daughter of Nathaniel and Deborah Brown, of Killingly. They had children as follows: Mary, born June 28, 1741, married July 21, 1769, to Israel Rich; Sarah, born March 14, 1743, married Dec. 22, 1763, to John Plummer; Zerviah Brown, born Dec. 15, 1744, who was married Dec. 25, 1766, to Robert Plank, son of Robert, and had a son Robert and other children; Edward, born Dec. 4, 1746, mentioned below; Israel, born March 19, 1749; Esther, born March 17, 1751, who died Sept. 17, 1756; Benjamin, born June 2, 1753; Esther, born Nov. 1, 1759, married Aug. 24, 1780, to David Rider, of Chesterfield.

(III) Edward Joslin, born Dec. 4, 1746, died Feb. 20, 1822. Jan. 26, 1776, he married Elizabeth Alton, who died Dec. 27, 1850, when ninety-eight years and ten months old. We have the following record of their family: (1) John, born Nov. 16, 1777, married a Miss Carroll, and they had eight children—Sophia, married to Harvey Davis; Erastus, married to Melinda Joslin; Alender, married to Lovisa Bixby; Silvin, who married a Mr. Alton, and for her second husband, Hilton Ballard; Axie, married to Valentine Ballard; Sally, wife of Franklin Bixby; John; and Maloria, Mrs. Samuel Kemp. (2) Sally, married William Bates, and had six children, of whom William died unmarried; Walter married Mary Elliott; Windsor married Mary Fay, and is still living; Caroline; Elizabeth married William Robbins; Sybil died unmarried. (3) Jesse is mentioned below. (4) Azubath married Ira Bates, and they had five children: Betsey, married to Daniel Spalding, of Southbridge; Lucia, married to Nelson Bates; Esther, married to Jesse Alton; Cyril, married to Betsey Towne; Sophia, married to Parson Tourtellotte, of Thompson. (5) Eunice married Amasa Jacobs, who died Jan. 12, 1837, aged seventy-one years; she died April 14, 1830. They had three children: Mary, born Dec. 13, 1794, who married Joseph Benson; Cyril, born June 16, 1798, who married Nancy Dudley, and (second) Phila Dudley; Maria, born June 9, 1806, who married John Martin. (6) Betsey, born Oct. 21, 1794, was married to Hale Jacobs, who was born June 26, 1792, and died Oct. 14, 1875. She died Sept. 1, 1877. Their children were: David N., born April 16, 1818, who married Mary Ann Morris, and died July 27, 1886; Ira Franklin, born April 8, 1819, who married Samantha Morse, and died Feb. 3, 1901, leaving one child, Franklin; Salem, born June 25, 1822, who married Mrs. Mary Jane (Foster) Wright, and died June 4, 1876; Hale, born Jan. 7, 1826, who married Fanny N. Edmonds, and resided in Malden, Mass., a distinguished vocalist; George A., born Aug. 19, 1827, who married Elizabeth Robinson, and died Aug. 28, 1870; Elizabeth, born April 5, 1830, deceased April 27, 1830; Julia A., born July 22, 1832, who married Corbin Mills, and died March 26, 1856; James Monroe, born March 27, 183-, who married Sarah M. Lane, and died May 24, 1867; Emily Jane, born Jan. 31, 1839, deceased March 22, 1843.

(IV) Jesse Joslin, son of Edward, married Sybil Bates, and they became the parents of seven children: Amy married Joseph Tourtellotte; Claremont died March 15, 1825; Elliott is mentioned below; William, Welcome, Caroline and Mary Ann are mentioned below.

(V) Deacon Elliott Joslin, son of Jesse, born March 30, 1809, married March 30, 1830, Almira Davis, who was born Jan. 9, 1811, a daughter of Abner Davis, of Thompson, Conn. Deacon Joslin was a landowner and farmer of the town of Thompson, Conn., where he passed his lifetime in that occupation. He was a member of and a deacon in the Baptist Church of that town, of which his wife was also a member, for thirty years, 1846-1876, and in that church their children placed a memorial window. Deacon Joslin was a Whig before the organization of the Republican party, and on the formation of the latter party espoused its principles. His death occurred Jan. 27, 1876, and his wife survived until 1890, when she passed away Jan. 17, and both are buried in the East Thompson cemetery. Their children, all born in the town of Thompson, were: Orrin F., born Dec. 14, 1831; Allen L., Aug. 30, 1833; Abner D., Nov. 29, 1837; Etha E., and a twin to her, born in 1844, both dying in 1845; and Howard P., April 5, 1852.

(V) Deacon William Joslin, son of Jesse, married Harriet Shumway, and they had children as follows: Vernon, married to Lovisa Jacobs; Jerome, married to Elizabeth Robbins; Loren, married to Ann Joslin; William, who married Elizabeth Freeman, and (1902) is principal of the high school at Scranton, Pennsylvania.

(V) Deacon Welcome Joslin, son of Jesse, born Dec. 26, 1814, married May 11, 1840, Ann G. Jacobs, daughter of Hale M. and Lucy (Carroll) Jacobs. He died May 18, 1895, and his widow still survives. Their children were: Emily, born Aug. 23, 1843, married Dec. 26, 1865, to George Henry Jacobs, of Thompson, Conn.; Sarah L., born Sept. 8, 1844, married Nov. 5, 1862, to Albert G. Carleton; Charles J., born Dec. 25, 1847, who married Adeline Perry, of Dudley, and died Jan. 14, 1898.

(V) Caroline Joslin, daughter of Jesse, married Moses Hoyle, of Thompson, and they had eight children: Lydia, married to Marvin E. Bixby, of Thompson; Luther, who died young; Augusta, who married Adelbert Kemp, and, for her second husband, Frank Gale, and resides in Webster, Mass., Ann, residing on the homestead; Irving, who resides in Malden, Mass.; Ella, married to a Mr. Hoyle; Cassious M., married to Nettie Porter; Burton, married to Jennie Snyder.

(V) Mary Ann Joslin, daughter of Jesse, married Solomon Shumway, of Webster, Mass., and they had three children: Byron, who is married and resides in Webster; Ella, who married Charles B. Ames, and after his death became the wife of Dr. H. S. Surles; Clinton, who married Hattie, widow of Jeremiah Hoyle.

(VI) ORRIN FRANKLIN JOSLIN, son of Deacon Elliott, was born Dec. 14, 1831, and was reared on his father's farm, attending through the winters the district school. At sixteen years of age he became employed in the country store of Jeremiah Olney at Thompson, receiving for his services $1.50 per week. After a brief period with Mr. Olney, he was for two years a clerk in the store of Shumway & Tourtellotte at Webster, Mass. He was next employed for a short time in the store of Arnold & Lester, at North Webster, from which position he went to Worcester, Mass., where for seven years he was in a dry-goods house. Following this experience young Joslin entered the shoe establishment of Loriston Shumway, at Oxford, Mass., with whom he learned the business. Later on and until 1870, Mr. Joslin was identified, but not as a partner, with the shoe trade of L. B. Corbin & Co., of the same town. In that year, 1870, he became a member of the firm of A. L. Joslin & Co., shoe manufacturers at Oxford, Mass. Mr. Joslin entered the firm when youth and vigor were his, and after having laid a good foundation for its duties, for nearly thirty years devoted himself to developing the business, and along with his brother built up an extensive trade and a profitable business. In 1899 he withdrew from the firm, with a competency and a well earned commercial reputation, and retired from active business, holding the esteem, respect and confidence of the community in which he has for so long a period been a useful member of society and a prominent citizen.

Some years ago Mr. Joslin showed his enterprise in building an elegant residence, one of the finest in Oxford. He is a Republican by education, has been active and influential in the party's councils, and served for fifteen years as chairman of the town and senatorial district committees. His fellow citizens of the seventh district, sent him to the General Assembly of Massachusetts in 1894-95, in which body he served on the committee on Banks and Banking. As a financier Mr. Joslin has had considerable experience, and stands high. He is a director of the National Bank of Oxford, and is one of the incorporators of the Worcester County Institution for Savings. He is a trustee of the Free Public Library, and is its chairman. Since 1857 he has been a member of the Congregational Church, and for more than twenty-five years was a teacher and superintendent of the Sunday-school of that church. Mr. Joslin is a lover of out-door sports, and in his younger manhood was fond of and engaged in fox chasing, and few hounds if any were faster than his. He has been president of the Brunswick Fox Club for six years, and is a member of the Massachusetts and Worcester Fox Clubs.

On Aug. 9, 1853, Mr. Joslin was married at Worcester, Mass., to Helen E. Field, whose death occurred in March, 1899. She, too, was a member of and worker in the Church at Oxford, and a most estimable woman. It has been said of her that "Hers was a character above reproach." No children were born to their marriage.

(VI) ALLEN LAFAYETTE JOSLIN, son of Deacon Elliott, was born Aug. 30, 1833, in Thompson, Conn., where his early boyhood was passed and where his elementary education was received in the district schools of the neighborhood. At the age of seventeen years he went to Oxford, Mass., to learn the shoe business, his money consisting of twenty-five cents. On this trip young Joslin was accompanied by his father, who apprenticed him to L. B. Corbin, a shoe manufacturer. He was allowed a visit home every three months, his father conveying him each way; should he go home oftener he was to walk. Until five months before he was of age his earnings were given to his parents. Oxford at that period was just beginning a business and industrial growth that shortly made it one of the leading towns of Worcester county. Coming from sturdy New England stock, young Joslin, though of limited means and opportunities, was possessed with traits of character which were soon strengthened and developed under the training to which we have referred, and led to that self-reliance and ambition which characterized his maturer years and culminated in a successful business career, useful citizenship and high and honorable public station. In his early years at Oxford, the town became known far and wide for its wool manufacturers. It had a society that was prosperous, wealthy and intelligent. Such names of its citizens as Thayer, DeWitt, Hodges and Olney, men of character and achievement, too, were an inspiration to the ambitious boy of that town. Under Mr. Corbin, young Joslin worked practically in every part of boot and shoe making. He saved his earnings, and on becoming proficient as a workman, when twenty-four years of age, in 1857, he went into the same business for himself, his factory being located on the site of his present extensive plant. One year later he became a partner of his father-in-law, Loriston Shumway, who for several years had carried on a shoe factory in the town. In 1860, at the earnest solicitation of Mr. Corbin, with whom Mr. Joslin had served an apprenticeship, the latter became associated with him in the same business under the firm name of Lament B. Corbin & Co. Mr. Corbin was a man of varied talents, who had been successful in the management of business affairs, and his taking into partnership so young a man as Mr. Joslin, only emphasizes the general business make-up of Mr. Joslin. The business association was severed in 1871, at which time Mr. Joslin withdrew from the business, built a factory of his own, and associated with him his brother, Orrin F. Joslin, under the firm name of A. L. Joslin & Co., and it has since been one of the largest and best known shoe manufacturing firms in Massachusetts. The factory as built in 1871, was in size 60x30 feet and four stories high; successive additions have since made it 160 feet deep with an average width of 35 feet. The factory is equipped with the best and most modern machinery and there are but few instances on record where the relations between employers and employes have been freer from misunderstanding and friction than in the case of A. L. Joslin & Co. and their help. This concern gives employment to some 200 people. Later in the career of the business, Homer S. Joslin, a son of Mr. A. L. Joslin, was taken into the firm, and in 1899, Mr. Orrin F. Joslin retired.

In the long period of the history of the firm of A. L. Joslin & Co., there has hardly been a year that it has not made money. The remarkable success of Allen L. Joslin in the management of this business, and his ability in his financial affairs, led to his election in 1881 as president of the Oxford National Bank, a position he has since held, and under his judicious management the bank has been most successful. In 1882 Mr. Joslin was elected town treasurer and continued in the office by successive elections until 1890, when he declined a re-election. After an interim of two years, he was in 1892 again elected, and holds that position at the present time. He has filled many positions of trust in a personal capacity, and has always the unbounded confidence of his fellow townsmen, among whom his word is as good as his bond. He was selectman of Oxford in 1883 and in 1884, and for one year was a member of the school board. Some years ago a village improvement society was formed, and Mr. Joslin was made its president, and directed the work of beautifying the town and improving its streets and sidewalks.

In political affiliation Mr. Joslin is a staunch Republican, and has been several times honored by his fellow townsmen and those of the Senatorial district by election to high stations in the public service of the State. He was chosen a member of the Legislature in 1885, and served on the committee on Banks and Banking. He was elected a member of the Senate in the following year, and in this body he was made chairman of the joint standing committee on Banks and Banking. In 1896 Mr. Joslin, who had been practically retired from politics for a number of years, but who had often been solicited by his party friends throughout the Worcester District to seek the nomination for the councilorship, accepted the nomination. In presenting Mr. Joslin's name for this office his neighbors gave him such endorsement as follows: "In commending Mr. Joslin to your consideration we make no excuse or reservations, for he is a man eminently qualified for the position. Those traits that go to make the ideal councilor he possesses to a happy degree. The soundness and correctness of his judgment and discretion have been proven in the years of an eventful business career. Dignified and courtly, yet always genial and affable, he is a splendid type of New England manhood. He has seen service in both branches of the Legislature, has held various town offices, and for fifteen years has been president of the Oxford National Bank, which in the years of his presidency has never failed to pay a semi-annual dividend. His ability is unquestioned, and his fidelity to every trust and duty has made him a man among men. In commending him to your consideration and support, we do so more particularly for his ability, integrity and his attainments." Suffice it to say that Mr. Joslin was elected a member of the Governor's council in 1897, by the largest majority ever given a candidate in the Worcester District, and that he served in the gubernatorial family of Gov. Wolcott, with that grace, dignity and ability of the typical New England gentleman that he is. He was re-elected in 1898 for a second time with Gov. Wolcott. Mr. Joslin is a member of the Home Market and Republican Clubs. His church home and that of the family at Oxford is in the Congregational Church, and at Boston, where he maintains a winter residence, is in the Old South Church, of which Dr. G. A. Gordon is pastor.

On Sept. 15, 1857, Mr. Joslin was married to Lucretia M., daughter of Loriston Shumway. She died Jan. 8, 1863, and Mr. Joslin married (second) Oct. 24, 1867, Sarah A. E., daughter of Abel Waters Proctor, of Peabody, Mass. Two children were born to the first marriage: Ada L., born Oct. 26, 1858; and Homer S., born Dec. 14, 1862. Mr. Joslin's children born to the second union were: Elliott P., born June 6, 1869; and Abel Proctor, born Oct. 7, 1875, who died Aug. 15, 1876.

Mr. Joslin has an attractive home on Main street, over which Mrs. Joslin, a woman of accomplishments, presides with ease and grace. From this home is dispensed a generous hospitality. On the occasion of Mr. Joslin's election as Governor's councilor, he and his wife gave their friends and fellow citizens a royal reception, which was among the social events in Oxford's history. Mrs. Joslin is a member of Isaac Gardner Chapter, at Brookline, of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

(VI) ABNER DAVIS JOSLIN, son of Deacon Elliott, was born Nov. 29, 1837, on the Joslin homestead in the town of Thompson, Conn., where he was reared to agricultural pursuits. He attended the neighborhood schools, alternating in season with work on the farm. Later he continued his studies in the Rawsonian Institute at Thompson, and in Nichols Academy at Dudley, Mass., with a view to becoming a teacher. At eighteen years of age he left home to teach his first school, going to Jefferson Village, now Maplewood, N. J., where he taught one season, then returning to his Connecticut home and passing the autumn in taking another course of study in Nichols Academy at Dudley. Returning to Maplewood, he passed the following season in school there, and the next year he taught a ninety-days school at Wilsonville, in his home town of Thompson, Conn., receiving for his services one dollar per day. This experience was followed by a similar one back in New Jersey, the latter, however, being a summer school. For a period he was then employed in the shoe business of his brother, A. L. Joslin, at Oxford, Mass. This was during the hard times of 1857, owing to which his mercantile experience was of short duration. He again resumed teaching, and at the Wilsonville School, for ninety days, receiving $1.50 per day. In 1858 he again returned to New Jersey, going to Millburn, where after teaching a six-months school he accepted a position in the Irvington (N. J.) public schools and academy, and in a most successful and satisfactory manner to all concerned continued such relations until 1865. His adaptation to the work in this field and the success with which he had met, recommended him to a more exalted station in the profession, and he was tendered the assistant principalship of one of the public schools in New York City, and also in Elizabeth City, N. J., and the position of principal of one of the Jersey City public schools, the latter of which he accepted, and for the following three years held the position. He next organized what is known as grammar school No. 14, which was held in a new building, and taught it until the year 1872. At this time there was constructed, according to the plans of Mr. Joslin, school building No. 12, which was the most modern of its day in the city. Over this, known as the Crescent avenue school, Mr. Joslin presided until 1883, when, on the death of the principal of the Jersey City high school, Mr. Joslin was appointed his successor. There he successfully taught for two years, graduating the two largest classes that ever left the high school. On account of political intrigue he resigned the principalship of the high school, and was immediately returned to the Crescent avenue school, of which he is still principal, and where for more than thirty years he has given the best efforts of his life to his high, noble and responsible calling. He has about thirty teachers under his direction, and through their harmonious and intelligent co-operation No. 12 has become one of the model schools of New Jersey.

During this long period Prof. Joslin has been prominent in educational matters and a useful member of society, as well as an enterprising and public-spirited citizen. He was president of the Teachers' Association for two years. He was for fifteen or more years a member of the city examining committee for teachers. For some eight years he taught in the Saturday Normal School, and afterward in the Training School, where he was lecturer on mathematics and physics for twelve years. His educational work has been a success. He is a great lover of music, for which he has natural taste and talent. When quite small he could read music readily at sight. He served one year as the precentor of music in the Presbyterian Church at Jersey City, and later was choirmaster at the Bergen Reformed Church for over twenty years. Prof. Joslin possessed a baritone voice, and was a member of all the leading choral societies in New York and Jersey City. In his political affiliations Prof. Joslin is a Democrat, differing in this respect from his older brothers. He is a past master of the I. O. O. F., and has been "Orator" in the Royal Arcanum.

Prof. Joslin is now sturdy, active and well-preserved—characteristic qualities of the vigorous Joslin stock of East Thompson. He is a member of the Jersey City Athletic Club, where for many years he has found his chief recreation, either in the library or in games of physical exercise. His heart ever beats in unison with all those who deserve a helping hand, and hundreds can testify to his uplifting and comforting influences.

HOWARD PAYSON JOSLIN, youngest son of Deacon Elliott, was born April 5, 1852, in East Thompson, Windham Co., Conn. He received a good foundation for his education, and when not attending school was engaged at work on the farm. Preparing for college at the Webster (Mass.) high school, he entered Brown University in September, 1871, and graduated from that institution with the class of 1875. After the death of his father he carried on the paternal farm for a year, and then went West to Wyoming to engage in the cattle business; in 1878 he took a herd of 1,500 head of cattle from the Columbia river, in Oregon, up Snake river and through South Pass, in the Rocky Mountains, down the Sweetwater and across Laramie Plains, to the vicinity of Cheyenne. Mr. Joslin returned East after three and a half years, and after remaining about one year in New England went to Pittsburg, where he has remained ever since. He was at first engaged as agent for blasting powder, later as stenographer. He resides at Ben Avon, on the Ohio river, a few miles below Pittsburg.

On Feb. 19, 1889, Mr. Joslin married Anna Cora Waddington, daughter of Benjamin and Abigail (McDonald) Waddington, and they have one child, Jessie Joslin, born Nov. 16, 1900.

(VII) Homer S. Joslin, son of Allen L., received his elementary education in the public schools of his native town, being graduated from the Oxford high school. He subsequently attended the Hartford (Conn.) high school, then graduated from Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., in 1881. His school days over, Mr. Joslin entered the factory of A. L. Joslin & Co., and thoroughly learned every department of the business. In 1882 he became a member of the firm, which has since continued to be his vocation. He has contributed his share to the development of the great success of the concern, and now, in the absence of his father, the management of the business is entrusted to his hands. Mr. Joslin is a member of Oxford Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Tyrian Royal Arch Chapter of Milbury, Worcester Commandery, Knights Templar; and of Maanexit Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Webster, being Worshipful Master of the former. In politics he is a Republican, and has been active in local affairs of the party; for ten years was chairman of the town committee. Mr. Joslin, too, served long on the school board, was its chairman for three years and has been moderator of the town meetings for ten. His religious connection is with the Congregational Church at Oxford. One has only to read between the lines to judge of the prominence and usefulness of Mr. Joslin to his community.

On May 13, 1885, Mr. Joslin was married to Lillian May, daughter of Samuel C. Willis, Jr., of Oxford, Mass., and their home has been blessed with children as follows: Philip Willis, born May 18, 1890; Lucile, born June 5, 1893; and Margaret, born Dec. 28, 1899.

(VII) Elliott Proctor Joslin, M. D., son of Allen L., was born June 6, 1869, and in boyhood attended the public schools of Oxford. He was graduated from Leicester Academy in 1886, from Yale University in 1890, and one year later, from Sheffield Scientific School. In 1894 he was graduated from the Harvard Medical School with the degree of M. D. Subsequently he spent two years in the hospitals of Boston, then went abroad, where he furthered his studies in the cities of Berlin and Vienna. Dr. Joslin is now engaged in the practice of medicine in the city of Boston. On Sept. 16, 1902, he married Miss Elizabeth Elliott Denny, of Brookline.

SHUMWAY. Mrs. Lucretia M. (Shumway) Joslin is descended in the seventh generation from Peter Shumway, of Topsfield, her lineage being through Peter (2), Jeremiah, Peter (3), Leavens and Loriston Shumway.

(I) Peter Shumway, whom it is believed was the common ancestor of all of the name who were early in New England, appears of record at Topsfield, Mass., in 1678. It was asserted by one of the early members of the American family that the Shumways were of French origin, and that the name was likely spelled Chamois. In the records of Essex county the name appears often as Shamway, and Dr. Baird says a Protestant family bearing the name of Chamois is mentioned in the list of fugitives from the neighborhood of St. Maixent, in the old province of Poitou, France, at the time of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes.

(II) Peter Shumway (2), born June 6, 1678, at Topsfield, married (first) Feb. 11, 1701, Mariah Smith, of Boxford. Mr. Shumway seems to have voted in 1713 in the town of Boxford. Mrs. Shumway died Jan. 17, 1739, and Mr. Shumway married (second) Feb. 28, 1740, Mary Dana.

(III) Jeremiah Shumway, baptized March 21, 1703, married Nov. 13, 1729, Experience, daughter of Isaac Larned, and settled in Oxford.

(IV) Peter Shumway (3), born April 29, 1735, married June 4, 1759, Rebecca Leavens, born June 29, 1743, and resided on the homestead. From 1772 to 1796 Mr. Shumway kept a public house or inn. He was a soldier in the French and Indian war. He died Aug. 30, 1828, aged ninety-three years, and Mrs. Shumway passed away March 11, 1826, aged eighty-two.

(V) Leavens Shumway, born Aug. 25, 1772, married Thankful, daughter of Comfort Johnson, of Stockbridge, Mass., and settled in Monson, Mass. Mr. Shumway died in Monson, April 12, 1830, and his widow moved to Oxford and there died June 21, 1856.

(VI) Loriston Shumway, born Nov. 30, 1806, married Jan. 16, 1832, Clarissa, daughter of Perley Eddy, a farmer, trader, and shoe manufacturer of Oxford, Mass. Mr. Shumway died May 14, 1884, and Mrs. Shumway survived until 1891, dying July 6 of that year. Of their children, (1) Clarissa L., born April 13, 1833, at Cincinnati, Ohio, married Sept. 29, 1887, Charles A. Jackson. (2) Henry L., born Feb. 26, 1835, married (first) Sept. 15, 1857, Mary E., born Nov. 1, 1837, daughter of Jeremiah Upham, of Dudley, Mass.; she died Dec. 9, 1858, and he married (second) May 19, 1863, Lucy J. Hall, of Milbury, Mass. For many years Mr. Shumway was assistant editor of the Worcester Spy, and later the Gazette. About 1885 he removed to Boylston, thence in 1890 to Boston, where he was also a journalist. (3) Lucretia, born June 14, 1837, married Allen L. Joslin, of Oxford. (4) Issachar, born Oct. 30, 1839, married Nov. 27, 1861, Emma L., daughter of Charles Lamb. (5) Jane, born May 2, 1844, died Feb. 10, 1863. (6) Abby A., born July 12, 1846, married Albert E. Merriam.

PROCTOR. John Proctor, aged forty, Martha aged twenty-eight, and their children, John, aged three, and Mary, aged one, came to this country in 1635, in the ship "Susan and Ellen," and settled in Ipswich.

(II) John Proctor (2), born about 1632, married in December, 1652, Elizabeth Thorndike, and lived in Salem. He married (second) in 1674, Elizabeth Bassett, and two of his children, probably born to the second marriage, were imprisoned in the execrable fanaticism of 1692, but were probably discharged without trial. The second Mrs. Proctor was one of the first accused of witchcraft, and she and her husband were tried and condemned. The punishment of death was inflicted upon them, and he was hung in August, 1692, but she escaped, owing to her physical condition.

From this source the line of descent is through Benjamin, born in 1659; John, born in 1705, and John, born in 1728, to the late Johnson Proctor, born in 1765, of Danvers, now Peabody, Mass., who married (first) Lydia Waters, and (second) Mary Putnam; and to Abel Waters Proctor, born in 1800 to the first marriage, who married Lydia Porter Emerson, May 6, 1830, and they were the parents of Sarah A. E. (Proctor) Joslin.

EDWIN T. DAVIS, M. D., a prominent and esteemed physician at Ellington, is a native of Richford, Franklin county, Vermont.

Joseph W. Davis, his father, was born in Enosburg, Vt., in December, 1818, and when a young man moved to Richford, where he followed the career of a farmer all his life, at one time running an extensive dairy. Mr. Davis spent his last days in Montgomery, Vt., where he died full of years and honor, Dec. 2, 1887, and where his remains were laid to rest in the local cemetery. In religion he was a member of the Baptist Church, in which he officiated as a deacon; and in politics he was a Republican, but had no aspirations for political honors. Joseph W. Davis married for his first wife Malvina McAllister, a native of Enosburg, Vt., and a daughter of John McAllister, who married a Bliss. To this union were born the following children: (1) Bateman W. married Frances Campbell, and was a practicing physician at Montgomery, Vt., where he died. (2) Frank E., married Ellen Farrar, and for many years was the "boss" carpenter at the Rock Mill in Rockville, where he died. Joseph Davis married (second) Betsey McAllister, the sister of his first wife, who is now living in the home of their daughter, Mrs. Leonard Bosely. Their children were: Mary M., who died at the age of twenty-two years; Hattie A., the wife of Leonard Bosely, of Rockville; and Edwin T.

Dr. Davis was born Oct. 8, 1863, and was six years of age when his parents made their location in Montgomery, Vt., where he began his education in the public schools, from which he graduated in due time, and then matriculated at the University of Vermont, in Burlington. Completing the prescribed course with credit, he received his medical diploma from that institution in 1888. For a time he practiced in Rockville, but in January, 1891, he moved to Ellington to take the practice of the late Dr. Warren. This has greatly grown as a result of his close attention to his professional labors, and his enviable reputation as a skilled practitioner, as well as his personal standing, until he has become one of the busiest members of his profession in the county. His patients are residents of Ellington and the surrounding towns, and though he has no competition in Ellington much of his patronage comes from regions quite remote. As a rising and progressive physician his standing is very high.

Dr. Davis was married in Montgomery, Vt., June 15, 1892, to Charlotte A. Clapp, a native of that community, and a daughter of George L. Clapp, a Vermont farmer. To them have come two children, Harold G., born July 16, 1893, and Edwin Willard, born Jan. 31, 1903. Dr. Davis and his wife are members of the Congregational Church, of which he is serving as a member of the Ecclesiastical committee.

Dr. Davis is a Republican, and is health officer of the town of Ellington, school visitor and town medical examiner. In his professional relations he is a member of the Tolland County Medical Association, of which he is clerk and treasurer, and also belongs to the Connecticut Medical Society.

REV. EUGENE O'CONNELL. One of the best known clergymen of the Hartford diocese is Rev. Eugene O'Connell. The virile helpfulness and enthusiasm of Father O'Connell have penetrated all departments of his church work, and have not only greatly increased the membership of the institutions of which he has charge, but have broadened their spheres of activity into hitherto unsuspected channels. A native son of Connecticut, Father O'Connell was born in Thomaston, Litchfield county, Sept. 8, 1866, a son of Eugene O'Connell, whose devout Catholic spirit descended to his sons and directed their earliest aspirations. One of these, the late and greatly beloved Father Patrick O'Connell, whose untimely death in 1898 left a void in the Hartford diocese, was one of the most capable sons of the Church in his county. Rev. Eugene O'Connell received his primary education in the district schools of his native county, and while still a little lad, had dreams of a career filled with faithful devotion to the church. At an unusually early age he entered Saint Bonaventura College at Allegany, N. Y., from which he was graduated in 1885. Soon after he took up the study of theology at Saint John's Seminary at Brighton, Mass., and received holy orders in 1885, having been ordained to the priesthood by the venerable Archbishop Williams, of the Cathedral of Boston. After being ordained for the Hartford Diocese he returned to his native home at Thomaston and celebrated his first mass, and was then appointed by the late lamented Bishop McMahon curate of Saint Augustine's Church at Bridgeport, Conn. Here for a period of two years he faithfully ministered to the spiritual needs of the people, after which he was transferred to the Church of Saint Mary's Star of the Sea, over which he presided with zeal for eight years. He was then appointed curate of Saint Patrick's Church by the present Most Reverend Bishop Michael Tarney, and in 1901 became pastor of the Sacred Heart Church at Thompson, and the Holy Trinity Church at Pomfret. He is held in the highest esteem by all who are privileged to know him, his genial and optimistic nature, his culture and kindliness, bearing out the impression of the born ecclesiastic, and natural director of the spiritual affairs of men.

STEPHEN SMITH TALCOTT (deceased), a prominent member of the old Talcott family, a sketch of which appears elsewhere, and long a manufacturer in Talcottville, Tolland county, was born in Bolton, Conn., April 4, 1834, son of Gurdon and Asenath (Fitch) Talcott, and grandson of Job Talcott and Elijah Fitch. Gurdon Talcott was the father of the following named children: Anson F.; Norman W.; Hiram; George; Lucius, who died in the service as a Union soldier during the Civil war; Stephen Smith; Charlotte A., widow of Lyman Tiffany, at Southampton, Mass.; Lydia M.; and Emily, who married Lewis Keeney, of Vernon.

Stephen Smith Talcott was married June 19, 1858, to Sarah E., daughter of Henry L. and Mary (Sumner) Dow. Her grandfather, Thomas Dow, was a native of Ashford, Conn., and was twice married, his second wife being Lydia Sumner. His children were as follows: Horatio, who became an eminent physician; Joseph, who followed in his brother's steps, and also became a physician; Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Butler, of Springfield, Mass.; Harriet, wife of Smith J. Bartlett, of Willimantic, Conn.; Thomas K., who died in Ashford, Conn., at the age of thirty years; and Henry L., father of Mrs. Talcott.

Henry L. Dow married Mary Sumner, who was born May 18, 1804, in Eastford, and died March 24, 1890. Her father was a farmer in Eastford, and both her parents were members of the Congregational Church. Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Dow had the following children: (1) Mary married Emory C. Hawes, of Springfield, and had two daughters; she died April 26, 1860. (2) Hattie C. died June 22, 1864, at the age of twenty-eight. (3) Sarah E., born Nov. 22, 1837, married Stephen Smith Talcott. (4) Lydia Maria died Sept. 5, 1855, at the age of sixteen years. (6) Louise Catherine married J. D. Burnham, of Hartford, had three children, and died April 30, 1900, at the age of sixty years. Henry L. Dow, the father, died April 19, 1864, at the age of sixty years.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen S. Talcott became the parents of two children: (1) Olin, born June 30, 1877, was married Jan. 2, 1901, to Gertrude F. Leonard, of Fall River, Mass. He is now one of the proprietors and a managing officer of the Granite Mill Company, an institution established by his father. (2) Nellie M. is the wife of Edwin D. Alvord, of Hartford.

Stephen Smith Talcott received his education in Bolton and in the East Academy, at Manchester Green. At the age of eighteen years he professed conversion, and was added to the membership of the Methodist Church at South Manchester. His business career soon began, and he quickly gained the confidence of his employer, H. E. Rogers, of South Manchester. In 1863 Mr. Talcott removed his family to Vernon, where he established the Granite Mills, in company with the Case Brothers and Horace Bidwell, the firm engaging in the manufacture of the binders' board. For eighteen years the management of the extensive and growing business was in the hands of Mr. Talcott. In 1881 the mill was destroyed by fire for the third time, and on its rebuilding he practically retired from the firm, retaining only a small interest and giving up the management of affairs to younger and more ambitious men. For seven years he traveled extensively through the West, and established several important business enterprises at different points, one of them being a bank at Golden, Colo., which was afterward removed to Canon City.

During his active years Mr. Talcott was intensely devoted to business, but he never allowed his business matters to abate in any degree his zeal for the faith. During his first year at Vernon he attended services at North Manchester, four miles away. Methodist meetings had at one time been held at Centerville, less than a mile from his residence, and Mr. Talcott was largely instrumental in building a sound and durable Methodist Church at that point, giving largely of both his time and money to insure its success. His zeal for the Church became noted, and his name is a conspicuous one in the annals of the workers of his denomination in this State, and, indeed, wherever he was found. Wherever he went he at once sought out the Methodist pastor, and entered heartily and enthusiastically into the work and worship of the church. When he was a mere boy he subscribed one hundred dollars for his church, a subscription his friends thought impossible for him to pay, but which he met at the time appointed. He held it as a principle that he should give a tenth of his earnings to the Lord, and his benefactions were many and liberal. He entered into rest Nov. 6, 1888. His last hours were full of the joy of his faith, and his deathbed a translation into glory. To the last his peace flowed like a river.

Mr. Talcott, like all the others who bore his name, was an honored and useful member of the community, a man of public spirit, and intensely interested in everything that promised to improve the moral and intellectual interests of the community. As will be seen by a perusal of the history of the Talcott family, its members are an enlightened and progressive set of people, all men and women of intelligent lives, large views and strong moral sense. The present bearers of the name feel the obligation of duty and honor, and are walking in the footsteps of their distinguished progenitors.

MOSES LEONARD GAGE, a successful farmer and dairyman of Woodstock, Conn., comes from an old and honorable family of New England which has been noted for its thrift and intellectual attainments.

The earliest family records make it probable that the great-grandfather of Mr. Gage was born in Sturbridge, Mass., where he married Anna Priest, a member of a well-known family. Although no full list of their children has been preserved, it is known that Moses and Aaron were twins, the latter living in Woodstock, Conn., while one brother settled in New Hampshire, and another, Elisha, lived in New Woodstock.

Aaron Gage, the grandfather of Mr. Gage, of this biography, was born about 1761, in Sturbridge, Mass., where his parents died. His death was about 1838, in Monson, Mass. His marriage was to Rhoda Leonard, born about 1768, in Taunton, Mass., who died in 1852, in Woodstock, Conn., daughter of Jacob Leonard, of Union, Conn. Their children were the following: Leonard; Philip, born in Woodstock, Conn., married Annie Foster, and died in Monson, Mass.; Moses, born in Woodstock, married Rebecca Stimpson, and died in Monson, Mass., in 1838; Rhoda, born in Woodstock, Conn., married (first) Erastus Knowlton, of Providence, R. I., and (second) Joseph Burrows, of the same city, where she died in 1864-5; Polly, born in Woodstock, died in Monson, the wife of Lemuel Cushman, of Stafford, Conn. Grandfather Gage was a farmer and an active and successful one until his health declined, but he is remembered by his family as a pleasant, jovial companion and a man who had many friends.

Rev. Leonard Gage, father of Moses L. Gage, was vouchsafed a long life, which he filled with usefulness, and left the world better than he found it. His death was in Southbridge, Mass., Nov. 2, 1881, at the age of ninety-four years. In his early life he adopted farming as his summer occupation and teaching as his winter employment, and continued thus engaged for twenty-four years, his name being well known through Stafford and vicinity, where he was regarded as a most successful teacher. He then went into the Baptist ministry, and for a number of years preached in North Ashford. So constant was his service and so zealous was he in the cause of religion, that his health finally gave way, and for thirteen years he was a sufferer from nervous troubles. A change becoming necessary, he adopted an out-door life and for several years drove through the country with a "Yankee notion" wagon.

Mr. Gage married Lois Porter, born about 1780 or 1790, in Columbia, Conn., and died April 28, 1841, in Stafford, Conn., where Mr. Gage settled after marriage. Mrs. Gage was a daughter of John Porter, who served in the Revolutionary army, under the name of Amos Porter, this mistake later invalidating his claim to a pension. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Gage were as follows: Caroline, born Jan. 1, 1811, in Monson, Mass., never married, but died Aug. 2, 1892, in Southbridge, Mass.; Aaron, born in July, 1812, in Monson, Mass., was a farmer near Monson, married Annis Bugbee, of Union, Conn., and died in February, 1865; Lovina, born in 1814, in Stafford, Conn., died in August, 1842, of consumption, in Stafford; Elmina, born July 3, 1816, in Stafford, married John Burley, and died July 11, 1901, in Union, aged eighty-four years; Sarah, born March 6, 1818, in Stafford, died Sept. 4, 1885, in Southbridge, Mass., the wife of Burt Crawford; John Porter, born in February, 1820, in Stafford, married (first) Jane Cushman, and (second) Huldah Richardson, and died Aug. 4, 1900, in Woodstock; Rhoda, born in November, 1821, in Stafford, died in the following May; Rhoda (2), born May 15, 1823, in Stafford, died April 15, 1899, in Southbridge, Mass., unmarried; Moses L., of this sketch; Philip Foster, born in March, 1827, in Stafford, married Lucy Corbin, of Union, Conn., and died Oct. 18, 1857, in Woodstock; Hannah Brooks, born July 27, 1829, in Stafford, died unmarried May 8, 1898, in Southbridge, Mass.; and Anna, born Dec. 22, 1831, in Stafford, Conn., married John Hibbard, of Woodstock, and lives with her son, a Baptist minister, at Grafton, Massachusetts.

Rev. Mr. Gage was a man who took a deep interest in public affairs, and from being an active Whig, became a useful and influential member of the Republican party. During his residence in Stafford, he represented the town in the State Legislature, and was a man far above the average in natural ability, as well as in educational attainments. His remains with those of his wife, rest in the old cemetery at Monson, Mass.

Moses Leonard Gage was born Feb. 28, 1825, in Stafford, Conn., where he received his elementary education. His parents removed to Union when he was seven years old, and between that time and the age of nineteen, he remained at school, enjoying two terms at Wilbraham, and one term at the Suffolk Institute. After leaving school he became a teacher, but after a term at Somers, Conn., and one at Mt. Holly, N. J., he decided upon an active business life, and with this end in view, went into partnership with his brother-in-law, Burt Crawford, in a lumber business, which continued for several years. On April 1, 1857, Mr. Gage purchased a large tract of land in Woodstock, comprising 110 acres, known as the Bundy farm, and there he has remained ever since. Disposing of all but seventy-five acres, Mr. Gage has brought this to a fine state of cultivation, and has proved that when properly operated, a Connecticut farm is a very valuable piece of property. In connection with his farming, he keeps about twenty head of cattle and ships his cream. Farming has not engaged all of his attention, however, as since locating in Woodstock, Mr. Gage has dealt extensively in lumber. In the fall of 1878 he erected his present comfortable home.

Mr. Gage is a leading member of the Baptist Church in Woodstock, and is active in all religious work. For a long period he taught a class in the Sunday School, and served several terms as the efficient superintendent. Mrs. Gage assists and supports his efforts in this direction and belongs to that important auxiliary of the church, the Missionary Society. Few residents of Woodstock are more staunch in their devotion to the principles of the Republican party. He has seen many administrations come and go, having cast his first Presidential vote for Martin Van Buren. Mr. Gage has faithfully served his town as selectman, and also as road commissioner, but has never sought political favor.

On Nov. 6, 1856, Mr. Gage was married to Sarah Chamberlin, born Dec. 4, 1836, in Woodstock, daughter of John Chandler and Hannah (Leonard) Chamberlin, of Woodstock. One son came to bless the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gage, Arthur Wayland, born July 30, 1861, in Woodstock; on June 17, 1886, he was united in marriage with Miss Grace Lillian Witter, daughter of Judah and Ruth Amelia (Richardson) Witter, of Woodstock. Mr. Gage is well known in his community and most highly respected as a man of sterling worth. His influence has always been directed toward those things which build up a neighborhood, and by example has given force to his precepts.

JOHN SHERMAN, deceased. The truism that adverse conditions build up the strong and break down the weak was emphasized in the career of John Sherman, at the time of his death one of the oldest citizens of Eastford, Windham county, in which town he was born April 15, 1818. To the average youth of today the obstacles which intercepted his early ambitions would seem almost permanently discouraging, and the fact that in after years the approaches to his goal were repeatedly hindered by the absence of that greatest of blessings, health, serves to remove any lingering impression of easily won success. His financial standing, and the peace and absence of responsibility which he was finally permitted to enjoy at his pleasant home in Phoenixville were the result of a direct, determined and unhesitating overthrow of difficulties, and vitalizing of scant opportunities with the grit and nerve and force which figured prominently in his makeup.

Zephaniah Sherman, father of John, claimed lineage from an old family of New England, the most distinguished representative of which was Gen. William T. Sherman, the famous Ohio statesman and soldier. Zephaniah was reared on a farm, and learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked whenever possible, his spare time being devoted to the cultivation of a small farm near Phoenixville, where his active life was spent. His declining years were spent with his son, Daniel Sherman, in Chaplin, where he died at the age of seventy-eight years, firm in the assurance that his industry and character had commanded the confidence and respect of all who had passed his way. He married Betsey Allton, of Thompson, Conn., who survived him until seventy-five years of age, and was buried beside him in the cemetery at Phoenixville. To this couple were born the following children: Zephaniah, a carpenter, who died in Springfield, Mass.; Laton, a carpenter and pattern-maker, who died in Chicopee, Mass.; Capt. Allton, a factory overseer, who died in Eastford from injuries received in a fall; Daniel, a farmer and agent for cotton and silk factory goods, who died in Chaplin; Isaac, a Methodist minister, for many years located at Cape Cod, but residing at Thompson at the time of his death; John; Almira, deceased wife of Lyman Botham, of Putnam; Nancy Maria, who died when young; and Sarah Matilda, also deceased at an early age.

Up to his tenth year John Sherman irregularly attended the district schools, and this meagre training terminated his opportunities in the school room. There were many children dependent upon the earnings of the father, and the child of ten was thus prematurely shown the serious and responsible side of life. In order to assist in the general support he was set to work in the cotton factory at Phoenixville, then owned and managed by Clark & Hibbard, his period of toil covering fifteen hours a day during the summer and twelve hours a day during the winter season. For this severe strain upon his childish energies he received seventy-five cents a week, which paltry remuneration was paid to his father to increase the family finances. As time passed he began to regret the deficiency in his education, and forthwith began to devote his slight leisure during the evening and on Sunday to gleaning from such books as came his way, and he made it a practice to arise with the dawn and study at the factory until the beginning of the work day. During his twelve years' connection with the cotton factory he picked up sufficient general knowledge to help him in business, and at the same time mastered everything there was to learn around the factory. For a year he filled the position of clerk in the factory store at Phoenixville, and then engaged in a mercantile business with Lorenzo Bullard, in a store on the present site of the Phoenixville post office, under the firm name of Bullard & Sherman. In spite of the protestations of his partner he disposed of his interest the following year, and purchased the factory store of Clifford Thomas, Jr., and for many years had a large and flourishing trade. In the midst of the prosperity of the factory store he took as a partner Russel Baxter, the firm name becoming Sherman & Baxter. Owing to ill health Mr. Sherman was obliged to give up his business and retire to his farm near the town, and later he suffered another breakdown, after purchasing the store of David Lewis, in the village of Eastford. When his health permitted he was instrumental in forming the Union Store in Eastford, owned by a stock company, and which had an era of success under the management of Mr. Sherman.

While conducting a store for several years at East Thompson, Conn., Mr. Sherman was induced by Mr. Green, a wealthy cotton manufacturer of Brunswick, Maine, and a former resident of Eastford, to undertake the management of his large store in the Maine town. The change of climate and occupation was for a time beneficial to Mr. Sherman, and so satisfactorily did he manage his friend's affairs that the yearly sales of the business increased from $30,000 to $100,000. Owing to a fall at the end of his twelve years' residence in Brunswick he was obliged to withdraw from the taxing responsibility, but returned again after a two years' residence in East Thompson, at the earnest solicitation of Mr. Green. Nevertheless, at the end of two years, he was convinced of the futility of longer bearing up under the strain of his arduous work, and so returned to East Thompson and engaged in the mercantile business with his brother, Isaac. During the Civil war the brothers manufactured shoes for the army with more than anticipated success, and Mr. Sherman lived in East Thompson until coming to Eastford, in 1879, when he purchased his present home at Phoenixville of the George Sprague estate. For several years he was engaged in the steam sawmill business with Deacon William Ingalls, of Abington, the mill turning out principally railroad timber and telegraph poles.

In 1840 Mr. Sherman married Lucretia Edgerton, of Mason, Mass., and of this union there were two children, who died in infancy. Mrs. Sherman lived until May 5, 1901, and is buried in the Grove cemetery, at Eastford. Mr. Sherman did not long survive her. Mr. Sherman was once a Whig, but finally became a Republican, and though averse to political wirepulling he served as town clerk and treasurer, and was a member of the board of selectmen for several years after the separation of Eastford from Ashford in 1847. He was a member and had been a master of Israel Putnam Lodge, No. 47, F. & A. M., and for more than half a century was an active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife also was a communicant. As an example of perseverance, wise conservatism, integrity and all around exemplary citizenship, Mr. Sherman had no peer in the stable community of Eastford.

OSCAR ADELBERT LEONARD was born Dec. 14, 1853, in Stafford, Tolland county, a son of Rufus Jenks Leonard, of Ellington, whose history may be found on another page. Oscar A. Leonard spent the first eight years of his life in his native town, and at that age was taken by his parents to Tolland, where he attended school, finishing his education, however at the Rockville school. When he was sixteen years of age he returned to the home farm, and since that time has been engaged in farming. He owns about eighty acres on the Tolland and Rockville road, known as the Chapman Farm. In all Mr. Leonard owns about 200 acres in Tolland, and is a capable and industrious farmer. For about twenty-five years he has run a milk route in Rockville, dispensing in this way the milk of some twenty-five to forty cows, which belong to what is known as the "Dutch Belt" breed.

Mr. Leonard is a Democrat, and very staunch in the party faith. In 1884 he represented the town in the General Assembly, where he served on the Labor committee. At home he was on the board of selectmen one term; on the board of relief a term, assessor two terms, and collector of taxes two terms. For many years he has been registrar of voters, and he has attended to the construction of many of the town roads. He and all his family are members of the Congregational Church, of which he has always been a liberal supporter. Socially he belongs to the Ancient Order of the United Workmen, and the Royal Arcanum, of Rockville.

On April 21, 1880, Mr. Leonard was married to Jennie Roxana Joslyn, a daughter of Edmund Joslyn, of Tolland. Their children are: Charles Henry, born Feb. 3, 1883, graduated in 1900, from the Rockville high school; Mary Roxana, born Oct. 1, 1884, is now attending the Rockville high school; Florence Jennie, born Feb. 6, 1889, is now attending the district school; and Rufus Joslyn, born April 3, 1894, has begun attending district school. Mr. Leonard is one of the most successful farmers of the town of Tolland, and his farm shows the handiwork of a skilled and progressive agriculturist. He is a genial and whole-souled gentleman, who is very popular in the community, and whose home is very hospitable.

FRANKLIN C. ELLIS. One of the highly respected members of the well-known family of Ellis, is Franklin C. Ellis, who was born July 22, 1870, in the same house where he now resides, in West Stafford, Tolland Co., Connecticut.

(I) Benjamin Ellis, back to whom Franklin C. Ellis traces his descent, was born in 1733, and died at the advanced age of ninety-five years, Aug. 27, 1828. In his time he was a leading citizen and was a lieutenant of the militia. (II) Capt. Joseph Ellis, a son of Benjamin, was born in 1760, possibly in Sturbridge, Mass., but more probably in Stafford, Conn., his death occurring in West Stafford, Conn., April 22, 1828. His occupation was that of a farmer, and he was influential in the Congregational Church. His marriage took place on April 23, 1783, to Molly Dunton, who was born in 1762, and died Oct. 5, 1847, in West Stafford. Their children were: Sally, born Aug. 22, 1784, who died Oct. 9, 1787; Polly, born Feb. 1, 1786, who married John Cleveland, and died Dec. 5, 1859; Joseph B., Jr., born Oct. 15, 1787, who died Nov. 8, 1800; Elisha, born Feb. 21, 1789; Sally, born May 4, 1790, who married Zina Winter; Wyllys, born Nov. 24, 1791, who married Abigail Carpenter, and died July 31, 1831; Royal, born April 7, 1793, who married Marcia Holmes, and died in March, 1829; Azubach, born March 23, 1795, married to Flavel Patridge; Clorinda, born April 10, 1797, married to Abiatha Davis; Natalia, born Dec. 6, 1798, who died Sept. 10, 1806; Joseph, Jr., born Sept. 4, 1800; Ammarylis, born Sept. 15, 1802, who married Alden Glazier, and died May 21, 1847; Beulah, born Dec. 17, 1804, who married Samuel Spellman; Caroline, born Jan. 4, 1809, married to Lorenzo Hull.

(III) Elisha Ellis, son of Capt. Joseph, was born Feb. 21, 1789, and died May 9, 1869, in Stafford, at the age of eighty years. On Dec. 6, 1813, he was married to Hannah Warren Winter, who was born Nov. 18, 1791, and who died Feb. 16, 1838; for his second wife, he married Sally Drake in November, 1841, and she died Aug. 11, 1892. Elisha Ellis had ten children by his first wife. (1) Zina Winter was born Aug. 20, 1814. (2) Elisha Gilbert was born July 3, 1816, and was married March 4, 1838, to Elly Davis, who was born Dec. 29, 1813, a daughter of Asa and Mary (Robertson) Davis. Elisha Gilbert was considered the strongest man in Stafford and he at one time displayed his remarkable strength by lifting his wagon from the mud when his team of horses could not do it. His physical development was that of a man weighing two hundred pounds and six feet in height. His two surviving children are: Elizabeth Ann, who is the widow of Minerva Shearer, of Ellington, Conn.; and Charles G., a resident and one of the most prominent citizens of Stafford, a director in the Savings bank, and one of the stewards in the Methodist Church, married to Lucy Ann Howe, of Stafford, and the father of one daughter, now the wife of Burt T. Eaton, of Stafford. The other children of Elisha Ellis were (3) Amanda Natalie, who was born Aug. 9, 1818, and married Leonard G. Goodrich; (4) Horace Dexter, who was born May 2, 1821, and married Hannah Poole; (5) Rosanna Maria, who was born June 12, 1823, and married William Bliss; (6) William W., who was a noted minister of the Methodist Church; (7) Azubah Caroline, who was born Sept. 5, 1827, and married Horatio McKinney first, and second, John Carroll, of Willington, Conn.; (8) Lucy B., who was born April 7, 1830, and married Harrison Howe; (9) Julia S., who was born Dec. 3, 1832, and died young, unmarried; (10) Harriet Eliza, who was born July 26, 1835, and was married to Austin C. Bliss, Nov. 26, 1854.

(IV) Horace Dexter Ellis, the father of our subject, was born May 2, 1821, in West Stafford, and died there, June 23, 1898. On Oct. 5, 1845, he married Hannah Poole, of Willington. By occupation he was a farmer but when a young man he also worked in the mills, and later, engaged extensively in the charcoal business. In religious matters, he was a staunch member of the Congregational Church; politically he was a Republican, and represented the town in the State Legislature in 1864, and again in 1865. Mr. Ellis also served on the board of selectmen, as assessor, as a member of the board of relief, and held other minor offices, distinguishing himself by his probity of action and clearness of judgment.

To Horace Dexter Ellis and his wife were born: Almerah, who was born in September, 1847, and died April 1, 1880, at the age of thirty-three years; Jane, who was born July 30, 1852, married Adelbert A. Carpenter, of Staffordville, and is now living in Old Mystic; Eugene Dexter, who was born July 28, 1854, in West Stafford; and Franklin C.

(V) Eugene D. Ellis was educated in the common schools. At the age of seventeen years he left his books and engaged in farming, having at the present time some fifty-five acres of land under cultivation, and owning many more of timber land. Mr. Ellis has been very extensively engaged in the lumber business, gets out railroad ties, and has done much in the charcoal line, an important industry for many years in that locality. Fraternally Mr. Ellis is connected with the A. O. U. W. order of Stafford. Although a very staunch Republican, he has never sought office and refused an election to constable, the only position Mr. Ellis has accepted being one on the board of relief.

The marriage of Eugene Dexter Ellis was celebrated on Jan. 1, 1877, to Emily Maria Neff, of Ellington, who was a daughter of Elijah and Harriet Maria (Neff) Neff, and the children of this union are: Eugenia Hattie, born Feb. 22, 1878; Clifton Merrill, born Sept. 2, 1879; Lena Almera, born Aug. 20, 1882; Ruth, born Aug. 16, 1880; and Roland Ernest, born Feb. 27, 1893, all at home.

(VI) Franklin Carlton Ellis was born July 22, 1870, in the same house in West Stafford in which he now resides, and until his seventeenth year he attended the district schools. Then he became a farmer and has continued in this line ever since, also engaging in lumbering; he is considered one of the progressive and successful young business citizens of that vicinity. Mr. Ellis was married, April 6, 1901, to Mrs. Hattie E. (Ladd) Andrews, who was the widow of Robert J. Andrews, with one son, Charles O. L. Andrews, who was born Oct. 14, 1888.

Mr. Ellis is one of the leading and active members of the Congregational Church of West Stafford and has served as a member of the Ecclesiastical society committee. In politics he is a staunch Republican, but has never consented to accept political preferment, desiring only to perform the duties of a good citizen and exerting at all times an influence in behalf of education, religion and good government.

JOHN JAMES OTTENHEIMER, the genial State barber commissioner, of Willimantic, Windham county, was born Aug. 19, 1864, in Waterbury, Conn., a son of Joseph and Mary (Brennen) Ottenheimer, the former a native of Germany, and the latter of Ireland. Joseph Ottenheimer was a cabinet-maker, having learned his trade in his native land. In 1849 he came to the United States, and followed the water many years. Both he and his wife now reside in the town of Windham.

During his youth John J. Ottenheimer lived with his parents in the town of Windham, and attended the district school of the town, among his teachers being the late Porter B. Peck. When fifteen years old, he began to learn the art of shaving and otherwise aiding people to make a presentable appearance, taking up the trade in the shop of Theodore Bodette in Willimantic. In 1884 he bought a barber shop located in the Cranston Block, Willimantic, and for the last twelve years he has been proprietor of the Hooker House barber shop. His experience covers service in various shops of the leading cities of New England, and those who have sat under his ministrations will testify to his skill and adroitness. Mr. Ottenheimer has imbibed a large knowledge of men and the world in general, and is a pleasant conversationalist. His remarks are not confined to the small talk of many barbers, but cover a wide range of subjects of intelligent interest. His fitness for the responsible State position which he fills so acceptably was readily discovered by Gov. McLean, on coming in contact with him, and his appointment as one of the commissioners to examine candidates as to their fitness to carry on the work of a barber naturally followed. This appointment was made in 1901, and he went into office upon the operation of the law relating to this matter, July 1, 1901. He has visited nearly every town in the State, and has readily extended his friendships, coextensively with his acquaintance.

Mr. Ottenheimer has always taken an interest in public affairs and has wielded no small influence in the local councils of the Republican party. He is now a member of the town committee and chairman of the Third ward committee. In December, 1901, he was elected to represent the Third Ward in the city council of Willimantic. In 1897 he acted as messenger in the House of Representatives, where he made acquaintances that were valuable to him, and was doorkeeper of the Senate at the session of 1901. In the contest for appointment to the barber commission, he had many competitors, and won his position upon his merits as a man of mind and judgment, as well as social fitness.

On Jan. 10, 1885, Mr. Ottenheimer was married to Miss Elizabeth J. Dwyer, youngest daughter of Philip Dwyer, of Willimantic. Of their four children, Eileen Anastasia, born June 23, 1887, graduated in 1901 from St. Joseph's parochial school at Willimantic, and is now an expert telegrapher and stenographer; and Charles William, born March 29, 1889, John Aloysius, born July 21, 1891, and Philip Edward, Dec. 8, 1896, are students in the public schools of Willimantic. The mother passed away April 29, 1901, at the age of thirty-four years.

MICHAEL R. JOY, proprietor of the Front Street and Bugbee House Livery and Feed Stable, in Putnam, is one of the best known men in his line in Windham county. He was born Sept. 29, 1871, in the town of Putnam.

Matthew Joy, his father, born in 1826, was a native of Waterford, Ireland, and there grew to manhood. Like many of his countrymen, he participated in acts of insurrection, being goaded by the wrongs of his country, and was seized by the British authorities and sent as a political prisoner to the West Indies, under a fourteen years' sentence. By good conduct he obtained a reduction of seven years in this time, and was returned to his native country. He determined to immigrate to the free land beyond the Atlantic, but the government refused him permission to do so. As a subterfuge, he declared his determination of going to Australia, to which no objection was offered. Once outside of British territory he lost no time in proceeding to the United States and settled at Milbury, Mass., where he worked as a spinner in the mills. Later, he removed to Perryville, Mass., and subsequently to Putnam, Conn., in which vicinity he passed his remaining years, dying May 4, 1891, in Putnam; he was buried in St. Mary's cemetery. He was a Democrat in political principle, and in religious faith, a consistent member of the Roman Catholic Church. He was a man of fine physique and genial disposition, possessed of more than ordinary intelligence, was well read, and a fine conversationalist. While a resident of Milbury, he married Ellen Woodlock, who was born in Tipperary, Ireland, and died Feb. 26, 1900, in Putnam. She was a member of the same church as her husband, and was buried beside him. A devoted wife and mother, she will ever live in the memories of those who knew her as a good Christian. Four of her eight children are now living, namely: Michael R., Bridget Cecilia, and Alice Josephine and Anna Marie, twins. Those deceased included two who died in infancy, Mary Ellen and John William, who reached adult age.

Michael R. Joy attended the district schools in early youth, and was introduced to severe toil in the mills while still a child. When the mills shut down he worked in the stable of B. W. Carpenter, of which he subsequently became owner, and was ever ready to turn an honest dollar. Before attaining his majority, he became a regular employee of Mr. Carpenter, and after a short time was made manager of the business, which connection continued after the stables passed into the hands of John F. Carpenter, and until the spring of 1902, when Mr. Joy purchased them. At the same time he came into possession of the Bugbee House Stable, which was also the property of Mr. Carpenter. By strict attention to business and the pleasant manners which made him popular with the customers of these stables, he has retained the former trade and is building up additional business. His genial nature makes him friends, and he is widely known and popular. For the past nine years he has been constable of the town, and has made a prompt official. Much devoted to his widowed mother and sisters, he has ever performed the duties of a good citizen, and his steady, upright character commands the respect of his contemporaries.

HIRAM FISKE, deceased. A very high authority has declared that "a good name is better than riches," and no citizen of Rockville, Conn., ever bore one more respected when living, or honored when dead, than did Hiram Fiske, the subject of this brief biography.

During his life, Mr. Fiske was one of the best known citizens of Rockville, his connection of almost forty years with the Rock Mill of that city being longer in term of service than any other employe. He was born Oct. 27, 1816, in the State of New Hampshire, a son of Josiah and Betsey (Harvey) Fiske. While still a young boy the parents of Mr. Fiske removed to Vermont, and in that State, he was reared, receiving his education in the common schools of his native place. In his youth he left Vermont and went to Rhode Island, and in Waterford, in that State, he learned the trade of wool sorter. About 1843 he came to Rockville and went to work in the Rock Mill, engaging in his special line, in which he continued in his long connection with this industrial institution; later becoming the head of the room, and for many years was the responsible head of the department.

In 1844 Mr. Fiske was married, in Rockville, to Miss Lucy Ann Hurlbut, a native of Tolland, who was born on May 13, 1827, the daughter of Elizer S. and Lucy N. (Webster) Hurlbut, the former a native of Glastonbury, Conn., and the latter of Scotland. Elizer Hurlbut moved to Collinsville, Conn., when Mrs. Fiske was but a child, and there her mother died, when Mr. Hurlbut returned to Rockville, where he lived until his death. Mrs. Fiske being the only child of her parents' family who lived to adult age.

Mr. Fiske always resided in Rockville. His death occurred on May 17, 1881, no doubt hastened by a fall, and he is buried in Grove Hill cemetery. A man of very retiring disposition he never sought publicity, taking a great interest and comfort in his home. Some four years before his death he became a member of the Prohibition party, detesting liquor and always conscientiously opposing its use. A man who always set a good example, his neighbors esteemed him and rejoiced in his prosperity. Success attended him in his business and his wife, a most estimable lady, was left with a competence which enabled her to direct her life as she pleased, in travel or in her comfortable home, in Rockville. During her later years she made three trips abroad, two to Europe and one to the Holy Land. On one of these trips she passed a year in Paris. Her last trip embraced California and Mexico. Being a person of rare culture and intelligence, her conversation was very entertaining. She was a fine musician, both as an instrumentalist and vocalist. A devout Christian, she was active in the work of the Baptist Church, with which she united in youth. Kind and gentle in her manners, charitable to the faults of others, benevolent in her practices, she is greatly missed by those who knew her best. Her good life closed on Jan. 31, 1902.

FREMONT CADY DUNHAM, an enterprising and successful young farmer of Mansfield, Tolland county, is one of the representatives of an old family, which has records extending back as far as 1633. Deacon John Dunham, a resident of Plymouth, Mass., in that year, was undoubtedly the emigrant ancestor of the family. The only children of Deacon John, of which mention is made are: John, Benajah, Daniel, Samuel and Persis.

John Dunham, (2), the eldest son of Deacon John Dunham, was the father of three children: John; Jonathan, who died in infancy; and Samuel.

John, Dunham (3), the eldest of these children, was born about 1647, was a member of the Plymouth Church, and settled in Barnstable. His marriage was to Mary, daughter of Rev. John Smith, and the records of Barnstable tell of his death on Jan. 2, 1696, but other documents proved that his death occurred a day later. On Oct. 26, 1696, he purchased a thousand-acre right in Windham, and his widow and some of her children settled on this purchase soon after his death, and she was one of the patentees of the town of Mansfield in 1703. Their children were: Thomas, who was given one hundred acres of land on Willimantic River, north of Mansfield Depot, and tradition says he died unmarried; John, who had a like amount of land given him at Mansfield Centre; Ebenezer; Desire, who married Deacon Samuel Stetson, of Mansfield; Elisha; and Mercy and Benjamin.

Ebenezer Dunham, son of John (3) was born April 17, 1684, and first settled in Plymouth, but in 1720 removed to Mansfield and located at the point now known as Mansfield Depot. There he died Nov. 17, 1747, leaving a widow, and in his will which is dated Aug. 6, 1747, he names the following children: Seth, Ebenezer, Anna (who married Nathaniel Hyde, of Coventry) and Patience (who married Noah Skinner, of Coventry). This last named daughter died, and the supposition is that a daughter was adopted, and named Patience, who later married Asa Carpenter, of Coventry.

Seth Dunham, son of Ebenezer, settled on land near Mansfield Depot, which was left him by his father, and on May 16, 1735, he married Judah Paulk, who died Aug. 4, 1767, but he survived until Sept. 5, 1772. The children born to this marriage were: Abigail, born Jan. 16, 1736; John, born Aug. 8, 1737; Eli, born Aug. 4, 1739; Seth; Joseph, born March 21, 1745; Daniel, born April 4, 1748; and Judah, born July 6, 1751.

Captain Seth Dunham was born July 4, 1741, and died May 28, 1808. Captain Dunham was an officer in the local militia and it is supposed he saw service in the Revolutionary Army. He married on May 31, 1764, his first wife, Unis, daughter of Joseph Hovey, and they had these children: Jacob, the great-grandfather of our subject; Bruce, born May 24, 1766, married Simeon Allen; Unis, born May 12, 1768, died unmarried; Enos, born April 6, 1770, located in Salisbury, Conn., where he died; Sarah, born Aug. 1, 1772, married Roswell Griggs, of Holland; Seth, born May 15, 1774, married Lois Richardson; Thankful, born April 15, 1776, married Zacheus Waldo; Marcia, born July 27, 1778, married Ambrose Hilliard; Cephas, born Feb. 12, 1781; and Elijah, born June 1, 1785, died young. The second marriage was to Mary Porter of Coventry, and they had one child, Pamela, who married Dr. Norman Brigham, of Mansfield Depot, where she died.

Jacob Dunham, the great-grandfather of our subject, was born on Jan. 6, 1765, and died Jan. 19, 1846. His wife was Jerusha, a daughter of Calvin Topliff, and his children were: Jacob, who died in Chatham, Conn.; Jesse, the grandfather; Jeremiah, who died in Mansfield; Julius, who died in Mansfield; Jerusha, who married Ephraim Dimock; and Julia, who married Chauncey Gurley.

Jesse Dunham, the grandfather of our subject, was born in 1789, in the western part of the town of Mansfield. Brought up to farm work, he lived at home until after his marriage, when he moved to Gurleyville, and purchased a small farm of Ephraim Gurley, this now being occupied by his son, Franklin Dunham. The farm consisted of seventy-five acres, and on it he spent the rest of his life, dying there Sept. 9, 1863, at the age of seventy-four years, and he was buried at Gurleyville. During his active life, he dealt considerably in stock, and became a substantial farmer. Although a staunch Democrat, he never sought office, and he was a consistent member of the Gurleyville Methodist Church. He married Clarissa Gurley, born in 1790, a native of Gurleyville, a daughter of Ephraim and Bethia Gurley, and she died Aug. 5, 1866. The children of Jesse Dunham and wife were: Caroline, who married Mr. Corbin, and lived in Posey Co., Ind.; Marcia, who married Rudd Viets, and lived in Posey Co., Ind.; Margaret, who married Peter Mayo, and lived in Windham and Mansfield, and died in the latter place; Julia Ann, who married Cyrus Russell, and moved to Wisconsin and died there; Jefferson, the father of our subject; Henry, who was a farmer and died in Gurleyville, and who first married Mary Minot, second a Miss Frisbee, and third, Mattie Parkhurst, who still survives; and Franklin, who married Mary Abbey, and was a merchant at Gurleyville for many years, but is now engaged in farming.

Jefferson Dunham, the father of our subject, was born March 24, 1822, at Gurleyville, and left home when a boy to begin mill work in the wool mills at Rockville, later at Warehouse Point and Somerville, Conn. At some of the factories he was employed as a spinner, and later became an overseer in the spinning department. Some time after his marriage, he purchased our subject's present farm of a Mr. Graves, erected all the buildings and carried on general farming during the remainder of his life, and died there July 26, 1893. Mr. Dunham was a prominent man in town politics, for one term was Republican representative for the State Legislature, from Mansfield, and served several terms on the board of selectmen, and was a leading member of the Gurleyville Methodist Church, belonging to its official board. The first marriage of Mr. Dunham was on April 27, 1852, to Sophia Cady, born March 17, 1825, a daughter of Jesse Cady. [The genealogy of the Cady family is given in detail in the sketch of William H. Cady, elsewhere in this volume.] The children of this marriage were: (1) Cleona Sophia, born April 9, 1855, married April 23, 1878, Washington Irving Swift, of Mansfield, and their children were: Florence Sophia, born on Sept. 18, 1879; Mary Blanche, born on May 22, 1881; Fremont Dunham, born Feb. 23, 1884, died April 16, 1885; Theron Dunham, born Dec. 18, 1886. (2) Lenora Maria, born Dec. 18, 1858, married Andrew M. Grant, of Mansfield, and has these children: Gertrude, Clinton, Cora Irene and Genice. (3) Fremont Cady. The mother of these children died Feb. 26, 1875, and the father married, Sept. 11, 1877, for his second wife Arilla Cloyce Stillwell, born May 10, 1836.

Fremont Cady Dunham was born Aug. 31, 1861, on his present farm, and was educated in the common schools of Mansfield. Reared to farm work, he remained at home until he became of age, then went to Bristol, Conn., where he was employed at clerking for twelve years, his first employer being J. N. Todd, a grocer, with whom he remained for seven years, and the last five years L. G. Merrick, successor to the former. In April, 1894, he returned to the home farm, his father having died the year previously, and he assumed charge, buying out the other heirs, and is now engaged at general farming and dairying. His estate consists of one hundred acres, which he has placed under cultivation. He is also agent for standard brands of fertilizers.

On Nov. 30, 1885, Mr. Dunham was married in Chaplin, Conn., to Ella F. Martin, who was born Oct. 7, 1862, in Chaplin, a daughter of George and Olive (Young) Martin, and died Sept. 4, 1901.

Two children blessed this union: Arline O., born Dec. 13, 1891; and Marguerite M., born July 14, 1894. Mr. Dunham is a member of the Gurleyville Methodist Church, as was his wife, and he is now serving as steward. He enjoys the esteem of the community on account of his exemplary habits and excellent character.

The Martin family, of which Mrs. Dunham was a member, is an old one of Windham county. Thomas Martin, her grandfather, was born in Chaplin, Conn., and resided in the north part of the town, a prosperous citizen. He died there at the age of eighty-nine. His wife, Hannah Moulton, had died some time previously. They had a family of nineteen children, four of whom grew to maturity, as follows: Charles, who married Lucy Ford, is a retired farmer in Chaplin; George was the father of Mrs. Dunham; Earl, who married Jane Champlain, was an attorney, became judge of the Superior Court, and died in Danielson, Conn., and Jane, who died, single, on the old homestead.

George Martin, father of Mrs. Dunham, was born Dec. 19, 1818, in Chaplin, and died there in November, 1893. During his boyhood, he attended the common schools, worked upon the farm, and remained at home with his parents until after his marriage, when he purchased a small farm at Chaplin Centre, but after a few years, removed to the home farm, where he was buried. Mr. Martin was the Democratic representative from Chaplin to the State Legislature, in 1860, and served several terms on the board of selectmen. His wife was Olive Young, of Mount Hope, of Mansfield, a daughter of William C. and Mehitabel (Swift) Young, and she now resides in Chaplin. Her children were: Mrs. Dunham; Alida H., who married Walter E. Lamphere, a graduate from Oberlin College, class of 1899, and of a post-graduate course in 1901; Julia L., a graduate of Willimantic Normal School, now a teacher in Chaplin; and Dora Gertrude, living at home.

GEORGE M. BOLTON, who is engaged in the photographic business at Rockville and Windsor Locks, has established a reputation for fine work and artistic pictures, and is regarded as the foremost exponent of his art in this part of the State. In June, 1879, he started in business for himself in the Doane building, in Rockville, and for about a year he was at Norwich, when he returned to establish his present studio. Access to popular favor was easy, owing to the uniform satisfaction rendered his patrons. Mr. Bolton executes a general line of photography, and gives his attention especially to portraits, while crayon, pastel, India ink, and kindred artistic creations are done in the highest style of the art. For twenty-eight years he has been in the photograph business, and has become a prominent member of the community. Socially he is a man of parts, belonging to the I. O. O. F., and has been connected as an officer with the Photographers' Association of New England for several years, now holding the office of secretary. He has a diploma which he won at the meeting of the association in 1897, and a gold medal which was awarded him at the National Convention of the Photographic Association held at St. Louis in 1894.

Mr. Bolton was born July 20, 1857, in Canaan, Conn., a son of George M. and Martha (Brush) Bolton, the former of whom was a machinist by trade, and removed his family to Portland, Conn., when George M. was but eleven years old. There the mother died, and the father went to Iowa, where he soon after died. Of his family of seven children, five were girls, and two were boys, George M. being the only son now living.

George M. Bolton, after spending a short time in Iowa, came back to Connecticut when he was about sixteen years of age to take up the photographic business in the studio of his brother-in-law, F. E. North. Since he was nine years old he had been to some extent fighting his own way in the world, and now he had entered what has proved to him the way to competence. Taking readily to the business he exhibited those natural instincts regarded as essential to the true artist. It was in June, 1879, that he first went into business for himself, in the old Doane Building, and from that time his success, while not phenomenal, has been highly satisfactory. In 1902 Mr. Bolton commenced the publication of a professional photographic magazine, Progressive Photographer, acting as publisher and editor, and meeting with great success.

Mrs. Bolton was Miss Jennie L. Sumner, of Bolton, Conn., and is the daughter of Sherman P. Sumner, and the niece of Charles F. Sumner, of Bolton. They have one son, Leslie Sumner. Mr. Bolton is a Republican, but takes a broad and sensible view of local politics, seeking only the best man for the position regardless of political considerations. In religion he is a member of the Unitarian Church.

DEACON SAMUEL BORDEN SPRAGUE, whose long life replete with honors and good works has been passed in Windham county, where he is one of the most highly respected citizens, was born in the town of Killingly, Windham county, Oct. 15, 1823. The family originally came from Rhode Island, where they were long prominent.

William B. Sprague, father of the Deacon, was born in Killingly, and came to Scotland in 1830, where he purchased the farm known as the Fuller place. There he spent many years in general farming, but later in life returned to the town of Killingly. He located at Danielson, where he spent the remainder of his life, and died at the advanced age of seventy-eight years. His remains rest in Danielson cemetery. For his first wife William B. Sprague married Hannah Fuller, who was born in Hampton, Conn., a daughter of Erastus Fuller. To this union came the following children: Samuel Borden; William B., Jr., who died young; Hannah, who married Sumner B. Maine; and James, who was engaged in the government service and died in Washington, D. C. The wife and mother died in Scotland and was buried there. Mr. Sprague married (second) Joanna Hutchins, and to this marriage came children as follows: Penuel H., of Danielson; Ezra T., a prominent lawyer of Salt Lake City, Utah, where he died; and Havilah, a well known physician in New York, where he died. In his political views William B. Sprague was first a Whig and later a Republican. He was a member of the Congregational Church, and served as deacon for a number of years. Fraternally he belonged to the Masonic Order.

Samuel B. Sprague, son of William B., attended the district schools of Killingly and of Scotland (then a part of the town of Windham), and he completed his studies in the academy there. For several terms he taught school. Reared on a farm, and trained to farm work from his earliest childhood, he has made farming his principal occupation, and is one of the largest land owners in Scotland. Not only has he been successful in general farming, but he has devoted much time to stock raising and dairying with profit and success. On account of ill health Mr. Sprague was obliged some years ago to give up the active management of his estate, the greater part of which is now looked after by his foster son, Deacon Gallup.

Deacon Sprague has for many years been actively identified with the Congregational Church, and he has ever taken a deep interest in all religious movements. For several years he served as deacon, but his advancing years and impaired health made the duties onerous and he gave up the office. So greatly is he beloved by his co-workers in the Master's field, however, that he is still accorded all the honors of the office. For a long time Deacon Sprague was superintendent of the Sunday-school. In public life he was as active as in church circles, and he has always deemed it incumbent on good citizens to take an intelligent interest in public affairs. In his politics Deacon Sprague was first a Whig, and later a Republican. In 1877 he represented the town of Scotland in the State Legislature, where he did efficient work on the committee on Roads and Bridges. For several years he was selectman, and has been chairman of the board, and has also held the office of trial justice.

On Nov. 24, 1847, Deacon Sprague was united in marriage with Emma Gallup, daughter of Nathan Gallup. She entered into rest March 28, 1878. One child, William F., who died at the age of four years, was born of this union. On Nov. 28, 1878, Deacon Sprague wedded Lois G., daughter of Mason and Hermie (Hall) Burnham. She is a noble Christian woman, highly respected by all who know her.

Few men can pass so long a life as Deacon Sprague and at its close present so clean a record. No question of his integrity mars the purity of his business transactions, and his personal character has been molded along lines that are well worthy of emulation.

DEACON ARCHIE HALL GALLUP, a well known farmer of the town of Scotland, is a worthy representative of one of the oldest families in New England.

John Gallup, the first of the name in America, was a native of England, born in the parish of Mostern, Dorsetshire, and he fell in the assault on the Pequot Indians' Fort. He was a son of John, and a grandson of Thomas and Agnes (Watkins) Gallup, of North Bowood and Strode. John Gallup came to America in 1630 and located in Boston, Mass., where in 1643, he married Hannah Dale, daughter of John and Margaret Dale, of royal lineage. In 1650 their son, John Dale Gallup, removed to Mystic, Conn., where he passed the remainder of his life.

(V) Nathan Gallup (2), fifth in descent from John Gallup, the emigrant ancestor, was born Jan. 2, 1801, in Sterling. He lived in the town of Windham, and there engaged in farming until his death, Oct. 9, 1878. On Sept. 25, 1822, he was married in Sterling, to Sally Hall, aunt of John M. Hall, president of the N. Y., N. H. & H. Railroad. Mrs. Sally (Hall) Gallup died March 14, 1843, and Dec. 18, 1843, Nathan Gallup married Mrs. Esther Gallup, who died May 5, 1871. Nathan Gallup was the father of the following children: Julia, born May 10, 1824, died Oct. 18, 1825; Eliza A., born Oct. 18, 1825, married Henry Starkweather, Aug. 27, 1844; Emma, born March 5, 1827, married Deacon Samuel B. Sprague, and died March 28, 1878; Nathan, born March 10, 1829, married Sarah T. Murphy, Feb. 19, 1850, and died in October, 1892; Lucian is mentioned below; James, born Feb. 12, 1834; George B., born Nov. 5, 1836; Horace, born July 24, 1839; John Dale, born March 12, 1843, died at Manchester, Connecticut.

(VI) Lucian Gallup, son of Nathan (2), and the father of Archie Hall Gallup, was born June 5, 1831, in Windham, and passed his entire life as a farmer in Windham and Plainfield. On Jan. 21, 1854, he wedded Jane P. Baldwin, who died three weeks after her husband in 1875. His death occurred Feb. 10, 1875. They left three children: Winslow Baldwin, born at Canterbury Oct. 2, 1854, is now a successful farmer in Chaplin, Conn.; on Jan. 1, 1879, he married Mary E. Bradford, who was born in Canterbury, a daughter of John and Jane (Congdon) Bradford. Archie Hall is mentioned below. Annie M. married Charles E. Anthony, of Scotland, and has five children.

Archie Hall Gallup, son of Lucian, was born in Windham Jan. 19, 1865, and was only ten years old when his parents died. He then went to the home of his uncle, Deacon Samuel B. Sprague, and soon became a loved member of the latter's family. He attended the district schools, and later the Williamantic school. His home training was along the line of farm work, and he early had a practical knowledge of the manifold duties of an agriculturist. Until 1895 he made his home with his uncle, and since Mr. Sprague's illness has had charge of his large estate, giving to it the wise care that has so characterized the owner's intelligent management. Mr. Gallup has sixty acres of his own that he also cultivates. He has paid no little attention to dairying, and is a stockholder and director of the Scotland Creamery.

In March, 1895, at Franklin, Conn., Mr. Gallup was married to Mary E. Austin, who was born in Norwich, a daughter of James L. Austin. One child, Winslow Sprague, has brightened their home. Keenly alive to the advance made in the methods of farming, Mr. Gallup has taken an active interest in the work of the local Grange, and also of the Pomona and State Granges. Politically he is a Republican, but outside of the offices of school visitor and registrar of voters, has found his time too limited to permit of his accepting honors at the hands of his friends and neighbors. Like his foster father, Deacon Sprague, Mr. Gallup has been a worker in the Congregational Church, and for two years has held the office of deacon.

LOREN BATES. The sudden death of Loren Bates, May 20, 1901, removed from accustomed haunts in Danielson one of the most expert machinists and honored citizens, as well as a man whose excellent business judgment and marked executive ability secured for him many positions of trust and responsibility in the community. He was born in Dudley, now Webster, Mass., Sept. 21, 1824, and was a son of Captain Alanson and Betsey (Keith) Bates. He was educated in his native town, and his youth and early manhood were spent in hard labor on his father's farm. When of age he began to learn the machinist's trade, and was later engaged thereat in Webster, Oxford and Worcester, and in 1846 removed to Putnam, where for four years he worked as a machinist in the new Ballou Mills.

On April 1, 1850, Mr. Bates came to Danielson, having accepted a position as foreman of the mechanical department of the new Quinebaug Mills, of which the late Gov. Lippett, of Rhode Island, was the principal owner. At the expiration of four years he changed his occupation to that of the roller business, in which he was successfully engaged for twenty-one years. The roller enterprise was disposed of advantageously in May, 1874, to William Young, and from then until the time of his death, Mr. Bates was retired from business, enjoying the rest won by his ceaseless activity and enterprise. He had not only won an enduring good name among his fellow men, but had accumulated a goodly share of worldly possessions. In the meantime his reputation for well-doing rested upon many important public services, among which was his position as burgess of the borough for several years, his thorough work as street commissioner for three years, and his services as a member of the board of relief, and assessor of the town of Killingly. In January, 1875, he was chosen a director of the First National Bank of Killingly, and was thus identified until the bank went out of business in 1896. He was regarded as an expert financier, and his principal transactions evidenced exceptional judgment and ability. He was a director of the Music Hall Company, and was a member of the building committee. He was a domestic man, and his last years were spent in his home on the corner of Cottage and Broad streets, which he regarded as his club, his secret society and all that he most cherished in life.

On Sept. 29, 1850, Mr. Bates married Lucy M., daughter of Deacon Elliot Carpenter, of Putnam, and who died Oct. 24, 1863. Of this union there were four children: Two who died in infancy; Everett A., a successful physician of Springfield, Mass.; and Anna Maria, the wife of Luther B. Davis. On Sept. 19, 1866, Mr. Bates married for a second wife, Maria Elizabeth, daughter of George B. Stead, of Thompson, Conn. Of this union there were two children: Clara Louise, wife of Earl C. Hopkins, of Reading, Pa.; and Lou Rena, who is living at home. Mr. Bates made many friends during his long residence in Danielson, and he was regarded as one of the reliable and progressive men of the commonwealth.

MARSHALL PORTER, the present Judge of Probate, is one of the distinguished citizens of the town of Hebron, Conn., and he occupies a high standing in that community both by reason of his legal learning and his personal character. The family to which he belongs has a history that reaches back to the very earliest period of colonial affairs, and much farther into the long past of England.

John Porter, the founder of the family in Connecticut, was born in 1590, at Uraxhall Abbey, in Kenilworth, Warwickshire, England, the ancient seat of the family, and was of the twelfth generation from William de la Porte, a Norman Knight, who came to England in company with William the Conqueror in 1066, as may be seen by the Roll of Battle Abbey. The name by easy changes became "Porter." John Porter, with his wife, Rose, and their children sailed from London in the ship "Anne," and arrived at Dorchester, Mass., May 30, 1627, remaining there until the summer of 1635. That year they joined a party formed for entering the wilderness, and located at Windsor, Conn., where he died April 22, 1648, and his widow the 20th of the following May. Their children were: (1) John, born in 1620, married Mary Stanley; (2), Sarah, born in 1622, married Joseph Judson; (3) Anna, born in 1624, married William Gaylord; (4) Samuel, born in 1626; (5) Rebecca, born in 1628; (6) Mary, born in 1630, married Samuel Grant; (7) Rose, born in 1632, died May 12, 1648; (8) Joseph, born in 1634; (9) James, born in 1638, married Sarah Tudor; (10) Nathaniel, born Feb. 29, 1640, married Annie Groves; and (11) Hannah, born Sept. 4, 1642, married John Coleman.

Samuel Porter was a merchant, and in 1659 located in Hadley, Mass., where he died. In 1659 he married Hannah Stanley, who died Dec. 18, 1702. Their children were as follows: (1) Samuel, born April 6, 1660, married Johanna Cooke; (2) Thomas, born April 17, 1663, died May 27, 1668; (3) Hezekiah, born Jan. 7, 1665, married Hannah Coles, later Esther Dickinson; (4) John, born Dec. 12, 1666; (5) Hannah, born in 1668, married John Brown; (6) Mehitable, born Sept. 15, 1673, married Nathaniel Goodwin; (7) Experience, born Aug. 5, 1676, married Abigail Williams; (8) Ichabod, born June 17, 1678, married Dorcas Marsh; (9) Nathaniel, born Nov. 15, 1680, married Mehitable Buell; and (10) Stanley, born April 1, 1683, married Thankful Babcock.

John Porter removed from Hadley, Mass., to Lebanon, Conn., in 1702, thence to Hebron, where he died Jan. 4, 1747. On April 3, 1690, Mary Butler became his wife, and they had the following family: (1) John, born Jan. 26, 1691, and died in 1693; (2) Mary, born May 4, 1692; (3) John, born Oct. 3, 1694; (4) Esther, born in 1696, died Feb. 11, 1713; (5) Sarah, born in 1699, married John Tillotson; (6) Joseph, born in 1702; (7) Reuben, born in 1704; (8) Daniel, born in 1706, married Sarah Hawley. For his second wife John Porter married on Oct. 13, 1726, Sarah Church.

John Porter, of the above family of children, was born at Lebanon, and went to Hebron, where he became deacon of the church in after years. His death occurred Jan. 5, 1753. He was married on Nov. 9, 1720, to Esther Dean, who died July 10, 1726. Their children were: (1) Mary, born July 19, 1721, married Josiah Mack; (2) John, born April 30, 1723, married Lydia Tarbox; (3) Daniel, born in January, 1726. On Nov. 2, 1727, John Porter married for his second wife, Sarah Heaton, who bore him the following children: (1) Reuben, born Sept. 26, 1728, married Sarah Bliss; (2) Amos, born in 1730, married Joanna Allen; (3) Sarah, born Nov. 2, 1731, married Abijah Mann; (4) Ruth, born in 1733, married Benjamin Baldwin; (5) Laura, born in 1735; (6) Anna, born in 1737; (7) Patience, born Nov. 30, 1738, married Caleb Root; (8) Eunice, born in 1740, married Daniel Baldwin; (9) Jonah, born in 1742, married Keziah Cutting.

Daniel Porter, the great-grandfather of Marshall, was born in Lebanon, Conn., where he followed the trade of a carpenter, and also engaged in farming, residing first at Hebron, and afterward at Windsor, and still later at Hanover, where he died in October, 1789. His first marriage occurred Oct. 25, 1747, when Diana Dunham, who died Jan. 27, 1760, became his bride. Their children were: (1) Gaylord; (2) Daniel, born Oct. 1, 1750, married Harriet Denslow, was a farmer, and died in Windsor, Conn.; (3) Eleazer, born March 8, 1752, married Susannah Rowley, was a farmer, and died in Hamilton, N. Y.; (4) Mary, born June 15, 1754, married Gen. Bailey, of Vermont; (5) Anna, born Dec. 5, 1757; (6) John, born Jan. 9, 1760, was killed in the War of the Revolution. Daniel Porter was married, second, on April 23, 1761, to Sarah Barnard, who died Oct. 17, 1769. To this marriage were born: (1) James B., born Jan. 20, 1762, settled in Georgia; (2) Ambrose, born Feb. 8, 1764, married Violet Marsh.

Gaylord Porter, the grandfather of Marshall, was born Nov. 5, 1748, in Windsor, Conn. During his residence in that town when a boy he was adopted by Deacon Gaylord, of Hebron, after whom he was named. Deacon Gaylord was childless, and young Porter was to them as a son. After their death he came into possession of the farm, which his benefactor had bargained from the Indians. This farm was on the Andover road, about a mile and a half from Hebron Green, and is still in the possession of the descendants of Gaylord Porter. Gaylord Porter died in Hebron Aug. 5, 1823. Miriam Brown became his wife Oct. 27, 1768, and died July 15, 1779. Their children were: (1) Anna, born March 14, 1770, died May 19, 1786. (2) Amasa, born May 12, 1771, married Sally Bliss, Feb. 14, 1797; he graduated from Yale College, and became a Congregational minister. His death occurred April 19, 1856. (3) Roswell, born June 7, 1773, died Feb. 14, 1777. (4) John, born Aug. 25, 1775, died Nov. 25, 1793. The second wife of Gaylord Porter, whom he wedded Feb. 10, 1788, was Susanna Brown, who died Feb. 25, 1795. To this union were born: (1) Susanna, born Nov. 16, 1788, and died Dec. 1, 1788. (2) Truman, born March 3, 1790, died unmarried during the war of 1812, while he was in service at Greenbush, N. Y., Aug. 15, 1812. (3) Daniel, born Feb. 4, 1795, married Jerusha Sumner, was a cloth dresser, miller and farmer, and died in Hebron May 24, 1869. Gaylord Porter was married a third time, Aug. 7, 1795, to Anna Brown, and to them the following children were born: (1) Anna, born March 22, 1796, died in Hebron, unmarried, Aug. 13, 1876. (2) Jasper, born Sept. 22, 1797, was married Oct. 17, 1848, to Mary C. Bissell; he was a farmer and an all round mechanic, and died in Hebron, Feb. 2, 1886, a deacon of the Hebron Congregational Church. (3) John, born Aug. 25, 1799, married Fanny Scovill, was a musician and a piano maker, and resided in Middletown, Conn., where he died Aug. 9, 1866. He was married for his second wife to Sarah Stocking, of Portland, Conn., who survived him. (4) Royal, the father of Marshall Porter, was born Dec. 2, 1800. (5) Barzillai, born May 1, 1802, married Rhoda F. Clark, was a cabinet maker, and died in Columbus, Pa., Dec. 1, 1836. (6) Orlean B., born Sept. 27, 1803, married Sarah Bissell, was a school teacher in early life, and was later a farmer in Hebron, where he died Sept. 25, 1879. (7) Almira, born March 17, 1806, and died in Hebron, unmarried, July 20, 1865.

Royal Porter was born on the Porter homestead. He attended only the district school, but gained a very valuable and useful fund of information. Shortly after his marriage he removed to Marshall, Mich., where he remained for a few years. The climate, however, did not agree with him, and for the sake of his health he came back to Hebron, where he engaged in farming and teaching, having schools in Hebron, Columbia and Portland, and continuing to teach until middle life. For many years he had his residence opposite the home of his son, Marshall, but later moved to the farm now owned by him, where he died March 15, 1870. In early life he was a Democrat, and became a Republican on the organization of that party, as he was a strong anti-slavery man. Mr. Porter was a member of the Hebron Congregational Church.

Mr. Porter and Fanny Mann were married in August, 1835. She was born March 23, 1809, in Hebron, a daughter of Enoch Mann, and her death occurred Feb. 18, 1874. Their children were: (1) Royal, born in Marshall, Mich., where he died at the age of thirteen months. (2) Marshall. (3) Ann Maria, born Feb. 28, 1843, is unmarried. (4) Frances Amanda, born March 11, 1846, is unmarried. (5) Josephine Elizabeth, born Nov. 1, 1847, is the widow of Henry G. Porter, and resides on the Porter homestead in Hebron; they had one child, J. Ward.

Judge Marshall Porter, the well-known and popular citizen of Hebron, was born Oct. 16, 1840, in the house in which he is living at the present time. His schooling was had in the district school, and in the famous Ellington high school, kept by the Rev. Mr. Chapman. For ten years he was employed in a store at Hebron, owned at first by E. P. & C. G. Buell, and afterward by C. G. Buell alone. When his father died the management of the farm fell on him as the only son, and he continued to look after its cultivation for his mother until her death in 1874, when he bought out the other heirs, and secured possession of the farm, then consisting of a hundred acres. It was devoted by him to general farming and the raising of berries.

On Nov. 19, 1863, Judge Porter married Miss Mary A. Buell, who was born Nov. 20, 1845, in Hebron, a daughter of Josiah M. and Susan A. (Burnham) Buell, and died Oct. 19, 1899. Their children were as follows: (1) E. Buell, born March 11, 1868, married first Maria Rathbone, second Geneva Evans, and third, Flora Williams, and lives in Hebron; he has one daughter, Marguerite Vaughn, born Aug. 5, 1901. (2) Marshall Jewell, born May 13, 1869, married Carrie Johnson, and has one child, Harold J., born Nov. 25, 1896; he is a conductor on the air line railroad. (3) Susan F., born May 25, 1870, is the widow of Patrick F. Deasy, a farmer in Gilead, who died Dec. 26, 1899, the father of Marshall P. (born July 3, 1893), Charles M. (born Nov. 17, 1894), Marion L. (March 22, 1896), Annie C. (born May 5, 1897), and Royal P. (born June 7, 1900). (4) Howard C. was born Nov. 7, 1871. (5) J. Lynde, born Nov. 30, 1873, married Nellie Worth, and is a farmer in Columbia.

Judge Porter is a Republican, and has served several years on the Board of Selectmen, being chairman of the Board one term; and has also held other local offices. In 1873 he was elected to the General Assembly, being a colleague of the late George R. Vestor. In 1880 he was elected Judge of Probate in Hebron, and with the exception of two years has held that position to the present time. In the constitutional convention of 1902, he represented the town of Hebron.

LEVI JOHNSON HAMMOND. Among the well-known names in Windham, Windham county, is that of Hammond, whose representatives are numbered among the successful farmers and business men, not only of today, but for several generations, and of them, none is more worthy of special mention than Levi Johnson Hammond.

The first of the family mentioned in the records of the early days was Hezekiah Hammond, who had a son, Hezekiah (2), who married Polly Greenslit, by whom he had four children: Elisha Griffin; Mary Ann, who married Edward Mosley; Maria, who married William Brown; and Albert, who died at the age of four. His first wife dying, Hezekiah Hammond married Hannah Warner, of Ashford, Conn., by whom he had the following family: Charlotte Lucinda, who married Gurdon Brown, of Philadelphia; Helen Elizabeth, who married E. W. Payne, of Philadelphia; Frances Jane, who married E. S. Chase, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; and Lucy Griffin, who married H. W. Richmond, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Elisha Griffin Hammond, of the above mentioned children, was born in Hampton, Conn., May 26, 1805, but came to Windham in 1833, and there married Olive Johnson. To this union were born: Emily, who married Henry B. Perry, of Auburn, N. Y., and had two children, Frank (who died Dec. 16, 1857, aged five years) and Ellen; George M., who died March 13, 1854, aged twenty years; Mary Ann, who died in New York City, Oct. 19, 1890, aged fifty-two years, and who married Ellis Harkness, of Norwich, Conn.; and Levi Johnson, and his twin brother Hezekiah Griffin, born Jan. 9, 1842. The latter lived on the old home farm in Windham, where he died, unmarried, July 14, 1889. The father married second Rebecca Avery, of Norwich, New York.

The early life of Elisha Griffin Hammond was spent in Hampton, Conn., the town of his birth, and here he attended the district schools. When a young man he located in Windham and purchased a farm one and one-half miles east of the "Center" on Christian street, and there engaged in farming, being more than ordinarily successful, and for many years was a director of the Windham bank. In early manhood, he united with the Democratic party, but later became a Republican, and took considerable interest in political affairs, and while he often held town offices, including selectman, member of board of relief, etc., the honors came unsought. Being a great reader, he kept himself well posted in current affairs, and although he lived to be nearly ninety-one years of age, he retained his faculties to a wonderful degree. The latter years of his life were spent with his son, Levi, at Windham, where he died April 17, 1896.

On his mother's side the ancestral line of our subject is as follows: Levi Johnson was born in Hampton, Conn., in 1773, and there the greater part of his life was spent, he being engaged in farming. About 1846, he removed to Brooklyn, Conn., where he died, April 16, 1861, aged eighty-eight. He was strongly Democratic in his political views, and took an active part in civic affairs. Mr. Johnson married Annie Martin, who was born in 1786, and died May 15, 1870. To Levi Johnson and wife were born: William Martin, born April 18, 1805, was married, Jan. 8, 1836, by Rev. Joseph Ayer, to Lydia H. Wheeler, of North Stonington, and he died Feb. 1, 1881; Olive, born in 1807, married Elisha Griffin Hammond, and died July 22, 1848; Emily, born Feb. 21, 1811, married John A. Perkins, and died Feb. 7, 1897; George C., born in 1813, never married, but lived in Windham until his death, March 24, 1878; and James M., born in 1822, married Annie H. Abbie, was a successful stock dealer in Windham, and died May 19, 1881.

Levi Johnson Hammond was born on the homestead in Windham, where he grew to manhood and attended the Christian street district school, No. 9, and for four terms went to a private school at South Windham, boarding with the gentleman who conducted the school, Dr. Fitch. Until the death of his uncle, James M. Johnson, he followed farming, but at that time succeeded to Mr. Johnson's business, that of stock dealer, and has since successfully conducted it upon a wholesale basis. Although he has farm property, since engaging in stock dealing, he has not farmed extensively.

For a number of years past, Mr. Hammond has been identified with the Republican party, but was originally a Democrat, and in 1877 was elected on the Democratic ticket for representative by a majority of seven in a strongly Republican district, thus demonstrating his personal popularity. While in the Legislature, he rendered efficient service to Windham, and served with credit on the committee of Cities and Boroughs. For thirteen successive years he served as tax collector of the town, and several terms was the representative of both parties, his unquestioned probity, just discrimination and fair proportionment being universally recognized. Mr. Hammond has also served as constable for thirteen years, and as assessor for several years.

Socially he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, Eastern Star Lodge, of Willimantic, Conn., having united with that order June 11, 1873. Mr. Hammond attends the Episcopal Church of Windham, of which he is a most liberal supporter, and in whose work he takes an active part. Thus far he has never married. Genial, public-spirited, enterprising, Mr. Hammond occupies a very high position among his fellow townsmen, and to his energy is due much of the commercial prosperity of Windham. Every improvement or measure tending toward the advancement of the town, has a firm advocate in him, and in such matters, he is a decided leader, while his pleasant personality has gained him many friends.

EDWARD GILMORE WRIGHT, Judge of Probate, with residence in Putnam, Windham county, was born Sept. 20, 1858, in St. Albans, Vt., a son of William and Jerusha (Tift) Wright.

William Wright, father of Edward G., was born in Paisley, Scotland, and in early life was a weaver of Paisley shawls. He came to America on a sailing vessel in 1830, and settled in St. Albans, where he was a very prominent member of the Congregational Church and a Deacon for many years. He became an iron molder by trade in Vermont, and was very prominent as an agitator of the temperance cause. He was, for over forty years, connected in St. Albans with the foundry company controlled by the Vermont Central Railway Co., but passed his latter years in retirement in California, where he had lived for twelve years. William Wright was twice married. His first wife whose maiden name was Steele, died leaving one child, Helen. His second marriage was with Miss Jerusha Tift, who bore him nine children, namely: Mary Jane, Elizabeth Ann, William Henry, Agnes Jerusha, John Elisha, Harriet Parsons, Charles Nicholas, Edward Gilmore and Sarah Frances.

Edward G. Wright spent his school days in the institutions of learning in his native town, completing his education in the St. Albans High School, where he spent three years, leaving there at the age of seventeen. For a number of years he had shown a natural inclination for work of a delicate mechanical nature, and he wisely decided to learn the trade of a watchmaker. He entered the watch making establishment of Charles Wyman & Son, the leading jewelers of the place, and spent five years in perfecting his knowledge of the business. On April 7, 1880, he came to Putnam, Conn., entering the store of George E. Shaw, and though an entire stranger he made friends at once. He remained with Mr. Shaw until the fall of 1891, when an opportunity presented itself to secure the well-known stand of E. E. Robbins, dealer in books, jewelry, toys, games, etc. By strict attention to business and an aptitude for the line of work in which he was engaged the patronage of the establishment has been steadily increased.

One of the especially pleasant experiences in Mr. Wright's life was his connection with the military organization of the town, as he was selected from private life to become the first lieutenant of Co. G, 3d Regiment, Conn. N. G. He served the organization six years in this capacity, and upon the resignation of Capt. Winslow his comrades selected him as their highest ranking officer, that of captain. This position he held until he entered business for himself, when he resigned to give his entire time to the duties of his store. Mr. Wright stands very high as a Mason, being a member of the Grand Lodge of Connecticut, and is a District Deputy.

On May 19, 1886, Edward G. Wright was united in marriage with Elizabeth Lyon, youngest daughter of Dr. John and Mary (Paine) Witter, of Putnam, the former of whom was for many years a leading physician in the town. The children born to Edward G. and Elizabeth Wright are eight in number, born in the following order: Elizabeth Agnes, Ardelle Frances, William Witter, John Lindsey, Mary Ellen, Edward G., Jr. (who died in infancy), Dorothy Paine, and Margaret Bowen. Fraternally Mr. Wright is a member of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M., of Putnam, of which he is Past Master; and in 1899 he was appointed District Deputy Grand Master of Windham and Tolland counties, to succeed Hon. E. E. Fuller, of Tolland. Mr. Wright is also Past High Priest of the Chapter; likewise a member of Israel Putnam Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F., of which he is a Past Noble Grand, and of Encampment, No. 33, of Putnam. He belongs to Gen. Putnam Commandery, No. 348, United Order of the Golden Cross, of Putnam, is a charter member of Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum of Putnam, of which he is Past Regent; and a charter member of the Grand Council, Royal Arcanum of the State. In politics Mr. Wright is a Republican, and has served as a member of the school committee, which, during his incumbency, had charge of the building of the Israel Putnam school house, in Putnam. On Jan. 1, 1898, Mr. Wright was elected judge of probate, to succeed Judge John A. Carpenter, and is the third to hold the office since the town has been organized.

CHARLES L. OLIN, who for the past fourteen years has been engaged in the painting and paper-hanging business in Willimantic, Windham county, where he also deals in wall-paper, moldings, etc., comes of an excellent Connecticut family. The Olins have been prominent in the vicinity of Plainfield from an early period. Daniel Olin, grandfather of Charles L., was a Revolutionary soldier. He owned a farm in Plainfield, and followed agricultural pursuits for many years.

Hon. George W. Olin, father of Charles L., was born and reared in Plainfield, and when a young man was employed by the Norwich & Worcester Railway Co., being their first station agent there. In those days wood was the only fuel used in the locomotives, and a large amount was kept piled up in Plainfield ready for use. Later Mr. Olin became a farmer, purchasing land near Sprague, Windham Co., Conn., and then at Franklin Hill, Conn., but he finally located at Dudley, Mass., where he also bought a homestead. Being ever a friend of education, he removed to Dudley because he wished his children, who were all possessed of more than ordinary ability, to have the benefit of the schools there. Wherever he resided he took a prominent part in local affairs, serving on school committees in several places, and he was elected to the Legislature on the Democratic ticket. While he was of powerful build, and seemed robust, he did not attain advanced age, as he died in his sixty-fifth year, from cancer of the stomach. He left a comfortable competence, gained solely through his own efforts, seconded by the economy and good management of his estimable wife (now deceased), whose maiden name was Zippiette Green. She was a native of Longtown, Conn., where her father, William Green, was a well-known agriculturist. George W. and Zippiette Olin had nine children: Daniel, who settled in the "Far West;" Jane, who married William Adams, of Ellington, Conn.; Elizabeth, wife of Dwight Bushnell, of Windsor; G. W., a farmer of Windsor, Conn.; Julia, Mrs. John E. Higginbotham, of Windsor, who was a successful teacher before her marriage; Susan, wife of H. E. Phelps, of Windsor; Charles L., mentioned below; Ernest, who was last heard from at Memphis, Tenn.; and Hattie, Mrs. Edwin Bowise, of Pueblo, Colo., who taught school for a time with marked success.

Charles L. Olin was born Dec. 9, 1847, in Plainfield, and in his youth received excellent educational advantages. He attended the district schools at Lisbon and Hanover. In early manhood he learned the painter's trade, which he left later, however, to engage in steamfitting, which he followed in Hartford for some time. Again taking up painting, and also paper-hanging, he has continued to follow that business successfully to the present time. Since 1888 he has been located in Willimantic, where, besides engaging in the active work of his trade, he has carried on an establishment for the sale of wall-paper, moldings and similar goods, wholesale and retail.

In May, 1870, in Hartford, Mr. Olin married

Louise Kingsley, who was born in that city, daughter of Frederick and Sarah (Morris) Kingsley. Her father was a native of Paris, France, where he learned his trade of saddler and harnessmaker. Coming to America, he engaged in the harness business at Hartford, and there made a saddle for the Czar of Russia. His death occurred in Hartford. Mrs. Kingsley was a daughter of John Morris, of New York, who was a carriage manufacturer and a prominent man in that State, at one time running for governor of New York, on the Democratic ticket.

Mr. and Mrs. Olin have had six children, as follows: (1) Charles F., editor of the Bristol (Conn.) Press, married Annie Burnham, daughter of John H. and Mary H. (Forbes) Burnham, of East Hartford, and they have had three children: Philips Stewart, born Aug. 18, 1895; Charles Burnham, Dec. 17, 1896; and Florence Burnham, Feb. 21, 1899. (2) Sadie N. is engaged in her father's store. (3) Frederick W. is in Hartford. (4) Katie died young. (5) Zippiette M. and (6) Walter Morris are still attending school. Politically Mr. Olin is a Democrat, but not strictly partisan, acting independently. He is a substantial man and a good citizen, and has always regarded the Golden Rule as a safe guide for his conduct in every relation of life. Mrs. Olin is a lady of culture and refinement, and possesses great business ability.

A. E. BREWER. Among the respected and well known citizens of Stafford, Tolland county, is A. E. Brewer, a son of Daniel Brewer, who was the third of that name in the ancestral line, and was born Nov. 19, 1819, in East Hartford, Connecticut.

Until his seventeenth year, Mr. Brewer enjoyed excellent educational advantages in his native place, selecting then the tinner's trade as one promising a fair competence. With R. & L. Callender he served an apprenticeship in this line, on State street, Hartford, remaining with this firm until he was twenty-one years of age. He then went to Manchester, and remained for one year with Horton Bros., leaving there to fill contracts made by Mr. Callender, in various towns where skilled work was required. In 1844, Mr. Brewer went to Monson, Mass., where he engaged in work at his trade, and also cultivated a farm of thirty acres, later adding to his land until he managed 100 acres, remaining in Monson for a period of fourteen years. In 1867 he came to Stafford and purchased two acres of land of Samuel Smith, in Staffordville, since then adding forty more acres to the original purchase. Although he has done some work at his trade since locating here, Mr. Brewer has paid the greater part of his attention to farming, although since 1894, he has been somewhat hampered on account of an accident to his right leg. He has been a very hard-working man all his life, and is most remarkably vigorous for his age, both physically and mentally.

The first marriage of Mr. Brewer was on May 3, 1842, to Catherine Mandana Andrus, of South Glastonbury, Conn., a daughter of Ansel Andrus, and she died in Monson, Mass., Aug. 16, 1862. The children of this union were: Albert Lorin, born May 2, 1844, in Monson, Mass., was drowned in the Connecticut river at East Hartford, June 23, 1847; Kate Isadore, born Oct. 8, 1846, married Oliver Aaron Bliss, a farmer of Monson, and their children are: Frank (who married Minnie Crew, and has four children, Helen, Myrtle, Frank and Howard), Alice (who died at the age of six months), Grace (who married Edgar Swift, and lives in Monson), Royal Arthur (unmarried), and Sarah Rosabelle, born Sept. 6, 1857, married Frank S. Bowden, and died at the age of twenty-three, leaving one child, Alice, who married Howard King, a clerk for Newton, Robertson & Co., of Hartford.

The second marriage of Mr. Brewer occurred Nov. 23, 1862, Sylvia Corbin Bugbee, of Union, Conn., becoming his wife. She was a daughter of Newman and Eliza (Smith) Bugbee, both of whom are deceased. There are no children of this union.

Mr. Brewer has long been a consistent member of the Congregational Church, and has served as Deacon, although he would never consent to an election, and has also served on the Society's committee. In politics he has been a conscientious member of the Republican party, being one from principle and not for political favor. Mr. Brewer is justly held in high esteem in Stafford, and enjoys the respect of all who know him.

GRANVILLE I. PERRY, one of the generous, whole-souled, and highly esteemed representatives of the agricultural class in Windham county, is a descendant of one of the substantial New England families, and is a man whose fine mold of character makes him extremely popular in his community.

Mr. Perry's great grandfather was Joseph Perry, born in Grafton, Mass., Nov. 10, 1745. By his wife Polly (or Dorothy) his children were: Moses; Nathaniel, who died unmarried; Sarah, who married a Mr. Draper; Polly, who married a Mr. Ewers; and Lucy, who died a spinster June 9, 1865.

Moses Perry, son of Joseph, was the grandfather of our subject. He was born Aug. 11, 1773, and died Dec. 26, 1849, in Attleboro Falls, Mass. He married Eunice Stanley, daughter of George and Abigail Stanley, who became the mother of Amos Stanley, who was the father of Granville I. Perry.

Amos Stanley Perry father of our subject, was born Jan. 3, 1814, in Attleboro, Mass., and died in Vermilion, Ill., July 4, 1894. On May 14, 1840, he married Melinda Tisdale Bullock, who was born July 25, 1812, in Rehoboth, Mass., and died in Vermilion, Ill., March 9, 1882. She was the daughter of Oliver Bullock, of Ottawa, and Susannah (Tisdale) Bullock, of Rehoboth, Mass. To Amos S. Perry and wife were born the following children: Amos Leonard, born May 14, 1841, in Rehoboth, and died March 15, 1900, in Tonica, Ill.; Mary Grant, born Aug. 20, 1843, in Rehoboth, Mass., married Feb. 5, 1868, Samuel F. Turner, of Taunton, Mass., and died Aug. 16, 1893, in Wilbur, Neb.; Susanna Tisdale, born Feb. 19, 1848, in Rehoboth, died Aug. 30, 1849; Granville I. is the subject of this review; Anna Judson, born Aug. 21, 1857, in Rehoboth, married Gardner H. Sumner, of Woodstock; and Fremont, born Jan. 4, 1854, in Rehoboth, married Nov. 4, 1881, Harriett Knapp, and now lives in Chicago, Illinois. Amos S. Perry, the father, was a farmer in early life, worked also at the carpenter's trade, and for a time was engaged as an overseer in cotton mills at Attleboro and Bellingham, Mass. In 1868 he removed to Illinois, where he died as stated. Both he and his wife were devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Granville I. Perry was born Feb. 12, 1845, in Rehoboth, Mass., and received a fair education in the common schools of that village, but on account of the limited circumstances of his father, was compelled to leave school at sixteen years of age. He began life as a farmer near Rehoboth, and later removed to Vermilion, Ill., where he lived from November, 1865, until the spring of 1888, when he came to Woodstock and engaged on the farm of G. H. Sumner for a period of three years. Mr. Perry then superintended the farm of Mrs. Caroline Chandler, in East Woodstock, for some six years, and on April 6, 1898, he purchased the William Graves Child farm of forty acres, which he has since conducted. He is engaged in a general farming business, and the neat appearance of his farm indicates that he thoroughly understands that business. In social life Mr. Perry is a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 42, A. F. & A. M., of Woodstock. He is an attendant upon the Congregational Church, and of which his wife is an active and earnest member, she having served as president, secretary, and treasurer of the Ladies Aid Society of that organization. Mr. Perry's political affiliations lie with the Republican party. While he was living in Illinois, he served a period of four years as deputy sheriff, and eight years as constable. He is also an active member of Woodstock's Society for the Prevention of Theft.

On May 31, 1877, Mr. Perry was married first to Matilda Clendennin, of Trout Run, Pa.; she died June 6, 1887, at Tonica, Ill., without issue. On April 6, 1898, Mr. Perry was married to Mrs. Jennie Carey (Morse) Potter, a daughter of Nathan Morse, of Woodstock. By her first marriage she had one son, Henry James, born Feb. 22, 1881, in Webster, Mass., where Mr. Potter was a school teacher; he is now a student at Worcester Polytechnic College and is a young man of much promise. Mr. and Mrs. Perry are highly esteemed residents of their immediate community.

ALBERT B. HICKS, born on what is generally known as the Ames Place, in Canterbury, July 10, 1851, is the son of Ripley Hicks, and grandson of David Hicks, also residents of that place.

David Hicks came to Pomfret when a young man and engaged first in farming and later in basket making. After a number of years Mr. Hicks moved to Canterbury and settled on a rented farm in the Baldwin District, where he resided the rest of his life, dying at the age of eighty-seven, and his wife, Sarah Togood, at the age of ninety-two. They had seven children, all of whom are now deceased: Ann married Henry Bump, and lived in the town of Norwich; George married three times, and lived in Plainfield, Conn.; David remained at home, and died at the age of thirty-two; Ripley is mentioned below; Lester served in Co. G, 12th Conn. V. I., in the Civil war, contracted a disease and died in the service; Charles, a farmer, lived in Canterbury; and Samuel died young.

Ripley Hicks, a well remembered citizen of Canterbury, was born in Pomfret, Conn., April 7, 1825, and when about fourteen years old moved with his parents to Canterbury, where he grew to manhood. He married Lydia A. Reynolds, who was born Jan. 28, 1832, daughter of Gilbert and Lydia (Howe) Reynolds. Mrs. Hicks died July 8, 1894. By her Mr. Hicks had five children: William Nelson, born July 30, 1848, married Kate Smith, of Taftville, Conn., where he is overseer of the paint works; Albert B., is mentioned below; Charles Edward, born Sept. 2, 1853, married first Margaret Bennett, and is a farmer of Plainfield; Sarah Ida, born Oct. 11, 1856, married a Mr. Battsford; and Myron Philips, born Jan. 9, 1877, is a resident of Canterbury, and has never married. Ripley Hicks engaged in farming on a small scale in Canterbury, but the principal business of his life was hunting and trapping. He is said to have been a most remarkable shot. During the Civil war, as a loyal citizen, he served for about a year in the 12th Conn. V. I. Both he and his father were Democrats. He died in Canterbury, April 10, 1900.

Albert B. Hicks passed his early days in Canterbury, where, until the age of fifteen, he attended the district schools. Having a taste for painting, after some preliminary practice he determined to make that a business, and followed it for a number of years in the cities of Providence, Newport, Norwich and Hartford. Having acquired considerable proficiency at his trade, he often took large contracts, and for four years superintended the painting for a company where seven or eight men were constantly employed. Mr. Hicks finally determined to turn his attention to farming, and, in 1897, purchased the M. Eaton farm in Canterbury, a fifty-five acre tract, which he afterward increased to sixty-five by an additional land purchase. Here he has erected a neat cottage and a substantial barn, and the place is now a model of care and thrift. He carries on general farming with success, and having about ten cows, also engages in dairying.

On Sept. 19, 1871, at East Brooklyn, Conn., Mr. Hicks married Annie Mahoney, who was born in Norwich, Conn., and they have had two children: Clinton Marlow, born Nov. 10, 1875, works for Cheney Bros., at South Manchester, Conn. Frederick Albert, born May 18, 1879, lives at home. A highly respected Republican, Mr. Hicks is now serving as constable and tax collector, and keenly interested in social matters, is a member of the school committee. He and his wife belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Canterbury, of which for ten years he has been trustee, and for the past two years superintendent of the Sunday school. Socially he stands high, and is a member of the A. O. U. W., of Central Village.

FRANK PINNEY WILLIAMS is a merchant of South Coventry, Tolland county, comes of a prominent Connecticut family, and has taken his place among the leading men of his generation. His paternal grandfather lived in Colchester, where his sons John, Justus and Elisha Kellogg, were reared, and where he, himself, died at a ripe old age.

Elisha Kellogg Williams was born in Colchester in 1811, and died in Bolton in 1865. Susan E. Pinney, his wife, was a native of Ellington, and a daughter of Judge Benjamin Pinney, who was born in Ellington in 1780.

During his earlier years Judge Pinney was a farmer, but from the first manifested a legal gift beyond the average. While he was still a young man his services were sought by those engaged in litigation, and he was able to give them substantial help. Gradually he acquired a profound knowledge of legal transactions, handling estates, and attending to many things, which few lawyers of professional standing could match. Very frequently he made writs and other documents returnable to the higher courts, and acted as arbiter and referee. Before ecclesiastical tribunals he often appeared, and took a pleasure in his work when he thought himself right. The last act of his life was his participation in a suit commenced by himself, which involved some nice legal points. The labor and anxiety produced a condition when he easily, on the way home, contracted a severe cold and soon passed away. Mr. Pinney was a selectman of Ellington, several years, and a member of the General Assembly from that town four sessions. He was elected a member of the State Senate from the Twentieth District. For four years he was judge of probate for the district of Ellington, for three years he was associate judge in Tolland county, and for three years presiding judge of the court. As a judge Mr. Pinney labored under an embarrassment common to all who have made their way to the Bench with no legal training, but his quick and ready mind, his commanding intellect, his strong will enabled him to handle the legal business readily, and give satisfaction to all. Judge Pinney departed this life June 9, 1860, followed to his grave by the respect and reverence of the entire community. On Feb. 23, 1803, Judge Pinney was married to Susan McKinney, who was born July 6, 1780, and their happy conjugal relations continued for fifty-seven years, three months and sixteen days. To them were born: (1) Persis, born in February, 1804, married Henry Flint, and removed to Illinois, where she died in 1838; (2) William, born Oct. 20, 1806, died Dec. 15, 1884; (3) Parmelia, born in 1808, married Rev. Mr. Brown, and died in Illinois in 1850; (4) Benjamin Jr., born Aug. 17, 1810, was a farmer in Ellington, married Caroline Smith and had one child, Francis; (5) Albert, born in 1812, was a farmer in Ellington, married Lovina Tibballs, had one son, Marcus; and (6) Henry, born in 1814, married Cynthia Parsons, of Warehouse Point, and on her death became the husband of Mary Johnson, of Stafford, where he followed farming and where he died; (7) Susan E., born Jan. 6, 1816, died July 21, 1818; (8) Elizabeth, born Dec. 25, 1817, married William T. Earle, now deceased, and lives in New York; (9) Samuel B., born Oct. 5, 1820, married Nancy Allen, of East Windsor, and was a farmer of Bloomfield, Conn., where he died; (10) Susan E., born in 1822, married Elisha K. Williams, of Bolton. Samuel Williams was her second husband, and she died in Monson, Mass.

Elisha K. Williams was a carpenter in his earlier manhood, and while engaged in that work in Bolton met his future wife. After his marriage he bought a farm and became interested in a mercantile enterprise. At his death he was in the prime of life, and was instrumental in every good work in the community. As a Democrat he represented his town in the General Assembly, and was town clerk for a number of years. In the Bolton Congregational Church Choir he played the flute. To Elisha K. Williams and wife were born: Ferdinand E., of Terryville, Conn.; Elizabeth I., of Monson, Mass.; Ella S., of Monson; and Frank Pinney.

Frank Pinney Williams was born Jan. 12, 1863, in Bolton, where he remained to the age of nineteen years in attendance upon the home schools, when he went to Stafford Springs, to engage in the shoe business. In this line of work he was interested for a year, when he moved to Monson, Mass., where, in company with his brother Ferdinand, he opened a grocery store, and for five years the two conducted a very successful business. At the end of that time they sold this business, and came to South Coventry, opening a general store business with the trade and stock of F. E. Hull.

For five years the two brothers kept together, when Frank Pinney bought out his brother, and since that time has carried on the establishment alone, doing a large business and winning a flattering patronage.

Mr. Williams was married Sept. 6, 1893, to Mary Elizabeth, a daughter of W. C. Latimer, of South Coventry, whose interesting sketch may be found on another page. To this union has come one son. Earle Latimer, born June 20, 1894. Mr. Williams is a Democrat, but never a believer in silver. He belongs to the A. O. U. W., No. 15, at South Coventry, and both himself and wife are members of the Congregational Church.

WILLIAM ENNIS. On the top of a hill, commanding a fine view of the surrounding country, in the southeastern part of Pomfret, and four miles from Danielson, is located the 325 acre property of William Ennis, known as the Woods Hill Farm. About seventy-five head of cattle graze on the sloping meadows, fifty of them being utilized for a large dairy business, conducted continuously for many years, and supplying a large milk route in Danielson. The pretentious cow barn, destroyed at great loss to its owner, has been replaced by a structure 132x42 feet, and this is but one of the many improvements instituted on the premises since Mr. Ennis's assumption of control in 1865. Some of the most ambitious and praiseworthy efforts at all-around progressive farming have emanated from the fertile and resourceful brain of Alfred A. Ennis, who for many years has lifted the responsibility of management from the weary shoulders of his father, and who is at the present time the guiding force of the various interests centered on Woods Hill. Everything connected with this largest agricultural undertaking in Pomfret is kept in splendid working condition, and all labor-saving devices, all the latest revelations of science as applied to soil development, and all methods advocated by thoughtful farmers in the agricultural periodicals of the day, are known to, and judiciously applied by, the tireless and remarkably successful Ennis family.

It is doubtful if any farmer in Windham county has traveled a longer or more painstaking route in reaching the goal of his ambitions than has William Ennis. His childhood was a hard and industrious one, and filled with little of the leisure or joy that older people recall with pleasure. He was born in Charlestown, R. I., Oct. 20, 1825, and he is descended from English ancestors, first represented in America by his paternal great-grandfather. His father, Joseph Ennis, was born in Charlestown, R. I., Nov. 2, 1802, and in early life was a farmer by occupation. In later life he lived in Stonington, Conn., where his death occurred, Nov. 19, 1845. In March, 1825, he married Susan Burdick, born Oct. 26, 1804. Of this union there were the following children, of whom William is the oldest: Varnum, born May 23, 1829, married Emeline Crandall, is a farmer by occupation, and lives in Charlestown; Susan F., and Joseph F., born April 20, 1831 (the former married first Edwin Burdick, and later William Miller, of Foster, R. I., and the latter married Maria Burdick, and died in Brooklyn, Conn.); Phoebe A., born March 14, 1834, married Orrin Potter, and lived in Charlestown, R. I.; Thomas N., born July 14, 1836, married Emeline Burdick, and died in Hampton, Conn.; Edwin O., born June 12, 1838, died April 16, 1839; George H., born March 23, 1840, lives in Connecticut; and Charles D., born Aug. 8, 1843, married Miss Tucker, is a veteran of the Civil war, and lives in Pomfret, Conn. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Joseph Ennis married Peleg Tucker, whom she survived, and died in Charlestown, R. I., in March, 1901, at the age of ninety-seven years.

As may be imagined, William Ennis had limited educational chances in his youth, for the arduous duties of the home farm consumed all of his energies. When twenty years of age the death of his father caused him, as the oldest son, to assume the care of the farm and entire family, a no small obligation for one of his years. The elder Ennis was a very poor man, and it was a hard struggle to eke out even the bare necessities of life. William took up his burden with rare courage, and worked at all kinds of labor in order to improve the family fortunes. In spite of this he was obliged to go heavily in debt in order to keep the family together, and for several years after his marriage, in 1849, paid out of his limited means, bills contracted when in dire necessity. After his marriage he began housekeeping in Westerly, R. I., and worked for a couple of years as a farm laborer, after which he rented a farm in the neighborhood for a year, removing then to another rented farm, on Currie Hill, where he remained a year. He next removed across the line into Stonington, Conn., and rented the Thomas Hinkley farm for seven years, the following two years being spent on the farm of George Brown, in Westerly. A subsequent residence was near Wauregan, Conn., in the town of Plainfield, and although Mr. Ennis intended staying there for five years, the sale of the property necessitated his removal at the end of a year to the farm of James Miller, near the Green Hollow road. This farm also fell under the hammer at the end of a year, and Mr. Ennis had again to pull up stakes and look around for other ground to cultivate.

In April, 1865, Mr. Ennis purchased the original part of his present farm of Henry Reynolds, going heavily in debt for the same, but paying off the claim in a comparatively short time. As soon as the property became his own he began making improvements, and also added to its acreage until he had acquired 325 acres. A few years later he established the milk route in Danielson, which is not only the largest, but the best in the place, and with the exception of about three months required to replace the burned barn with a new one, this dairying business has been constantly kept going. The milk is supplied to customers on the route, and a large quantity is daily shipped to Boston. The daily output of the dairy is about 300 quarts.

In his married life William Ennis has been singularly happy and fortunate, for his wife has been one in a thousand, and has nobly and unceasingly assisted her husband in his hard struggle for a competence. He married Sept. 16, 1849, Nancy Emily Worden, born in Hopkinton, R. I., Oct. 13, 1832, a daughter of Benjamin and Sarah (Worden) Worden. Mrs. Ennis, like her husband, had to undergo severe struggles in her youth, for after the death of her father, and when about seven years of age, she was put to work in a cotton mill, and continued in this capacity until the time of her marriage. She had no educational advantages whatever, but she has great force of character, good common sense, and unusual physical endurance. She has shrewd business ability, and had her youth fallen in more fortunate places, she would have filled some conspicuous sphere of life and action. Although more than seventy years of age at the present time, she is a power on the old farm and does more work in a day than most women half her age. Her advice is always asked and followed in regard to the management of the farm, and to her good judgment is attributed half of the success of the family undertakings. In her younger days she could reckon interest and difficult problems mentally, quicker than the average person can with pencil and paper. Five children have been born to William Ennis and his wife: Lucy Ann, born March 17, 1852, is the widow of Dr. Joshua Perkins, of Danielson; George Edgar, born Dec. 4, 1856, was a farmer on the old homestead, where his death occurred May 14, 1899; Ella B., born July 20, 1860, is the wife of Milton Kinnear, of Middletown, Conn., and has three children; Adella E., born May 19, 1863, is the wife of Frank Waters, of Jewett City, Conn.; and Alfred A.

ALFRED A. ENNIS was born July 8, 1866, and was educated at the district schools and Danielson Academy. He has always lived on the home farm, and took entire charge of its affairs when his father's health began to fail. He is a very successful farmer and dairyman, has excellent and progressive ideas, best illustrated by a survey of the farm, where may be found many novel aids to success unheard of before. One of his ideas is a steam feed cooker and water heater for the use of the stock in the winter time, and which has been placed in the barn and is the only one in this section of the country. He has a famous herd of fine thoroughbred Ayrshire cattle, which have taken hundreds of premiums at State, county, and town fairs, and which are the special pride of their owner. Mr. Ennis is a Democrat, as is also his father, but, besides casting his vote for the man best qualified to maintain public interests, has not been heard of in political ranks. He is a member of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 34, I. O. O. F., and Unity Encampment, No. 21, of Central Village.

PERKINS LLOYD LATHROP, a farmer and lumberman of the town of Coventry, Tolland county, deserves prominent mention in a work devoted to the leading and representative men of his community.

John Lathrop, the grandfather of Perkins L., was a native of New London, Conn. He married a Miss Dimock, of Willington, Conn., and each lived to a ripe old age. After their marriage they made their home in the southern part of Tolland county, where Mr. Lathrop was successfully engaged in farming. Their children were: Justin, the father of Perkins L. Lathrop; Wealthy, who married Calvin Willey, of Tolland; Charles, deceased, who lived in Tolland, where he was a farmer; Samuel, who married, had a family, and was engaged in the butcher business in Rockville, until his death; and Mary Angeline, wife of A. K. Brown, agent at the Mansfield depot.

Justin Lathrop, son of John, was born in Willington, and died in Tolland, in April, 1875, at the age of seventy. His youth was passed in Tolland, where he attended the common schools, and became a blacksmith, a trade he followed many years. For a time he was a resident of Willington, and in 1867 he purchased a farm in Tolland, on which he passed the remaining years of his life. In his political affiliations he was a pronounced Democrat. Justin Lathrop was twice married, the first time to Mary Isham, by whom he had three children: John, deceased, lived in Philadelphia; Don Ferdinand, deceased, lived in South Coventry; and James remained in Tolland. For his second wife, Mr. Lathrop was married to Ruth P. Kendall, a daughter of Lloyd Kendall, of Tolland. She, who was born in 1817, is still living with her daughter, Mrs. Carver. To this marriage was born: (1) James A., a farmer of Tolland, married Emma Dunn, and has a family; (2) Perkins Lloyd, the subject of this article; (3) Mary Angeline is the wife of Eli B. Carver, of Coventry.

Perkins Lloyd Lathrop was born in Willington, Conn., June 11, 1858, and had his first schooling in Tolland. For a year or more he was a student in the Natchaug high school, Willimantic, and attended a select school in North Coventry, which was taught by a Miss Morris, and afterwards by Arthur Kingsbury. When Mr. Lathrop had reached the age of sixteen years, he taught his first winter school in the 7th and 9th districts in Tolland, and for the twelve or fifteen years following, this was his winter occupation. During the summer months he would work on the farm, and thus improve the entire year.

In December, 1880, Mr. Lathrop was married to Fannie E. Walker, a daughter of James and Lorraine (Crandall) Walker. Mr. Walker was the oldest of ten children, lived in Coventry and died at the age of forty years; Mary, his eldest sister was thrice wedded, first to George Grant, second to Edwin Clark and third to Ralph W. Carpenter, all of Coventry; Christopher, the third member of the family, married Mary Wade, a resident of Coventry, and died at the age of sixty; Angeline, was the second wife of E. A. Rathbun, of Rhode Island, and later of Coventry; Martha Jane, who died aged twenty-two, first wife of E. A. Rathbun; Clarinda, married William Baldwin, of Coventry; Thomas, who married Ann Lewis, died at the age of forty-eight; Lucinda, married John Whitman, of Coventry; Rufus died at the age of twenty-five years; Henry Clinton, the youngest member of the family, married Cynthia Carpenter, daughter of Ralph W. Carpenter, and became a farmer in Coventry.

Rufus P. Walker, the father of the above ten children, was born in Foster, R. I., where he married Lucy Davis, and followed the occupation of stone mason. When he came to Coventry he bought the farm now owned and occupied by his son Henry C., and devoted his life both to farming and his trade. When he died he was fifty-two, and his widow lived to be seventy-five. A lifetime Democrat, he was one of six who voted that ticket in Foster. Hezekiah Walker of Providence, R. I., was his father.

To Mr. and Mrs. Perkins L. Lathrop were born: Arthur Justin, born Jan. 15, 1883, is now employed in the Vernon Creamery at Rockville, Conn.; Everett Perkins, born July 17, 1884, is at home; and Ruth Lillian, born Oct. 15, 1896. Mr. Lathrop was well instructed in farming at home, and after his marriage made that his life business, coming to Coventry to buy and cultivate a farm of 110 acres. To it he has since added twenty-six acres, and has brought his place up to a high state of cultivation. Here he does also quite a business in telegraph poles, railroad ties, and is an energetic and progressive man. In his farming he devotes much of his land to dairy purposes, as he finds nothing that pays so well. Since his marriage he taught school four winters.

Mr. Lathrop is a staunch Democrat, and has been called to fill a number of important offices. For two years he was selectman, was on the board of relief three years, town auditor four years, assessor in 1894, and the following year represented the town in the General Assembly, serving on the committee on Federal Relations.

JOSEPH LEVENE, a thrifty and successful citizen of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, was born Nov. 18, 1860, in Sherbrook, Canada, a son of Benjamin Levene, a native Canadian, who is now living retired in Willimantic. Ellen Tierney, who became his wife, was born in Ireland, and died about 1878 in Canada. They had three children: Benjamin, now living in Palmer, Mass.; Joseph, whose name introduces this article; and John, a resident of Taftville, Connecticut.

Joseph Levene had his schooling in the town in which he was born before he reached the age of twelve years, when he took upon himself the burden of his own support, and has made his own way in the world since that early day. The young lad was employed by the neighboring farmers, and in 1875 went to Keene, Vt., to take work as a logger on the Connecticut river, remaining there for something less than a year, when he returned to Canada, and for a time engaged in farming. Upon his second location in the United States, he chopped wood for almost a year at Whitefield, N. H., and in August, 1879, came to Stafford, Conn., to work at lumbering for Fred Pierson, with whom he remained for about a year. For the ensuing four years he was engaged in farming, and for three years worked in a sawmill at New London. Mr. Levene purchased the Green farm, in 1887, which he cultivated until 1891, selling it that year to purchase the ice business of Adolph Roberts, in which he is still engaged, and which has proved very remunerative in his hands.

Mr. Levene attends the St. Edward's Catholic Church, of which his family are also members. In his politics he is a Democrat, but when he casts his vote, always aims to select the best men for public office.

On Jan. 18, 1886, Mr. Levene was married to Mary Roberts, a daughter of Louis and Lena (Blanchard) Roberts, both of Canada. To their union have come the following children: Henry Joseph, born Nov. 11, 1886; Frank David, born May 11, 1890; Ellen Cora, born Nov. 4, 1892; Louis Adolph, who died in infancy; and John Dewey, born Dec. 18, 1898.

JAMES LEWIS EADIE was born April 21, 1836, in Perthshire, Scotland, a son of James Lewis Eadie, Sr., a native of the same place. The father died at the age of forty-one years in his native town, where for many years before his death he had been the superintendent of a large woolen mill. Agnes Henderson, his wife, survived him some years, and died in Scotland at the age of ninety-one. Their children were: Margaret, died in Scotland, married John McQuinn, and died in Glasgow, Scotland; Jessie died in infancy; James L.; David, married in Scotland, but died in Thompsonville, Conn., where he was established as a worsted spinner; Peter is living in Scotland, where he is married and holds a position as a stationary engineer in Glasgow; Susan died at the age of twenty years in Scotland; and Archibald died unmarried in Scotland from the effects of an accident.

James Lewis Eadie had his education in his home schools, which he left at the early age of ten years to enter upon his career as an apprentice at weaving and spinning, and this was his occupation until he came to this country. During this time he attended night school, and in this way secured a very practical education, by which he has been greatly helped in life. Mr. Eadie left Glasgow for the United States April 21, 1857, landing at Quebec, after a three weeks' voyage on a sailing vessel, and spent some three years at Cobourg, Ontario, before coming to Franklin, N. J., where he continued his trade, which he had followed in Canada. At Franklin he spent some five months, and then went back to Scotland on an extended visit. Returning to the United States Mr. Eadie located at Wolcottville, Conn., where he was employed for several months in a woolen mill. The next engagement which he made was as boss carder in Russell & Co.'s mills at Great Barrington, Mass., where he had thirty hands under his direction. At the end of a year he came to Warehouse Point, accepting a similar position in the Saxton Woolen Mill, and having charge of thirty-two hands. He remained there for nine years, when he removed to Poquonock to take the position of boss spinner, spooler and twister and dresser with charge of 250 hands in the Poquonock Worsted Mills. This very important place he held for sixteen years, when he came to Tolland to make his home for the rest of his life. Here he purchased the Silas Chapman farm, and devotes himself to general agriculture and dairying. The farm contains about ninety acres, and he keeps ten cows, sending the milk to the Vernon Creamery. It is an honorable and noble pursuit, and well ends a useful and industrious career.

Mr. Eadie is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is much respected in the community. In politics he is a Republican, and has served as grand juror. Though solicited to take official position, he has steadfastly declined, preferring to devote himself to the business he has had in hand.

On Sept. 25, 1863 Mr. Eadie was married to Jane Arnold, who was born in Londonderry, Ireland, June 15, 1842, a daughter of James Arnold. To this union were born: James Lewis (3), Sarah Jane, Agnes, Edward, Mary, and Mary (2). Mr. Eadie is an honorable and industrious man of the best character and standing among those who are acquainted with him, and has made himself to an extent much greater than those who are usually written up as self-made men. In his trade he was master of all its details, and throughout his life his integrity and reliability have been beyond question.

CARMINE H. KEMP, one of the leading citizens of Stafford, has long been identified with the lumbering interests of this part of Tolland county. He was born March 28, 1853, in West Stafford, a son of Carmine Hamilton and Levila (Ellithrope) Kemp, of West Stafford, the former of whom is one of the leading farmers and lumber dealers of the community. The grandparents of Mr. Kemp were Hiram and Sarah (Parker) Kemp, the former of whom was born in Groton, Mass., and the latter in Dunstable, Mass., where they came from old and esteemed families of the Bay State.

At the age of eighteen years, Mr. Kemp left school and engaged in farming, which he has continued until the present date, but his lumber interests have also occupied much of his time and energy. Mr. Kemp owns the McKinster farm, in West Stafford, consisting of 150 acres, and also owns another farm which contains 100 acres of woodland, while much of the valuable land is some parts of Stafford Springs also belongs to him.

In politics Mr. Kemp is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, but he has never accepted any office, his close attention being given to his personal affairs. Mr. Kemp has become one of the substantial men of this locality entirely through his own efforts, and enjoys the respect and esteem of the community. Mr. Kemp is unmarried.

JEREMIAH McGRATH, a successful agriculturist, resides in the town of Brooklyn, Windham county, Connecticut.

E. E. DUPUIS, a hard-working and enterprising dealer in boots and shoes, and gentlemen's furnishing goods in Moosup, is meeting with a deserved success.

His father, Anable Dupuis, was of French descent and a native of St. Edmund, Province of Quebec. He was married in his native town to Elizabeth Grovel. While our subject was a child the father died, but the mother is still living, and makes her home with him, in Moosup.

E. E. Dupuis, whose name introduces this article, was born in St. Edmund, Canada, Oct. 15, 1860, and secured a limited schooling in Montreal, but strictly speaking he is a self-educated man, as his opportunities for learning at school were very limited.

When he was a little over eleven years of age he came to Danielson, Conn., and secured employment as a mill worker in the spinning room, and later became engaged at cording and still later at weaving. After fourteen years of mill work he became a traveling salesman, and sold shoes from a wagon through the towns of Killingly, Sterling, Plainfield and Griswold. After five years of this work he set up a similar establishment for himself. He fitted out a wagon for the sale of boots and shoes, and with a storeroom at Wauregan solicited business in the surrounding towns. Mr. Dupuis came to Moosup, Oct. 29, 1899, and opened a boot and shoe store, to which he very soon added gentlemen's furnishing goods. A gratifying success at once crowned his efforts, and he has developed a very good trade.

On July 21, 1890, Mr. Dupuis was married to Emma Bessette, and to this union have come: Idona born May 17, 1891; Blanche, born May 7, 1893, died March 22, 1899, at the age of five years, ten months, and fifteen days; Leonelle, born June 6, 1897; Sylvia; and Edgar, born Dec. 2, 1899.

Mr. Dupuis classes himself as an independent in political matters. The family is connected with All-Hallows' Catholic Church, of Moosup, and Mr. Dupuis belongs to the Knights of Columbus, and the St. John and St. Louis Societies connected with the church. While he lived in Wauregan he served for five years as the president of the Knights of Columbus, and while he was at the head of the order twenty-two new members were enrolled, making it very strong financially and socially. After coming to Moosup he united with the local lodge. To his energy is due very largely the organization of the local lodge of Foresters.

THOMAS A. TILLINGHAST, one of the substantial and esteemed citizens of the town of Brooklyn, Windham county, was born April 5, 1844, in Plainfield, that county, and had reached the age of five years when his parents removed to Sterling, in the same State. There he attended the Chickerberry district school for two years and then accompanied his parents on their removal to Griswold, Conn., at which place he again attended school and assisted on his father's farm until the age of nineteen. With these years of experience in the practical work of the farm, young Mr. Tillinghast was given the operation of the estate on shares, and later, with his brother Waldo, he purchased the home farm, and for three years it was under his capable management. Selling this property, they then bought another farm in the town of Plainfield, and for two years Mr. Tillinghast managed and operated this place, later selling it, also to advantage. After this last sale, Mr. Tillinghast entered into the employ of his brother Waldo, who conducted a store in Central Village, and then decided to improve his education for some time. With this end in view he went to Suffield, Conn., and entered the Connecticut Literary Institute. After two terms of close attention to the books, he was forced to put them aside, on account of failing eyesight. Soon after his return to Plainfield, he became associated with his brother, C. E. Tillinghast, in the gristmill and grain business, under the firm name of Tillinghast Bros., at Hope Valley, R. I., but after one year failing health obliged him to dispose of his prosperous business.

Mr. Tillinghast resided in Moosup for one year and was interested during this time, in the life insurance business. He next moved to Putnam, Conn., where an active out-door life, was followed for some nine years, in trucking and teaming, this restoring his shattered health. In October, 1882, he moved from Putnam to Elliott's Station, in the town of Pomfret, where he purchased a large farm, and was there engaged in farming until April, 1885, when he came to Brooklyn and bought the farm which is locally known as the Job Main place, a tract of 150 acres, and here he has since resided. Mr. Tillinghast has remodeled the house and made many improvements, introduced modern methods and machinery, and has one of the most desirable and valuable farms in this vicinity.

On Jan. 23, 1872, Mr. Tillinghast was married in Moosup, to Jennie S. Tillinghast, who was born June 7, 1847, a daughter of Charles A. and Sophia (Young) Tillinghast. The children born to this union were: (1) Charles A., born May 19, 1875, is engaged in the lumber business in Brooklyn, and is one of the energetic and successful young business men of the town. He married Almira H. Bassett, of Brooklyn, and they have one bright little son, Howard Alva. (2) Everett T., was born Jan. 9, 1878. (3) Helen L., was born May 6, 1880, and graduated from the Danielson high school in the class of 1899; she is one of the capable teachers in the town. (4) Willis A., born Nov. 12, 1881, resides at home.

In political matters Mr. Tillinghast votes with the Republican party for national and State officials, but in local matters, he uses his own judgment, voting for the man he deems best suited for the position. His aspirations have never been those of an office seeker. Socially he is connected with the Brooklyn Grange, No. 43. All the family attend the Baptist Church, where Mr. Tillinghast has long been one of the trustees.

CHARLES A. TILLINGHAST, the father of Mrs. Thomas Tillinghast, was born on May 16, 1808, in Voluntown, Conn., a son of Edgar Joseph and Sarah (Gorton) Tillinghast, the latter being a daughter of William Gorton.

Charles A. Tillinghast attended the public schools of Voluntown, and at the age of sixteen years went to Norwich, Conn., where he learned the cabinet-making trade, with Ledyard & Jones, and later worked at this trade for about eight years. From that time he worked as a machinist, and for a long period was a foreman in the repair department in the mills, chiefly in the mills in this town but also in the mills in Webster, Mass., and Pawtucket, R. I. Few men worked more industriously or continuously than Mr. Tillinghast, his period of activity extending from the age of sixteen years, covering a space of sixty-nine years with scarcely the loss of a day. It is generally conceded that during those years his industry excelled that of any other in the town.

Mr. Tillinghast framed the first house that was ever erected in Almyville, Conn., but in 1847 he moved to Moosup, and about that date built the house which was his home for a half century. In 1831 he was married to Sophia Young, who was born June 10, 1808, a daughter of Andrew and Martha (Perkins) Young. Mr. Young moved to Connecticut from Rhode Island about eighty-five years ago, and for a period of thirteen years was the efficient and well-known superintendent of the Union Mill.

The death of Mrs Charles Tillinghast took place on April 24, 1901. She had long been a consistent member of the Baptist Church at Moosup, and was a lovely Christian character, beloved by a large circle. Her children were: (1) Alvah H., born July 6, 1832, married Sarah Kenyon. He established himself in the grocery business, including provisions and fruit, in Hartford, and for nearly forty years he continued there and became one of the most successful merchants of that city. Few business men are held in higher esteem in that city. (2) Sarah F. and (3) Helen S., both died in infancy. (4) Charles E., and (5) Jennie S., were twins, of whom the former died young and the latter became Mrs. Tillinghast. The lamented death of Charles Tillinghast took place in Moosup, March 1, 1897. He was one of the leading members of the Republican party, of the Baptist church, and was a very highly esteemed citizen.

CHARLES SWENSON, one of the most industrious and successful farmers of Woodstock, Windham county, was born in Sweden, May 28, 1865.

Swen Anderson, father of Charles Swenson, was also a native of Sweden, where he passed all his life as a farmer. He married Maja Lisa Nelson and died in 1900, but his widow is still a resident of Sweden and is well advanced in years. Seven children were born to them, as follows: Ingastina, who was married and who died in Sweden; Andrew, a farmer in Sweden; Sophie, who married and is living in Sweden; John, who died, unmarried, in Sweden when twenty-three years old; Hannah, who is married and is living in Worcester, Mass.; Charles, whose name opens this biography; and Alice, who is married to J. Augustus Johnson, a resident of South Woodstock, Connecticut.

Charles Swenson attended school until fourteen years of age, and then assisted his father on the farm until April 13, 1888, when he sailed from Goteborg to Liverpool, and thence, April 24, 1888, on the steamer Republic for New York, where he arrived May 7, 1888, and from that city immediately came to Woodstock and began work for George Frink, with whom he remained a short time only. He then went to work for George Bixby, in Thompson, just across the Woodstock line, remaining about a year and a half, when he entered the employ of Melancthon Ruddick, on Woodstock Hill, remaining three summers. After a short time with William Lindeman he returned to the Bixby farm and worked until May, 1898, when he purchased the late Deacon Nathan E. Morse place of fifty acres in East Woodstock village, where he raises the usual crops. He also keeps seven cows, finding a market for their milk in Boston.

Mr. Swenson is a member of the Swedish Congregational Church on Woodstock Hill, and has been its treasurer for several years, likewise officiating as superintendent of its Sunday school and trustee of the church. Mrs. Swenson is also an active and devout member.

The marriage of Mr. Swenson took place May 28, 1898, to Lydia Albertina Anderson, daughter of Andrew Magnus Johnson and Anna Christina (Johnson) Johnson of Sweden. Two children have blessed this union, namely: Paul Edwin, born June 28, 1899; and Carl Albert, April 2, 1902, both in East Woodstock. Mr. Swenson is a Republican in politics, is a very industrious farmer and an upright gentleman, and he and wife have won the genuine respect of every member of the community in which they live.

CHARLES SHELDON TURNER, one of the leading farmers and a representative citizen of Chaplin, Windham county, comes of a good old family.

Elijah Turner, grandfather of our subject, was a farmer and resided in the eastern part of the town of Mansfield, Conn., where he died. His family was as follows: Harlow resided in Mansfield, and was a farmer; Sheldon resided on the homestead in Mansfield; a son who died when a young man; Jesse became the father of Charles; Annie married Harvey Moulton, and died at Windham; Laura married Lyman Barrows, and died in Mansfield; Harriett died when young; and Abigail married William A. Clark, and died in Chaplin.

Jesse S. Turner was born July 25, 1820, in Mansfield, and his early life was spent there. After his marriage he removed to Chaplin, and purchased a farm in the Bare Hill district, where he carried on farming successfully for many years. Later he sold the farm and removed to Chaplin Center, where he resided the remainder of his life, dying there March 15, 1892, and he is buried at Chaplin Center. During his active life on the farm he bought and sold considerable live stock, and often made trips to Vermont and Massachusetts for stock, which he brought to Chaplin and disposed of there. At the time of his death, he was well-to-do. In politics he was a Republican, and had held many town offices. For one term he represented the town of Chaplin in the State Legislature, and was also chairman of the board of selectmen for several terms, and served as justice of the peace and tax collector. Both he and his wife were earnest members of the Chaplin Congregational Church. On Feb. 22, 1843, Jesse S. Turner was married to Mary Eliza Clark, born Nov. 8, 1821, a native of Chaplin. To this marriage were born: (1) Edward Lyman, born Sept. 30, 1844, is in the livery business at Norwich, Conn., married Jane Bothwick, and has two children, Rose and George; (2) Charles Sheldon. Mrs. Jesse S. Turner died Sept. 25, 1867.

Charles Sheldon Turner was born Oct. 3, 1850, in Bare Hill district of Chaplin, and attended the district school, and also a select school at Chaplin Center. At the age of eighteen, he went to St. Charles, Minn., with a view of locating, and was employed there at farm work for six months. Then he returned to Connecticut and the following winter was employed in a silk mill at Mansfield Hollow. The next employment he secured was in the paper mill of Fuller & Morey, in Chaplin, for two years, when he purchased his present farm, known as the Elisha Bill Place, a farm then consisting of seventy acres, which was in a run down condition. On this property he made improvements and has added to it until it now contains 150 acres, and is one of the best pieces of farming property in Chaplin. Mr. Turner is engaged in dairying quite extensively, and he is considered one of the best farmers in Chaplin. He breeds fine blooded Devon cattle, which are well known and have taken many prizes at fairs, etc. Being a man of industry he accomplishes much, and his energetic character is well known throughout the town and the surrounding country.

On Nov. 4, 1874, Mr. Sheldon was married in Chaplin, to Mariette A. Royce, born Feb. 23, 1851, in Mansfield, Conn., and she came with her parents to Chaplin when nine years of age. She is a daughter of Stephen Z. Royce (born May 18, 1816, died Aug. 9, 1877) and his wife, Mariette J. Lanpheor (born Nov. 23, 1824, died Dec. 24, 1898). To Mr. and Mrs. Turner two children have been born: Flora Eliza, born on Nov. 23, 1877, attended the Willimantic Normal School and has taught school in Chaplin; and Grace Adele, born Aug. 20, 1880. Mr. Turner is a Republican in politics, but is not bound by party ties, as he votes for the best man, and he has served on the board of relief and in 1901 served the second term as the third member of the board of selectmen. Both Mr. Turner and his family are earnest members of the Congregational Church of Chaplin.

On the maternal side Mr. Turner is descended from one of the oldest Windham county families, the Clark family. Phineas Clark, his great-great-grandfather, was born May 10, 1718, in Lebanon, Conn., but later removed to what is now Natchaug district of Chaplin, when he was in middle life. By occupation he was a farmer, and resided upon the above mentioned farm the remainder of his life, dying there April 11, 1808, and he is buried at Chaplin Center. Phineas Clark was twice married. He was a regular attendant of the Hampton Congregational Church, and was so deaf that he sat in the pulpit with the minister so as to be able to hear him.

William Clark, son of Phineas, was born Aug. 25, 1752, in Lebanon, Conn., and moved to what is now Chaplin, when he was sixteen. Here, upon the farm, he remained all his life, but served in the war of the Revolution and participated in the battle of Bunker Hill, assisting in the digging of the trenches, and he was one of the reserve force at the battle of White Plains, N. Y. On July 9, 1839, he died at the age of eighty-seven, and was a well-to-do farmer and Revolutionary pensioner. At first he was a member of the Hampton Congregational Church, but later transferred his membership to Chaplin when the Church there was organized. On May 7, 1778, he married Patience Robbins, a native of Hampton, Conn., who died Jan. 4, 1816. The children born to William Clark and wife were: Heman, born Feb. 28, 1779, married Patience Clark, was a farmer, and died in Chaplin May 24, 1835; William, born Sept. 10, 1780, married Laura Grovesnor, was a farmer, and died Oct. 30, 1845, in Chaplin; Patty, twin sister of above, died March 6, 1795; Lora, born June 16, 1786, married Daniel Swift, resided in Mansfield, and later at the Clark homestead in Chaplin, where she died June 22, 1859; Olive, born March 3, 1788, died Jan. 10, 1862, unmarried; Charles, born April 27, 1790; Ebenezer, born Nov. 9, 1794, died Nov. 6, 1795.

William Clark had a brother, Heman Clark, who served six years in the Revolution and died of small pox while on his way home, after his honorable discharge from service.

Charles Clark, son of William, was born April 27, 1790, in Natchaug district of what is now Chaplin, and attended the common schools of his town. Until several years after his marriage, he remained on the home place, following farming, and when his father-in-law (John Clark) died, he removed to the late home of the latter in Chaplin, and there he resided the remainder of his life, and died there Nov. 27, 1872.

Until the outbreak of the Civil war, he was a Democrat, but he then began to vote the Republican ticket, and continued an advocate of the principles of that party until his death. Mr. Clark was a man of excellent intellect, good memory, and as he kept a private record of the deaths of people of Chaplin for over fifty years, he was appealed to upon all matters relative to the histories of the various families. All his life he attended the Congregational Church of Chaplin and was one of its liberal supporters, and his loss was deeply felt by this organization.

On May 4, 1815, Charles Clark married Phoebe Clark, who was born May 2, 1794, and died May 4, 1879. Mrs. Phoebe Clark was a native of Hampton, Conn., and a daughter of John Clark and Phoebe (Putney) Curtis Clark, and a granddaughter of John and Betsy (Parker) Clark. John Clark was a farmer in Hampton. The family born to Charles Clark and wife was as follows: William A., born July 15, 1816, married Abigail Turner, of Mansfield, and he is a farmer of Chaplin; Miss Julia A., born Jan. 31, 1820, resides in Chaplin; Mary Eliza, born Nov. 8, 1821, is the mother of our subject.

Charles Sheldon Turner, our subject, is a man who enjoys his prosperity with a clear conscience, as he has accumulated his property by legitimate methods and through honorable business opportunities, and he finds his greatest enjoyment in the companionship of his family and friends.

WILLIAM S. WILCOX, the capable agent and the efficient superintendent of the Brooklyn Creamery, is one of the prominent and rising young men of Brooklyn, Windham county.

Thomas Wilcox, his grandfather, was a native of Rhode Island who emigrated to Smyrna, Chenango Co. N. Y., where he cleared up a farm out of the wilderness and lived and died in that State.

William S. Wilcox, Sr., the father of our subject was one of a numerous family and was born in Smyrna, N. Y., where the name of Wilcox is most common. He carried on agricultural work all his life, dying in 1868, at the age of forty-seven years. His political sympathies were with the Democratic party, and he was a leading member of the Congregational Church. The marriage of William S. Wilcox, Sr., was to Ann Maria Parker, a daughter of Thomas Parker, who was a native of Massachusetts, and a cousin of the Rev. Theodore Parker, the noted Unitarian minister of Boston. Mrs. Wilcox died in Brooklyn, Conn., at the age of seventy-two years. Their children were: Laura, who is the wife of Edwin G. Brown, of Woodhull, N. Y.; Delia, who married Lawrence Goodrich, and resides in Smyrna, N. Y.; Ella, who is the wife of E. A. Dodge of Brooklyn, Conn.; Cora E., who is the wife of George Harrington, of Norwich, N. Y.; Hattie, who is the wife of George Sumner, of Norwich, N. Y.; William S., of Brooklyn; and Kate B., who is the wife of Horace Cole, of Pomfret Landing, Connecticut.

William S. Wilcox, son of William S., Sr., was born April 11, 1861, in Smyrna, N. Y., and he received his education in that town. Reared to farm work, he assisted on the home estate until he was twenty-two years of age, and then became interested in the creamery business, in his native town, continuing to conduct a profitable business in that line, until the fall of 1887, when he decided to locate in Connecticut.

For one year Mr. Wilcox was employed in the creamery business in Granby, Conn., and then came to Brooklyn, securing a position as expert butter maker, which he still holds. In 1896 he was chosen agent in the Brooklyn Creamery, to succeed C. S. Burlingame, who had resigned. The butter made at this creamery is very choice and finds constant demand, and in 1895 the product took the first prize at the State Dairymen's Association meeting and exhibit.

On Jan. 30, 1884, Mr. Wilcox was married in Lebanon, N. Y., to Ella J. Gavin, who was born in that town Aug. 3, 1858, a daughter of John Gavin. Two children have been born to this marriage: George W., born Aug. 19, 1885, in Smyrna; and Sheldon S., born Sept. 4, 1898. Mr. Wilcox is a Democrat, and has served in a number of the local offices, notably for three years as town auditor; is on the present board of assessors, serving since 1898; three years on the school committee, during one year being chairman of the board; and is chairman of the Democratic town committee. His friends have pushed his candidacy for the office of judge of probate, and he has reduced the normal Republican majority very considerably, but the present incumbent, Mr. Pond is personally very popular. His sound judgment, high character and business ability particularly fit Mr. Wilcox for responsible positions in public life. His religious connection is with the Unitarian Church, and there and in the community, he is held in high esteem.

NELSON KING, who is engaged in first-class concreting and roofing, resides at Putnam, Windham county, Connecticut.

THOMAS W. HEDGES. One of the most progressive and rising farmers of Woodstock, Windham county, is Thomas William Hedges, who was born Oct. 25, 1864, in Luton, near the city of London, England.

Thomas Hedges, father of Thomas W., was born at Whitechapel, in the city of London, in 1842, and died of consumption in West Upton, Mass., in September, 1875, at the age of thirty-three years. He had learned the trade of machinist in England, came to the United States in 1873, and settled in West Upton, where he was employed in Knowlton Bros. straw hat factory. Mr. Hedges was married, in England, to Rachel Holland, who died in England when about twenty-five years old. The children born of this union were five in number, viz.: Mollie, who is married to Frederick Suttlecliff, an extensive shipper at Manchester; Lillie, who died unmarried at the age of twenty-three; Thomas W., of whom further mention will be made; James Alfred, who is a machinist now living in Foxboro, Mass., and who married Jennie Eaton; and Grace, who married a music teacher and is now living in New York City.

Thomas Hedges, the grandfather of Thomas W., was a captain in the British army, and his seven children, all born while he was in the service, were named as follows: James, Thomas, Alfred, William, Mary, Emily and Grace.

Thomas W. Hedges attended school in England until he was about nine years old, when he came to America with his father and further attended school in West Upton, Mass. He worked for his father until Oct. 20, 1875, when he came to Woodstock, and was bound out to Edward May, of North Woodstock, until of age, but at eighteen he purchased the remainder of his time—three years—and then worked for Mr. May and others in the neighborhood as a farm hand. In November, 1894, Mr. Hedges purchased the Edward May farm of 100 acres, which he cultivates very successfully, raising the crops usual to the latitude, and where he has a handsome modern dwelling.

Mr. Hedges was united in marriage Jan. 6, 1896, with Miss Maud Doby, a daughter of Louis Doby, of Springfield, Mass., and three children have graced this union, viz.: Lillie Bertha, born in 1897; Thomas Alfred, born in 1898; and Maud Alice, born in 1900. In politics Mr. Hedges is a Republican, but he pays more attention to farming than he does to politics. Both he and his good wife are industrious, persevering and painstaking people, as the condition of their home and farm would indicate. Their charities are far-reaching, and their home a hospitable and happy one. They are goodly neighbors, and bear the respect and esteem of the community at large.

JAMES E. LOGEE. As the leading and most enterprising purveyor of bakery goods in Danielson, Windham county, James E. Logee has a trade which insures him a large income, and continued appreciation on the part of the community. So thoroughly has he mastered the chemical and other phases of the bakery branch of culinary art, that he has few equals in the extended area in which he is known. Danielson is not alone in profiting by his excellent commodities, for he runs wagons regularly to Brooklyn, Wauregan, Central Village, Moosup, Sterling, Oneco, Williamsville, Dayville and East Killingly, and he has also a branch to his regular business, established in 1892 at No. 182 Main street, Danielson. At these combined factories are turned out all manner of bakery goods in demand in well-regulated communities. He is a native of the county whose business reputation he so ably sustains, and was born in Killingly, March 6, 1845, a son of James K. and Julia N. (Sparks) Logee, the latter of whom died May 17, 1848, at the age of thirty-two years.

James K. Logee was born in Rhode Island in 1817, and learned the baker's trade in his native State. When a young man he came to Danielson and found employment in the bakery concern of John Sparks, his prospective father-in-law, who had established his business in 1840, where the Central House now stands. In 1843 Mr. Logee purchased the interest of Mr. Sparks, and henceforth ran the business independently in the same place, until 1860. He then built a bakery in Westfield, and up to January, 1879, ran a successful cracker factory, a disastrous fire during that year crippling him temporarily. The factory was rebuilt, however, in short order, but to crackers were added general bakery goods, though not on as large a scale as has since been effected by his son. The elder Logee lived retired for several years in Danielson previous to his death, March 30, 1892. He was an enterprising man and public-spirited citizen, and managed to make a comfortable living for himself and family. He was thrice married, James E. being born of his first union.

When a small boy James E. Logee was initiated into the bakery business, and even while attending the district schools was of great assistance to his father. During the Civil war he was employed for a time in a bakery run by the government near Washington, D. C., and during the year after the close of the war, became the partner of his father. This arrangement was amicably continued for several years, or until the infirmities of age, and his long continued success, terminated in the retirement of the original promoter of the bakery enterprise. James E. Logee has for many years been sole proprietor of the business, and has shown unquestioned ability in the management of his large affairs. His wife, formerly Lucy A. Wheaton, was born March 20, 1851, and died March 16, 1897. By this union there were two children: Arthur Wheaton, born Sept. 21, 1876; and Addie Tucker, born March 17, 1884.

MYRON O. KEMP, one of the large landholders, successful farmers and prominent citizens of Stafford, Tolland county, is a descendant of one of the old and highly respected families of New England.

Hiram Kemp, the grandfather of Myron O. Kemp, was born in Groton, Mass., in which State he lived a long and useful life, engaged in agricultural pursuits. He died about 1851, in his eighty-fifth year, in Pepperell, Mass. Mr. Kemp is remembered as a very honest, outspoken and candid man, a staunch supporter and admirer of Andrew Jackson, and as one who reared his family carefully and well. His marriage was to Sarah Parker, of Dunstable, Mass., and these were his children: Caroline and Sarah, who both died in infancy; Rebecca; Hiram; Charles; Carmine Hamilton; Hannah Ann; Elizabeth; and Fidelle.

Carmine Hamilton Kemp, son of Hiram, was born in Hollis, N. H., Nov. 25, 1821, and there he attended school until he was sixteen years of age. At this period he went to work for Capt. Lemuel Parker, who was a large contractor, controlling an immense lumber business, and with him Mr. Kemp remained for two years. He then went into the employ of the Stony Brook & Lowell (Mass.) Co., as a foreman, and as a construction foreman on the Nashua & Wooster R. R., remaining in all thirteen years, and later was engaged in the construction of the New London & Northern R. R., from Monson to Stafford Springs. Mr. Kemp left railroad work and purchased the Capt. Kinster farm, of 150 acres, in West Stafford, and here he has resided ever since. At present he owns some 400 acres, and is one of the leading and substantial citizens of his locality. In politics he votes with the Republican party, but has never sought office. His religious views are in sympathy with the Universalist Church. Mr. Kemp was united in marriage to Levila Ellithrope, of West Stafford, who was a daughter of Alva Ellithrope, and their children were: Fidelle, who died at the age of fourteen years; Carmine H. and Alvin Erskine, twins, the latter dying at the age of twenty-four years; and Myron O., of this sketch.

Myron O. Kemp was born Aug. 28, 1855, in West Stafford, Conn., and until he was seventeen years of age he attended the schools of West Stafford district. Until 1880 he was employed on the home farm, but at this date he purchased the Anson Lull farm, consisting of 120 acres, located in the northern part of West Stafford, and immediately began the sale of the timber, having been engaged in the lumber business since his eighteenth year. During the years 1880-81-82, Mr. Kemp had a government contract to furnish charcoal for tempering the steel at the Springfield Armory. The next land purchase made by Mr. Kemp was the Elmer J. Worthington farm, also in West Stafford, consisting of 140 acres, which he still owns and operates, as he also does a fine farm of ninety-five acres, situated in the southern part of Monson, Mass., on the road from Stafford to Monson. Here Mr. Kemp raises all kinds of farm products in abundance, and also keeps from twelve to fifteen cows, sending their yield to the Somers creamery. In addition to these valuable tracts, Mr. Kemp also owns the Robert Maddon farm, which comprises ninety-five acres of productive land.

On Aug. 14, 1889, Mr. Kemp was married to Althia Ella Worthington, a daughter of Henry J. and Ella (Cushman) Worthington, of West Stafford. The only child born to this union was: Gladys Mae, born Nov. 18, 1893, in West Stafford, who died Aug. 16, 1895. Mrs. Kemp died Aug. 14, 1894, in West Stafford. In his political views, Mr. Kemp is a staunch Republican, but he has never office, his only acceptance of such duty being on the school board, as he is much interested in educational matters. Mr. Kemp is a member of the Universalist Church, and is a man who is held in high esteem in his locality.

FRANK S. KENNEDY, a resident of Dayville, in the town of Killingly, Windham county, is the popular proprietor of the "Kennedy Hotel," and is very largely interested in the purchase and sale of horses, having extensive sale and livery stables at Putnam, Dayville and Danielson. The early history of the ancestors of Mr. Kennedy appears in connection with the sketch of Charles E. Kennedy, which may be found elsewhere.

George Kennedy, his grandfather, was the youngest son of Alexander and Mary (Edmunds) Kennedy, and was born in Foster, R. I., Oct. 1, 1780; he died, after a life devoted to farming pursuits, July 25, 1868. His wife, Celinda Parker, died at the old homestead in Foster, R. I., Dec. 3, 1866, at the age of seventy-nine years, two months and five days. They were the parents of the following children: Alexander; Thomas P., who died in infancy; William E.; Edgar M.; Rev.

George W.; Theodore P., a resident of Brooklyn; Lorenzo M., the father of Frank S. Kennedy; and Evelyn, who died young.

Lorenzo M. Kennedy was born in Foster, R. I., in 1828. In his early life he followed farming, and in 1846 came to Killingly, Conn., to make his home. Here he learned the carpenter trade, but followed it only a few years. For several years he kept a store, and in March, 1866, removed to Dayville, purchasing in that year the "Dayville Hotel," which is now known as the "Kennedy Hotel." This establishment he carried on in connection with a livery and sale stable, until Dec. 5, 1888, when the business was purchased by his son, Frank S. After disposing of the hotel he settled on a farm which he owned at Ballouville, where he remained about a year and a half, when he removed to Putnam, where he engaged in the carriage business until his death, which occurred Aug. 13, 1896. In politics he was a strong Democrat, and in fraternity matters was a member of the Moriah Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M., of Danielson. In 1851 Lorenzo M. Kennedy was married to Mary Jane Kies, of Killingly, who survives him. To them were born: Charles P., of Putnam, Conn.; Frank S., whose name introduces this article; Will L., of Putnam; and Nathan W., editor and proprietor of the Observer, of Putnam.

Frank S. Kennedy, the genial and popular host of the "Kennedy Hotel," at Dayville, is a native of Killingly, where he was born Nov. 1, 1853. His education was acquired in the local schools, and he was reared to a practical knowledge of the hotel business, having assisted about the hotel and the livery from a very early age. In 1880 he bought the undertaking establishment of Mowry Amsbury, at Danielson, and has continued it to the present time, having it under the management of Lewis Kennedy at the present time. For a number of years he was connected with his father, and his brother, Will L., in a market at Dayville, doing business under the firm name of L. M. Kennedy & Sons.

Frank S. Kennedy bought the hotel from his father, as above stated, Dec. 5, 1888, and soon after assumed the active management of that enterprise, as well as of the livery. In addition to that work Mr. Kennedy conducts a sale stable, buying horses in Canada and the West, and selling them to local buyers. At Danielson he has a large livery barn, and he carries on in partnership with his brother, Will L., an extensive livery at Putnam. No doubt Frank S. Kennedy buys and sells more horses than any other man in Windham county, bringing into the town from three to six carloads a year. Mr. Kennedy is a Democrat, but has never taken a very active part in political matters. He belongs to Assawaba Lodge, No. 20, A. O. U. W.

Mr. Kennedy was united in marriage with Flora E. Young, who was born in Pomfret, Connecticut.

WILLIAM B. SMITH, a thoroughly artistic and up-to-date photographer, whose large and elegant gallery has the patronage not only of the elite of Putnam, Windham county, but also of the surrounding towns, enjoys a reputation for excellence of work, equaled only by leading photographers in New York and Boston. He was born in East Killingly, Conn., Feb. 22, 1862, and comes of an old and well-to-do family, with branches in both Rhode Island and Connecticut.

(I) Obediah Smith, great-grandfather of William B., was of Rhode Island, living to old age and dying at Burrillville, in that State. By occupation he engaged both in farming and wood-working, in the last named business chairmaking being one of his specialties. By his marriage there were twelve children: Betsey, who married a Mr. Lackey, and died at Burrillville; Lyndall, a Burrillville farmer, who later resided in Killingly, and died there; Nancy, who married Elder Daniel Williams, in early life a blacksmith, later a well-known Free Will Baptist minister; Frelove, who married Uriah Morey, a mason; John, first a mill overseer, later a farmer on the Burrillville homestead; Celia, who married Smith Peckham, and died in Chepachet, R. I.; Jeremiah, a spindle maker, who died in Burrillville; Cyrus, mentioned below; Samuel, a farmer and a day laborer, who died in Pascoag, R. I.; Barton, a farmer, who never married; one that died in infancy; and Horace, a blacksmith, of Burrillville, Rhode Island.

(II) Hon. Cyrus Smith, for many years a leading blacksmith in East Killingly, also prominent in public affairs, was born in Burrillville, R. I., Feb. 22, 1804. In early life he entered the "Wade blacksmith shop," of his brother, Jeremiah, in Scituate, R. I., where he learned his trade. Remaining there until 1825, he then came to East Killingly, and secured a position in the "stone shop" (still standing) of Elder Williams. Such excellent satisfaction did he give that he was retained ten years. On account of pastoral duties absorbing Elder Williams's attention, Mr. Smith finally took that gentleman's business into his own hands and carried it on by himself for the rest of his life. He first used the old shop, but later erected one of his own. This building, too, is still in existence, and is now occupied by his grandson, Frank H. Mr. Smith, a hard working man all his life, lived to the advanced age of seventy-nine, dying in 1883. He is buried in East Killingly. As a political leader there was no more popular man in his section than Mr. Smith. For three terms he represented his town in the State Legislature. He held the office of assessor and served several terms as selectman. In early life he affiliated with Democrats, but after the Missouri Compromise cast his lot with the Republicans. Keenly interested in education he served on the school committee. He also exerted a large influence with the Free Will Baptist denomination, and assisted in the building of their church in East Killingly. He married Sally Mason, who was born in East Killingly, daughter of James and Mary (Williams) Mason, and a descendant of Rev. Roger Williams. She died in Putnam, Conn., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lydia A. Fogg. Mr. and Mrs. Smith had six children: Samuel is mentioned below; Charles A., and Barton died young; Lydia A., now a resident of Putnam, married Charles Fogg, who entered the Civil war and died in Andersonville prison; James, who enlisted in Company K, Eighteenth Connecticut Volunteers, was killed in the battle of Snickers Ford, Va.; and Cyrus, who has never married, is a florist and dealer in antiques in Putnam, Connecticut.

(III) Hon. Samuel Smith, father of William B., now a retired citizen of East Killingly, and an ever honored Civil war veteran, was for many years prominent in the business and public life of his place. Born in East Killingly, May 29, 1831, he received his early education in the public schools of that town. At the early age of fourteen, on account of his father's urgent business, he was forced, much against his own inclination, to leave school and enter the blacksmith shop. Here, however, he learned a lucrative trade, which he afterward turned to good account. Later his craving for a higher education became gratified to some extent, when he had the privilege of attending the West Killingly Academy for some time. Returning to his father's shop at the age of twenty-three, he worked at his trade steadily for a number of years. Then the Civil war broke out and, at Danielson, Conn., Aug. 9, 1862, he enlisted for three years service in Co. K., 18th Conn. V. I. In 1863 he was detailed as a sharpshooter, and served as such for two years. At Winchester, both he and his brother James, were taken prisoners and sent to Belle Island, where they were detained for a month. Later they were exchanged and returned home for a short time. But soon returning to the front, Mr. Smith joined his regiment at Harper's Ferry, Va., and remained with it until he was mustered out at that place, in June, 1865. On March 24, 1861, Mr. Smith was married to Hannah Barstow, who was born in Woodstock, July 9, 1837, daughter of George and Hannah (Hayward) Barstow. There were seven children born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith: (1) William B. is mentioned below; (2) James E., now a carpenter of East Killingly, married Evelyn Williams, and they had seven children: Harry E., Grace E., Samuel B., Roy, Ralph E., Lucina, and Doris L. (3) Frank H., now a blacksmith of East Killingly, married Adeline Cobb, and they have two children: Fred A. and Stephen H. (4) Edwin A., at present chief electrician of the U. S. S. "Wisconsin," has served in the navy for many years, and was in the transport service during the Spanish war. (5) Nellie Maria, never married. (6) Robert G., a resident of East Killingly, married Lena Aldrich. (7) Charles J., lives at home. When Mr. Smith returned from the war his father's blacksmith shop was closed. But he immediately opened it and started into business by himself, continuing in this line for several years. In the course of time, however, desiring a change of employment, he went to Danielson and worked in the machine shop of Amos D. Lockwood for a while. But finally returning to East Killingly, he re-opened his shop and carried on the blacksmith business for the rest of his active life, closing out in 1895. Impaired health, from an injury received during the war, was the cause of his retirement. He deservedly draws a pension. Mr. Smith has long been exceedingly active in the public affairs of his town. He has served with marked credit to himself as assessor, selectman, and on the board of relief. In 1870, when the Legislature met at New Haven, he represented his district in the House. Fraternally he belongs to the McGregor Post, No. 27, G. A. R., at Danielson. He has always been a deeply religious man, and for the last forty years has served as deacon of the East Killingly Free Will Baptist Church, of which he and his wife are highly esteemed members.

William B. Smith received his early education in the common schools of Killingly, and, at the age of fifteen, entered the Danielsonville high school, from which he graduated with honors in 1879. Professionally inclined, he immediately began teaching, first in Killingly, where, giving excellent satisfaction, he remained till 1883; later, for three years as principal of the Sixth District school, in the Upper Village of Putnam; and in the same capacity at Moosup, remaining there six years, and also at Wauregan for six years. During his youth and his years of teaching he had given considerable time to drawing, painting, and other kinds of artistic work. He had studied oil painting with Prof. Du Blois, of Boston, and pastel with Mrs. Rockwell, of South Woodstock, doing very creditable work in each branch. Desiring to continue in these lines, in 1892 he entered the McIntyre studio, in Putnam, where he was first engaged in the crayon work, one distinctive feature of the establishment. So successful was he that in 1893 he decided to purchase the studio, taking as his assistant, Frederick L. Warren. At first they conducted the business under the McIntyre name, but soon secured a reputation which warranted them in changing the title to Smith & Warren. In 1895 Mr. Smith purchased his partner's interest, and has since carried on the business under his own name. In his studio he takes all sizes of photographs; makes copies in crayon, pastel, ink, and water colors; and develops prints and enlarges pictures for amateurs. He keeps on sale a full line of amateur supplies. For artistic merit his photographs are nowhere excelled.

On May 8, 1898, Mr. Smith was married to Jessie G. Nye, of Killingly, Conn., daughter of Brigham and Mary (Withey) Nye, and they have two children: Raymond Edwin, who was born in Putnam, April 5, 1899, and Carlton, born in East Killingly, Oct. 15, 1902.

Mr. Smith is a Republican, but gives very little time to politics. Active, however, fraternally, he affiliates with Israel Putnam Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F., of Putnam; Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum; is a charter member of Nutmeg Lodge, No. 33, K. P., and has served as installing officer of that organization, of which he is now past chancellor commander, having been the first to fill that office. He is a member of the Sons of Veterans, an organization for which he holds the highest esteem, and which he first joined in Central Village.

JOSEPH H. MAYNARD has been one of the most active citizens of Putnam, Windham county, for over thirty years. As a house and sign painter he has carried on an extensive business, and in social and public affairs he has long been prominent. He is the son of Maurice and Annie Maynard, for a number of years, well known residents of Wauregan, Connecticut.

Maurice Maynard was born and reared in Canada, where he learned the tanner's trade. As a young man he opened a tannery there, which he managed with much success for many years. In 1867 he moved to Wauregan, where he afterward engaged in teaming. He died in this place in 1893, at the age of seventy-two. In character self-centered, he devoted himself almost exclusively to business, and evinced but little, if any, interest in politics.

Joseph Henry Maynard was born in Canada, Feb. 5, 1852. When he was ten years old his parents, seeking to improve his educational advantages, sent him to Richford, Vt., where he remained three years attending the public schools. Returning to his native town he soon engaged as an apprentice to Frank Thetreau, a wheelwright and painter of that place. After four years of diligent service, at the age of eighteen, he moved with his parents to Danielson, Conn., and later to Wauregan. While in Danielson he worked in the Quinebaug cotton mill for several months, and in Wauregan he was similarly employed for three years. It was in Norwich, Conn., with Alexander Dunn, a house painter, that he first made practical use of his early apprenticeship. After several months here he worked at his trade for about a year at the Grosvenor Dale Mill Co.; for a short period, at Fall River, Mass.; and then, two years for the Lowell Machine Co., at Lowell, Mass. Finally, in the spring of 1872, he settled in Putnam, where he has since remained. Here he first opened a paint shop of his own, but two years later sold out and entered the employ of Henry Cole. At the end of three years, however, he decided to make a change and went into the painting business with Thomas Bundy, remaining with that gentleman for twelve years. On Jan. 1, 1877, he married Martha Beaudry, of Putnam, daughter of Toussaint Beaudry. They have had seven children: Gert-rude, who married Eugene Gaucher, a newspaper and magazine designer, of Providence, R. I., and has two children: Clarence and Hurlbut; Ada, Arthur, Lena, Phillip, Wilfred, and Leodore, at home.

In 1888 Mr. Maynard went into the house and sign painting business by himself. His previous experience in the place enabled him now to make a thorough success of his work, and he immediately became one of the largest contractors in Putnam, and he still maintains his large patronage. He usually employs about six men, but at times twenty or more, and fulfills engagements, not only in Putnam, but also in many of the surrounding towns. He has made well out of his business, and now owns a very pleasant residence on Bullock street, Putnam.

In the public affairs of Putnam Mr. Maynard has been a very valuable citizen. As a member of the Fire Department he has acted for about eight years as foreman of Hose Company No. 3. A man of excellent judgment he has served the city very acceptably as grand juror and justice of the peace. In politics he is a Republican. Fraternally he has served as Deacon of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M., of Putnam, and was a charter member of the Knights of Pythias Lodge, formerly of Putnam. His family are influential members of the Catholic Church.

JAMES L. APPLEY. The town of Canterbury, Windham county, has been favored with several generations of the estimable Appley family. James Appley, an early resident of that place, followed farming and the tannery business there for many years. On May 29, 1771, he married Abigail Williams, of that town, and they had eight children: Asa, born May 2, 1772; Lydia, Sept. 29, 1773; James, June 9, 1776; Chester, who is mentioned below; Elisha, born March 8, 1781; Festus, Aug. 18, 1783; William, June 11, 1785; and Luther, Nov. 15, 1790.

Chester Appley, grandfather of James L., born Feb. 19, 1779, resided in the Pond Hill District of Canterbury. He followed agriculture, and was a man of some means, owning the farm which he operated. On Feb. 5, 1808, he married Sarah Fitch, daughter of Daniel Fitch, a soldier of the Revolution. In May, 1784, Daniel Fitch married first Mehitable Bushnell, who died April 7, 1793, and second, March 26, 1795, Ziporah Allen, who died Aug. 28, 1846; he died Nov. 3, 1855. Mr. Appley died Dec. 17, 1843, and his wife Aug. 20, 1863. By her he had eleven children: Sarah, born July 20, 1800, died the same day; Abigail W., born Jan. 19, 1811, married John Jackson, lived in Damascus, Wayne Co., Pa., and died Jan. 2, 1892; Luther, born April 13, 1813, lived near Oshkosh, Wis., and died July 1, 1877; Orilla, born April 15, 1815, married Rev. Charles Patter, of Bantam Falls, Conn.; Charles C., born Dec. 8, 1817, was drowned at Butts Bridge, July 13, 1834; Elhanan W., born March 14, 1820, married Hannah Storr, lived at Groton, Conn., and was lost at sea, (they had one child, Sarah, who married a Mr. Morgan); Daniel Bushnell, born Feb. 23, 1822, who married Lydia Palmer, of Voluntown, Conn., was a sailor and died Dec. 15, 1850, from the effects of an injury received from a wounded whale; Sarah Elizabeth, born April 26, 1825, married William Graves, of Colchester, Conn., and died Dec. 21, 1895, at Rocky Hill, Conn.; Lyman Nelson is mentioned below; Norman, born Oct. 22, 1830, is a farmer of Westminster Society, in the town of Canterbury; and Edwin F., born May 3, 1834, resides at Lisbon, Connecticut.

Hon. Lyman Nelson Appley was born Oct. 8, 1827, on the Appley farm in Canterbury, and early developed a large boned physique—inherited from his ancestors—and a strong cast of feature, marking him as one bound to win a commanding place in life. As a youth he attended the home schools and worked on his father's farm, acquiring industrious habits, which characterized him through life. As an additional equipment for earning his livelihood, he, as a young man, learned the trade of a mason. About the time of his marriage he moved to a farm on the Plains, where he worked assiduously for seven years, not alone at agriculture, but also at masonry, and for four years he drove a stage, which he owned, between Brooklyn and Canterbury. The success of his varied and well directed efforts enabled him, in 1872, to purchase the very desirable E. Park farm, south of the Green, where he carried on general agriculture for the rest of his business life. He died Sept. 21, 1895. On Aug. 26, 1849, he was married, by Rev. Harnin, in Franklin, Conn., to Bethiah Tracey Pember, who was born in that place, March 26, 1829, a daughter of Willard G. and Bethiah (Tracey) Pember, and they had three children: (1) Willard L., born Nov. 4, 1851, married in Brooklyn, Conn., May 14, 1873, Rosie J. Loomer, and after her death, Kate McAllister, and they reside at Rocky Hill, Conn. They have had five children, Charles Clinton, Lyman N. (chief engineer on a U. S. gun boat in China), James W., Kate and Libby (deceased). Willard L. is a steam-fitter and engineer for J. & E. Stevens, of North Cromwell, Conn. (2) Ida Tracey, born Aug. 21, 1857, married Dec. 21, 1880, Andrew J. Walroth, and resides at Julesburg, Colo. They have four children: Ida May, Andrew Judson, Bessie Lucile, and Lyman Robert. (3) James L. is mentioned below. Mr. Appley, in every respect a powerful man, possessed the brawn and muscle, eminently fitting him for manual labor, and the strong assertive qualities, which brought him to the front in public affairs. He held at different times nearly every town office, including those of selectman and justice of the peace. He often served on the grand jury. In 1865 he very efficiently represented his town in the State Legislature. In politics he was a Democrat; in religious sentiment a Baptist, being a member of that church at Packerville. The honors he received were but special manifestations of his wide popularity.

Willard G. Pember was born Feb. 5, 1805, and died Jan. 27, 1864. He married Bethiah Tracey, who died April 1, 1829. They had one child, Bethiah Tracey, afterward Mrs. Appley. After the death of his first wife Mr. Pember married Frances E. Fargo, who died Jan. 3, 1868. By her he had seven children: Julian F., born Oct. 2, 1830, died June 14, 1888; Olivia Janette, born Sept. 19, 1832, died Dec. 12, 1881; John L., born Aug. 18, 1834, died March 6, 1877; W. Dwight, born Sept. 20, 1826; Lucius G., born March 30, 1841, died Dec. 27, 1864, while serving in the 18th Conn. V. I., in the Civil war; Julia F., born Jan. 24, 1844, died Feb. 4, 1864; and Mary, born Dec. 6, 1846.

James L. Appley, a farmer in Canterbury, especially prominent as a dairyman, is a man of considerable attainments and broad experience. Born in Canterbury, June 20, 1864, he acquired a thorough education in the schools of his town and in Plainfield Academy. Eager to become rich, at the age of seventeen he boldly set out for the West, making his final destination Julesburg, Colo. Here his energy and push readily secured him a position as station agent for the Union Pacific R. R. He could have found no better place for acquainting himself with the broad, wild western life, which appealed to him so strongly that at the end of the year he cast his lot with cowboys. For five years he herded cattle on the plains, traversing eastern Colorado, and parts of several adjoining States, and enduring the buffets of wind and storm, the monotonous, tedious riding and other hardships, which only the most vigorous constitution can withstand. To the uninitiated, the cowboy's life presents the thought of freedom, jolly companions and healthful sport, but the actual "cow puncher," as Mr. Appley discovered, knows that it also means downright hard work. Mr. Appley's western experiences were ended by a request from his father to return East and take charge of the homestead. After the death of his father Mr. Appley fell into possession of the home farm, which he has since managed with success. Besides being engaged in general farming he also follows lumbering, but dairying has been his specialty. He keeps from forty to forty-five head of cattle and two yoke of oxen, one of which has repeatedly won prizes for pulling at the Windham county agricultural fair. His farm is the picture of order and care.

On Feb. 25, 1890, Mr. Appley married Alice A. Ames, of Plainfield, daughter of Deacon William B. and Emma B. (Wood) Ames. Mr. and Mrs. Appley have had two children: Walter Edson, born June 27, 1892; and Milo Ames, Aug. 11, 1896. Mr. Appley, always evincing a keen interest in public affairs, has been elected constable, registrar of voters, and is now selectman. Though usually a Democrat, he often votes independently in local affairs. Socially he affiliates with the I. O. O. F., of Central Village, with A. F. & A. M., of Moosup, and belongs to the Plainfield Grange, having previously been a charter member of the Canterbury Grange. Eminently progressive and self-reliant he commands the highest esteem from all who know him.

PHILLIPS. The Phillips family, one of the oldest and most representative of the substantial families of Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., has numbered among its members men who have borne an important part in the history of the country and have been, and are still, influential in the several communities in which they reside.

Capt. William Phillips, grandfather of Henry E. Phillips, was born in 1728, and died May 20, 1798, at the age of seventy years, in Woodstock. His wife, Phebe, died April 21, 1830, aged eighty-six years. It is believed he served in the Revolutionary war, but he gained his rank of captain in the State militia. His children were: Jeremiah; Wheeler; William; Alpha; and Edward. Of these, Jeremiah Phillips died in Woodstock, Sept. 17, 1846, aged sixty-seven years. He married Zurviah Marcy, and always lived in Woodstock. His children were: (1) Schuyler, born April 26, 1809, married, first, Mary M. Pratt, who died Jan. 17, 1856, aged forty-five years. His second wife, Anna A., died Dec. 6, 1896, aged eighty years, and he died Sept. 1, 1883. (2) Phebe married George Bradford, of Woodstock. (3) Mary married Alonzo Works, of Woodstock.

Wheeler Phillips, born Feb. 2, 1783, died Sept. 23, 1860, in Woodstock. He married Annie Cranford, who was born in September, 1791, and died Sept. 8, 1820, in Union, Conn. He was known as Squire Phillips, and conducted a general store for many years in West Woodstock. His children by his first wife were: (1) Charles C., who removed to New York, where he was engaged in business for many years, died Nov. 7, 1853, aged thirty-nine years. (2) Whitman, who was engaged in the grain and feed business in New York for many years, died, leaving four children, Helen, Wheeler, Emily and Arthur. The second wife of Wheeler Phillips was Eunice Corbin, daughter of Deacon Penuel, Sr., by whom he had one son, Gilbert Wheeler Phillips.

HON. GILBERT WHEELER PHILLIPS, whose death occurred Oct. 24, 1888, was for a third of a century one of the leading lawyers and prominent citizens of Putnam, Conn., where still reside some of his immediate family, notably a son. He was born in Woodstock, Conn., July 22, 1828, attended the common schools of his native town, the academy, and then took a course of instruction in the academy at Dudley, Mass. He studied law in the office of George S. F. Stoddard, at Woodstock, was admitted to the Bar in 1852, and at once commenced professional work, laboring therein with an enthusiasm that never abated so long as health and strength remained. In the spring of 1855, he removed to Putnam, which place he ever afterward made his home. His career was a most successful and honorable one, and his life in its many phases was such as to command always the respect and confidence of those with whom he was brought in contact. "He was a busy man of affairs, and his times of relaxation were from the first, few and far between; in fact, with the exceptions of a vacation trip to Europe with his family, in 1881, and brief excursion to California," says Mr. Charles E. Searls, of the Windham County Bar, who prepared the obituary notice of Mr. Phillips from which the personal part of this article is taken, "I do not recall any period during the years of my acquaintance with him when he was not hard at work, until the relentless disease whose victim he became, laid its heavy hand upon him." Mr. Phillips was a good lawyer, a keen observer of men and things, generally correct in his judgment of character and motive, and admirable in the preparation and presentation of a case. He was not an eloquent advocate, by no means an orator, but his arguments were logical and his delivery earnest and impressive. He fully realized both weak and strong points in his case, and his conclusion as to the probable effect of certain evidence upon the minds of the jury, was often impressive in its accuracy. He studied the case before he tried it, and understood it thoroughly when he entered the court room. His clients were numerous and the strain of his work often severe. For many years he was the attorney of the New York and New England Railroad Company, and conducted for them a large number of cases. He was an honest lawyer, above all mean and unworthy expedients, and withal most courteous. Mr. Phillips was prominent outside the sphere of his profession. He was assistant clerk of the Connecticut House of Representatives in 1853; and in 1860, 1861 and 1872, he was a member of that body. In 1862, 1863 and 1879, he represented the Fourteenth District in the State Senate, acting as chairman of the Judiciary committee during the last two years of his service there and as president pro tem in 1879. He was re-elected in 1880, but shortly after the opening of the session resigned on account of the pressure of legal business. In local affairs, Mr. Phillips manifested the deepest interest; he was liberal and public spirited; ever ready to aid in the furtherance of any object promotive of the growth and the prosperity of the town. He was one of the pioneers of the First National Bank of Putnam, and until the very last, its president. He was also one of the incorporators and trustees of the Putnam Savings Bank. In all his relations of private life, his bearing was such as to win the respect of all with whom he had intercourse. He was a most affectionate husband and father, devoted to his home and family, never so happy as under his own roof with those he loved about him. He was a kind neighbor and a warm and constant friend. For many years prior to his death, he was a consistent member of the Congregational Church in Putnam, and one of its most active and liberal supporters. His pastor for many years, the Rev. C. S. Brooks, in his funeral address, thus refers to the religious side of his life and character: "He saw into and sensed the divineness of life and of eternal things, and opened up the Godward side of his nature to them, and while he gave himself to a proper worldliness, he joined with it attention to and possession of that other worldliness which rounds our experience and makes us, as we ought to be, men of time and men of eternity." The Bar of Connecticut knew Mr. Phillips well and deplored his untimely departure from among his many friends and acquaintances no less keenly than did those who recognized and appreciated the manly qualities exhibited by him in lines of thought and activity other than those peculiar to the forum. On March 30, 1852, Mr. Phillips was married to Jane Stoddard, a daughter of Hon. Ebenezer Stoddard, at one time Lieutenant Governor of Connecticut, and to them were born children as follows: Gilbert Wheeler, Jr., John Cleveland and Genevieve, the latter of whom is now deceased.

William Phillips, another son of Capt. William Phillips, died Feb. 21, 1860, aged eighty-four years, in Woodstock. He married Nancy Baylis, of Southbridge, Mass., who died July 16, 1854, aged seventy-two years. William Phillips was a farmer and owned a large tract of land in West Woodstock, which was afterwards sold to the town of Woodstock, and is now known as the "Town Farm." His children were as follows: Judson, born Feb. 17, 1810, died Dec. 11, 1894, unmarried; Henry married Jane Webber; Adeline married George Sumner; Alpha married Prudence Hibbard, and Nancy B. married Edwin Dean, of West Woodstock.

Edward Phillips, another son of Capt. William Phillips, and father of Henry E. Phillips, was born Feb. 13, 1785, in Woodstock, Conn., and died Sept. 4, 1853, in his native town. He married June 8, 1814, Lydia Lyon, born Dec. 16, 1790, in Woodstock, a daughter of Thomas and Thankful (Fisher) Lyon; she died Aug. 4, 1875. Six children were born to them: Asa, Calista, Waldo, Elizabeth, Thomas, and Henry Edward.

Asa Phillips, born Feb. 13, 1816, in Woodstock, Conn., was married Nov. 25, 1841, to Betsey Austin, born Aug. 31, 1819, in Woodstock, daughter of Nathan and Sally (Johnson) Austin, of Woodstock. Nathan Austin came to Woodstock when he was three years of age, with his parents, and there he remained during his life. Asa Phillips learned the shoe-maker's trade when a young man, which he followed until over fifty years of age, when he took up farming in Woodstock Valley, where he still resides. His four children were: (1) Elizabeth, born Jan. 4, 1843, in Woodstock, never married, and died April 23, 1902, in Brooklyn, N. Y., while on a visit to her sister. (2) Albert, born Jan. 17, 1845, died March 1, 1845. (3) Harriet, born July 1, 1846, in Woodstock, married, Jan. 8, 1868, Dr. A. S. Leonard, a prominent physician of Brooklyn, N. Y., son of ex-Congressman Moses G. Leonard, formerly of Woodstock, but later of Brooklyn, N. Y., and to them were born, Maude Elouise (born Nov. 28, 1868), Miriam (born May 31, 1873, died March 23, 1874), Effie Barmore (born May 10, 1874, married Jan. 27, 1897, Louis G. Leverick, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a grain and feed merchant of that city, and has one child, Leonard Phillips, born Oct. 27, 1897, in Brooklyn, N. Y.), Cassie E. (born July 8, 1877, died Jan. 30, 1880), and Clara Katherine (born July 19, 1881). (4) Lydia Lyon, born Feb. 18, 1849, died March 12, 1853.

Calista Phillips, second child of Edward Phillips, was born Sept. 28, 1817, in Woodstock, and died July 9, 1893, in her native town. She married Reed Tourtellotte, of Union, Conn., a shoe manufacturer in that city for a number of years, under the firm name of Corbin & Tourtellotte, and later associated with the late John O. Fox, Sr., in Putnam, Conn. He finally purchased property on Woodstock Hill, where he lived until his death, Feb. 5, 1899. He had one son, Edward, born in Montgomery, Ala., who has been express agent on the railroad between Boston and New York for several years, and married Lucy Johnson, by whom he has two sons, Edward and Reed, Jr.

Waldo Phillips, third child of Edward Phillips, born Aug. 11, 1819, in Woodstock, Conn., died there Sept. 18, 1899. His first wife, Mary, died in New York City. On Nov. 16, 1870, he married Mary W. (Perry) Paine, widow of Chester A. Paine, and daughter of Otis and Polly (Carpenter) Perry, of Woodstock. No children were born of either marriage. Waldo Phillips went to New York when a young man, and formed a partnership with Judge Oliver H. Perry, of Woodstock, they engaging in the grain, feed and produce business. During the war of the Rebellion, they had a large business in government contracts, furnishing forage to the government troops. They continued in the business several years, when Mr. Phillips purchased the business, and the firm name of Phillips & Perry was changed to Waldo Phillips, in which concern he continued alone several years more. In all of his dealings he was very successful, and late in life he returned to Woodstock Valley, where he spent his remaining days on a farm. At his death he left a good estate, and during life was a very generous, kind hearted man. Many instances of his charity might be mentioned. He supported the Advent Church of Woodstock Valley, and affiliated with the Democratic party. All who had the honor of his acquaintance, highly respected and loved this most estimable man.

Elizabeth Phillips, the fourth child of Edward Phillips, was born Nov. 3, 1822, in Woodstock, and died in Putnam, Conn. She married John Otis Fox, Sr., of Putnam.

Thomas Lyon Phillips, fifth child of Edward Phillips, was born April 12, 1824, in Woodstock, and in early life was a shoemaker, but later became a fireman on the railroad between Worcester and Providence, continuing at same for thirty-five years, after which he retired, and is now engaged in farming in Woodstock. His first wife was Mary Wilkinson, of Woodstock, by whom he had one daughter, Mary, now the wife of David Aldrich, one of Woodstock's leading and most successful agriculturists. His second wife was Minnie Cobb, of Worcester, who died July 9, 1874, aged thirty-three years, leaving one daughter, Ethel, who married Frank Lentz, of Reading, Mass. His third wife was Miss Underwood, of Woodstock, and there was no issue of this union.

HENRY EDWARD PHILLIPS, the sixth and youngest child of Edward Phillips, born Aug. 31, 1836, in Woodstock, married Laura Maria Davis, who died June 1, 1898, aged fifty-eight years. She was the daughter of John and Mary Davis, of Woodstock. Their children were: Mary, unmarried, now resides in Woodstock Valley; Alma married Everett Colvin, of Danielson, and has three children; Emma is now Mrs. Bloodgood, and lives in Glasgo, Conn. Henry E. Phillips was in New York for several years, associated with his brother, Waldo, in the grain and feed business, but is now living retired in Woodstock.

JOHN KILLOUREY, the proprietor of the very complete livery establishment at No. 30 Jackson Place, Willimantic, Windham county, also does an undertaking business in that location. His horses and rigs are all that could be desired for safety and comfort, as well as for the pleasure of driving and rapid conveyance. The satisfaction of his patrons is always consulted, and experienced drivers are furnished when desired; the horses are thoroughly groomed, the harness neat and polished, and the carriages bright and clean. In the stables horses are boarded for private parties and given the best of attention.

As an undertaker, Mr. Killourey has a reputation that reaches far and wide, bringing him business from distant localities, and even calling him on several occasions to the city of New York to take care of bodies. As a graduate embalmer he is prepared for every emergency, and is equipped with all supplies to respond to calls from any distance at a moment's notice. Mr. Killourey is an enterprising and progressive business man, thoroughly imbued with the spirit of progress, always ready to lend a hand for the improvement of the city, and is respected by all for his probity and honor and business ability.

John Killourey and his brother, Daniel, are men who never smoke, chew or drink, and who sustain a character above question or reproach. Much credit is due them for their cleanly lives, steady habits and industrious disposition.

During the quarter century previous to 1876 many Irish families were attracted to Willimantic by the very special opportunities the rapid industrial development of the city presented. From their number have come some of the most thrifty and popular business men of the present day. This is especially true of the Killourey family, of which the gentleman whose name appears at the opening of this article is a member. That family came to this country to take advantage of the opening for thrift and industry, and two of their children, John and Daniel Killourey, the latter a lieutenant in the police force, have become noted as leading men in Willimantic.

Michael Killourey and Margaret (Flannigan) Killourey, the parents of these two efficient and popular citizens of Willimantic, came from Ennistimon, County Clare, Ireland, in 1864, landing at New York, after making the voyage from Queenstown in the steamer "Pennsylvania," and spending two weeks of June on the ocean. At this time the family consisted of the father, the mother, and the children, John, Mary and Daniel. For a little time they made their home in Jamaica, L. I., but the August following their arrival saw them in Willimantic, where Michael Killourey found employment on the New England Railroad as a laborer, where he was engaged many years. His death occurred Jan. 26, 1888, at the age of sixty-seven years, and his widow is still living, making her home with her daughter. Their children were: John; Mary, unmarried, and living in Willimantic; Daniel; Michael, who died in 1877 in Willimantic, where he was attending school; and Thomas, in Willimantic.

John Killourey was born in County Clare, and accompanied his parents to this country, and settled with them at Willimantic, where he grew to manhood. The greater part of his education was had in Willimantic, and most of that was obtained at the night school, as he went to work soon after reaching this city. His first employment was carrying water on the New England Railway. At this time labor was scarce, and he received a dollar and a half a day. In his earlier life he did not enjoy schooling, and it was not until he had learned by contact with the world the value of education that he began to apply himself seriously to the task of storing his mind with useful information, doing much self study.

Mr. Killourey remained on the railroad until he was seventeen, receiving as high as two dollars and a half a day as water carrier, and when the line was completed he had charge of a stationary engine for a time. His next engagement was that of a locomotive fireman between Willimantic and Putnam. Railroad life did not satisfy him, however, and before he became of age he secured a position in the engine shop of the spool room of the Willimantic Linen Company; his next engagement was in the dye house of the same concern, and in this department he was employed about six years. Mr. Killourey struck out for himself in 1877, and opened up a livery business on Jackson street, on the site of the present Catholic school yard, and meeting with such success that in 1879 he built on Jackson Place, not only to accommodate his own demands, but also to rent. It was in 1883 that Mr. Killourey first began the undertaking business in connection with the livery, in which he has also proved highly successful.

On Oct. 14, 1880, in Willimantic, John Killourey wedded Miss Julia McNamara, who was born in Lebanon, Conn., Nov. 5, 1860, a daughter of Timothy and Bridget (Brown) McNamara. They came from Ireland, and were married in Willimantic, where the husband and father, who was a farmer, died at the age of sixty years. Mr. McNamara owned a farm in Lebanon, which was sold prior to his death, and his widow is living in Willimantic. They had the following children: Mary, Julia, Thomas, John, Annie, Margaret and Timothy, all of whom are living excepting Thomas and Annie. Mrs. Killourey was reared in Lebanon to the age of fourteen years, when she came to Willimantic, and here her home was made until the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Killourey have had the following children: John F., who died at the age of three years and six months; Daniel F., a student in the high school in Willimantic; and Thomas, at home.

Mr. Killourey cast his first presidential vote for Horace Greeley, and since that time has voted the Democratic ticket. At the present time he represents the Third ward in the city council. Socially he belongs to the San Jose Council, No. 14, Knights of Columbus, and the A. O. U. W., being highly respected in both these orders.

LIEUT. DANIEL KILLOUREY was born about 1861 in County Clare, Ireland, and came to this country with his parents, settling in Willimantic, where he has since remained. In 1890 he became a patrolman in Willimantic, and by his ability, faithfulness and strict attention to details rose rapidly in his work, being made a lieutenant of the service in February, 1900, with a brilliant future before him.

Lieut. Killourey was married Sept. 25, 1889, to Miss Ellen Sullivan, of Stafford Springs, a daughter of Michael Sullivan. Mrs. Killourey died Aug. 3, 1896, aged twenty-eight years, and was buried in Stafford Springs. She left two children: John, born July 6, 1890; and Daniel, born Dec. 26, 1893. Lieut. Killourey is a thoroughly efficient officer, a staunch Democrat, and a member of the Knights of Columbus, and has a very creditable reputation for bravery and the fearless discharge of his duty.

JACOB ARBUS, who is engaged in the fur business in all its details in Rockville, Tolland county, has a patronage that extends to the neighboring cities and towns. This business has been established for nearly thirty years, and every passing season witnesses its extension into new regions, and the winning of new patrons at home. Mr. Arbus is regarded as absolutely reliable, and from early boyhood he has been familiar with the handling of furs. His father followed the same business in Austria.

Jacob Arbus came from an excellent family, and was born March 3, 1847, in Leskau, near Carlsbad, in Bohemia, a son of Jacob, Sr., and Mary Arbus.

Jacob Arbus, Sr., was a well-to-do furrier and lived and died in Leskau, and there his wife also died. They were the parents of three children besides our subject: John, at the present time, is mayor of Leskau, where he is regarded as one of the solid business men of the city; Carl is a fur merchant in New York, where his son, Joseph, has succeeded to his business, and is a member of the firm of Hall & Arbus, furriers, at the corner of 10th street and Broadway; and Mary married and remained in Austria.

The education which Jacob Arbus received in Bohemia was that afforded by the public schools of his native town, and it was very inferior to what is offered there at the present time. When but twelve years old he set himself to the learning of the trade of furrier, and after he had accomplished this he worked for a time as a journeyman. In 1869 he removed to the United States, coming by way of Bremen, and after an ocean voyage of fifteen days, landed at New York, where for five years he was employed at his trade. About 1874 he came to Vernon, and for a number of years was employed on a farm, where he carried on the business of a furrier, his products being sold by the Rockville merchants. In 1886 he opened his first store in what is now the Maxwell Block on Union street, occupying only the front portion of this building. Later he located in the Fitch block, and still again in the Maxwell Block, returning to the Fitch Block once more, and in 1894, moving into the building which he had erected on Union street, near Ward street, the previous year, and here he has since been located.

Mr. Arbus is a member of the K. of P., and is a prominent figure in Eintracht Mannie Lodge, No. 73, D. O. H. He also belongs to the Reading Society.

Mr. Arbus was first married in New York to Miss Johanna Wehle, who died in Rockville. To this marriage were born the following children: Minnie F., now the wife of Edward O'Connor, and a resident of Springfield, Mass.; Annie M., who married Harry Hodgson, of Newton, Mass., and has one daughter, Elain E.; Elizabeth L., of Rockville; Caroline M., of the class of 1898, of the Rockville high school, who is now engaged in teaching; Laura M., at home; William J., an electrician; and Sophia, at school. For his second wife Mr. Arbus wedded Mrs. Amanda Schneider, of Hartford, who, by her first marriage was the mother of two boys, Walter Henry and Hermann, both of whom are living. Mrs. Arbus is a thorough business woman, and has had a long and practical experience in the fur business, ably supplementing her husband's labor in that line. Mr. Arbus is a citizen of the better type, and is a clear headed and successful business man.

HENRY WHITE is a prosperous farmer and an enterprising citizen of Mt. Hope, in the town of Mansfield, Tolland county, and belongs to a family long established in Connecticut.

Asa White, his grandfather, was a resident of Scotland, Conn., from which point he enlisted in the Revolutionary army. He was one of the first minute men, and served three terms in the Continental service. By trade he was a wheel-wright, and made many of the old-fashioned spinning wheels. He owned a farm in Scotland, and on it he died in old age. He was twice married, and the father of Henry White was his son by his first wife.

Jeremiah White, son of Asa, was born June 1, 1780, in Scotland, where he was reared to farm work. When he was eighteen years old he learned the trade of a cooper, and located in the south part of Chaplin, Conn., but soon moved to the north part. For some years he had his home in Eastford, where he pursued his trade. His last years were spent at the home of his son Henry, in Ashford, Conn., and while on a visit to a son in Nelson, Tioga Co., Pa., he was taken sick and died, Dec. 18, 1867, his remains being buried there. Mr. White was four times married, and was the father of eighteen children, and the step-father of three, making a total of twenty-one children in his home. His first and second wives were Bottum sisters; his third, a Mrs. Alice (Utley) Hartson; his fourth wife was Annie Parkhurst. The children of his third wife by Mr. Hartson were: Lyman, who married a Miss Hartson, and was an auger maker in Uncasville, Conn., but later moved to Illinois, where he died; Andrew, who is a blacksmith in Uncasville; and Lester, a carpenter in Boston, where he died. To Jeremiah and Alice (Utley) White were born: George, who married Miss Butler, and moved to Farmington, Pa.; Truman, who married Abbie Pierce, was a car builder, and died in Springfield, Mass.; Earl, a soldier in the Civil war, who followed the blacksmith trade in the West, where he died; Angeline, who married Charles Coffin, and had her home on Nantucket Island, where she died; Sophronia, who went to Tioga county, Pa., in girlhood, and was married there to Ira Price, with whom she went to Iowa, where she died; Charles, who married Jane Edgerton, lived in various places in the West, and died in Mississippi county, Mo.; and Henry. The mother of the above children died one day after the birth of her son Henry.

Henry White was born May 3, 1831, in the town of Chaplin, Conn., and as he was the son of a poor man, and a member of a large family of children, he was early put out to work, beginning when he was only nine years of age to earn money to meet domestic exigencies. His wages went to the home until he was twenty-one years old. He did not know holidays and vacations, but was compelled to work when ever he could secure employment. As might be expected his schooling was quite limited, and his early life one unbroken round of hard work, to a degree people of today can scarcely comprehend.

At the age of twenty-one, after a youth of privation, he began life with an impaired constitution, almost broken down from previous hard work. His first work was in a handle shop, but he was compelled to give it up by the state of his health, and for some six months was unable to do anything. After this for about a year he was employed in a handle shop at Pomfret Landing; and for a short time he was employed at Dayville. At Chaffeeville, Conn., he entered the employ of Orwell S. Chaffee, with whom he remained for four years. At the end of that time in company with his half brother, Lester, Mr. White bought a farm in Ashford. The two brothers conducted it together for a time, when Henry bought out his brother, and became the sole owner of the farm.

It was while he was living in Ashford that Mr. White enlisted in the Union army, becoming a member of Co. D, 1st Conn. V. I., and he bore a gallant part in the battle of Fredericksburg, and other conflicts, when domestic troubles of a most serious character demanded his attention at home. A friend interceded with Gov. Buckingham, and Mr. White was released after being nine months at the front. Mr. White returned to Ashford, where he remained until 1865, when he sold out, to purchase his present farm of Philo Chaffee. All the buildings on this place were erected by him, and he has since been engaged in farming, mill work and carpentering. His farm comprises eighty-eight acres, and lies in both Mansfield and Chaplin.

On Sept. 15, 1856, Mr. White was married to Mary Ann Nason, who was born in Mansfield, Oct. 6, 1837, a daughter of Samuel and Abigail (King) Nason. To this union were born: (1) Marietta Eliza, born June 18, 1859, taught school eight terms in Mansfield, and is now the wife of George A. Walker, of Gurleyville, Conn.; for many years she sang in the choir of the Methodist Church in Gurleyville. (2) Willie Edgar, born May 28, 1860, died Aug. 2, 1860. (3) George H., born Jan. 22, 1862, died July 17th following. (4) Truman E., born July 18, 1864, taught school two terms in Mansfield, and was attending the Eastman Business College, in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he was taken sick, and died March 29, 1884; he was a man of much promise, and a splendid musician. (5) Olon A., born June 27, 1868, died July 27, 1868. Mr. White is a Republican. He belongs to the Methodist Church in Gurleyville, as does his family. In the affairs of this church he takes much interest, and has served it in many official capacities, having been steward and trustee.

THOMAS P. SMITH is probably as capable, thrifty and energetic a young business man as is to be found in Willimantic, Windham county, and certainly there is none more courteous and attentive to the wants of his patrons. By his own push and energy he has fought his way to the front, and from the most humble beginnings commands a most creditable place in the hustling and wide-awake city in which he is located. At No. 22 Bank street he has established a very fine livery business and secured a very flattering patronage. Here he has turn-outs suited to every disposition and desire, vehicles of all descriptions, coaches for funerals and weddings, carriages both single and double, horses that are active and attractive—spirited drivers as well as those of milder disposition—so that all may be suited. Mr. Smith is an expert judge of horseflesh, and owns nothing but the best class of animals.

Mr. Smith is a most efficient undertaker, is a graduate embalmer, and his services are in constant demand. The entire charge of a funeral will be taken by him, and friends and relatives are freed from all those little annoyances that are so depressing at such a time. The graceful way in which he conducts a funeral, and his embalming ability, have made him a name in this section, and brought him a wide patronage.

Thomas P. Smith was born Feb. 3, 1866, in the south part of the town of Hampton, Conn., a son of Edmund and Mary (Sweeney) Smith. There he had his rearing as a farmer boy, and early gained a practical knowledge of hard work, taking his place on the farm during the summer season, and going to district school in the winter, after the fashion of the times. The school which he attended was known as the South Bigelow district school, and there he attended until he reached the age of seventeen years. In his later teens he went to North Windham where he secured a position as a clerk for Albert Hartson, the postmaster and general merchant of the place. With this gentleman he remained a year and a half, and then desiring to take up a trade he came to Willimantic, to enter the "twisting room" of the Willimantic Linen Company at a salary of four dollars a week. For this work young Smith seemed to have a natural adaptation, and he soon became very proficient and master of every detail, of this department. Good wages were paid him, and he was ranked as a skilled operative, but the range of his work was too narrow, and offered little opportunity for advancement. Mr. Smith accordingly severed his connection with the company, and for a time was gateman at the Union street railroad crossing, at the same time having a confectionery and refreshment business in company with his cousin, J. F. Smith, under the firm name of J. F. & T. P. Smith. Their place of business was the corner of Union and Jackson streets. After some two years Mr. Smith disposed of this establishment, and took up the blacksmith trade, working under the instruction of A. R. Burnham, on Valley street, Willimantic. With Mr. Burnham he worked as an apprentice some two years, and then in March, 1890, left the forge to enter the livery business in association with his brother, D. E. Smith. The firm of Smith Brothers began business at the old stand of J. T. Nichols in the rear of "Young's Hotel," and there the stables were maintained until September, 1898, when the business was removed to the Hooker House Barns, on Bank street, where it is now located.

The undertaking business of Ed. Casey was bought in 1891, D. E. Smith taking a course in the United States Embalming School in Boston, from which he was graduated with credit, and his brother, Thomas P., graduated from the Massachusetts College of Embalming. D. E. Smith died in 1898, and the entire business which the two had so carefully built up came into the hands of the surviving brother, whose name introduces this article.

On June 6, 1895, Thomas P. Smith was married to Miss Alice T. Keating, a native of Chaplin, Conn., and a daughter of John Keating, who came from Ireland. To this union have come two children, Hattie Mildred and Alice Gertrude.

Mr. Smith cast his first presidential vote for Gen. Garfield, and is a Republican in State and national affairs. Mr. Smith was the first chief ranger of Court Windham, No. 97, Foresters of America, and belongs to the Heptasophs. In religion he is a Roman Catholic, and is associated with St. Joseph's Catholic Church of Willimantic.

Edmund Smith, the father of Thomas P., was born in December, 1842, near Glenville, in County Cork, Ireland, a son of Daniel and Ellen (Barry) Smith. Daniel Smith was a farmer, and spent his life in Ireland, where he died, leaving a widow and eight children, all of whom came to the United States, and their record is as follows: (1) John settled at Charlestown, R. I., but came to Connecticut and followed farming, dying at Hampton. (2) Abby married John Arnold, in Providence, R. I., and died in South Providence. (3) Kate married Dennis McCarty, and is a widow in Jewett City, Conn. (4) Mary married and lives in New Bedford, Mass. (5) Daniel lived first in this country in Bald Hill, R. I., and then came to Cranston, Conn., where he died on the old Sprague farm, which he had hired for several years, and he died in January, 1901. (6) Thomas is one of the good farmers of Hampton, Conn. (7) Frank is a farmer in Brooklyn, Conn. (8) Edmund completes the family.

Edmund Smith and his mother came to the United States in 1853, making the voyage in six weeks and three days in the sailing vessel, "Lucy Thompson," from Liverpool to New York. They made their home in Charlestown, R. I., where they remained for some years. Mrs. Smith spent her last years at the home of her son, John, where she died at the advanced age of ninety-five years, and was buried in Danielson, Connecticut.

Edmund Smith was a boy eleven years old at the time of his coming to the United States, and for some years he worked for his board and attended school during the winter. A bright and progressive mind, he made rapid progress at school, where he was especially noted for his ability as a speller. Until he reached the age of nineteen he attended school every winter except that of 1857, the year of the great panic. For a time he worked on the Providence & Stonington Railroad, and then began the business of dyeing in the Peacedale Mill, at South Kingston, R. I., but resumed his work as a farmer in the spring of 1862, in the employ of William Casswell, at Boston Neck, near Narragansett Bay, on the mainland side. In 1864, after a short time spent in the dye house at the Peacedale Mills, he removed to Hampton, Conn., where he bought a farm, and engaged in its cultivation. With the money which he had saved he bought a farm of 104 acres, for which he paid cash.

Mr. Smith was married in December, 1863, to Miss Mary Sweeney, in Westerly, R. I. Mrs. Smith was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, and she came to the United States when only about eighteen years of age. Her home was at Wakefield, R. I., where she was living at the time of her marriage. Mr. Smith lived in Hampton until about 1885, when he removed to Willimantic, where he was employed for five years in the bleach house of the Willimantic Linen Company. For three years he worked in the dye house of the Holland Silk Company, and was then train announcer at the Willimantic railway station. As announcer it is said that he was the most competent man in his line that ever filled that position. With a fine memory and a wide knowledge of the city and country, he was able to render invaluable services to the traveling public. Since the closing of 1896 he has been engaged with the Prudential Life Insurance Company, of Willimantic, and has made a reputation for himself as a capable insurance man.

Edmund Smith became the father of the following children: (1) Daniel E., who died in August, 1898, as is noted above, was the senior member of the livery and undertaking firm of Smith Brothers; he never married. (2) Thomas P. was mentioned above. (3) Annie married William Rafferty, of Putnam, Conn. (4) Mary, (5) Carrie and (6) Hattie are unmarried. (7) Mabel died at the age of eighteen years. (8) Agnes died when a child. (9) Etta is unmarried. Mr. Smith is a Democrat, and is one of the most popular and best known Irish-Americans of Willimantic, where his genuine manhood and unaffected character have made him many friends.

JAMES C. GREEN, a thrifty and representative farmer who lives in Mansfield, where he is well known and most highly esteemed, is a descendant of one of the oldest and best families of Rhode Island. The emigrant ancestor, John Green, was born in England, Feb. 9, 1596. He was a surgeon, and came from Salisbury, Wiltshire, England, with his wife, Joanna Tattersall, and five children, in the good ship "James." He arrived in Boston June 5, 1635, and from there went to Salem, thence in 1636, to Providence. He was one of the twelve original purchasers of Shawomet, a tract of land embracing the greater part of the present towns of Warwick and Coventry. In 1644 he went to London to negotiate for Narragansett, and was one of the committee who first organized the Colony of Rhode Island, under the charter obtained from Charles I, in 1647. He was representative to the Assembly at Providence from 1652 to 1658. He was one of the twelve original members of the Baptist Church at Providence, the first of that denomination organized in America. He died in 1658. Mrs. Joanna (Tattersall) Green, the mother of all his children, died in 1643. His second wife was Mrs. Alice Daniels, of Providence; his third was a Miss Phillipa, who survived him nearly thirty years.

Whipple Green, the great-grandfather of James C. Green, lived in Coventry, R. I., where he followed farming all his life. He married into the Cornwall family and reared these children: Cornell, Clark, who married Miss Capwell, was a farmer of Greenwich, R. I.; Sarah married a Mr. Green, and resided in Rhode Island; Lucy married James Franklin, and lived in Coventry, R. I.; Mary married Ira Cornwall, who died in the Civil war; and Cynthia married James Reed, and died in Rhode Island.

Cornell Green, son of Whipple, was born in Coventry, R. I., where he was reared to farm work and followed that occupation until 1856, when he removed to Mansfield, Conn., and purchased the farm which is now occupied by his son, James W. Green. There he engaged in farming for several years, and then purchased of his son, James W., the latter's farm in South Coventry, Conn., where he was engaged in farming during the rest of his life. He died there in October, 1869, at the age of fifty-nine years, and was buried in South Coventry. He was a keen, hardworking man, and was in comfortable circumstances at the time of his death. Cornell Green was married in Coventry,

R. I., to Watie Matteson, a daughter of James Matteson, of that place. She died at the home of her son, James W. Green, in Mansfield, at the age of seventy-three. Their children were: James W., the father of our subject; Yelverton, who married Melinda Lewis, and lives in Columbia, Conn., where he carries on farming; Polly, who married Stephen Capwell, and resides at West Greenwich, R. I., where he is a farmer; Albert C., who married Jane Campbell, was a farmer, and died in Mansfield; Cyril, who was first married to Moriva Snow, and second to Hattie Carr, and is a farmer in Columbia, Conn.; Henry, who married Elizabeth Taylor, and is a farmer in Tolland, Conn.; Samuel, who married Sarah Topliff, and lives in North Coventry, Conn.; George, unmarried, a farmer of Mansfield; Benjamin, who married Mary Flaherty, and is a farmer of South Coventry; Sybil, who is the widow of Levi Fisk, and resides at Mansfield Four-Corners; and William D., who married Angeline Potter, and resides in Mansfield.

James W. Green, the father of our subject, was born Jan. 17, 1831, in Coventry, R. I., where he attended the district schools and was employed at farming and butchering until the fall of 1856, when he removed to South Coventry, Conn., and located on the Judge Ripley place, which he had purchased, the farm consisting of about 200 acres. He resided there for nine years, and then sold it to his father, and removed to Tolland, Conn., where he purchased what was known as the Gould farm, a tract of 312 acres, where he remained about four years, engaged in farming and lumbering, but at the death of his father he returned to Mansfield and located on the farm he now occupies. Although he has never been an office-seeker, he has always been interested in the success of the Democratic party. His business operations have been successful and he is justly regarded as one of the substantial men of Mansfield.

James W. Green was married in Coventry, R. I., to Lydia Ann Cappell, who died Dec. 30, 1898, aged sixty-seven years. The children of this union were: (1) Watie married Julian Oldershaw, and resides at South Willington, Conn.; they have six children, Nellie (who married Edward Gurgler, and has two children, Etta and Edward), Walter, Maude, William, Phebe, and Edna. (2) James C. is the subject of this sketch. (3) Emma is the wife of Charles Chaplain, a machinist of Worcester, Mass., and has one child, Frederick. (4) Cornell, first married Luella Andre, and second Jennie Thompson; he is an extensive farmer in Tolland; and Phoebe is the wife of Carl Gurley, of South Willington, Conn., and has one child, Franklin J.

James C. Green was born Jan. 8, 1851, in South Coventry, R. I., and moved to Connecticut with his parents when a few years old. He attended the district schools of Coventry, Tolland and Mansfield, but was brought up with habits of industry and required to perform farm work. Until he was twenty-one years old he received no wages, and he remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-eight. In the meantime his savings had accumulated, and he was able to purchase his present farm from his father. This fine farm is known in the locality as the Stephen Brigham farm, and by additions to the original tract, Mr. Green has now 177 acres, which he devotes to general farming and cattle raising. At the time of purchase the farm was not in prime condition, but it did not require long for Mr. Green, with his energy and industry to remedy defects, and he has now one of the best improved farms in the vicinity. For some time he has also acted as agent for fertilizers and farm implements, displaying a fine stock.

On Oct. 2, 1889, Mr. Green was married in Coventry to Dezzie S. Rathbun, who was born Dec. 12, 1870, a native of Coventry, a daughter of Emil and Angeline E. (Walker) Rathbun. To this marriage these children have been born: Nettie Angeline, born Oct. 12, 1890; James W., born Nov. 23, 1891; and Myron E., born Jan. 30, 1899. His political rearing has been in the Democratic party, and he has efficiently filled several positions of trust in the town, having been assessor several terms, and he is now serving as tax collector. Mrs. Green is a member of North Coventry Congregational Church, which he attends and most liberally assists in supporting.

MARTIN DOWLING is a native of the land that has given to the world some of its greatest men, statesmen, military and social leaders and giants in literature, having been born in Queen's County, Ireland, Jan. 1, 1839, a son of Patrick and Elizabeth (King) Dowling, natives of the same locality. The father was a coal miner by trade, and hoping to better his condition, with his wife and two sons, James and John, came to America, in 1848, and went to the coal regions of Pennsylvania, settling at Silver Creek, in Schuylkill county, where by the time two years had passed away the rest of the family joined them. The children of Patrick and Elizabeth Dowling were: James, a miner, who lived and died in Shenandoah City; John, a miner, and later a stone mason, who died in Vernon; Dennis, who died at Sugar Notch, near Wilkesbarre, Pa.; Martin, our subject; Patrick, who was killed by a sharpshooter at Armstrong Farm, Va., while on picket duty, during the Civil war; Kate, who married John Dowling and died in Shenandoah; Mary, who died young in Ireland; and Julia, who is Mrs. Fenton McCarty, of Holyoke, Mass. Patrick Dowling died in the Keystone State, and after his death, Mrs. Dowling came to Vernon, Tolland Co., Conn., where she died.

The education received by Martin Dowling, in Ireland, was very meager, and he was but eleven years of age when he came with an aunt to the United States, sailing from Liverpool on a vessel named after the patron Saint of the land, spending nine weeks and three days on the water, during which time they were nearly shipwrecked in a collision with another vessel, matters being made more serious on account of the cargo shifting, but at length they safely arrived in New York on Christmas Eve. The great city probably presented no great attractions to the tired voyagers, for they immediately set off for Silver Creek, which they soon reached, and the family was re-united. As soon as possible our subject went to school in the new home, as he was anxious to learn, but his father's death changed the family arrangements, and soon after, the mother, with John, Martin and Julia, moved to Vernon, Conn. A short time in a school in Dobsonville finished his educational career. Realizing that his mother was poor, the lad attempted to get work of any kind, and finally decided to return to the mines in Pennsylvania, and was employed in the collieries at Silver Creek, Coal Castle, and Minersville, later returning to Connecticut, where the more healthful work of agricultural labor awaited him.

Where the great tall buildings now stand, in South Brooklyn, N. Y., was at that time located a farm, nearly opposite to Greenwood cemetery, on Hamilton avenue, and there he secured employment, later laboring in the brick yards at Haverstraw and Perth Amboy, but later he returned to Connecticut, and took up the trade of weaver at Dobsonville, working at this at the outbreak of the Civil war, when he was engaged to weave tent canvas for the soldiers' tents. Some time after this he worked for a short time for Henry King, of South Haven, on his farm, but returned to the weaver trade in Windermere and other places. During the progress of the war he did some driving for J. W. Thayer, who was conducting the Windermere Mills, and after three years with Mr. Thayer he engaged his services to Cornelius Farmer, of Ellington, where he remained one year. Whatever Mr. Dowling attempted he seemed able to do well, and during the next few years he worked in the engine room of the Florence Mill, drove a team for the manager of the Windermere Mills, returned then to the Florence Mill, and finally became employed by H. L. James, where for seventeen years he remained the efficient and careful custodian of his horses, carriages and belongings of the stables, only leaving his employ to engage in a trucking business on his own account.

Mr. Dowling was very successful in this new enterprise, the work consisting in hauling materials for many of the largest and best of the business houses in the city of Rockville, his perfect reliability causing him to be regarded as one of the very best in his line, for no matter what the distance might be, or the lateness of the hour, Mr. Dowling was always ready with his teams, according to promise. In connection with this work, our subject naturally added a coal business, and was also in the hay and feed line, but in 1898 he wisely considered that the time had arrived when he should shift his business burdens to younger shoulders, and his son, Edward M., relieved him of it. Retirement, however, did not mean for our active subject a loss of interest, as his various real estate holdings need much attention, and to them he is now able to give more time than formerly.

When Mr. Dowling bought the property on the south-west corner of Union and Ward streets, it needed improvement, which he has given it, also enlargement, and he has also built adjoining it, on Ward street, a four-story tenement, and also the same on Union street, and he is also the owner of a fine hay lot, on Windermere avenue, in Ellington.

On Jan. 27, 1861, Mr. Dowling was united in marriage to Miss Julia Costello, in Rockville, by Rev. Bernard Turley. Mrs. Dowling was born in County Kerry, Ireland, had come to the United States when but a girl, and was reared in Dobsonville. A large and intelligent family has been born to our subject and his most worthy wife: Mary A. is Mrs. Edward Fitzsimmons, of Rockville, and has two children, Grace and Mary; William is the agent of the Adams Express Co., and has two children, Alice and Sedrick; Katy married William Fitzsimmons, and died in Holyoke, Mass., leaving two children, Rav F. and Ruth; Julia, a graduate of the High school, is at home; Edward M., is his father's successor in business; Alice, a high school graduate, is a stenographer; Nellie, also a high school graduate, is at home; and James, Clara May and Martin all died in childhood.

The first vote cast for President by our subject was for a Democrat, but in 1896 he became convinced of the superior principles of the Republican party, and since that time has been a staunch supporter of it, although no office seeker. The whole family are valued and consistent members of the St. Bernard's Catholic Church. For twenty years Mr. Dowling was a member of the Rockville Volunteer Fire Co., and for eight years was a member of the 1st Conn. N. G., serving five years and receiving an honorable discharge, and he again became a member of the organization, remaining until it was disbanded. Mr. Dowling has lived an active and useful life, and has reared a creditable family, to whom he has given advantages which were denied him. His name is respected in Rockville, and he is considered one of the most substantial of her citizens.

WILLIAM WIERS is a well known and successful citizen of Somers, Tolland county, where his high character and fine business sense have made him many friends. He is a grandson of Walter Wiers, a life-long farmer in East Glastonbury, where he died at the age of eighty-two years. Walter Wiers served at New London during the War of 1812, and was known as a well-to-do man. Twice married, his second wife was a Miss Churchill, by whom he had the following children: Lorana, who married Joseph Hopkins, and died in Willimantic, Conn.; Betsey, who wedded Andrew Fox, died in New Britain; a daughter that died in infancy; Hiram, the father of William Wiers; Truman, a cabinet maker, who died at Newington, Conn.; Alanson, a cabinet maker, who died at Winsted, Conn.; Henry, a farmer in East Glastonbury; and Albert, also a farmer in East Glastonbury.

Hiram Wiers, the father of William, was born in 1806, in what is now East Glastonbury, where he lived until he became of age, when he went to Wethersfield, Conn., to enter the employ of Dr. Welles as a farmer and a driver. During his residence in Wethersfield he was married, and then removed to Tolland county, where he lived on a rented farm for a year. At Stafford he bought a small farm, for which he contracted a heavy obligation. This farm was located in the southwest part of the town, where he began in a modest way, but by hard work, careful economy and wise business deals he presently accumulated a handsome property. At one time he owned more than 800 acres, and was one of the largest land owners in the county. He dealt heavily in cattle, and was widely known as an honorable and enterprising man, with whom it was always possible to do business. Throughout his life he followed farming, and he died in Stafford, in August, 1888, and his remains were interred in the cemetery near Crystal Lake, in that town. Mr. Wiers was a hard worker, and an unusually shrewd stock dealer. In early life he was a Whig, but later became a Democrat, and represented Stafford one term in the General Assembly. In religion he was a Spiritualist. Mr. Wiers and Sarah Wicks were married in Wethersfield, where she was born, a daughter of John Wicks, a cooper, who ran on vessels engaged in the West Indies trade. She died at the age of forty-five years. To them were born: Eliza, who married Dennison Pierson, and died in Tolland; William; Ralph, who married Eliza Neff, and is living in West Stafford, Conn.; Hiram, who married Nellie De Forest, and became a physician, but who died in Hartford; and Charles, who married Mary Lawton, was a real estate dealer, and died in Hartford.

William Wiers was born Aug. 28, 1836, in West Stafford, and was reared to hard work on the farm. His education was obtained in the district school before he reached the age of eighteen years. At that time he began working for a Mr. Clark, of Springfield, Mass., who employed him on a peddling wagon through Connecticut and Rhode Island. Afterward he entered the employ of a Mr. Woodworth, of Enfield, and continued to travel the same route. For about three years he was on the road, and did well. Shortly after his marriage Mr. Wiers bought a farm near his birthplace in Stafford, which he cultivated several years. He bought and sold several farms, and in April, 1872, purchased a farm in the Tenth district of Somers, which he made his home for ten years, when he sold it, and bought and sold several farms in Somers. In October, 1895, Mr. Wiers purchased his present farm of Almeron Allen.

Mr. Wiers has made real estate his principal business. He would buy farm lands and houses that were known as "run down" places, and fixing them up, would sell at a good profit. In this business he is still engaged, and has handled real estate in many parts of the State, dealing in both city and farm property. In years gone by, Mr. Wiers would go to Vermont, Canada and the West, where he would buy all kinds of stock, which he would ship to his home, and dispose of them as opportunity offered. A shrewd business man he has become very prosperous.

In Stafford William Wiers and Madula S. Kendall were married Sept. 4, 1861. Mrs. Wiers was born Oct. 23, 1839, in Tolland, a daughter of Lloyd and Anna (Mauley) Kendall, the former of whom was a farmer and blacksmith, and served at New London during the war of 1812. To this union were born: Carrie S., born July 1, 1864, died March 13, 1896; Minnie A., born Aug. 10, 1869, died Feb. 21, 1872; Hattie E., born Dec. 17, 1871, married Everett Brace, and died in Somers, Aug. 9, 1888; Ida F., born Nov. 20, 1874, married Edmund Pease, a farmer in Somers, and has three children, Clesson W., Lawrence E. and Lila; Lizzie M., born March 13, 1877, died Aug. 26, 1879; and Gracie M., born Dec. 14, 1879, married Nelson Nash, March 23, 1901, and has her home in Somers.

Mr. Wiers is a Republican, and is the only one of his family to hold to that political faith. He is well known, and has held various local positions.

HERMAN GROSS (deceased). The birth of the subject of this biography was in the land which has given to America some of her most reliable and esteemed citizens. From the year 1870, when Herman Gross landed in the United States with little more capital than energy and determination to succeed, until his lamented death on April 14, 1895, he lived a useful and industrious life, and his memory is tenderly cherished by those for whom he labored so long and successfully, as well as by the community in which he was an example of honest and upright living.

Herman Gross was born in Saxony, Germany, Oct. 15, 1842, a son of William Gross, who followed the trade of butcher in his own land, Herman being the only one of the family who came to America. While still in Germany our subject learned the trade of weaver, but on account of small wages and other labor conditions, Mr. Gross determined to try his fortunes across the Atlantic. On Nov. 15, 1867, Mr. Gross was married, in Germany, to Miss Mary Dimlow, daughter of John and Christina Dimlow, who was born Feb. 22, 1849. In May, 1870, Mr. Gross left his wife and two children, Clara and Hugo, in the old home, and sailed from Bremen for New York. The first work at his trade was secured at Broad Brook, Conn., and conditions seeming favorable, he was soon in a position to send for his family, who landed in New York the same autumn and joined Mr. Gross at Broad Brook. Wages were good and in Mrs. Gross he had an economical and careful helpmate, and ere long means accumulated, and the family became very comfortable.

In 1872 they removed to Rockville, where Mr. Gross was employed in the dye house at the Florence Mills, from which a few years later he went to the Hockanum Mill, taking a position in the dye house. Each year showed an improvement in the financial condition of the family, and the time came when Mr. Gross was able to purchase a most comfortable home on Windermere avenue. Tiring at last of the trying duties in the mill, Mr. Gross resigned and engaged himself in the butcher business with W. E. Strong, succeeding so well that at the time of his decease, he was an extensive owner of real estate in this city, and was considered a substantial man.

The family of Mr. and Mrs. Gross numbered five children: Clara, now Mrs. Robert C. Flamin, of Rockville, has one son, Harry; Hugo married Miss Mary Graff, of Rockville, and has a daughter, Bertha; William; Frank; and Hattie. In politics, Mr. Gross voted with the Democratic party, but was a quiet and orderly man who attended closely to his private business, leaving office holding to others who had more taste for such prominence. The business affairs have been and are still carefully and efficiently conducted by Mrs. Gross, a lady of ability who in no small way contributed to the success of her husband. The religious connection of the whole family is with the German Lutheran Church, where our subject was highly valued, and where the family is much esteemed.

SYLVESTER H. ABORN is one of the leading tobacco growers of the town of Ellington, Tolland county, and is a good representative of an old New England family, which is quite numerous in the vicinity of Lynn, Massachusetts.

Samuel Aborn was the first of the family to come into Tolland county, Conn., from Lynn, and he purchased ninety-six acres of land in the northwestern part of the county near the Hockanum river. The marriage of this Daniel Aborn to Mary Ingham, of Hebron, on Nov. 7, 1753, begins the history of the family in the records of the county. These were their children: Martha; Samuel (2), born Nov. 23, 1756; Mary, who died in infancy; Mary (2); John; Dorcas; Elizabeth; Ruth; and Reuben.

Samuel Aborn (2) was born on his father's farm in Tolland county, where his entire life was passed in farming. He bore arms in the Revolutionary war, and was pensioned, $96 per year, in his old age for his three years' services in that great struggle. Dorothy Post, of Hebron, became his wife in 1782, and bore him seven children: Samuel, born in 1783, died unmarried; Jedediah, born July 12, 1787, was grandfather of Sylvester H. Aborn; Roxa married Joel Cobb, when nearly seventy years old, and died in Tolland; Hiram became a noted business man and a very successful farmer, and never married; Dorothy died in 1822; Mary, born in 1798, died unmarried at the age of sixty-five years; and Ruth became Mrs. Tillinghast, and moved to Ohio where she died. The father of the above children died in 1827, and was buried in the North Cemetery at Tolland. The mother survived until 1834, when she passed away at the age of seventy-four years.

Jedediah Aborn was born on the old homestead and was reared to agricultural pursuits. He acquired unusual muscular strength, and was capable of prolonged hard work. When the estate was divided after the death of his father he erected a home, and passed his life upon the portion that came to him. In 1864 he died at the age of seventy-seven years. In politics he was a Democrat, but never sought office. Laura Ryder, his wife, was a daughter of Enos Ryder, who drove a team in the Continental army during the war of the Revolution. She lived to be ninety-three years old, and died in the home of her son, Henry C., in Ellington. Their children were: Lyman, the father of Sylvester H.; Albert, a farmer in Tolland, who married Mary Charter; Henry C., of Ellington, who married Fannie C. Slater; William, a farmer, who married Jane Kellogg; Charles, a farmer, who married Harriet Slater, and is now living in Oklahoma; and Enos, who was a farmer in Tolland, where he died, and who married Emily Fitch.

Lyman Aborn was born Oct. 15, 1819, in Tolland, where he spent his early life. Until his marriage he was employed at farm work and teaming, when he removed to Somers, Conn., and located on the Gen. Fuller farm, where he was engaged in farming and in butchering for several years. Then he moved to the farm of Joseph Wallace, in whose home had been reared the mother of Sylvester H. Aborn. This farm contained seventy-two acres, and was located in the south part of Somers, and it was his home until 1866, when he removed to Tolland where he was farming and doing a butchering business for a number of years. Then he came to Ellington to spend his last days in the home of his son, whose name introduces this review, where his death occurred April 1, 1880, and he was buried in Ellington. For some eight months he was in the United States service during the Civil war as a member of Co. K, 22nd Conn. V. I., and spent the time in Virginia. On account of sickness he was discharged. Although in early life a Democrat, he became a Republican in his later years. Handling stock extensively, for years he was the principal butcher in Ellington.

Lyman Aborn and Lois Cooley, born in Somers, and the daughter of Levi and Dolly (Smith) Cooley, were married and became the parents of a good family. Mrs. Aborn was reared in the home of Joseph Wallace, and died April 18, 1874, at the age of fifty-three years. Their children were: Frank, who became a soldier in the Civil war as a member of Co. A, 16th Conn. V. I., participated in the battles of Antietam and Fredericksburg, and died in the Newport News hospital of typhoid fever; Henry, who was married to Phoebe Brown, and was engaged in a grocery business at Hunter's Point, where he died; Sylvester H.; Julia, who married Charles Kibbe, an Ellington farmer; Ellen, who married George Braman, and died at her home in Ellington; and Charles, an undertaker in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Sylvester H. Aborn was born Aug. 5, 1849, in Somers, Conn., and when he was twelve years old he left home to make his residence with his grandfather, Jedediah Aborn, assisting him on the farm, and becoming familiar with all details of farm work. During several years of his stay at his grandfather's he worked for neighboring farmers, and then came to Ellington where he rented a farm of Guy P. Collins. Sylvester and his brother Henry were engaged in getting out ties and timber and burning charcoal in 1871. About this time Sylvester Aborn purchased the farm, on which he now resides, of E. G. Holton. It consisted of thirty-two acres, and on it he has made a fine living, occupying his time with garden truck, tobacco, etc. He is one of the largest growers of tobacco in the county, devoting to this about nine acres yearly.

On June 4, 1871, Mr. Aborn was married to Veronia Avery, the daughter of Lyman Avery, a farmer of Stafford, where she was born. She died Feb. 22, 1885, and was buried in Ellington. To them were born the following children: Edgar W., of Ellington, who married Hattie Baker, and has one child, Merritt; Julia V., who married Horace Davis, of Glastonbury, and is the mother of one child, Merritt A.; Grace; Harry O.; and Miles, who died in infancy. Mr. Aborn was married (second) to Mrs. Lizzie (King) Neff, widow of Oliver Neff, to whom she had borne the following children: Charles, Henry and Hattie. By his second marriage Mr. Aborn has five children, Robert, Emma, Gertrude, Myrtle and Mildred. Mr. Aborn is a Democrat, and has served on the school board, but has little ambition for political honors. He belongs to the Congregational Church. His life is open and square to the world, and he bears the best of reputations in his own community.

JACOB GLOVER. Numbered among the prominent German-American citizens of this locality, is Jacob Glover, of Stafford, Tolland county, Conn., who was born in Germany July 27, 1834.

John Glover, his grandfather, was on the police force for many years and was a tall, stately, portly man, and was highly respected in the community in which he lived. Like his son and grandson, he was a native of Germany.

Gabriel Glover, son of John and father of Jacob, was born in Germany, and was about sixty-five years of age at the time of his death. By occupation he was a tinner and conducted a business of his own in his native land, being very successful. He married Margaret Bromig, who died when about fifty years of age. To the parents were born: Andrew, a tinner by trade, now living in New Britain, Conn.; Jacob; and Peter, a soldier in the German army, who died in the Fatherland.

The education of Jacob Glover was received in his native land, and although he left school when but fourteen, he was a very good pupil. His mother died when he was but twelve years of age. When he left school he began to learn the trade of tinner with his father, continuing with him until he was twenty years of age. After this he worked in another shop until 1854, when he sailed from Bremen, Germany, and after a rough voyage of eight weeks, landed in New York, Nov. 15th. Until the following spring, he remained there, then went to Williamsburg, and was engaged in making butcher's split sticks for several months. His next occupation was farming in Norwich, at $7 per month, including board. At the close of the summer Mr. Glover entered the woolen factory at Bean Hill, and worked in the card room, where he remained nine months, and then went to Norwichtown, Conn., and learned to operate machinery while he was working at his trade, continuing there for several months. For the next three years, he worked at his trade in the employ of Bassett & Wilson, in Willimantic, Conn. At the close of this period, he removed to Hartford, and for a short time was in the employ of a Mr. Bassett, and then worked for Thomas Childs, who purchased the business of Mr. Bassett, and here our subject remained for six years.

In October, 1864, Mr. Glover came to Stafford and worked for Claudius S. Harvey, who was in the tinner's business, for two years. At this time, he purchased the business of his employer, and has continued to operate it ever since, meeting with great success. In 1876, he built the shop where he is now located, and he started a gristmill in 1900. Mr. Glover carries a full line of small hardware, crockery, stoves, etc., and his business is now operated under the firm name of J. Glover & Son. By his untiring industry, grit and economy, Mr. Glover has made a success of his ventures, and can reflect with pleasure upon his work. Coming to a strange country, when scarcely more than a boy, knowing nothing of the language or customs, he steadily worked his way upward, never becoming discouraged, no matter how difficult the way seemed, and too much credit can scarcely be given him when his condition in 1854 is contrasted with his eminent position of today, surrounded as he is with all the comforts of life as the result of his own efforts.

On Sept. 12, 1857, Mr. Glover was married in Norwich to Emily Adams, who was born Feb. 8, 1836, in Germany. To this union the following family have been born: Jacob, born Nov. 15, 1858, in Willimantic, Conn., died in infancy; Frederick John, born Sept. 8, 1863, in Hartford, Conn., married Jennie Black, a daughter of John Black, of Stafford, Conn., and they have two children, Margaret and Rachel; Lena, born Dec. 30, 1865, married Herbert Holt, of Stafford Springs, Conn., and they have one child, Gertrude; Emily, born Nov. 23, 1867, married Charles Whiton, of Stafford, Conn., and they have no children; and Herbert E., born Aug. 12, 1870, learned the trade of machinist in the Providence Locomotive Works, being now employed in Brockton, Massachusetts.

Mr. Glover is a member of Wolcott Lodge No. 60, A. F. & A. M., of which he has been treasurer for fifteen years, and has also been one of the trustees for several years. In addition he is a member of Orient Chapter, R. A. M. Although not a member of any church, Mr. Glover attends the various denominations, and always gives liberally towards their support, believing thoroughly in encouraging the cause, and realizing the great good accomplished by church work in every community. His political affiliations are with the Democratic party, and he is very staunch in his support of its candidates and platforms. While eminently fitted for public office, Mr. Glover has always been too much occupied with business cares to take an active part in local affairs, although he has served several times as grand juror. Both Mr. Glover and his excellent wife are enjoying their declining years, supported by the realization that the years past have been well spent, and proud of their children and grand children, all of whom are a credit to the parents who brought them into the world and cared for them during their tender years. For their many excellent qualities, these good people are held in highest esteem by all who know them.

G. LOUIS NICHOLS, M. D., a bright young professional man of Stafford, Tolland county, was born in Hoboken, N. J., Sept. 21, 1870, the son of a well known practitioner there.

Frank Nichols, his father, was born in Sturbridge, Mass., and was graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College in Philadelphia. He began practice in Grafton, Mass., but soon removed to Somerville, N. J., and still later to Hoboken, where he has been in continuous practice to the present time, winning a most lucrative patronage. Prior to his medical studies he engaged in teaching, and held the position of principal of the high school at Reading, Pa., when he entered upon the study of medicine. Dr. Nichols is a Republican, but has never taken an active part in political matters. A man of deep religious convictions, he was a deacon and treasurer of the Baptist Church for twenty years.

Dr. Frank Nichols was married to Mary A. Barton, a daughter of Jedediah Barton, of Worcester, Mass., and to them were born the following children: Frank Barton, was a civil and mechanical engineer and died in Hoboken, N. J. Harry Frederick, is a practicing physician in Hoboken, in partnership with his father; he married Lena Grace, of Hamilton, N. Y. G. Louis is the subject proper of this sketch. Walter Edmund is a member of the class of 1903 in the medical department of Leland Stanford University.

G. Louis Nichols received his schooling up to the age of sixteen years in schools at Hoboken, and then he spent about a year and a half at Colgate University, Hamilton, N. Y., where he made a good record as a scholar. For two years he studied at the Collins Classical School, in Hartford, Conn., and in 1893 was graduated from the New York Homeopathic College. That same year he went to Chicago, and took a special course under Prof. Pratt. He was appointed house surgeon at Grace Hospital in New Haven, and visiting physician and surgeon to the Calvary Industrial Home in that city. His studious application and great natural ability won quick recognition, and Dr. Nichols soon became eminent in his chosen profession. On March 23, 1894, he located at Stafford Springs, where he enjoys an extensive and lucrative practice, and is prominent in the County Homeopathic Society. He is also a member of the American Institute, the Connecticut Medical Society, and the Massachusetts Southern Medical Society.

Socially Dr. Nichols is connected with several fraternal organizations, principally along Masonic lines, being a member of Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M.; Orient Chapter, No. 42, R. A. M., of Stafford; Rockville Council; St. John's Commandery, Willimantic; King Solomon's Grand Lodge of Perfection, at Norwich; Van Rensselaer Council of Princes of Jerusalem, at Norwich; Norwich Chapter of Rose Croix; Connecticut Sovereign Consistory, of Norwich; and is a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, Sphinx Temple, of Hartford. The Doctor also belongs to the Stafford Lodge of the Maccabees. Religiously he is a member of the Congregational Church. He is a Republican, but leads too busy a life to be much interested in politics. He has never married.

Dr. Nichols' great-great-grandfather Barton was Gen. Washington's private secretary during the time he was in winter quarters at Morristown, N. J., in 1777; he had lost a leg in the army, and was thus incapacitated for field duty. Dr. Nichols' cousin, Henry Nichols, was one of the martyrs in the Civil war; volunteering to bear a message across an exposed valley, he was killed as he ran across the dangerous space. Mrs. Frank Nichols was a second cousin to Clara Barton, whose good name is world wide.

Dr. G. Louis Nichols came honestly by his predilection for his beloved profession, as not only his father, but the latter's brother George, is a successful physician in Brooklyn, as are his three sons. Jedediah Marcus Barton, a maternal uncle of the young Dr. Nichols, is a practicing physician in Worcester, Mass. A cousin of Dr. Nichols is a physician in Hoboken; and another in Buffalo.

JOHN W. KEMP, a dealer in dry goods, fancy goods, notions, cloaks and gentlemen's furnishings, resides at Rockville, Tolland county, Connecticut.

WALTER M. PARKER, one of the leading representatives of the agricultural interests of Columbia, Tolland county, is a worthy descendant of a long line of ancestors whose names figure among those prominent in the making of the early history of our country. The men were sturdy pioneers, fighting for their rights and conquering their enemies as well as the difficulties of the wilderness; the women were tender, devoted wives and mothers, who upheld the men in their stirring actions, and when occasion demanded, themselves forging to the front in defense of home and family.

Ephraim Parker, great-grandfather of Walter M., married Deborah Sargeant, and they had the following children: Phineas, July 2, 1757; Rebecca, Aug. 19, 1759; James, March 8, 1762; Annie, April 10, 1764; Deborah, July 21, 1766; Jerusha, July 14, 1768; Ephraim, Nov. 10, 1770; Zachariah, May 16, 1773; and Nathan, Sept. 5, 1776.

Ephraim Parker (2), son of Ephraim, was born in Mansfield, where he grew to manhood and married, after which he removed to Willington, and engaged in the manufacture of clocks, spoons, etc. Later, he removed to Dobsonville, town of Vernon, where he died at an advanced age, and his wife died aged seventy-three, having borne her husband thirteen children.

Augustine Parker, son of Ephraim (2), was born in Mansfield, Conn., in February, 1800, but went with the family to Willington and later to Vernon, where he married Olive Sparks, of that town, a daughter of Jonas Sparks. Mr. Parker conducted a blacksmith shop at Dobsonville, later removed to Rockville, where he was employed as a machinist. He died April 28, 1867; his wife was born in 1804, and died Aug. 18, 1884. They had eight children, three of whom are now living; A. B. Parker, who has a sketch elsewhere; Sarah M., who married Francis Crane, of Stafford Springs; and Walter M.

Walter M. Parker was born at Dobsonville, July 1, 1829, and at the age of six, went to Windsor to attend school, remaining there until he was sixteen, when the family went to Rockville, and he with them. Here he attended the Rockville high school, meanwhile learning the trade of machinist from his father, and for five years was overseer in a cotton mill at Rockville, and for five years more, held the same position in a silk mill at Florence, Mass., after which he returned to Rockville. For thirteen years Mr. Parker lived in Springfield, Mass., acting as boss in the railroad shops there, but in November, 1884, came to Columbia and purchased his present fine farm of fifty-six acres, upon which he has since lived retired from outside business, although he attends to the duties of his farm life.

Mr. Parker was married in Rockville to Wealthy Newcomb, a daughter of Hope Newcomb, a representative of one of the old families of Mansfield, Conn. One daughter has been born of this union, Orilla M., Dec. 21, 1853, who married Wade Snow, of Willington, Conn., and now resides in Andover, Conn., where Mr. Snow is quite prominent, having served as selectman and held other local offices. Mr. Parker has always been a Republican, although not in any sense a politician, and has served most acceptably in Columbia, as assessor for two terms and has been on the board of relief twice. Mrs. Parker is a consistent member of the Congregational Church. After a long and useful life, Mr. Parker is enjoying a well earned rest, surrounded by comforts provided by his own labor, and resting firm in the estimation of his fellow townsmen.

MRS. CLARISSA P. COOK, one of the most venerable ladies of the town of Hebron, Tolland county, has her home in the eastern part of that town, near the town line of Columbia.

Plimpton Bennett, the father of Clarissa P. Cook, was born in England, and in early life was a sea-faring man. When he left the sea he settled in Scituate, R. I., where he was engaged in farming, but later removed to Royce City, R. I., where he was suffocated in a burning house, while yet in middle life. Eunice Potter, his wife, survived him, and was later remarried. Their family consisted of five boys and four girls, all of whom with one exception lived to maturity, but of whom Mrs. Cook is the sole survivor.

Mrs. Cook was born Dec. 25, 1809, in Royce City, R. I., and in her early life was inured to hard work in domestic duties. Her early schooling was but limited, owing to the unjust laws of Rhode Island, which demanded among other things, that a scholar's parents must be land holders, and that the tuition for the children must be paid either in cash or in boarding the teacher. She was in a large family, and the boys were sent to school. Her mother was an expert spinner, then a household trade much in demand, and did much spinning for the neighbors. Young Clarissa assisted her mother, and by the time she was eleven years old was herself quite an expert in the art. When she was eighteen her mother, who had re-married, removed with her family to Eagleville, where her second husband was employed, and there begins Mrs. Cook's Connecticut life. She soon found work in a factory in Eagleville, with no wages until the trade was mastered, a task she quickly accomplished, however. About this time the manufacturing of cotton cloth corded skirts was begun, and Mrs. Cook was placed at this work. This was piece work, and she was soon earning a dollar a day—a generous income for the times—and her employers thinking she was making too much, sought to reduce her wages, especially as some of the less industrious were also dissatisfied. She would not consent, and went to the factory of Stephen Taft, near Coventry, R. I., where she was employed many years at good wages. In the meantime her mother and step-father had removed to Willimantic, where she bought them a small cottage. While visiting them, her mother asked her to give up her work in the factory and stay at home. This she did, and remained with her mother until she died, when she took boarders and found work in the mills at Willimantic, until her marriage, in October, 1863, to Bennett Cook, a native of Newport, R. I., but a resident of Lebanon, Connecticut.

Mr. Cook was a peddler in early life, and traveled through the South, but afterward was a farmer in New York. When he married, he owned a large farm on Pine street, in Columbia, which he sold, and bought the farm now occupied by Mrs. Cook, and where he died in 1879, at the age of eighty-three years. Betsey Loomis, his first wife, had borne him eight children, all of whom are dead excepting two, Malvina M. and Dexter. Of these, Malvina M. is the wife of Norton Loomis, of Lebanon. Lester P. Loomis, their son, married Alice Hutchinson, of Andover; he was a farmer, and died in Lebanon, in March, 1895, at the age of forty-eight years. To Lester P. and Alice Loomis were born: Herbert N., a graduate of Harvard College, who married Mary Sibley, and has one child, Phillips; and Frederick D., of Lebanon. Dexter Cook is a druggist in New Haven, and has one daughter, Jeanette, the wife of Walter Riggs, manager of a telephone company in New Haven.

Mrs. Cook has no children, but while residing in Willimantic, previous to her marriage, reared two motherless girls and gave them a good education. Laura, the older of these, taught school, and later married Frank Lewis, and died, leaving two sons. Sarah died while engaged to be married. Mrs. Cook has a nice farm of eighty-eight acres, on which are two good houses.

During her residence in Willimantic Mrs. Cook was a member of the Methodist Church, and taught a class in the Sunday School. Many were the poor and ragged children she clothed and took to Sunday School.

At her advanced age she is remarkably well preserved. Her hearing, mind and sight are as good as a person of thirty years her junior. A few years ago a severe illness somewhat impaired her health, and later a fall interfered with her getting about. She is still able to read coarse print without glasses. Mrs. Cook remembers seeing the troops during the war of 1812, and many times the passing of the long trains of wagons that were used to transport goods between Bos on, New York and Philadelphia, while the blockade on the water ruled.

When a little girl Mrs. Cook remembers sitting on the lap of that Samuel Slater who when a boy of nineteen stole the patents for making cotton cloth machinery, and brought them from England to the United States. England did all that could be done at that time to prevent the Colonies from entering into the manufacturing of cloth, but young Slater got hold of the patents for the machinery, and brought them to America. Two wealthy men of Pawtucket assisted in the setting up of the machinery, and the boy who had arrived with a guinea and a clean shirt, died a very wealthy man. It was when he was an old man that Mrs. Cook heard him tell the story of his life.

HON. PARLEY JORDAN, whose death occurred at his home in New Boston, in the town of Thompson, Windham Co., Conn., in 1873, was throughout his mature life one of the substantial men and prominent citizens of his community.

Hon. Parley Jordan represented his town a number of times in the General Assembly of the State, besides holding other offices of trust and responsibility. Mr. Jordan was also a skilled worker of iron and steel and gained a great reputation in his chosen line of work both at home and abroad. He was one, too, who rose from the ranks—a self-made man.

Parley Jordan was born in 1793 in the town of Thompson. He was a son of William and Asenath (Houghton) Jordan, and a grandson of William and Comfort (Palmer) Jordan, whose marriage occurred according to the Thompson records Dec. 20, 1770.

Parley Jordan was reared on a farm, but being of a mechanical turn of mind learned the blacksmith's trade, including horse-shoeing. This business he followed at New Boston. As time passed the young smith developed into a skilled mechanic, his specialty being the making of edged tools. He made his first axe without any instruction from any one. He was a genius in these lines, and his work soon made for him a name and reputation, which, as a natural sequence, brought him business, and the business in turn success. The Jordan axe became known all over the country. Mr. Jordan was a man of great industry, and through his energy and good management became well-to-do, built himself an elegant home, lived comfortably, and enjoyed life. He possessed farming lands, which he improved in a manner in keeping with his progress in other lines. He was a home man, domestic in his tastes, and when not engrossed in business was to be found with his family.

In the days before the Civil war and the formation of the Republican party, Mr. Jordan affiliated with the Old Whig party. He later cast his lot with the new party—the Republican—and throughout his life adhered to its principles. A man of good, hard, common sense, well informed and of good judgment and business ability, he was frequently called by his fellow citizens to places of honor and trust. He held various town offices, was selectman, assessor, etc. He repeatedly represented his town in the Lower House of the General Assembly of the State, and was an all around ready man and useful citizen. He held the esteem, respect and confidence of the community in which his entire life was passed.

Mr. Jordan was married in Thompson, Conn., to Sophia Phelps, daughter of Ebenezer and Polly (Russell) Phelps, of Sutton, Mass., where Sophia was born, of Revolutionary stock. The remains of both Mr. and Mrs. Jordan now rest in the New Boston Cemetery. Their children were: (1) Mary Phelps occupies the homestead at New Boston. She was educated at Nichols Academy. (2) Frances Elizabeth, who was educated in the New Boston schools, and at Nichols Academy, Dudley, Mass. She was also occupied some fourteen years in teaching school at New Boston, Conn., and at Dudley, Mass. (3) Ellen Louise, who married William Souls, of New York. Their two children are: William Hudson, and Ammon Platt, who married Mary Christine Dyer, of New York, a violinist and musician of note. Ellen Louise was educated at Nichols Academy, Dudley, Mass., and at Oread Institute, Worcester, Mass., and was for nine years a very successful teacher in Dudley, Massachusetts.

FRANCIS KEENEY was born in Manchester, Conn., Oct. 28, 1805, the oldest child of Allen and Elizabeth (Skinner) Keeney, and grandson of David and Ruth Keeney.

Allen Keeney was employed at the Pitkin Glass Works at Manchester; later he became a farmer in that town. His family consisted of Francis, Almira, Lucy, Clarissa, Mary, Wells, Hart, Albert and Julia.

Francis Keeney left his father's home when a lad, and for seven years lived with Marvin Cone, of Manchester Green, Conn., to whom he was apprenticed to learn the trade of wagon making. Mr. Cone and family were always held in great esteem and affection by him, as the home life and training received while there made a lasting impression upon his character and after life. After learning his trade Mr. Keeney started in business for himself in Ellington, Conn. He was a good workman, painstaking and thorough, and the work he turned out had great lasting qualities.

On April 29, 1830, Francis Keeney married Eliza Porter, of Manchester, Conn., daughter of Eli and Harriett (Cone) Porter, and niece of Marvin Cone, of whom he had learned his trade. Having now a home of his own he took his three younger brothers—Wells, Hart and Albert—and taught them his trade. Mrs. Porter also gave up her home and came to live with them, remaining in their family the greater part of the time until her death, April 1, 1871.

Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs.

Keeney: Jane Elizabeth, born in Ellington, Jan. 6, 1833; Edgar, born in Ellington, Jan. 24, 1836; Celia Ellen, born in Ellington, April 18, 1842; Ella Josephine, born in Windsor Locks, Conn., Dec. 3, 1845, died in Rockville, Aug. 29, 1848; Frank, born in Rockville, March 18, 1850.

About the year 1836 Mr. Keeney became interested in the culture of mulberry trees, which was much talked of at that time, and sold many of them, traveling quite extensively through Pennsylvania, New York and other States. He soon sold this business and in association with his brother Albert began hotel keeping in Ellington. He subsequently bought the land and built the home now owned by Mr. A. N. Belding in that town. Later he kept for a short time an inn in Windsor Locks, Connecticut.

On Oct. 5, 1847, Mr. Keeney came to Rockville and took charge of the old hotel that stood where "The Rockville" now stands. The building which then served the purpose was afterwards moved north a few rods, and is now the residence of Judge B. H. Bill. This hotel was opened by Asaph McKinney in 1843, and kept by him until Mr. Keeney took possession in 1847. Soon after Mr. Keeney moved in he set out a row of elm trees on what is now "The Terrace." They were all girdled. The only one that lived now stands at the western end of "The Terrace" in front of "The Rockville," and was always considered by Mr. Keeney as his best monument. He also helped to grade Central and Talcott parks, and set out the trees which add so much to the beauty of the city. The fact of his conducting the only hotel in the place for many years made him one of its best known citizens, and gained for him friends and acquaintances both near and far. In connection with the hotel he carried on a farm in Ellington. This land is now owned by his son-in-law, Wm. H. Prescott. After staying in this hotel for three years Mr. Keeney removed to Norwich, Conn., where he kept the "American House" for six months; he then came back to Rockville, and in 1852 bought land on what is now Mountain street, and built the home in which his son Edgar resides. In 1859 he bought the present hotel and conducted it for seventeen years. It was known as "The Keeney House," and the host and hostess to many people as "Father and Mother Keeney."

Francis Keeney was particularly fitted by nature for a hotel keeper, genial and accommodating, one whose cordial manner bespoke the hospitality and comfort which his guests were sure to find under his roof. He possessed a keen sense of humor and a wonderful memory, enabling him to recall facts and many amusing incidents and stories, the retelling of which made him a merry companion and genial host. Friends were numerous and the hotel was the scene of most of the social affairs of his day. In the early days of Rockville the product of the mills was sold through commission merchants, who came to Rockville to arrange for their goods, often bringing their families. The hotel was the home of this desirable class of customers, and Mr. and Mrs. Keeney made many life long friends. Before the railroad was opened in 1863 Mr. Keeney's hotel was the favorite resting place over Sunday for travelers. The portion of the city through which School street now runs, extending as far east as Cottage street and north to Prospect, was then Mr. Keeney's pasture lot.

For some time Mr. Keeney's sons Edgar and Frank had actively assisted him in the management of the hotel, and in 1874 they were given an interest in the property. They at his suggestion sold the property in 1876. After leaving the hotel Mr. and Mrs. Keeney made their home with their daughter, Mrs. W. H. Prescott, and he gave his attention to his farm, which was worked under his direction until his death.

Politically Mr. Keeney was a Democrat, except during the Civil war, when, being a Union man, he was bitterly opposed to the Democratic position in regard to secession. A man of steadfast honesty of purpose, he had the courage of his convictions. His death occurred Sept. 18, 1887. His wife did not long survive him, dying June 7, 1889. They are laid side by side in Grove Hill cemetery.

Mr. Keeney was a man of warm and generous sympathies, a good neighbor and friend. As one of the prominent citizens of early Rockville, who contributed no little to its advancement, no record of the city or of Tolland county would be complete without mention of Francis Keeney.

HON. EDWIN AUGUSTUS BUCK, at one time the treasurer of the State, and for fifty years a prominent business man of Windham county, half of that period being passed in Willimantic, is one of the most influential and substantial men of that city. Mr. Buck is connected with many of the most noted families of New England, among them being the Knowlton, the Armour, and the Brooks families. Philip D. Armour was a cousin of Mr. Buck, his mother being Juliana Brooks, who was a sister of Lucy Knowlton Brooks, who married Augustus Buck and became the mother of Edwin A. Buck.

The Knowlton family has a creditable page in the annals of Connecticut. Col. Thomas and Lieut. Daniel Knowlton were brothers of Lucy Knowlton, the great-grandmother of Mr. Buck. The crest of the Knowlton family is: "Argent, a chevron, between crowns and ducal coronets sable." This is entered to the name of Knowlton in a manuscript alphabet of arms probably compiled in the time of George I. The crest is a demi-lion, rampant; motto, "Vi et Virtute." The Knowltons are recorded in Kent, near Canterbury, and their settlements in America were made in both Canada and at Ipswich, Massachusetts.

Richard Knowlton, born in Kent, in 1553, married Elizabeth Cautize July 15, 1577, by whom he had four children of whom the fourth was William.

Captain William Knowlton, born in 1584, married Ann Elizabeth Smith, and in their family of children was a son John.

Capt. William Knowlton was at least part owner of the vessel in which, with his wife and children, he sailed to America. His death took place on the voyage, and a gravestone erected to his memory still stands in Shelburne, Canada. His wife and children removed the following year to Hingham, Massachusetts.

John Knowlton, born in 1610, married Marjery Wilson, and had three children, the oldest of whom was John, Jr.

John Knowlton, Jr., was born in 1633, and was married to Sarah Whipple by whom he had ten children.

Nathaniel Knowlton, fifth child of John, Jr., was born in 1658, and married Deborah Jewett in 1682. They had seven children, the oldest of whom was Nathaniel, Jr. Nathaniel Knowlton was a prominent man in his day, and held high position in the Colony. An old historian says of him, "Though honored by men he did not forget to honor his God." He died in 1726; his widow, in 1743.

Nathaniel Knowlton, Jr., was born in 1683, and in 1703 married Mary Burnett, by whom he had six children.

William Knowlton, second child of Nathaniel, Jr., was born in 1706, and in 1728 married Martha Pinder, of Boxford, who came of a noble ancestry. This union was blessed with nine children. Col. Thomas Knowlton, the noted soldier of the Revolution, was a son of William, as was Lieutenant Daniel Knowlton. William Knowlton was born in Ipswich, but removed to West Boxford, and spent his last years in Ashford, Conn., whither he removed about 1740.

Lucy Knowlton, second child of William and Martha, married Deacon Abijah Brooks, of Ashford, Conn., and had twelve children, among whom was Simeon, who married Eunice Bass. Deacon Brooks belonged to a family whose representatives were prominent in the very early settlement of New England. He was a deacon in the Ashford Presbyterian Church, and was a man of much more than the ordinary means. Mrs. Lucy Brooks was a grand type of a woman, distinguished in the community for the possession of those excellent qualities so strongly marked in her brothers, Col. Thomas and Lieut. Daniel. It is related of her that a short time before her death, as she was about to retire for the night she saw a light flash up before her, at times brilliant, and then fading away. This she pronounced a premonition of her approaching end. She lived but a few days after that, dying, April 16, 1820.

Simeon Brooks, born in 1767, died in 1844. He married Eunice Bass, by whom he had three children as follows: (1) Juliana, born in 1799, married Danforth Armour, and their children were:

Simeon B., Andrew W., Lucy M., Philip D. (the late provision packer), Marietta, Charles E., Herman O., and Joseph F.; (2) Lucy Knowlton, born Feb. 27, 1801, was the mother of the gentleman whose name precedes this article; (3) Maria, born April 23, 1805, never married.

David Buck, the great-grandfather of Edwin Augustus Buck, removed from Massachusetts to that part of Killingly now embraced in the town of Putnam, where he was a farmer and a joiner. His children by his first marriage were David, Jonathan, and Aaron (the last-named the father of Augustus Buck), Mrs. Josiah Dean, Mrs. Benjamin Cutler, and two daughters who became successively the wives of Resolved Wheaton. By a second marriage, were born David and Eliza, of whom the latter became Mrs. Henry Adams.

Aaron Buck was born on the old homestead in Killingly, on a part of which he settled and made his home for life. He was married to Annie, the daughter of Asa Lawrence, of Killingly. Their children were: Lucy, who married Calvin Leffingwell; Rosamund, the wife of Calvin Boyden; Mary, who married Jesse Herendeen; Annie, the wife of Caleb Howe; Erastus; Elisha; Augustus and George.

Augustus Buck, son of Aaron and father of Edwin Augustus, died of scarlet fever at the age of thirty-seven, after a few days illness. On Feb. 15, 1827, he married Lucy Knowlton Brooks, who with their son survived him. She died Feb. 8, 1856, and was buried at the side of her husband in the Baptist cemetery at Westford.

Edwin Augustus Buck was born in the town of Ashford, Conn., Feb. 11, 1832. In addition to an elementary education received at the neighboring school, he attended for a time the Ashford Academy, which he attended from home, walking the distance every morning and night. When he was eighteen years of age he began teaching, gaining his first experience as a teacher in the school where he had attended as a scholar, having many of his former schoolmates as his pupils. His wages were a dollar a day, and he boarded at home. Three terms were taught by him in district No. 4, two in the Woods district, and one in the Knowlton district. Being an only son, Mr. Buck had business responsibilities thrown on him from an early age, and when he was twenty-four began a business career for himself, furnishing sawed lumber for various trades, such as car timber, plough beams and finishing lumber in chestnut, which soon grew into a large business. The Collinsville Axe Co., making at that time a cast steel plow, bought of him many thousand plow beams. In Boston and Worcester, Mass., he had customers who made large requisitions upon him, and in those days orders for ten thousand plow beams with handles to accompany them were not uncommon. Chestnut lumber was extensively used in furniture, and of this he supplied many thousand feet. In the later fifties Mr. Buck purchased the bankrupt stock of the Westford Glass Co., and associated with himself in the carrying on of that business, Charles and John S. Dean, both of Ashford, the style of the firm being E. A. Buck & Co. In the operation of this plant employment was given to some 150 men, and their business soon assumed such proportions that branch houses were opened in New York and Boston. After about twenty years Mr. Buck retired from the firm, and removed to Willimantic, where he became associated with the late Allen Lincoln in the grain business. In 1876 the late Everett M. Durkee, of Ashford, entered the firm, which was styled Lincoln, Buck & Durkee (now the house of Stiles & Harrington). Before leaving Ashford Mr. Buck had been identified with the business interests of Stafford Springs, where he was a director of the Stafford National Bank, and was president of the Stafford Savings Bank from 1874 to 1877. Not long after engaging in the grain business in Willimantic Mr. Buck purchased the hardware business of Crawford & Banford, at Stafford Springs, putting it in charge of his oldest son, George E. Buck, who carried it on under the firm name of E. A. Buck & Co. This was sold out in 1900. In Palmer, Mass., Mr. Buck and his son George established a hardware store and an oil business, each being carried on under the name of E. A. Buck & Co. He has been interested in many lines of business in Willimantic; his youngest son, W. A. Buck, is a partner with him in flour and grain, under the name of E. A. Buck & Co. He has also dealt extensively in lumber in recent years.

Mr. Buck is a man of sound judgment, a sagacious adviser, and his business ability has been repeatedly recognized by the demand upon him to take positions of trust and responsibility. He is a trustee of the Willimantic Savings Institute; is a director in the Willimantic Machine Company; is a trustee of the A. G. Turner estate; was assignee of the J. Dwight Chaffee property; a trustee of the W. G. and A. R. Morrison estate, all large estates, and his selection showed the confidence of the court in his ability to handle complicated interests in a satisfactory manner. Mr. Buck is an extensive owner of real estate in Willimantic, and for years has been a tireless worker for the general advance of the city. He owns a large landed property, and in Ashford has a fine farm where, in 1900, he began the raising of sheep on a considerable scale. In this industry he is a pioneer in recent years, the wool business having almost entirely died out on New England farms.

Mr. Buck has seemed peculiarly fitted by nature for mingling in politics and shouldering public duties. Before he was hardly of age he was town constable, and when he was twenty-four years old he was sent from his native town to the General Assembly, the opposing candidate at that time being Ebenezer Chaffee, a prominent citizen. In the General Assembly he enjoyed distinction as being the youngest member of the body. In 1862 he was again elected by a coalition of Union Democrats and Republicans. Throughout the war he stood by the Government aiding it with voice and pen. His town called on him to fill its quota of soldiers, which he successfully accomplished. Always the friend of the soldiers, Mr. Buck has aided many in securing pensions since the war. In 1864 he espoused the principles of the Democratic party, by whom he was elected to the Legislature the following year. In 1874 and again in 1875 he was elected to the General Assembly, where he served on the Judiciary committee in both sessions. Following the removal of Mr. Buck to Willimantic, he was chosen as a member of the State Senate, the session in which he served being the last to be held in the old State House. In 1876 Mr. Buck was made State Treasurer, and was nominated for re-election in 1878. The entire party ticket, however, was defeated in that election, and Mr. Buck could not escape the common disaster. He has always taken an active part in political affairs, and has never refused to take up his burden of the common work. His services have been given on the town committee, on the State Central committee, and he has been a member of the Finance committee. When Willimantic was a borough, he served as burgess and was appointed bank examiner by Gov. Morris. While not a member of any church he contributes liberally to the support of all, and possesses the respect of the community to a marked degree. He is a man of large-hearted generosity, but his benefactions have been very quietly bestowed, few realizing the extent of his giving. Many a man has been helped over hard places in life by Mr. Buck, and holds him in grateful remembrance.

On May 9, 1855, Mr. Buck was married to Miss Delia A., daughter of George and Laura (Ashley) Lincoln, of Ashford, Conn., where Mrs. Buck was born Nov. 27, 1831, in Westford Society. George Lincoln, who was a tanner by trade, was a prominent and well known citizen of Ashford, representing Ashford in the General Assembly of 1847. Mrs. Buck belongs to Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter, D. A. R. To this marriage have come the following children: George is a resident of Palmer, Mass.; Lucy M. is at home; Charlotte E. is the wife of Dr. T. R. Parker, of Willimantic, and is an active member of the D. A. R.; Carrie L. is the wife of Allen B. Lincoln, of Willimantic; William A., a member of E. A. Buck & Co., married Mary A. Phillips, and lives in Willimantic; Bertie L. died in infancy; and Ella Delia is at home. When Mr. Buck built his handsome home on the northwest corner of Prospect and North streets in 1876, it was the second house on North street above Prospect.

JOHN BROWN. The most elaborate history is, perforce, a merciless abridgment, the historian being compelled to select his facts and materials from manifold details. This applies to specific as well as generic history, and in the former category biography is placed. In every life of honor and usefulness there is no dearth of incident, and yet in summing up the character and career of any man the writer, true to the historic spirit and unbiased by prejudice, must needs touch only the more salient points, giving the keynote of the individuality, but eliminating all that is superfluous to the continuity of narrative. Within the pages of this work will be found mention of many prominent and influential citizens whose lives were passed in Tolland county and who were representatives of families identified with the annals of New England from the early Colonial epoch, and thus it becomes a matter of general as well as concrete expediency to perpetuate the record of their lives and of their genealogy, for thus will it be shown who have been the founders and builders of our great commonwealth, while there will be instilled a dominating personal interest which will make the record more appreciably tangible than could be that of necessarily abridged general history, which takes cognizance of results and conditions rather than those who have been the actors in the great drama of progress and advancement.

In connection with the industrial activities and best citizenship of Stafford, Tolland county, the name of the subject of this memoir must needs come up for consideration if a work of this nature executes its legitimate functions, for not only was he one of the honored and representative men of his section of the State, but also a member of one of the sterling old families of New England, so that his genealogical record is well worthy of incorporation, with such material detail of data as is in harmony with the province of the compilation. John Brown was born in Union, Tolland Co., Conn., May 16, 1819, and the genealogy in the agnatic line touches American history from the early portion of the seventeenth century. The original American ancestor of the branches of the Brown family in Stafford and Union, Conn., was Chad Brown, who, in company with his wife, Elizabeth, and their son John, came from England to America on the ship "Martin," which landed in the harbor of Boston in July, 1638. Mr. Brown was a man of no inconsiderable attainments, having been an able surveyor, a profession which he followed in connection with incidental vocations after coming to the New World. He became the first settled pastor of the First Baptist Church of Providence, R. I., to which place he removed in the same year which marked his arrival in America, his ordination to the ministry taking place in 1642. In 1640 he was a member of the committee which framed the first code of government for the town of Providence, where he passed the residue of his life, both he and his wife being summoned to their reward in the year 1660, and subsequently the town erected, in the old North burial-ground, a monument to his memory.

John Brown, son of Chad and Elizabeth Brown, accompanied his parents on their emigration to America, and here he was united in marriage to Mary, daughter of Obadiah and Catherine Holmes. Her death occurred in 1690, while Mr. Brown survived until 1706. He served many times as jurymen, was made a freeman in 1655, was surveyor of highways in 1659, and served in the town council in 1662-64-65. He was incumbent of the office of deputy in 1663-64, and of that of assistant deputy the succeeding two years, and he was an elder in the Baptist Church.

Obadiah Brown, son of John and Mary (Holmes) Brown, was born and married in Providence, the dates of these events being not ascertained with any degree of surety, and his name was on the list of taxable persons in Providence in August, 1688, when he was about sixteen years of age. His son, Col. Chad Brown, was born Oct. 13, 1705, and on June 12, 1748, married Zerviah Evans, their marriage and the dates of their births being recorded in the town records of Gloucester, R. I., where also is found the following data regarding their children, the date of birth being given in connection with each name: Ezekiel, Oct. 11, 1749; Zephaniah, Sept. 22, 1752; Esek, Nov. 1, 1754; Thankful, Jan. 13, 1757; Othniel, April 20, 1759; and Zerviah, Feb. 22, 1765.

Othniel Brown is the next in line of direct descent to the subject of this memoir. The name of his first wife and the date of their marriage are not found on record, though it is shown that their daughter Sally became the wife of a Mr. Bradford. Othniel Brown removed from Rhode Island to northeastern Connecticut, settling in what is now Killingly, where he built a house, the same being afterward blown down in a hurricane, his wife being killed, while the child which she bore in her arms at the time was uninjured. Mr. Brown's second marriage was solemnized Feb. 10, 1788, when Sybil Olney became his wife, and of their children the following record is extant: Olney, born Nov. 4, 1788, married Sally Converse Sept. 8, 1814, and their children were Washington, Sybil and Othniel; Mary, born Aug. 1, 1790, was married, April 7, 1814, to Alvin Andrews; Abigail, born April 18, 1792, died on the 15th of the following month; David, born March 13, 1793, is referred to later on; Chad, born June 8, 1795, died in the same year; Othniel, born April 1, 1796, died Dec. 28, 1843; John, born Sept. 12, 1798, died Sept. 7, 1821; and Isaac, born May 24, 1801, died Aug. 17, 1803. The mother of these children died June 8, 1825, and on Nov. 3, 1829, Mr. Brown was united to Nancy Lyon, who bore him three children, namely: Nancy, the date of whose birth is not ascertained; John Adams, born Oct. 22, 1831; and Martha Jane, born May 3, 1833. Nancy (Lyon) Brown died May 4, 1869, having long survived her husband, who passed away Sept. 28, 1843. Othniel Brown was one of the patriot soldiers in the war of the Revolution, having served under several different enlistments in the Continental army, while during a portion of the great struggle for independence he was in the marine service, in which connection he was taken prisoner and held in captivity until peace was declared. He later received from the government a pension, in recognition of his valiant services. After leaving Killingly he located in the town of Union, Tolland Co., Conn., which was his home at the time of his death. His second wife, Sybil (Olney), was a relative of Hon. Jesse Olney, who was born in Union, Tolland county, and who was the distinguished author of Olney's Geography and other valuable educational text-books.

David Brown, son of Othniel and Sybil (Olney) Brown, was born March 13, 1793, and his first marriage occurred March 20, 1816, when Lucy Converse became his wife. She was born Oct. 29, 1796, being a sister of the late Parley and Salva Converse, of Stafford. She died June 4, 1831, and on Jan. 15, 1832, David Brown married Rose Turner. Mr. Brown was engaged in farming in Union, Tolland county, whence he removed to Stafford, but eventually he returned to Union, where he passed the remainder of his life. The children of his first marriage were six in number: Freeman Monroe, of whom we append a brief sketch; John, the immediate subject of this memoir; and four whose names will be noted later.

David Brown was successful in his farming operations in Stafford, where he died at the age of fifty-eight years. He was a man of pure life and worthy deeds. In politics he was a staunch advocate of the principles of the Democratic party, and throughout his entire mature life he showed a deep interest in educational affairs, whose advancement in a local way he did much to promote. As a young man he was a successful teacher in the public schools, and in later years he did most effective service as a member of the school committee. His religious views were in harmony with the doctrines of the Baptist Church, of which his first wife, the mother of our subject, was a devoted member until her death, at the age of thirty-four years.

FREEMAN MONROE BROWN was born in Union, Tolland Co., Conn., Feb. 26, 1817, and when in his twenty-second year was united in marriage to Lucy Maria Damon, daughter of Eli and Bathsheba (Fletcher) Damon, the latter of whom was, in the agnatic line, a descendant of John Alden, of the "Mayflower," who figured so conspicuously in the early Colonial history of Massachusetts, and who is the hero of one of Longfellow's most beautiful poems. Freeman M. and Lucy M. Brown became the parents of a number of children, several of whom died in infancy. The first-born was Lucy Maria; then occurred the birth of a number who did not survive their infancy; the next in order who attained maturity was Helena Hortense, who became the wife of Charles H. Webb, a prominent business man of New York City, and is now deceased; Freeman Putnam, the next in order of birth, is a well known citizen of Detroit, Mich. The mother of these children was summoned into eternal rest April 5, 1869, and on Sept. 27, 1870, Mr. Brown married Imogene Lincoln, who was born in Deerfield, Mass., daughter of Seneca W. Lincoln. Of this union one child was born, Arthur Lincoln Brown, who is a successful business man of the firm of Lincoln, Seyms & Co.

Major Freeman Monroe Brown, though he attained the age of more than fourscore years, retained in a signal degree his mental and physical vigor, the years resting lightly upon his head, and he was one of the honored and representative citizens of Hartford, where he was actively associated with business enterprises of scope and importance, having been prominently identified with industrial affairs in that city for more than thirty years, and having been a prominent factor in public and civic affairs. His early youth was largely passed upon his father's farm in Stafford, and his early educational advantages were such as were afforded in the public schools of the place and period, while he gave inception to his independent career when a mere lad. At the age of fifteen years the Major secured a modest clerkship in a mercantile establishment at Southbridge, Mass., and three years later he returned to Stafford, Conn., where he became a clerk in a country store, the purchase of which he effected before he had attained his legal majority. While thus engaged in business for himself, and having a reputation as an energetic and reliable young man, and one of excellent judgment, he was made incumbent of the office of deputy sheriff of Tolland county. In 1845 he removed to Windsor Locks, Hartford county, the same being at the time a parish of the town of Windsor, and there he associated himself with Dwight Slate, under the firm name of Slate & Brown, and engaged in the general merchandise business and also in the manufacture of a general line of machinery. For a full quarter of a century he was the leading spirit of the town and its most active, progressive and public-spirited citizen. He was incumbent of the office of town clerk, gave an able administration as selectman, was for several years postmaster of the town, and was otherwise given distinctive evidence of local trust and esteem. In 1847 he was elected to represent Windsor in the Legislature of the State, and a similar preferment came to him again in 1853, while in 1864 and 1868 he was chosen to represent Windsor Locks in the Lower House of the legislative assembly, his residence town having in the interim been separated from political and organic connection with the town of Windsor. He proved a most capable, discriminating and active member of the legislative body, making his influence manifest during each term of his service, and ably representing the interests of his constituency and the commonwealth at large. The Major gave a stanch and uncompromising allegiance to the Democratic party, and was an active factor in the promotion of its cause.

In his early manhood, while residing in Stafford,

Major Brown became actively associated with the State militia, being chosen captain of a local company when about twenty-four years of age, while later he was advanced to the rank of colonel in the military organization of the State. About the year 1870 Major Brown, as he was familiarly known, located in the city of Hartford, where he ever after maintained his home. During the earlier years of his business career there he was engaged in the buying of wool, in which connection he traveled extensively throughout the West and Northwest. He was a business and personal friend of the late A. T. Stewart, long the leading merchant of New York City, and with him had large business transactions. In all the relations of his long and signally active business career no blemish rested on his reputation as a man of unbending integrity and honor, and the confidence in which he was ever held was been one of absolutely unequivocal order. Of the magnificent scope of his enterprises some idea may be gleaned when we state that his annual business transactions often reached an aggregate of a million dollars, and he displayed notable administrative and executive ability, was an excellent judge of the wellsprings of human thought and action, tolerant and kindly in his intercourse with his fellowmen, and ever appreciative of true values, no matter what the sphere of a man's endeavors. During the later years of his business career he was associated with the Beach Manufacturing Company, of Hartford, and at the time of his death, in company with William W. Brown, was there identified with the manufacturing of the Beach cloth, upon an extensive scale, which he still gave his active supervision to his business and capitalistic interests. Within the years of his residence in Hartford he served in the office of selectman, while during the first administration of President Cleveland he was deputy collector of Internal Revenue in this district. In 1866 he was the candidate of his party for the office of sheriff, and was defeated by only eight votes. For more than a quarter of a century Major Brown was actively identified with the military organization, in Hartford, known as the Putnam Phalanx, and during a period of eight years he was major of the organization, thus gaining the title by which he was so well known. He was for many years a prominent and honored member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the high esteem in which he was held in the fraternity is shown in the fact that in 1855-56 he held the distinguished office of grand master of the Grand Lodge of the order of Connecticut. His religious faith was that of the Universalist Church, both he and his wife being zealous and devoted members of the First Universalist Church in their home city, taking an active interest in its work and in the support of its collateral benevolences.

Of the six children of David and Lucy (Converse) Brown, the second in order of birth was John, the immediate subject of this review, Major Freeman M., of whom we have just made mention, having been the eldest, and of the four other children we enter the following brief record: David R., born Nov. 18, 1821, married an Ellithorpe, and died in Stafford; Isaac, born March 10, 1825, died in Oskkosh, Wis. (he was a successful and influential business man of that State); Lucy Ann, born Oct. 28, 1827, married a Mr. Mather, of Windsor Locks, and is deceased; George, who was born June 13, 1830, was associated with his brother John in the foundry and merchandise business, and died April 17, 1892, in Windsor, Conn. (he married a Preston, and their daughter is now Mrs. Charles M. Joslyn). Messrs. Brown, the well-known clothiers of Stafford Springs, are sons of David R. Brown.

John Brown, as has already been noted, was born in Union, May 16, 1819, and in Stafford Springs, to whose material upbuilding and normal progress he had contributed in perhaps larger measure than any other one man, his death occurred Sept. 3, 1902, the community as a whole feeling a deep sense of personal bereavement and realizing that there had passed to his reward one whose life had been one of signal honor and usefulness, and who stood exponent of all that makes for sterling and noble manhood. John Brown grew up on the old homestead farm in Stafford, and pursued his studies in the public schools of the locality until he had attained the age of sixteen years, after which he passed three years on the farm of his paternal grandfather. At the age of twenty he secured employment on the farm of Capt. Salisbury, in Stafford Hollow, where he remained one year, at the expiration of which, having now attained his legal majority, he secured a position in the old foundry owned by Hannibal Converse, in Stafford Springs, where he devoted two years to learning the trade, becoming a skilled operative and being thereafter employed as a journeyman in the same establishment for the ensuing two years. He then went to Worcester, Mass., where he was employed for one year in the Wheeler foundry, the next year being passed in the employ of Hannibal Converse, in the foundry where he had acquired his knowledge of the trade. At the expiration of the interval noted Mr. Brown associated himself with Messrs. Allen and Thomas Lewis in the purchase of the Converse plant, whose operation they continued for one year, at the expiration of which Mr. Brown purchased the interests of the Lewis brothers and then admitted to partnership his brother George. Under the firm name of J. Brown & Co., they successfully continued the enterprise for a number of years, also having a general merchandise store in Stafford Springs. In 1853 Mr. Brown's health had become so seriously impaired as to necessitate his retirement from active business, and he sold his interests in the foundry and store to Hannibal Converse, and during the twelve ensuing years, until 1865, such was the condition of his health that he was unable to devote himself to business save in an incidental way, his enforced idleness naturally involving a heavy financial loss. Mr. Brown purchased the Morse farm, comprising three hundred acres, disposing of the property a year later and then returning to Stafford Springs, where he purchased a home and where he thereafter continued to be actively and extensively engaged in dealing in real estate until his death, his efforts in that line having been directed with consummate discretion and judgment, and having not only returned to him a large measure of prosperity, but also having been potent in furthering the legitimate advancement and substantial upbuilding of the attractive town where he made his home and in whose welfare he was so vitally interested.

Soon after locating in Stafford Springs Mr. Brown purchased the Capt. Joseph Alden farm, of three hundred acres, in that town, eventually disposing of the property at a good profit. He then instituted the erection of the Brown block, on Main street, and soon after the completion of the structure sold the same. His enterprise and mature judgment in the handling and improving of realty forthwith found further exemplification, since he erected another substantial business block, a short distance farther up Main street, and also made a profitable sale of that property. After erecting and disposing of another block, adjoining the one last mentioned, he opened a dry-goods store, and in this connection built up a large and representative business. About this time also he purchased a large tract of land, lying north of Main and extending to High street, and through the same opened Brown avenue, also erecting another large block, on Main street, and there installing his dry-goods business. He platted the tract mentioned into town lots, made the requisite improvements, and there built a number of excellent houses, which he sold at good figures, the places being attractive and valuable investments for those seeking homes. Finally he exchanged his dry-goods stock and business for another strip of land, which he likewise improved, and thereafter he built the Taft block. The extent of his operations in connection with the material upbuilding of the attractive town of Stafford Springs is in a measure indicated when we enter the simple statement that he there erected sixteen dwelling houses and seven business blocks, all of substantial order and modern design and facilities. As a matter of course, in the carrying forward of such enterprises, involving large financial expenditures, much executive tact and discrimination were demanded, and also an integrity of purpose that would command unqualified confidence. That Mr. Brown was amply fortified is well known, for his word was ever held to be as good as his bond, and his credit was better than he ever chose to avail himself of, for he never ventured upon doubtful speculations, and was thorough, careful and systematic in all his operations. No shadow of wrong or suspicion of evil clouds any portion of his long and useful career as a citizen and a business man, and his name is one honored by all who knew him or came within the sphere of his influence.

Mr. Brown was essentially a business man, and he had no inclination or desire for the honors or emoluments of public office, though he was signally true to the duties of citizenship and ever endeavored to give his support to those men and measures through which good government would be insured. He originally gave his allegiance to the Democratic party, but, with the courage of his convictions, he supported Gen. Garfield for the Presidency and thereafter was known as a staunch advocate of the cause of the Republican party. His religious faith became a part of his every-day life, and was exemplified in his words and deeds. He was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for a number of years he was a member of the board of trustees of the church in Stafford Springs. He served several times as a member of the grand jury, was a member of the board of relief, and was incumbent of the office of town assessor, but, as before stated, he had no desire for office of a political nature, stating in conversation that he was "too busy to meddle in politics."

On Sept. 5, 1842, John Brown was united in marriage to Miss Nancy Adaline Carpenter, who was born in Stafford Oct. 22, 1824, and continued his devoted companion and helpmeet for more than half a century, her death occurring Dec. 29, 1898, at the age of seventy-four years. Of the children of this union we give the following brief record: Georgia married George O. Cleveland; Edgar Jerome died in the city of Boston (he married Ella Ferrington, who was born in Wales, where she now maintains her home, as does also her only child, Grace, Mrs. Arnold); Addie Blanche married Louis Helm, of Stafford, and they have three children—Bertha May, Edith and Carl; John died at the age of four months. On Sept. 1, 1900, Mr. Brown was united in marriage to Hannah Stearns, who was born Nov. 10, 1824, daughter of Isaac and Charlotte (Breckenridge) Stearns, the former of whom was born in Billerica, Middlesex Co., Mass., and became a man of high reputation as a mechanic; he made and set up the first carding machine used in the Ware Mill, at Ware Village. Mrs. Brown survives her honored husband and maintains her home in Stafford Springs.

HARLOW LAWSON KIBBE, one of the most prosperous and highly respected citizens of Stafford, Tolland county, occupies a very prominent position, and he was born Nov. 14, 1842, in Somers, Conn., a son of Wellsley Ferdinand Kibbe.

The Kibbe family descends from three brothers who came from Germany, and settled in Somers, Conn., they being among the first settlers of that community.

Parley Kibbe, grandfather of Harlow Lawson, was born in Somers, and was the first shoemaker in the town, and was a great musician. He married Sarah Moorehouse, a native of Saybrook, Conn., and to himself and wife were born the following family: Harriet, who married Marvin Burden, a blacksmith of Stafford; Cordelia, who first married Orrin Clark (a bookkeeper who was born in Somers, Conn., and died in Boston), and second Henry Besse (a newspaper man of Springfield, Mass.); Harlow B., who married Elvira Shaw, of Palmer, and who was a blacksmith by trade, in which capacity he served the army during the Rebellion; Wellsley Ferdinand; Hansey, who married Frank Dimock, a typesetter; and a boy who died in infancy.

Wellsley Ferdinand Kibbe was born March 20, 1812, in Somers, Conn., and farmed all his life. About 1857, he came to Stafford and purchased the Asa Patten farm, in West Stafford, where he died on Sept. 2, 1894. In politics he was a Whig, later becoming a Democrat, but he never accepted an office, although many times urged to do so. For eighteen years, he was member of the State militia, and was connected with that organization at the time of his death. In 1838, he married Lucy Smith, who was born in 1810, a daughter of Peter Smith, of Somers, and died in Stafford, in 1872, in her sixty-third year. To this union were born: Sarah Cordelia, who married George Faulkner, of Staffordville, and died in 1862; Harlow Lawson; Charles Everett, a farmer of Ellington, Conn., who married Julia Aborn; Maryette Lucy, who married Orlando Avery, a farmer of Stafford; Julia Ann, who died at the age of four years; Julia Ann (2), a trained nurse, who married the late Otis Avery.

Harlow Lawson Kibbe received his education in the schools of the neighborhood, and when but fifteen years of age left school, and worked for his father upon the farm until he came to Stafford. In 1870 he learned the trade of a blacksmith with his uncle, Harlow B. Kibbe, and has made that his life calling, having a shop in West Stafford. He is very successful, having a natural aptitude for machines. In addition, he also conducts the farm which was his father's, having about 250 acres in the homestead, and a wood lot of twenty-five acres. Until 1894, he was extensively engaged in the dairy business, but at that time he lost his large barn by fire, and since then has not resumed this branch of industry.

Mr. Kibbe attends the Congregational Church of West Stafford, and gives liberally toward its support. In politics he is a Democrat, but is very conservative, especially in town affairs, but has served most acceptably on the school board.

In 1865, Mr. Kibbe was married to Ann Eliza Durkee, of Somers, Conn., a daughter of Lyman Durkee, and one child was born to them: Clinton Harlow, a traveling salesman, who married Emma Fink, of New Haven, Conn., and has two children, Marshall Harlow and Leon Clinton. Mrs. Ann Eliza (Durkee) Kibbe died in May, 1866.

On July 20, 1867, Mr. Kibbe was married to Lavene Candice Avery, daughter of Lyman Wolcott and Wealthy Eliza (Bunstead) Avery. The children born of this union were: (1) Jennie L., born Feb. 17, 1868, married Frederick Wood, a farmer of North Somers, and she had two children, Bessie Julia and Blanch Jennie; she died in Springfield, Mass., Sept. 6, 1890. (2) Frederick L., born April 10, 1870, now resides in Springfield, Mass., being connected with the Springfield Provision Co.; he married Louisa Lye, and has one child, Harlow Richard. (3) Eugene A., born Aug. 12, 1873, lived in Springfield, Mich., where, until his death, March 8, 1899, he was foreman in the Industrial Bicycle Co.; he married Grace Spellman, and they had one child, Hazel Bertha. (4) Robert H., born March 9, 1875, married in November, 1900, Gertrude Carpenter, of Springfield, Mass., where they now reside, he being associated with the Smith & Wesson Fire Arms Co. (5) Benjamin J., born May 20, 1877, married Hattie Edson, of Somers, Conn., where he is a mail carrier. (6) Fonda L., born March 13, 1879, died Nov. 12, 1884. (7) Milo Wilbur, born Dec. 12, 1881, is now at home. (8) Nettie May, born Sept. 15, 1882, married Charles Dwight Glazier, of West Stafford, and they have one child, Richard Charles. (9) Daisy Belle was born Aug. 15, 1884. (10) Louisa Wealthy, born Oct. 26, 1885, is living at home. In all his relations in life, Mr. Kibbe has proven himself a man who can be fully trusted, and he is consequently held in high regard by the neighbors and friends among whom he has spent his life.

FRANK BODO, JR., proprietor of an up-to-date grocery store in Moosup, Windham county, in which he is meeting with deserved success, is enterprising and genial in his manner, while his business habits and methods are beyond reproach.

Joseph Bodo, his grandfather, was born in Three Rivers, Canada, where he was reared and married to Mary Prass. He was engaged in farming, but thinking to better his condition, came to Connecticut in 1850, and was first located at Danielson. He lived at Dayville, Moosup and other places in Windham county, and died while on a visit to Canada, at the age of seventy-five years. His wife died at the age of seventy-eight. They had nine children, only one of whom, the father of Frank, Jr., is still living. The children who lived to grow up were Levi, John, Leo, Mary, Dan, Louise, and Frank, Sr.

Frank Bodo, Sr., was born in Three Rivers, Canada, Aug. 5, 1843, and was seven years old when his parents came to Connecticut. He was married in Moosup, Conn., to Mary, a daughter of John and Mary Lavelet. When he was a small boy he began working in the cotton mills of this section, and for years has had charge of spinning. For twelve years he was employed in the Kanska Mill at Moosup, but had to give it up and retire from active work on account of ill health. The family are members of the All Hallows Catholic Church of Moosup. To Frank Bodo, Sr., and wife were born: Frank, Jr., born Nov. 30, 1870; Joseph, born Jan. 17, 1872, married Olive Sante, of Baltic, Conn., and is in the grocery business at Danielson; Louis, born Sept. 25, 1876, is an employe in the store of his brother, Frank, at Moosup; and Mary J., born Jan. 27, 1882.

Frank Bodo, Jr., was born in Moosup, Conn., where he grew up, and secured his education in the public schools. When he was seventeen years old he began work in the Union mill as general boy, and was set to "running drawing," receiving two dollars a week for his services. This he continued for one year, and then spent a year in school, when he secured a position in the general store of T. W. Brown, at Moosup. This position he held for two years, and was then employed for a short period in the store of James G. Miller & Co. For three years he was in the grocery store of L. Battery & Son, at Moosup. On March 26, 1894, Mr. Bodo, in company with his brother, Joseph, entered upon the grocery business, and immediate success crowned their efforts. After two prosperous years in the Hill Block, they moved to their present quarters. The brothers dissolved partnership Feb. 6, 1901, and Joseph set up for himself in a grocery at Danielson, Frank Bodo, Jr., has a complete grocery store, and in addition carries many lines that are usually found in general establishments. A richly deserved success is attending him, and he is a very popular tradesman, as he is both obliging and energetic. He belongs to All Hallows Catholic Church, and is a member of the Society of St. John and St. Louis, connected with that Church. In politics he is independent.

On July 11, 1893, Mr. Bodo was married to Philisti Piche, a daughter of Albert Piche, of Moosup, and to this union has come one daughter, Elinda, born Sept. 1, 1896.

AMBROSE ROYAL is one of the representative citizens of Coventry, Tolland county, and his unassuming manliness and genuine worth command the unstinted respect of all with whom he comes in contact.

Charles Royal, the father of Ambrose, is of French extraction, and was born at St. Jacques, Lower Canada, where his entire life was spent in farming. He died in 1827. Mary Ann Durant, his wife, was born in Canada, but her father was a native of Rome, Italy. They had the following children: Mary Magdeline, Charles, Daniel, Joseph, Francis, Zoah, Laura, Ambrose, Sophronia and Louisa.

Ambrose Royal was born at St. Jacques, Province of Quebec, Nov. 22, 1823, and received his education in the common schools of the day. His departure from his native land was made July 16, 1844, when he came to Russell's Point, N. Y., where he found work for a year, and then went to West Troy, N. Y., remaining there a year. Next for fifteen years he was at Alford, Mass., where he was employed both in farming and in marble quarrying. On Dec. 2, 1859, he came to Coventry, Conn., where he purchased a farm, holding with Horace Greeley, whom he greatly admired, "that to own a home is an incentive to greater effort." On this farm he has since been busily engaged.

Mr. Royal early mastered the English tongue, and through much self-denial has been able to give his children a good education. Their honorable and useful lives have richly repaid him for all his sacrifice. In early life he was identified with the Republican party, but later became a Prohibitionist. In Coventry he has held several local offices, having been grand juror, assessor, etc. He is a member of the North Coventry Congregational Church, and his industrious and useful life has brought no discredit to his profession.

Mr. Royal was married in Russell's Point, N. Y., to Mary Adelaide Boucher, who was born near Quebec, and died in Coventry, April 6, 1865. Since that time a sister of Mrs. Royal has lived in the family. To Mr. and Mrs. Royal were born: (1) Mary Matilda, born Nov. 15, 1851, died Feb. 15, 1882. She married Aaron Amerett, and lived in North Coventry. Her son was adopted by his grandfather, Mr. Royal, and when he became old enough enlisted in the navy, and was with Admiral Dewey at Manila. Returning home, he joined the regular army and died. His remains are buried at Coventry. (2) George, born July 16, 1853, attended Amherst College, and taught school, having at one time the graded school in East Hampton in his charge, where he began the study of medicine, graduating from the New York Homeopathic Institute in 1881. For a year he practiced his profession at Rockville, and then removed to Des Moines, Iowa, where he has attained eminence, being at the present time Dean of his school at the State University, at Iowa City. Two years he was secretary of the American Association of Homeopathic Physicians, and is now one of its vice presidents. In Des Moines he is recognized as one of the leading men of the city. He was married in Coventry, to Ella, a daughter of Jabez and Janette (Preston) Kingsbury, by whom he has had four children, Malcolm Allen, Wilmot, Janette Adelaide and Paul Ambrose. (3) Louis, born June 12, 1855, was schooled in Willimantic, and was admitted to the Bar in 1894, locating in Mt. Pleasant, Mich., where he has built up a good practice. He was elected Mayor of the town. He was married to Laura Bugbee, a native of Eastford, though reared in Coventry, and to them were born: Lester Ambrose, De Boise, Moravia and Arthur. (4) Nelson, born July 5, 1857, devoted several years to teaching, and then entered Yale, working his way through the Law School, from which he was graduated in 1883. In Des Moines, Iowa, where he is located, he has achieved a large success. He married Emma Clark, of New Haven, and their children are as follows: Myrtle, Jessie, Chester and Leonard. (5) Thomas C., born Jan. 30, 1860, began for himself as a teacher, but early entered the New York Homeopathic Institute, from which he was graduated in 1883. For a year he was in practice in Des Moines, Iowa, three years at Mt. Pleasant, Mich., and then located at Ballston, N. Y., where he is found at the present time. He married Carrie Vider, a daughter of the clergyman of that name, and they have a daughter, Rose. (6) Horace Greeley, born Nov. 21, 1862, is unmarried, and remains at home, where he is engaged in cultivating the home farm.

GEORGE M. IVES (deceased). Many of this name in New Haven county sprang from William Ives, who was of New Haven as early as 1639. This William Ives, according to Savage, likely came to Boston in the "Truelove" from London, when about twenty-eight years old and he died in 1648. William of New Haven is given by Savage two sons: John Ives, who died when young; and Joseph, who married Mary, who was a daughter of Thomas Yale, and their children were: Samuel, Mary, Martha, Lazarus, Thomas, Abigail and Ebenezer. The father died in 1694.

Davis, in his "History of Wallingford and Meriden" (1870), makes a John Ives the ancestor of the Ives family in those towns.

There were in 1715 several heads of families of the name in the town of North Haven, given in the list of that year as: Captain Ives, Ebenezer Ives, Deacon Ives and Thomas Ives, and the name is quite frequently and officially referred to in the records in connection with the Church and with ecclesiastical matters. A Joseph Ives, born in 1672, was the first clerk of the Ecclesiastical Society, in 1716, and continued in office until 1730. He was captain of the military company in 1718, was one of the building committee of the church in that same year, and died in 1751.

Another prominent settler of the Ives name in the early history of North Haven was Samuel Ives, who was born in 1677. He is given in Rockey's "History of New Haven County" as the son of Joseph and grandson of William, the New Haven settler, and as marrying Ruth Atwater and having these children: Mary; Lydia; Samuel, who died in infancy; Ruth; Jonathan; Demaris; John; and Samuel.

Jonathan Ives, son of Samuel, was born in 1716, and is credited in "Blake's Hamden Centenary" with being one of the first white men to rear a home in the wilds of Central Hamden. He was first located, in 1735, on the bank of the Mill river not far from the locality called Ivesville. In 1737 he married Thankful Cooper, and their children were: Jeremiah, Ruth, Mary, Thankful, Joel, Jonathan and Phoebe. Of the above family, only one, Jonathan, remained in the town, and he married Sarah Bassette and lived on the home place.

The late George Merwin Ives, of Stafford Springs, descends from the New Haven family of the name. His father, Giles Ives, born April 25, 1774, married, Oct. 9, 1799, Abigail Gilbert, of Hamden, Conn., who was born March 29, 1778. Soon after their marriage they removed from North Haven, Conn., to Waterbury, Conn. They lived there for many years out on the Green, the Ives home being well known, on the corner of State and West Main street. Mr. Ives was a farmer and a quiet man, but greatly respected by all who knew him. He owned land near his home on West Main street and State street was opened through his property.

To the marriage of Giles and Abigail (Gilbert) Ives came these children: Charry, born May 6, 1801, married (first) a Linsley, and (second) M. Fowler; Esther, born April 8, 1805, married Philo Brown; Caroline, born Oct. 4, 1807, married D. T. Bishop; George Merwin was born May 18, 1817, in Waterbury, Conn.

George Merwin Ives received his early education in Waterbury, and finished in Westfield, Mass., where he graduated. He made the trip to this famous school by way of the canal, as at that date there was no railroad. After finishing school he was employed as bookkeeper by Andrew W. Porter, a woolen manufacturer of Monson, Massachusetts.

In 1843 the Granite mill was built. George M. Ives with A. W. Porter, of Monson, Mass., bought from the assigns of the Hyde Company, and organized the Granite Mill Company, and that year built not only the mill, but also tenements and a store. At that time Mr. Ives came to Stafford to reside, and became agent of the mill, and at the time of his death he was the oldest manufacturer in the borough.

When Mr. Ives located in Stafford there were but few houses, and no church, postoffice or store and the first store in the village was built by the Granite Mill Company. There were four houses on East Main street, and Mr. Ives' residence, erected in 1846, where Harvey Chapman now lives, was built on this street of modern homes as one of the first. In 1844 the Granite Company bought from Jasper Hyde the Mineral Springs hotel property and farm, including the land now owned and occupied by the heirs of the late Julius Converse, known now as "Woodlawn." They fitted up the hotel throughout with new furniture and it was the home for a time of many who came flocking into the prosperous town to take part in the new industries.

Mr. Ives was foremost in every enterprise looking to the welfare of the town, was ready to encourage every advancement made by the village and with pleasure saw it grow to almost its present proportions. Perhaps he in larger measure than any other citizen assisted and directed its growth, and he was one of the borough's incorporators and one of its first burgesses. He had also much to do with promoting and building of the railroads, he was one of the first directors of the New London & Northern Railroad in 1852, and continued as such for a number of years.

In 1855 Mr. Ives was one of the original incorporators of the Stafford Springs Savings Bank, and became one of its first directors, serving in that capacity until 1858, when the bank became the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs. Mr. Ives was also one of the first vice-presidents of this financial institution, and served in that capacity for several years. He was also instrumental in securing the charter of the National Bank, of which he was the second president. This bank was incorporated in 1854 and he served as director for some years and as president from 1859 until his resignation in 1866. For several years he was a director in the Hartford Life and Annuity Co., of Hartford, and at one time served as cashier of the Stafford National Bank.

Mr. Ives was a very staunch Republican. He took an active interest in politics, and his influence was felt in 1873 when the incorporation of the borough took place. Late in life he became independent in politics.

In 1853 Mr. Porter retired from the business of the Granite Mill Co., and for forty years Mr. Ives managed this great business with judgment and success. Aside from thus benefiting his locality by the successful continuance of one of its greatest industries, Mr. Ives found time in his crowded life to advance the interests of other enterprises which promised to benefit Stafford. He was ever ready to lend his assistance to all worthy objects and could be relied upon for countenance, advice and financial aid. His charities were large, and he was a most liberal supporter of benevolent objects.

The marriage of Mr. Ives occurred June 4, 1845, to Miss Mary Mindwell Smith, who was a daughter of Col. Elijah and Lydia (Curtis) Smith, of Tolland, Conn. Her death occurred Dec. 25, 1900, in Stafford. Their children were: Elizabeth Porter, who died in 1856, at the age of six years; and Mary Catherine, who was born Oct. 30, 1852. She married Oct. 30, 1873, Richard Sterling Hicks, of Tolland. There was no issue of this marriage. Mr. Hicks was a very active man in the improvements which have taken place in Stafford Springs in recent years. The system of waterworks, the importance of which in promoting the health, comfort and safety of the village cannot be over-estimated, owes its existence to the enterprise and executive ability of Mr. Hicks. The village is chiefly indebted to him for its electric light plant, he was instrumental in promoting and carrying into effect the Stafford cemetery improvements, and the fact that the Stafford Fair is now one of the most noted in New England is due in no small measure to the energetic efforts and the public spirit of Richard S. Hicks. Formerly he was cashier in the Stafford National bank, but later he became much interested in various water and electric light plants and in several electric railroads in this and in other States.

George Merwin Ives was a representative man of Tolland county, particularly of Stafford, and no record of that section would be complete without extended mention of him. In his busy active life he met with more than his share of ups and downs. Reverses and misfortunes did not cause any cessation of his efforts. Old age alone was responsible for his retirement from the field of business activity. His widow survived him some years. The only descendant is his daughter and only child, Mrs. Hicks, who is one of the estimable ladies of Stafford Springs, where she lives retired.

MORGAN. Four generations of the Morgan family have occupied the old homestead, located in the western part of the town of Plainfield, Windham county. The last occupants were Lucius Bacon Morgan and his sister, who since 1899 have been residents of Norwich, New London county. The family is an old one in eastern Connecticut.

In March, 1636, James Morgan and two younger brothers, John and Miles, sailed from Bristol, England, and arrived in Boston, Mass., in April, following. James Morgan, who was born in Wales in 1607, first settled in Roxbury, Mass. His father, so says tradition, was William of Llandaff, Glamorganshire, Wales. The family appears to have removed from Llandaff to Bristol, England, probably a few years prior to 1636. Tradition also says that John Morgan settled in Virginia; and Miles, born in 1615, on his arrival at Boston, or soon thereafter, joined a party of emigrants, mostly from Roxbury, of whom Col. William Pyncheon was at the head, and who founded the settlement of Springfield, Massachusetts.

(I) James Morgan, born in Wales in 1607, died in 1685. He was distinguished in public enterprises, and was nine times chosen a member of the Colonial Assembly. In 1640 he married Margery Hill, of Roxbury, Mass. His children were: Hamar, James, John, Joseph, Abraham, and a daughter that died unnamed.

(II) Capt. John Morgan, son of James, born in 1645, married (first) in 1665 Rachel Dymond, daughter of John Dymond. He married (second) Widow Elizabeth Williams, daughter of Lieut. Gov. William Jones, of New Haven, and a granddaughter of Theophilus Eaton. Capt. John Morgan died in Preston, Conn., in 1712. He was a prominent public man, and was Indian Commissioner and adviser, deputy to the General Court in 1690 from New London, and in 1693-94 from Preston. The children by his first wife were: John, Samuel, Isaac, Hannah, Mercy, Sarah and James. The children by his second marriage were: Elizabeth, William, Rachel, Andrew, Margery, Joseph, Theophilus and Mary.

(III) Capt. Joseph Morgan, son of Capt. John, was baptized April 27, 1701. On May 8, 1735, he married Ruth Brewster, who was born Dec. 9, 1711, daughter of Nathaniel Brewster, of Duxbury, Mass., and a direct descendant of Elder William Brewster, of the "Mayflower." Capt. Morgan was a farmer, and died in Preston May 24, 1764. He was commissioned May 18, 1761, by Gov. Thomas Fitch, a captain of the train band of Preston, under King George III, in the first year of his reign. His wife Ruth survived him, and died at the home of her daughter Mary, in Canaan, in 1807. Their children were: Olive, Isaac, Consider, Lydia, Joseph, Dwell, Mercy and Mary.

(IV) Isaac Morgan, son of Capt. Joseph, was born March 9, 1739, and was married March 26, 1759, to Alice Spaulding, daughter of Benjamin Spaulding, of Plainfield. In early life Isaac Morgan went to western New York, and located on a tract of land. He then went back to Preston for his family, but on his return to his new home in New York he found that during his absence the Indians had destroyed his buildings, and had either stolen or killed his stock. He at once returned to Connecticut and purchased a large tract of land along the Quinebaug river, in the town of Plainfield, and there resided until his death, on May 29, 1796. He was commissary in the Revolutionary war, and a part of the French troops under Gen. LaFayette were quartered a few days on his farm in Plainfield—the General occupying a room in the house. His widow, Alice, died Jan. 6, 1808, aged sixty-seven. Their children were: Deborah, Lot, Dwell, Olive, Isaac, Alice, Mary, Anna, Consider and Joseph.

(V) Capt. Lot Morgan, son of Isaac; was born July 22, 1762, and, with the exception of a few years in his early married life, resided on the homestead in Plainfield. He was a successful farmer, and also dealt in live stock. He died Dec. 24, 1834. For many years he served as captain of the local militia. In his politics he was a Whig, and his religious connection was with the Congregational Church. On Aug. 11, 1791, he was married to Keziah Cleveland, of Canterbury, who was born Sept. 24, 1770, and who died Dec. 13, 1854, at the home of her son in Tolland. The following children blessed this union: (1) Calista, born March 18, 1792, married (first) Benjamin Delop and (second) Jason Wolcott, and died in Hartford Nov. 30, 1858. (2) Shubael Cleveland, born Aug. 25, 1793, died Feb. 13, 1824. (3) Nancy, born June 25, 1795, became the second wife of Rev. Allen McLean, a Congregational minister, and grandfather of ex-Gov. George P. McLean, of Connecticut; she died Sept. 22, 1860. (4) Asa Spaulding, born March 21, 1799, was a school teacher, and died in Delaware Aug. 3, 1819. (5) George Dunworth, born Sept. 14, 1802, married (first) Elizabeth Kellogg and (second) Mary McLean; he was a farmer and resided in Plainfield, Vernon and Tolland, and died in the last named town. (6) Elisha Abbe is mentioned below. (7) Joseph Luce, born Feb. 22, 1810, died Nov. 12, 1831. (8) Eunice Elizabeth, born Aug. 4, 1816, died July 22, 1819.

(VI) Elisha Abbe Morgan was born Sept. 2, 1805, in Plainfield, and received his education in the public schools, and in Plainfield Academy, then presided over by Deacon Witter. After his marriage he removed to Canterbury, and resided on the farm of his father-in-law for a couple of years, thence moving to the homestead in Plainfield, where he remained a few years. He then returned to the farm, in Canterbury, where he resided until he purchased the interests of the other heirs in the home farm, where he afterward successfully engaged at farming until his death, Aug. 5, 1879. His remains were buried at Plainfield. Until the formation of the Republican party he was a Whig, but later cast his ballot in support of the men and measures of the new organization. He served several years on the board of selectmen of Plainfield. When a young man he united with the Congregational Church at Canterbury, and he was a regular attendant and liberal supporter of it all his life. He was always a hard-working man, and in time became quite well-to-do. On March 26, 1834, he was married to Philura A. Bacon, who was born May 15, 1809, daughter of Lucius and Anna (Lamb) Bacon. Lucius Bacon was a farmer in Canterbury; he was a son of Samuel, grandson of Joseph, and a great-grandson of John, who was born in England in 1683. Mrs. Morgan lived to reach her ninetieth year, in full possession of her faculties, passing away Jan.

19, 1899. Both children of this union were born in Canterbury—Martha Ann, on Dec. 11, 1835; and Lucius Bacon, on July 19, 1839.

LUCIUS BACON MORGAN attended the district school and Plainfield Academy. In the latter institution he had the advantage of instruction under Lucien Burleigh, a well-known educator. Being the only son he remained at home and assisted on the farm. When the father's health failed, the son took charge of the work and continued to carry it on quite successfully until April, 1896, when he rented the place to other parties. In the fall of 1899 he and his sister moved to Norwich, and purchased a nice home outside the city limits, on the New London turnpike, at East Great Plain, and he is now living retired. Like his father Mr. Morgan is a Republican, and he cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1860. He was first elected a member of the board of selectmen of Plainfield in 1886, and at different times since then has held the office, serving several terms. In 1895 he represented the town of Plainfield in the State Legislature, serving on the committee on Constitutional Amendment. A progressive farmer, he is actively interested in new methods and has been an active member of the Plainfield Grange, to which he still belongs. His religious faith is that of the Congregationalists and he belongs to the church of that denomination in Canterbury. He has added largely to his inheritance, and is one of the wealthy and highly esteemed men in the town where he lived so long, as well as in the new home that has become his in more recent years.
